WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY:

'I find the photographs themselves credible . . . They appear to represent a real phenomenon' — DR MICHAEL MALIN, Professor of Planetary Sciences, Arizona State University (doctoral dissertation on the analysis of spacecraft photographs of Mars; four years at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory)

'I cannot explain the metal sample. By any known combination of materials I could not put it together myself, as a scientist. With any technology that I know of, we could not achieve this on this planet' — MARCEL VOGAL, research chemist (22 years at IBM, holder of 32 patents, inventor of the magnetic disc-coding memory system still used in IBM systems throughout the world)

'Out of all the scientists I've talked to, I'd say the majority think it's very credible' — H. DAVID FRONING, JR, astronautical engineer (25 years at McDonnell Douglas Corporation)

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO ENTER THE FIELD OF UFOLOGY WITHOUT TREADING upon many footprints. My research on UFOs and their history has come from books, doctoral theses, vintage newspaper and magazine articles, publications from various UFO organizations, government documents, and correspondence from the files of the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. I would like to single out David Michael Jacobs' doctoral thesis, The Controversy over Unidentified Flying Objects in America: 1896-1973. I found myself referring to it often. I also traveled to many parts of the country attending UFO symposia and interviewing ufologists. For their time and patience in helping me understand the phenomenon, I would like to thank Sherman Larsen, curator of the now combined archives of the Center for UFO Studies and the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena; Walt Andrus, head of the Mutual UFO Network, who graciously made me feel welcome at his organization's 1986 convention; Dr. Bruce Maccabee and the Fund for UFO Research in Washington, D C., especially members Larry Bryant and Dick Hall; Coral Lorenzen and the late Jim Lorenzen of the Aerial Phenomena Research Organization in Tucson; Dr. Leo Sprinkle, organizer of the contactee convention held each summer at the University of Wyoming; and Doris Arnold, whose husband Kenneth started it all.

The primary investigators on the Eduard Meier case—Lee and Brit Elders, Tom Welch, and Lieutenant Colonel Wendelle Stevens (USAF, retired)—have given generously of their time and energy in recalling their experiences with Meier from 1976 to 1982. They will receive a percentage of royalties for introducing me to Meier, and for supplying me with records, correspondence, interview tapes, and their research on the Pleiades, plus photographs, sound recordings, video tapes, and other materials owned and copyrighted by Lee Elders. All materials were provided for me to use at my discretion, and I have maintained total control over the contents of the manuscript.

Jim Dilettoso, who assisted the investigators, also has my gratitude for talking to me of his role in tracking down scientists willing to examine the evidence.

The Swiss and German citizens whom I interviewed are all mentioned by name in the book–Bernadette, Eva, Engelbert, Jakobus, to name a few–and I thank each of them for taking the time to speak with me of their experiences. Elsi Moser and Herbert Runkel were especially accommodating and helpful, as was Timothy Good in London. Popi Meier, who seems more than any other to have grown from the experience, always made me feel welcome in her home, though I was one of thousands to tromp through in search of her husband. A very special thanks goes to Frank Stuckert, who served not only as my translator but became my friend as well; Frank and his wife Frida are warmly remembered for their hospitality.

The scientists and engineers who examined the evidence and agreed to talk with me on the record did so at some risk to their reputations. All are mentioned by name in the book. As they were candid with me, I have tried to be fair in reflecting their complete opinions, including any reservations they may have had. They have made clear to me, and I now make clear to the reader: Their observations and views are their own and in no way are intended to represent the position of their employers. I sincerely hope they will not be castigated by their peers or their employers for having the courage to explore and to wonder.

My editor, Morgan Entrekin, and my agent, Richard Pine, deserve recognition for backing me as I embarked on an adventure that, after much time, energy, and money had been expended, could have led nowhere. They stood by me and had faith that I knew what I was doing when even I did not know that I knew what I was doing.

I am fortunate to have a brother to whom I am close, and who is also in the hotel business. Randy, thank you for making the lonely times on the road first-class. As always my parents, Irving and Peggy Kinder, and my in-laws, the Ernest Evans family of Seattle, have continued their support and encouragement.

And last, Theo and George, I have not forgotten.

PART I

EDUARD MEIER

LATE ON A COLD AND RAINY NOVEMBER NIGHT IN 1976, A Volkswagen and a small German-built Ford wound through the islands of darkened forest in the hills southeast of Zurich. The rain fell so hard for so long that the back roads had turned to mud and the rain dripped from the needles of tall evergreens soaking the forest floor until it was spongy. Then the temperature cooled and large wet flakes of snow now mixed with the rain as the Volkswagen, followed by the Ford, slithered through the mud past the shadowy presence of an old farmhouse and headed further into the darkness. Wearing a gray leather jacket, a man with his left arm severed just above the elbow rode in the passenger seat of the lead car; though the driver could see nothing save the wet path before him pelted by silver rain, the man with one arm seemed able to see past the veil of darkness, to know where he was and where he was going. Above the muffled beating of the rain, he directed the driver through the darkness across a swampy meadow, down a prominent rise, to the edge of another forest, where he told the driver to stop.

The car engine died quickly, and only the rain splashing on the metal roof now broke the silence. Then the headlights of both cars dimmed and went out, and the driver could see nothing in the blackness. Neither he nor a passenger in the backseat had seen anything since the headlights swept past the ghostly farmhouse a few miles back. The man with one arm instructed the driver that they were to wait for him there, that he would return in perhaps an hour, perhaps longer, he could never be sure. Then with no further word he opened the door and they watched his silhouette disappear quickly through the rain into the dark of the forest.

For over a year the driver had accompanied the one-armed man to such sites, a half hour, sometimes an hour, from the village. As months passed the journeys had taken place later at night and the sites had become increasingly remote. For someone alone, waiting in the darkness, they could be frightening. This night the presence of the other people, the man in the backseat, the man and woman in the Ford, eased the fear as he waited.

Outside, the rain and wet snow continued to fall, and the driver realized they would have to mount chains on the rear tires or they would never be able to drive through the deepening mud up the rise and back several miles to the main road. If they bogged down in the mud, they would have to spend the night in the two cars.

The men got out of the cars, and illuminated by the headlights, they stood in the rain and mud jacking up first the Volkswagen then the Ford. The rear tires of each car had to be raised, one at a time, then lowered, and the jack stand repositioned again in the mud and pumped again until the next tire rose inches from the ground. The chains were heavy and difficult to manipulate, especially with fingers wet and numb from the cold. The woman sat in one car then the other, dozing as the men worked.

Before each chain was in place, nearly an hour had passed, and the three men were now soaked to their skins and chilled by the icy rain running in rivulets down their faces. Finally they were satisfied with the tautness of the chains, and as they began stamping about, trying to get warm, they suddenly heard a strange sound above the trees.

They peered upward into the rain. Except for the constant flow of water dripping from the pine needles, the trees stood motionless, but still the noise was that of strong wind.

The eerie sound, a high-pitched warble that pierced the falling rain, moved slowly over their heads. They followed its course with their eyes, straining to see; then suddenly the noise began to subside, and the one-armed man stood with them in the light not two feet away.

"We didn't see him or hear him walk", remembered another. "Just all of a sudden he was there".

The noise in the trees had awakened the woman, who got out of the car to see the three men in their darkened and soggy clothes huddled together in the beam of the headlights and looking up into the trees. She closed the door and took one step into the mud, glancing down for only a moment. When she raised her eyes again quickly, what she saw startled her: The man with one arm was suddenly standing in the headlight beam only a few feet away, with his back to her.

"In the time I looked down and up again, a split second", she remembered, "he practically grew out of the ground in front of me".

The man with one arm appeared almost like an apparition in their midst. They stared at him through the rain and saw that his hair was dry; they reached for his hand, and his skin was warm to their touch. As he stood in the bright light saying nothing, they could see the rain and wet flakes of snow just beginning to form dark speckles on the bone-dry leather of his coat.

ONE

History first mentions the village of Hinwil, Switzerland, in a document dated 745. Thirty miles southeast of Zurich, it nestles in a landscape of rolling green hills pocketed by large islands of forest a hundred feet tall, with the Alps rising in the distance. Hinwil itself perhaps would disappoint the tourist looking for the charm of alpine architecture: Though chalk-white chalets shuttered in green rise from the village core and scatter among the hills, many stark buildings constructed of concrete have risen in their midst. They resemble not so much the quaint cottages in travel brochures as they do utilitarian apartment buildings erected in the 1950s and '60s in the United States.

But a short distance from the village center, along the street Wihaldenstrasse, stands a three-story farmhouse built a hundred years ago. During the mid-1970s summer grape vines climbed the sunny south wall of the old house. Flowers filled a stone water trough to the north near the entrance, and small birds fluttered in an aviary built of wood and wire. To the south and east of the house lay a small green field, and to the north and west stood more of the cold, institutional apartment buildings.

The community of Hinwil had acquired the old farm years before and built the surrounding apartments to house senior citizens. Though the farmhouse someday soon would be torn down to make room for more apartments, the community now rented the house for a nominal sum to an unemployed night watchman, Eduard Meier. Meier lived in the house with his Greek wife, Kaliope, nicknamed Popi, and three small children—a girl, Nina, a boy, Atlantis, and the baby, Bashenko. They had been living in the house since December 1973, though they had lived elsewhere in Hinwil for two years.

Meier, a man of thirty-seven, had a sixth-grade education. He was not a very big man, maybe five feet seven inches tall, but he was thick-chested and strong. His face was handsome, set off by unusual greenish-hazel eyes. According to village records, Meier's professions were "birdbreeder, iron layer, night watchman". He held a permit to carry a gun because he had once worked as night security in a factory.

In a former house, a tiny three-room row house contiguous to the Hinwil village museum, Meier had kept a cage out back filled with nearly two hundred birds. He had been employed then as a night guard and consequently was often at home during the day. But many people in the neighborhood avoided talking to Meier because he was "different". He spoke a great deal about Moses and said things other people did not understand. Julios and Erika Kägi knew the Meiers better than other neighbors did because they had a daughter the same age as Nina and the two girls often played together. "He had a terrific fantasy", remembered Erika Kägi, "and I could not agree with his philosophy. But he was not a bad person. He was not even odd; he just had his own ideas and believed whatever he said". Said another neighbor, "Meier lives the way he wants to and does not adapt to anyone else's way of living".

Meier had only one arm. His left arm had been severed just above the elbow in a bus accident in 1965, as he traveled from India, through Turkey, back to Switzerland. Still, when part of the barn adjacent to the small house collapsed, Julios Kägi saw Meier rebuild the wall alone by holding the boards in place with his shoulder stump while he positioned and pounded nails with his one hand. “He was faster with one hand than other people are with two”, recalled Kägi.

Again out of a job, Meier now supported his family on the 700 francs provided him every month by the government for the loss of his arm. To supplement their income the Meiers kept chickens in the attic of the old farmhouse, and Popi sold eggs to the neighbors.

To neighbors living in the apartment buildings overlooking the front door of the farmhouse, Meier seemed to be always home. In a culture that values hard work and conformity, the neighbors saw him as a singular and idle man, often lost in thought, as though the weight of the world rested upon his shoulders, and they began to talk.

Then on the afternoon of January 28, 1975, a cold day, but warmer than most at that time of the year, Eduard Meier left the farmhouse on his moped, towing a tiny wagon behind him. He wound through the streets of Hinwil, steering with one hand, the empty left sleeve of his leather jacket jerking in the wind. Working his way out of town, he eventually came to a country road, which he followed for a time, then disappeared into the forest of a nature conservancy. A few hours later he returned to the farmhouse without telling anyone where he had been.

Several days passed, during which the neighbors saw Meier dawdling around the house, seemingly as always without purpose. Then one afternoon he again pulled his moped from a storage room, pedaled it down the driveway until the tiny motor kicked over, and rode through the village out into the country. Soon he was lost from view in another of the islands of forest surrounding Hinwil. When he returned, as before, he told no one where he had been or why he had been there. But the Swiss are observant and curious people, and the neighbors noted his peculiar comings and goings.

Within weeks Meier was traveling regularly into the forest, guiding his moped with one hand, the tiny wagon behind. Each trip seemed to take him along a new path in a new direction through town and out onto the country highways, often for as long as an hour. Later, many of his trips took him into the hills. Sometimes he would disappear in the early afternoon and not be seen again before supper; other times he would sneak from the house at one or two in the morning and not return till dawn.

"He had to go away again and again", Popi remembered. "He would come home for five minutes, fix himself a cup of coffee, and, hop, he was gone again. It was bad at night. You'd be sleeping peacefully and the kids were quiet in bed. All of a sudden he would get up, get dressed, and be gone. You know? You think your husband is lying in bed next to you, but he is gone. I did not know anything. All he said was that he was going to work".

As the weeks passed, Meier's journeys through town and into the forests began to occur three, four, even five times a week. And his frequent departures rubbed against the grain of order and routine so conscientiously observed by his neighbors. The more he disappeared, the more they talked.

"The people in the neighborhood didn't know anything about what was going on", said Popi, "but they were very curious. They could tell me to the minute when he left on his moped and when he came back. It was always the same questions. 'Why did he come home so late?' Sometimes he got up in the middle of the night and left, so they would hear the moped. And when he did this, it was even worse with the people the next day. 'Why did he leave last night?' 'Where did he go?' I would say nothing. I wasn't interested. They are just Schnuriwiiber [gossips]".

On clear nights neighbors living in the apartment building just above the farmhouse saw Meier standing in the alleyway to the west and watching the sky through binoculars for hours. On nights when he did not leave the house, neighbors to the east saw a light burning on the second floor late into the night.

A week, a month, maybe two months passed, Popi could not remember. Then one afternoon, as the two of them stood in the small living room on the second floor of the house, her husband handed her photographs.

"What do you think of this?" he asked.

But Popi only stared at the pictures.

"I was shocked", she recalled, "because I saw something completely new, and I did not want to believe that this existed. He said nothing at all. Didn't explain. Not one word". Her husband merely picked up the pictures and left the room, as Popi yelled at him for wasting his time taking pictures when money for the family was so scarce.

Meier next took the photographs to his friend Jakobus Bertschinger, whom he had met while working at the Piatti gravel pit years earlier. Though Jakobus was twelve years younger than Meier, the two men had struck up a lasting friendship. They spent much time together, talking about Meier's experiences during the twelve years he had traveled back and forth through India and the Middle East. But Jakobus, too, seemed confused by the photographs Meier showed to him. He even laughed, but he promised to help his friend in any way he could.

With a loan from Jakobus, Meier placed a small classified ad in the German publication Esotera. The ad solicited people interested in forming a group to discuss natural life, logic, and truth—things "metaphysical".

Several more months passed. Through the summer and fall of 1975, the neighbors along Wihaldenstrasse watched Meier continue his frequent trips into the foothills and forests at all times of the day and night. On his little green moped he often was seen at the edge of the open road, putt-putting along, twenty, maybe twenty-five miles an hour, passed constantly by the much larger and faster automobiles. But then something new entered Meier's routine: One Saturday afternoon a half-dozen cars appeared at the farmhouse and remained till late at night.

The neighbors did not understand why people came to see this man. He was poor and handicapped, with an unkempt wife who spoke little of their language. He did not work and his habits seemed strange. But over the weeks and months, not only did the visitors continue to come, but their numbers increased. In the tiny parlor on the second story, the man with the single arm and unusual hazel eyes spoke to these people for hours. When they left, the neighbors heard Popi screaming at him.

For many months the neighbors watched Meier disappear frequently at odd hours, and saw the cars on Saturday afternoons filling the narrow alleyway running alongside No. 10 Wihaldenstrasse and spilling onto the streets of Hinwil.

TWO

Ilse von Jacobi, a journalist living in Munich who wrote frequently about metaphysics and the paranormal, had read about Eduard Meier in a newsletter printed and circulated by a self-study group in Munich in the summer of 1975. Interested, she contacted the young man who edited the newsletter and through him began to monitor developments in the Meier story as reported by witnesses. A few months later, after seeing photographs Meier had taken, she decided to interview him for publication.

When von Jacobi arrived in Hinwil in December 1975, she found herself one of about eighteen people who had come to the Meier home to listen to the man speak. She stayed for two days.

"I was impressed", she recalled. "I was convinced that he had had the experiences he talked about. The facts he gave me, the pictures, the personal impression he created, there was nothing wrong. I wanted to make him known, and to put his story in the papers, because it was real. But something made him mad, and he told me I should not publish anything about him, so I left. But it was for his own good that he become known".

Von Jacobi took her article to Quick magazine, one of the two largest slicks published weekly in Germany, with circulation in Switzerland and Austria as well. Hesitant to run such a story without verification, the magazine editors assigned a staff member to Hinwil to interview Meier. When the writer returned with substantially the same information von Jacobi had given to them, the editors set the article for publication on July 8, 1976.

The magazine circulated rapidly through the town of Hinwil, carrying a story that astonished Meier's neighbors. For nearly a year and a half they had observed and disapproved of his constant comings and goings at all hours of the day and night, but not one had confronted Meier about his purpose or attended one of the meetings at his home. The reason he now gave for his behavior made them angry and made them laugh all at once: Meier claimed that he had been telepathically contacted by alien beings from a planet in a star cluster known as the Pleiades. Through telepathy, said the article, the Pleiadians frequently had directed Meier to remote locations near Hinwil, where they landed a seven-meter silvery beamship, disembarked, and met with him face-to-face. Most of Meier's contacts were with a female named Semjase, for the Pleiadians, according to Meier, had found that females seemed to be far less intimidating to earth humans. Meier met with her often, and she allowed him to photograph her beamship as it approached for landing and again as it ascended.

Many people laughed. But others seemed awed by the clear, color daylight photographs of the beamships, and captivated by the thought of space beings alighting on earth in a gentle and peaceful fashion. The July article in Quick led to a series of articles in various European magazines that appeared throughout the summer and fall of 1976. Il Giornale die Misteri in Italy published von Jacobi's original piece on Meier in August; then in September the largest tabloid in Switzerland, Blick, ran the front-page title "Zürcher verblüffte Erich von Däniken"—"Zurich Man Amazes Erich von Däniken". More articles followed in the German magazines Echo der Frau in October and Neue Welt in November. One of Meier's neighbors had a son living in South Africa who even read of Meier in a newspaper there.

The neighbors scoffed at the articles, certain that Meier somehow had perpetrated a hoax with his strange and seemingly purposeless perambulations about the countryside. But for those who visited the Hinwil house to investigate the claims further, Meier presented evidence that looked convincing. He showed scores of bright color photographs of Semjase's ship hovering just above a jagged line of evergreens or edged into the branches of a giant leafless birch. In his journal he had recorded each of his meetings with the Pleiadians; detailed conversations, some thirty minutes, some longer than an hour. The journal now consumed several hundred pages and continued to grow rapidly.

One afternoon, at their request, Meier took a small group into a meadow completely surrounded by tall evergreens. He told them that several nights earlier he had met with the Pleiadians in the same meadow, and that he and Semjase had sat in the grass by the trees and talked for an hour. The people imagined the scene—a glowing, almost weightless craft suddenly descending upon the meadow, the luminescence from its shell pulsating against the wall of darkened trees; then the alighting of a lithesome and humanlike creature, gentle in approach and filled with wisdom.

And there on the ground where the people now stood with Meier in the daylight they saw three large circles, each equidistant to the others, peculiar flattened swirls six feet across, perfectly symmetrical, perfectly rendered in the tall grass.

Those who heard Meier speak on Saturday afternoons in his home and who read parts of his journal found the writings beautifully conceived, far more complex and sophisticated than a man of Meier's station would be capable of imagining. Semjase, said Meier, had told him of life elsewhere in the galaxy, the history of her people and that of the earth. She had taught him to understand earth humankind's place in the galaxy. Order exists in the universe, she said, more advanced civilizations teach the less advanced, and spiritual evolution must parallel technological progress.

"We, too, are still far removed from perfection and have to evolve constantly", she explained to Meier. "When we choose to come in contact with an earth human, we do so because we feel an obligation to the developing universe, and to life which is already existing throughout the universe. We are not missionaries or teachers, but we endeavor to keep order throughout all areas of space. Now and then we begin contacts with inhabitants of different worlds by searching out individuals whom we feel can accept our existence. We then impart information to those contacts, but only when their race has developed and begins to think. Then slowly we and others prepare them for the truth, that they are not the only thinking beings in the universe".

Meier claimed that he continued to meet with the Pleiadians in the forests of eastern Switzerland, and that the telepathic signals warning him of an impending contact could come at any time of the day or night.

"It happens like a shot", he explained. "Like a cool wind going across your forehead, very, very weak, though". Following that came vibrations inside his head that produced symbols. "On the one hand, it is like pictures which appear, and on the other hand, it is like a voice. There are no words for it . . . it is as if you heard a voice in the symbols".

Meier could be in a room full of people when suddenly his eyes would close, his skin would grow pale, and he would begin to perspire faintly. He would then go to his room and dress in boots, and a jacket if the air was cool, or a gray leather coat if the weather turned bitter. Popi had made him a warm hat like those worn in the mountains of the Middle East, and she would fix him coffee; but if the coffee was not ready in five minutes he would leave without it. He could be gone a half hour or half a day.

One afternoon Meier told his wife that he was about to have a contact and that she and the children were to come with him. Also allowed would be two others who happened to be at the house, one of whom was Hans Schutzbach, a man in his late twenties. Skeptical of Meier from the beginning and watching him closely, Schutzbach had studied every photograph Meier had taken of the beamships, and had helped him to catalogue the photos. He also had driven Meier on many of his night contacts. Although a few witnesses, including Schutzbach, had seen strange lights at night that could have been beamships, no one except Meier had seen one in daylight.

"I put everybody in my car as usual", recalled Schutzbach, "and Billy went ahead on his moped, empty-handed. He told us to just follow him, and he went every which way. Outside Hinwil we finally came to a little hill filled with trees. It was very exciting".

Meier told them, "All of you wait here". Then he drove off.

"I don't remember how long we were standing there", said Popi, "when all of a sudden Atlantis jumped up and screamed, 'Look, Mommy, over there!' We all got up and there was the ship about a thousand meters away. It was big and circular. We wanted to see more, but the ship soon disappeared".

When the child screamed, Schutzbach jumped up and saw something rising out of the forest into the air.

"I presume it might have been a balloon", he said later, "but I have no proof of that". He tried to take a picture, but he was so nervous that at first he forgot, and then he shook so badly he jerked the camera. "That's why the picture is not sharp", he explained. "All you see is a little dot".

The neighbors were certain Meier was crazy. "No one took him seriously", one of them said later. The mayor of a nearby village said that Meier's stories were pure fantasy because he, the mayor, had never seen a UFO in the vicinity. People in Hinwil laughed at the mention of Meier.

"He is a Spinner", they would say, one who is nuts.

Or they called him "Verrückte", a lunatic.

"Are we blind", asked one couple, "or are we stupid, because we don't see these things and he does?"

Now when they watched him searching the night sky with binoculars, the neighbors would snicker and say, "He is looking for his lady from the galaxies".

But the articles that by now had appeared in several European countries attracted dozens of curious people from all over the continent. They came to talk to Meier about the messages from the Pleiadians. To the surprise of the neighbors, these people appeared to be well-to-do, most of them driving Mercedes, many all the way from northern Germany. The neighbors could not understand how such people could be so taken in.

"For us and everybody else in the neighborhood", said Franz Hänsler, who lived in an apartment overlooking the farmhouse, "it was a very questionable situation. We all thought he was a 'fantasist'. The whole house was a strange affair".

Marie Hänsler often spoke to Popi, the only neighbor who did. She bought eggs from Popi and considered her "a very, very nice lady. But", she added, "I wanted nothing to do with her husband!" Often Popi came to her crying, and Hänsler would teach her to sew and knit.

"She was not a woman to be envied", said Hänsler. "She suffered".

Meier himself did nothing directly to offend the neighbors. But his teachings, his telling of fantastic stories that they felt were untrue, would "aggravate" them. And sometimes so many cars trailed from the Meier driveway into the street that they blocked traffic. One of the town administrators, Rudolf Rüegg, thought that all of Meier's stories were "imagined, invented. I think he invented it all". Rüegg received many calls from neighbors near No. 10 Wihaldenstrasse, most of them complaints about the presence of so many cars. Once, a worried mother called town officials because her daughter had gone to the Meier home.

In the beginning Popi tried to talk to some of the neighbors. “But I noticed they didn’t believe me”, she said, “and I started to ignore them. At that time I had my own problems”.

One Saturday morning, as she walked in the village with her two sons, she saw two elderly women in front of the town hall. “I didn’t know them”, she said later. “The children knew them, I think from kindergarten. So they started to play with the children. Then they asked, ‘What’s your name?’ Bashenko could not yet say his name, so he always said Baschel. Then they asked, ‘And your last name?’ ‘Meier’. One of the women made a long face, and the other one asked me if I was the wife of that Meier. And I said, ‘Yes’. And she said, ‘Are you as crazy as he is?’

“The children even had problems in school”, continued Popi, “because the parents of the other children did not believe in all this. Atlantis went to kindergarten and the children always made fun of him. They called him ‘Ufo‘ Meier. He came home crying so many times. I told him to go to the teacher, but the teacher didn’t believe in all this either. He told me that my husband and I were doing weird things with UFOs, that this wouldn’t be the best influence for the kids. I told Billy it would have been better if none of this had happened”.

That summer, 1976, just before all of the publicity on Meier’s alleged contacts with the Pleiadians, Hans Schutzbach had accompanied Meier one afternoon to a secluded meadow not far from Hinwil. There, in the presence of Schutzbach, Meier held out a tape recorder and captured the sounds made by one of the beamships. The sound, an eerie and grating noise, like a high-pitched cross between a jet engine and a chain saw, thought Schutzbach, seemed to emanate from a point in open air about thirty feet above

Meier. When Meier raised his hand and circled it the sound increased; when he lowered his hand the sound softened. Then the two, loud and soft, interlaced in an ethereal resonance. Suddenly Meier made an angry gesture and the sounds stopped altogether. Schutzbach turned and saw a game warden and a policeman, one with binoculars, plus another policeman with a dog and two men on motorcycles.

Before Schutzbach left the scene, he had "a real good look around", combing the nearby landscape, walking to the few trees dotting the meadow and examining their branches. He saw no speakers, cables, or balloons, nothing.

Two days later Schutzbach secretly returned to the same meadow with two friends, and the three of them tried to re-create the sounds using the tape he had made with Meier. They hung speakers high in the trees and used amplifiers, but the apparatus was obvious and the sound weak and distant.

Hans Schutzbach drove Meier to perhaps twenty of his contacts in the forests outside Hinwil, many of them on cold, damp nights. A self-proclaimed nosy person, he watched Meier closely, but never saw him make anything or handle any materials that could have been used to fabricate the sounds or the photographs. Schutzbach's biggest problem, though, was the strange landing tracks. Whenever the beamships left them in the tall grass, he would help Meier measure and photograph them. Schutzbach thought about them often. He saw many people try to prove Meier a fraud by duplicating the tracks, but they always looked much different. "The tracks made by Billy were perfect", Schutzbach said. "The ones by other people were a bad copy".

On the night of June 13, 1976, several people accompanied Meier to a clearing in the forest where he was to have a contact with the Pleiadians. It was 2 a.m. when they arrived. Meier told them that to demonstrate the Pleiadians' existence, Semjase had consented to a light display where the ships would take on color and fly in erratic patterns. Among those who waited was Guido Moosbrugger, the principal of a small school in Austria.

Moosbrugger had first come in contact with Meier a few months earlier when he traveled to Munich to attend a series of monthly lectures on UFOs. At one of the lectures Meier had been invited to speak and to show some of his photographs. "I was so fascinated by those pictures", recalled Moosbrugger, "I sent a letter immediately to him in Hinwil and asked him whether I might visit him". Meier had consented and Moosbrugger visited Hinwil in mid-May 1976. During his stay, Moosbrugger had followed Meier to a contact, Meier on his moped, Moosbrugger and Schutzbach in a car. The three men had driven along a dirt path through a field until Meier signaled for them to stop. Then he had told Schutzbach and Moosbrugger to wait there.

"He took off on his motorbike to where the contact would take place", remembered Moosbrugger. "After he left, I thought to myself, I wonder what would happen if I would follow him to see where he went. When he came back from the contact he said that Semjase had welcomed him with the words, 'You brought two men with you. Mr. Moosbrugger had a thought for a short moment what would happen if he would follow you. It didn't concern me though; that was just his honest interest'."

The two men had sat in the car waiting for Meier to return when high above the tree line two miles away they saw a fire-red disk "as big as the headlights from a distance of one hundred meters". The red disk moved back and forth, then suddenly disappeared. After a few seconds a rotating silver ball spun into view, then two smaller silver spheres appeared beneath the first, also spinning. At the base of the central and largest of the spinning spheres, a large drop formed and hung lower and lower until it broke free and plummeted, disappearing in two or three seconds. Suddenly all of the lights had disappeared.

"After another pause", Moosbrugger explained later, "the very same disk appeared again, became bigger and bigger, and we thought it flew toward us. Then it shrank and disappeared".

Moosbrugger had seen exotic fireworks displays before, but what he saw that night seemed more solid and vivid, like a color cartoon taking place in the blackened Swiss sky; not little explosions of gunpowder, but more the brilliant illumination of strangely behaving physical objects. Later he wrote, "Of course, I cannot be angry if somebody does not believe this story, if they cannot or do not want to accept it as reality. I don't mind if people call me crazy or say I have lots of imagination, but I do not want to be called a liar".

Moosbrugger knew nothing about using a 35mm single lens reflex camera, but he would not return to Hinwil without one. From a friend he borrowed a Pentax, a tripod, and a telephoto lens and had his friend load film into the camera for him, and set the adjustments for nighttime exposures. Three weeks later Moosbrugger had returned to Hinwil, and he now stood in the dark beneath tall pines at the edge of the clearing, his Pentax and his telephoto lens mounted on the tripod. Out of his sight, Hans Schutzbach and his brother, Konrad, also had positioned themselves in the woods, each with a camera. Nearby, the rest of the group ate cake, sipped hot coffee, and watched the dark sky from a knoll.

Suddenly, over the forest, they saw first a red disk, then a silver disk. The lights hovered, then grew, then just as suddenly disappeared. Moosbrugger got the red disk on film. He then bent over his tripod to adjust the angle of his camera when a third disk-shaped object appeared, this one alternating brilliant colors. When Moosbrugger looked up again, this disk had gone, but immediately, very high in the sky, he saw another silver disk edge on, a bar of intense light, with a "glittering rain of fire falling straight down'." Moosbrugger captured this last disk on film, an image that looked like a huge brilliant jellyfish with tentacles drifting across the sky. Before and after Moosbrugger photographed the disk, the intense yellow-white bar changed its form several times, then softened to a glow, and the observers on the ground saw the luminous ball fly slowly away until it was only a bright red speck in the distance. Then it ascended rapidly and disappeared. Meier had had his fifty-fifth contact.

The articles released in the summer and fall of 1976 persuaded more and more people to travel to Hinwil to see Meier. Every weekend visitors came to the house, sometimes as many as twenty, some of them familiar, some of them new. All of them wanted to see Meier's photographs of the beamships and to hear about life elsewhere in the universe. What is the Pleiadian culture like? Their government? Their society? How advanced is their technology? How do they communicate with Meier? What do they look like? Are their intentions peaceful?

According to Meier, the Pleiadians lived to be one thousand years old; Semjase herself was a comparatively young 330. Her home planet, Erra, was only slightly smaller than Earth, yet was populated by far fewer people, less than 500 million. Upon discovering Erra's hospitable but young environment, the Pleiadians themselves had engineered the planet to support life, and today its landscape looked much like the countryside found on Earth, with hills, grass, trees, and running water. They located production and processing facilities in remote regions, away from the population, and utilized nearby uninhabited planets for mining. The Pleiadians told Meier that were he to travel to Erra, he would find species similar to the horse, cow, rabbit, and fish.

Robots and androids performed most physical labor on Erra. The androids looked and acted so human the only way to distinguish them from humans was by their dress. Each wore a uniform, the color indicating the job the android was assigned to perform. They appeared unusually lifelike because their skin was made of living protoplasm, and their brain, too, was an organism capable of natural responses and conversation.

Families not only existed on Erra, but they were purportedly tight and caring. Though sexually mature in their early teens, Pleiadians did not marry until after they had completed their education, a process that began when they were four years old and lasted until they reached seventy. By that time they would have acquired specific skills in fifteen or sixteen disciplines, or, in the case of Semjase, as many as thirty.

There was no government.

"They have, what you call here, 'spiritual leaders,'" Meier told those who came to see him. "And the highest form that they have for their leadership they call Horralft. It's a form of life that's not hard face and body, and not a real spiritual form. It's a middling between both of them. If you put your hand into them, it will go through. The Horralft will not give out orders. They give out something else, what we call 'suggestions'. And then each one on the planet, by his own wisdom in evolution, tries to do his best out of this".

With all of the people coming to her home, to see her husband, taking up his time, Popi felt as alienated as she had when she first moved to Switzerland. When she was only seventeen, Popi had met Meier on Christmas Day, 1965, in the city of Thessaloniki, Greece. Meier was then nearly twenty-nine. Only a few months earlier he had lost his left arm. A month after they met, Meier had asked Popi to marry him, and when the girl's mother would not consent, the two of them fled to a small town where they were married on February 13, 1966. For four years afterward they had traveled from Switzerland to India and back again, working and living in Pakistan, on the Isle of Crete, in the mountains of the Middle East, and in India. When they returned to Switzerland, Popi understood little of the Swiss German spoken in her husband's country. A few years later, when the contacts began, she communicated better in Swiss German, but she still knew so little High German that she found her husband's writings about the contacts difficult to read. "I tried to read them", she remembered, "but I just didn't understand anything. So I made myself a wrong picture of all this.

"It got bad", she continued, "when all these people began coming to Hinwil to see my husband. Most of them were women, and he used to take many of them to the contact sites. I was very jealous at that time. Not that I was thinking he would see another woman. It's just that nobody ever said they would watch my children so I could go with him. They just came to him and said, 'Let's go!' So I was very angry".

One of those who now attended the meetings regularly was Bernadette Brand, a computer technician. In July 1976, she was riding the train home from work one evening, reading Quick magazine, when she saw the article on Meier.

"I remember saying to my colleague", she later recalled, "'Another crazy who says he is having contact with extraterrestrials'. He asked me whether I believe that baloney. I said, 'Of course extraterrestrials exist, but why would they come here? If they went anywhere it would be to a place where they could learn something, but not here'. I thought it was awful that somebody said he was having 'contact' and fooling people. You should put them behind bars. All of them".

Brand knew the Schutzbach brothers, Hans and Konrad. When they told her about an invalid they knew who claimed to have contact with beings from another star system, she failed to connect their story with the article she had seen in Quick. She said to them, "Another crazy around here!"

Konrad tried to tell Bernadette about Meier, but she would not listen. "Don't be so stupid", she said.

"You don't understand", said Konrad, "you have no idea".

And the two of them argued about Meier for the rest of the summer.

One Saturday evening in the fall, Konrad brought his friend Jakobus Bertschinger to Bernadette's apartment for dinner. 'The whole time", remembered Bernadette, "they were talking about some woman, like, 'Don't take her seriously. When she's jealous she makes everybody crazy'."

After dinner the three of them drove to Hinwil to see a "friend" of Konrad's who lived in an old farmhouse in the middle of several apartment buildings. He did not tell her the friend was Eduard Meier, though as they turned off Wihaldenstrasse onto the long alleyway Bernadette guessed who lived there. By now she was willing to meet the man.

A woman met them at the front door and said, "Wait here. You can't come in yet". Then she whispered to Konrad. When they finally entered the house, Konrad told Bernadette, "We can't go into the living room; there is a discussion going on in there".

In the kitchen, Bernadette brewed coffee for the people in the living room, and while the coffee percolated, a woman ran through carrying a large container of water swirling with coal dust. Most households kept this especially fine grade of coal dust for emergencies, to induce vomiting in children. Bernadette wondered, Has someone tried to commit suicide?

Then Meier himself walked into the kitchen and told Bernadette to come into the living room with the coffee. Immediately, she saw a woman with long dark hair slumped over in a chair, and another woman washing her arms and forehead with cold water and patting her on her cheeks to keep her awake. But the woman in the chair was "white, like snow", her head drooping. Popi had swallowed close to fifty sleeping pills. A second woman replaced the first, continuing to bathe her in cool water and pat her on the cheeks. Bernadette thought, If these people keep on doing it this way, this woman is going to die.

When the second woman complained of being tired, Bernadette offered to take her place. She was not as gentle as the other two. She slapped the woman across the face as hard as she could. Then she slapped her again, and again. The woman started to whimper and said to stop hitting her, her teeth hurt so bad.

"If you keep your eyes open", said Bernadette, "I won't hit you anymore".

But the woman again nodded off, and Bernadette slapped her face hard. She wanted to make her angry. For three hours, Bernadette slapped the woman's face.

Then suddenly the woman leaped out of the chair, grabbed Bernadette, and knocked her to the floor. The woman, though slight, was unbelievably strong, and tossed the 160-pound Bernadette around the living room until Meier stepped in and helped Bernadette subdue her. Then Meier wrestled his wife into a bed and told her if she fell asleep she would have to come back into the living room. But she closed her eyes again, and Bernadette slapped her across the face. The woman hit her back, screaming and cursing her husband. Using only one hand, Meier whipped off his belt, got it around her wrists, wrapped it quickly around the back of her knees, and fastened her to a chair. Popi continued to curse him and the others, then closed her eyes and started to nod off again. Bernadette slapped her. Then again, and again. Suddenly Popi strained against the leather belt and broke it, but just as suddenly she seemed to calm down. It was almost 6 a.m. She had last vomited at midnight, and the toxicology center had told them to keep her awake for six hours after she had emptied her stomach of the remaining pills. Bernadette quit, and the other two women went back to washing the woman's face and limbs in cold water.

One Saturday afternoon a few weeks after Popi's attempted suicide, Bernadette accompanied Konrad to a meeting at the Hinwil house with about fifty other people. Though she had expected to despise Meier, she found him gentle and honest, not the Schwindler she had imagined him to be. And this caused confusion, because what the man said of his contacts and his trips into outer space still sounded crazy to her. In a short while she was coming often to the Hinwil house. And late one night, after she had been to see Meier, she was driving home from Hinwil alone.

"As I was driving I got this feeling all of a sudden that I had to stop. I thought, You are crazy. All these ships and stuff make you crazy. So I drove on. But that feeling came again, a very strong feeling that I had to stop, so I stopped the car and stayed inside, locking all the doors. Then I waited in the dark, curious what would happen.

"I was looking out the window from my side when I saw a light rise above the forest. It was snow-white, about the width of my hand from where I sat. It stopped for a moment, then went back down, and when it sank back it was fire-red. I thought somebody was playing with fireworks, but this was so precise. Rockets don't do that. I waited awhile and after one or two minutes it rose again. Then all of a sudden it was gone.

"I thought, Should I drive on? No, wait a little longer. And indeed a little farther away, it is hard to estimate, maybe five or six hundred meters, an orange light rose, again from behind the forest. It rose very slowly and it was very big. I would say it was a quarter the size of the moon. This orange light rose and then looked like it was going up stairs, zigzag, and then very quietly it flew away. I could see it for about twenty minutes. From that area you are able to see the Alps, and I saw it disappear in the Alps. It got smaller and smaller",

THREE

On a Friday night in the early summer of 1976, Herbert Runkel and Harold Proch, men in their late twenties from Munich, were cruising the autobahn to Augsburg in an older cream Mercedes. With the windows rolled up they listened to "The White Rose", a radio program from East Germany that aired every Friday at midnight. Each of them held a spicy German sausage in one hand and a liter of Coke in the other. Herbert, who was in charge of quality control at his father's insulation factory, smoked his Camels; Harold, a professional photographer with a neatly trimmed dark beard, cradled a pipe. They had been close friends now for six years. The Friday night drives on the autobahn to Augsburg had become a ritual, a time to talk.

As always they talked of many things, but one thing that Harold specifically wanted to mention that night was an intriguing article he had recently seen in Quick magazine about a man living in Switzerland who claimed to have had contact with beings from another star system. And the contacts, said the man, still occurred regularly. The article even mentioned U.S. presidential candidate Jimmy Carter as one who had seen a UFO when he was Governor of Georgia. Harold had had his own unexplained sighting when he was only five years old. He later told the story:

"That was on the island where I was born. We were at the beach one afternoon, and suddenly from the seaside there came a flying saucer, two or three, I don't remember exactly. They stood still, a little bit in motion for about one minute, maybe fifty meters high. They were big, it's difficult to say how big. They were there for one or two minutes and like a shot they were gone without acceleration. Gone. I never forgot that. I asked my mother, I asked other people, 'What is that? This is not an airplane, what is that?' Nobody could tell me. Nobody could explain to me what they were, why they were here, what it meant. That was in the '50s, 1953, 1954. I was so fascinated. I will never forget that picture".

On their Friday night journeys to Augsburg, Herbert and Harold often had "philosophized" about the universe, the existence of extraterrestrial societies, the possibilities of travel into space over cosmic distances. "As many do, we were trying to find a truth", explained Harold, "but without religion".

Herbert, a compulsive reader, had read UFO stories before. One of these was about the most famous "contactee" ever, the American George Adamski. Adamski had lived on the southern slope of Mount Palomar. In November 1952 he claimed he had had a conversation with a man of slight stature and shoulder-length blond hair who landed in the California desert in a "Scout Ship" from Venus. The alien had come to Earth because his people were concerned about "radiations going out from Earth", caused by the exploding of atomic bombs. Adamski had traveled the world, famous as the first person to claim contact with extraterrestrial beings. He, of course, was a controversial figure, and his few murky photographs of the "Scout Ship", Herbert had read, actually were superimposures using "part of an icebox machine" as a model.

"In the other cases", said Herbert, "the people always talk about religion, how the space people are sent by God to help the people on Earth and that's all crazy. For someone who thinks logically, it is nothing. No", he told Harold, "I'm finished with UFOs. I read about Adamski, I believe there are extraterrestrial people, but all these stories in magazines are hoaxes".

"Before you say that, you should look at the pictures from Switzerland", said Harold. "You have never seen pictures with quality like this". A photographer with many years experience, Harold had been impressed with the pictures in the magazine, and he described each one in detail for Herbert.

When they returned from their late-night journey to Augsburg it was early morning though still dark. A night person requiring little sleep, Herbert regularly went to bed at three, four, five o'clock in the morning, slept for a few hours, then was ready to start the day. That night he was not interested in sleep; he went instead to Harold's apartment to see the article that had so impressed his friend. When Harold unfolded the magazine in front of him, Herbert saw immediately why the photographs had caught his eye. The two-page spread featured a black-and-white photograph of a large silvery ship hovering high above a valley near Hinwil. A series of three smaller pictures showed a similar ship in various positions around a tall pine. In another picture in a field of grass stood Meier himself, a handsome man with hair thinning in the front, and a well-developed right shoulder and forearm. The left sleeve of his white shirt drooped and rose, neatly pinned to his shoulder.

When Herbert saw the layout, he grinned. "This is a better hoax than the rest".

In the past, nearly every report of unusual sightings or claims of contact that Herbert had read about had occurred in South America or the United States, nowhere he could conveniently investigate himself. But this time the story was in Europe. Harold spread a map across his desk, and they found the village of Hinwil to be a little southeast of Zurich, no more than a four- or five-hour drive from Munich. The two of them decided they would drive to Hinwil the following weekend and try to find Meier and talk to him. “It was just curiosity to see if it was true”, Harold said later.

On Saturday morning the following weekend, Herbert and Harold left Munich at daylight and headed south, crossing the Swiss border just after sunup. Driving to Winterthur, then down through the villages near the Pfäffikersee, they arrived in Hinwil about ten o’clock. Not knowing Meier’s address, they drove to a kiosk in town, where an old woman selling newspapers and candy told them that Meier lived in a large farmhouse at No. 10 Wilhaldenstrasse. “Why do you want to see him?” she asked. “He’s crazy”.

When Herbert and Harold arrived at the farmhouse Meier was not at home and would not return for at least two hours. Popi invited them inside for coffee, but they declined. At two in the afternoon, with Meier still gone, Hans Schutzbach arrived. A few minutes later Popi came out to the car and told Herbert and Harold that Schutzbach could answer some of their questions, since he knew Billy (her husband’s nickname) well and had been on several contacts with him. She again invited them inside for coffee, and this time they accepted.

Inside the old farmhouse, Popi handed them two thick albums filled with photographs. Harold studied several of them closely with his professional eye. “As much as I know about photography”, he said later, “I could not say these photos were faked somehow. They looked real to me”.

“For ten minutes we could say nothing”, remembered Herbert, “because our mouths were open. In the magazine there were only black-and-white photos in two or three different positions. But these pictures from up and down, from here and there, clear and in color, were perfect”.

Schutzbach explained to them how Meier had taken the photographs during his many contacts with the Pleiadians. “If you would like to see landing tracks from a ship”, ne added, "actually two ships, there was a contact fourteen days ago. They are quite fresh, I can show them to you".

The article in Quick had mentioned nothing about landing tracks; Herbert and Harold had no idea such evidence existed. A few hours earlier they had speculated on whether they would find Meier, and if they did, whether his story would hold up or dissolve into nothing but unsupported claims as had all of the others. Now they sat in Meier's house, looking at photographs even more incredible than those they had seen previously. And here was a man who had been with Meier on several contacts offering to show them physical evidence supporting the man's story. The more they saw in the photo album and heard from Schutzbach, the more intrigued they became. Shortly after Schutzbach made his offer, Herbert and Harold were back in the car again, following him through the streets of Hinwil, then out into the country, onto a narrow side road to a place where the road ended. There they got out of the cars and began to walk.

"We walked almost one hundred meters through the woods", remembered Herbert, "and then we came to a place where the wood was closed all around and there was a meadow in it. There was very high grass, maybe a little less than a meter. And there were the six landing tracks from the two ships. I took a picture of them, and I thought, That's not possible, I have never seen anything like that. The grass was turned counterclockwise, right? The interesting thing was the grass was not broken. If you break grass it will lie down, but this grass was not broken. I pulled up some pieces of it and looked at it and it was not broken. I could not understand.

"If you stand at a place like that, the first thing you think is, How did these landing tracks get here? He must come in with a car or with a helicopter or something to make them. But that was impossible. The woods were so close you could not go through with a car".

Except for the landing tracks from the two beamships, only a single set of footprints led from one of the tracks to the edge of the woods and back again. Untouched, the rest of the grass still stood stiff and tall around the six-foot counterclockwise swirls so precisely pressed into tracks. And the meadow in which they lay seemed the perfect place to hold a secret rendezvous: Nearby but secluded and quiet, a thick growth of trees formed a wall over a hundred feet tall to hide the landing and departure of a strange lighted craft.

"The pictures were special", said Herbert, "but when we stood in the woods at this surrounded place and saw the tracks, it was special, special, special. I had never seen that before. It's difficult for me to explain".

Standing at the edge of the forest, Schutzbach explained to Herbert and Harold how the Pleiadians guided Meier telepathically to the chosen site, then landed their ship and disembarked to speak with him unless they desired either to teleport Meier into the ship's hold or break him down and reassemble him instantaneously on board. After Herbert had taken several pictures of the landing tracks, some at a distance, some up close enough to see into the swirls of grass, the three men returned through the forest to the cars and drove back to Hinwil. By that time Meier had returned, his wife told them, but he could not meet with them now; he would meet them in the city of Wetzikon at the Post Restaurant near the railway station at 5 p.m.

After seeing the many photographs in the albums and viewing the landing tracks, Herbert and Harold now thought Eduard Meier was far more intriguing than portrayed in the simple article that only several hours earlier had persuaded them to drive over three hundred miles to Hinwil. Each was far from accepting the reality of the contacts, yet the man's story, from what they had seen, had some substance to it. More than before, they wanted to meet Meier and question him to see if this knowledge from the Pleiadians seemed genuine or was filled with the contradictions of one obviously in touch with no source but his own earthly imagination. They drove alone to Wetzikon and arrived at the Post Restaurant just before five o'clock. About thirty minutes later, as they sat talking at an outside table, Meier walked up in the company of the Schutzbach brothers and extended his hand to Herbert.

"I never saw him before", Herbert said later, "only the picture in the magazine. And he came straight to me, extended his hand, and said, 'Hello'. It was a strange feeling when I looked into his eyes, like, 'I know this man'. I don't know his voice and laughter, but I look at the eyes. 'I know this man'."

For the next three hours on that warm summer evening the five men sipped hot coffee and iced Coke at a table under a shade tree. Harold questioned Meier about the photos they had seen in the albums, but Meier seemed to know little about photography. His knowledge was summed up in the phrase, "I push the button . . . and it works".

Herbert had read many books on astronomy and space travel. He was familiar with some of the mythology behind constellations; he knew about the origins of the universe and that over 200 billion stars now spin in the slowly revolving galaxy known as the Milky Way, and that for every star in the Milky Way there was thought to be an entire galaxy in the universe; he knew, too, about the formation of star systems and the conditions necessary for the evolution of life. He even understood the basic thought behind Einstein's theory of relativity and the problems it presented for faster-than-light travel.

"For three hours I asked questions about these things", he later said, "and all the answers came correctly, quickly, and logically. He would give an answer, and maybe one hour later he would give another answer to another part and it was all correct. All such brilliant logic. I read many books . . . but there is no sequence inside, no logical connection, and that was the first thing I found fascinating about the conversation with Billy. He took his time and always tried to answer a question so I was completely satisfied.

"We talked about his personal life, too, and he said he had only an elementary school education. I know many people who have been only to elementary school, and I've never heard any of them speak like someone with a Ph.D. He speaks like this, and it makes me wonder. When he speaks of certain things I think, There must be some way he knows that".

A month later, after exchanging letters with Meier, Herbert, this time alone, drove again to Hinwil to continue quizzing the man and, he hoped, to see more evidence. When he arrived on the outskirts of Hinwil, however, he detoured into the forest where Schutzbach had shown him the fresh landing tracks.

Despite two weeks of unusually hot August weather with no rain, the grass that had been pressed into the large flat swirls continued to be green and springy. And though they were now six weeks old, the tracks stood out as distinctly as on the afternoon Herbert had first seen them. Like Schutzbach and others before him, he could not understand how the large counterclockwise swirls could be so precisely pressed into the tall grass without crushing it. But if the grass had been crushed it now would be brown and dry. And since it was not brown and dry, nor crushed or broken, why did it not rise up again? For the next five weekends Herbert would return to that same site, but the grass never stood; it merely continued to grow round and round in a peculiar flat swirl. "Then the farmer came and cut the grass", said Herbert. "The tracks still were fresh. I saw that with my own eyes".

Herbert's second experience with Meier proved as intriguing as the first, and he returned again the following weekend. For hours he studied the photographs and talked to Meier about the experiences. His initial cynicism over the man and his alleged contacts slowly turned to curiosity, and for the next year he traveled every weekend to Hinwil, sometimes alone, sometimes accompanied by Harold. He stayed with the Meier family, sleeping in a small bedroom at the farmhouse and watching Meier closely. He was free to roam all levels of the house, and he spoke frequently with Popi, helping her with her German and explaining the contact notes, which she tried to understand. They developed a close friendship, as Popi relied on Herbert for the moral support and understanding her husband now had no time to give her. But Herbert saw and heard nothing suspicious. Popi, if she kept any secrets, divulged nothing. Herbert constantly searched but found no equipment, rigging, or models, not even scientific journals or technical books from which Meier might glean his knowledge of so many things. Meier never left the house unless it was to go on a contact, usually late at night, and no one came to the house to meet with him secretly.

"I saw Billy from morning to night", he later recalled, "and I never saw him making things like maybe speakers. I never saw him take pictures, I never saw a model. I never saw anything that looked like a model or balloon. I knew every room in his house, and I never saw anything. That's the reason I went there; I wanted to see him do something. But I never saw anything. Month after month I stayed in Hinwil, but he did nothing, no people came, nothing".

Herbert had known Meier for several months, when one night after Meier had had a contact, Herbert saw a dark red light rise above a secluded wood behind the Hinwil house. The light stopped. It moved to the left, then to the right. It changed color from dark red to pale blue and back to red again. Then it suddenly shot quickly into the sky and disappeared.

Another time, on a cool summer evening about seven or eight o'clock, Herbert and some others were working near the Hinwil house. When Herbert looked up he saw Meier suddenly smiling.

"What's happened?" he asked.

Meier replied, "I must go to a contact".

Then he ran quickly toward the woods, some distance from the house.

"Billy disappeared in seconds, running to the wood", Herbert said later, "and then all of us, the Schutzbachs and I, maybe one other person, heard the sound. It was coming from the wood".

The ethereal chords whined above the trees like no sound Herbert had ever heard. And he knew that Meier had nothing with him, nothing but a shirt and a pair of trousers. Nor, he was certain, could the sound have come from speakers wired in the trees; it seemed to emanate from no single source. "I am not crazy", said Herbert. "I listened to the sound".

And the contacts continued. Nearly every weekend when Herbert returned to Hinwil, Meier had added to the contact notes and shot more film of the beamships. He now had taken photographs of six variations of Pleiadian space-craft, singly and in pairs, three, even as many as four, hovering over a valley or just above the tree line in bright sunlight. People who heard of Meier and, like Herbert and Harold, came to investigate for themselves, arrived filled with doubt and curiosity; but the photographs softened their skepticism and the contact notes seemed convincing because they were, in the words of Herbert, "absolutely logical". Then Meier began taking others to the actual contacts, and though none ever participated, each had stories to tell.

Two years had now passed, and contacts that once occurred during the day, affording Meier the opportunity to take his remarkable photographs, now came later and later at night. The weather often was inclement and Meier rarely rode his moped alone into the hills. Instead, Jakobus or one of the others present when the telepathic signal came through would drive him to the appointed place, wait in the dark, and then drive him home again. In that first year since coming to Hinwil, Herbert drove Meier to five contacts and saw him return from at least ten others.

Late one cold and foggy night, Herbert went with Meier and Jakobus to a contact. Meier wore his boots and a medium gray leather coat, and Jakobus drove the three of them in his blue Volkswagen, Herbert sitting in the backseat. As always, Meier sat in the front seat, giving directions as he received telepathic instructions from the Pleiadians.

"It was always back and forth, back and forth", Herbert remembered. "I never knew this area well, but I did not feel we actually traveled a very long way. We always went around and around because he wanted to be sure that no people were following. After a short time, he said, 'We must stop here', and then we stopped. And then he said, 'Oh, let's go back a little bit'. Then we went back about fifty or a hundred meters and he said, 'Okay, now you stop'.

"I remember the place that night", he continued. "It was a narrow dirt path, difficult for two cars to pass. At the left side was a little space, maybe for turning, and we stopped there. There were small trees on the left, and the main wood was on the right side. And he went to the right side over the path, and then a little bit down and into the woods. We sat in the car, then got out, walked, and looked up to the sky, but it was full of clouds and it was nighttime so you could not see anything. It was not raining, but it was wet and foggy. I stood outside with Jakobus a short time smoking a cigarette, and all my clothes became wet. We discussed nothing about the contact and nothing about Billy; we discussed cars, funny things about life, nothing special, nothing about the case.

"We were completely in the deepest night in the deepest woods. And we stayed with the car two hours waiting for him. I said, 'What is he doing?' Then he finally came back.

"'You're crazy', I said. 'You stayed a long time, it's too cold'.

"He said, 'I stay in the ship, I'm not cold'.

"I took his hand; it was quite warm. We were freezing. I said, 'Was it nice?'

"He said, 'Yes'.

"Then I saw he was dry. When it's so wet outside the leather coat should have been wet first. But he was quite dry.

"And he was very happy", continued Herbert. "When he came back he was always happy. Sometimes he was mad, sometimes he was sad, like everybody else. But when he came back from a contact he was always happy, very quiet and peaceful. I think that's the word".

When Herbert and Harold returned from a contact with Meier they would all talk till five, maybe six, in the morning, Herbert and Harold drinking Pepsi, Meier drinking coffee with cream, and all of them smoking. They talked about space and the extraterrestrial societies that flourish there, the power they used to propel their ships, the weapons they employed, their social system and domestic concerns. They also discussed the problems of planet Earth, its true history, future wars, and prophecies.

"These were the most interesting nights I ever had in my life", Herbert recalled. "When I spoke with him I always had the feeling he knew many, many things that other people did not know. And he had an especially good way of explaining things. But I never saw him reading science books. He never did that. And he never said to me, 'You must believe this' or, 'If you do not do that you cannot have this'. He was able to do too many things we never understood".

Herbert found Meier's story to be "completely different" from what he had read in books about other so-called contactees. With the others, the writing was always from an earth perspective.

"Adamski, Howard Menger, and many women say they have contacts with other intelligences from Mars or Venus", explained Herbert. "I read those books, too, but I know that what's written inside is totally crazy. They say we have life on Venus, and if you go to the other side of the moon there are cows and sunshine. Or the whole Earth is watched by UFOs that control everything. Or the UFO people are in the government in different countries. That's crazy. In Billy's writings, especially the first seven hundred pages or so of the contact notes, you always have the feeling this is not the mind of an earth person. It's completely different. I have known Billy too long a time, and Billy is not crazy".

Harold traveled to Hinwil less frequently than Herbert, though still often. One afternoon in the winter of 1977, he stood in the attic of the old farmhouse helping Meier print the contact notes. Suddenly, Meier's forehead began to glisten and his eyes closed. After a few seconds, the color returned to his face and his eyes opened once again. When Harold asked him if he was all right, Meier said only that there would be a contact later that night.

In the kitchen after dark, Harold and Jakobus waited for Meier to receive another telepathic contact. About one o'clock Meier came into the kitchen, saying it was time to leave. They drove in Jakobus' old blue Volkswagen for almost an hour until they reached a narrow dirt road in the forest, where Meier told Jakobus to stop.

"It was pitch dark", Harold later remembered. "Billy said he would leave, and we had to wait there. Jakobus was so scared he trembled. I still remember that".

The night was bitter, ten to fifteen degrees below zero on the Celsius scale. While waiting for Meier to return, Jakobus stayed close to the car; but Harold, trying to keep warm, paced back and forth about a hundred feet away. The two men said little to each other. Meier had not been gone long when suddenly they heard the sound of the beamship. Months earlier, Harold had heard the original cassette of the sounds, the ones recorded the afternoon Hans Schutzbach had stood in a field with Meier and listened to the eerie resonance until the police came. Harold had noted immediately that there were other sounds as well on the tape—a car horn, a dog barking in the background. Now, as he stood in the dark and the cold listening to the strange warbling noise, he strained to hear the telltale bark of a dog or the honk of a horn, either of which would have proved to him that Meier was simply rebroadcasting the same recording. Harold had served in the army for two years, where he had been trained to detect the origin of sounds in the forest at night. But that night, as he listened, he had no idea from where the sound came.

"I tried to find out whether it came from above, below, or the side", he recalled. "When you hear a sound it reflects from the sides. But you could not know where this came from". Nor did he hear any other sound, only the eerie pulsating of the beamship somewhere in the sky above their heads.

When the sound subsided, the walkie-talkie crackled with Meier's voice, directing them to a place about a mile away, where they found him at the side of a road waiting.

As a professional photographer, Harold was even more intrigued by Meier's photographs, convinced that if Meier had faked any of the photos he would be able to detect the forgery. He studied them constantly. In a darkroom, he himself had produced many photo montages, juxtaposing people and figures to make them appear real.

"I know how to do it", he said. "For a montage to look real you need a dark background". Almost all of Meier's hundreds of photos showed the beamships in a bright blue sky, sometimes occupied by white clouds.

Harold picked up one of Meier's photos as an example. "I would not know how to do this. I could make a model and pull it up, but there is somebody coming by for sure, a farmer, a hunter, tourists, and they would ask, 'What is this man doing?'"

Another photo, referred to as the sunlight scene, showed a beamship hovering next to a large leafless tree at the edge of a cliff. Light from the setting sun burnished the bare branches of the tree and highlighted the curved rise of the ship. "I have enlarged that picture", explained Harold. "I also put the slides in the projector and I made them small, not big, and then I looked at them with a magnifying glass. You can see more that way. You can see that the branches are in front of the ship, not behind. You must be blind not to see that". With the tree over thirty feet tall and obviously some distance from the camera, this would mean that the ship behind the branches of the tree was also a large object, as large as the twenty-one feet Meier had claimed.

Harold once sneaked into Meier's locked study and carefully went through every drawer, box, and shelf, searching for models, sketches, experimental film, anything to indicate that Meier had somehow fabricated the photos or any of the other evidence. He found nothing.

One of the most convincing things Herbert ever witnessed Meier do occurred not in the cold and damp forest, but in the Hinwil house kitchen with no one else around. Typically, Herbert had stayed up late, alone, sitting on a kitchen stool and leafing through a magazine with one hand. In his other hand he held a knife, carving thin slices of salami and feeding them to the Meier's St. Bernard, Anita.

About three o'clock in the morning, he heard someone coming down the stairs. Meier appeared in the doorway of the kitchen in his nightdress.

"What are you doing?" said Herbert. "You should be sleeping". He could tell by the lines on the man's face that Meier had been stirred from a deep sleep.

"I must go for a contact", said Meier.

"You're crazy", said Herbert.

But Meier said that he had been contacted and he had to go. After awakening Popi and asking her to fix him some coffee, he gathered up his clothes, boots, and leather coat, and walked out into the night. An hour later he returned, drank another cup of coffee to warm up while he took off his clothes, then went back to bed.

Why did he do that? Herbert asked himself. Nobody is here. Only me. He doesn't need to do it for me. It's crazy. When there are many people here maybe he would feel he must give a demonstration, maybe he would go for a pretend contact. But there is nobody. Nobody.

In the early fall of 1964, Timothy Good toured India as a violinist with the London Symphony Orchestra. The son of a violinist, Good had begun playing the violin at age five and later trained at the Royal Academy of Music in London for four years. Now, at age twenty-two, he had been with the London Symphony Orchestra for a year, playing in the first violins. The tour of India, his first, was to last several weeks, taking Good to all of the country's major cities.

In New Delhi, the orchestra stayed at the Ashoka Hotel, and one afternoon between rehearsal and the concert Good took some time to browse through an artist's boutique that earlier had caught his eye in the lobby of the hotel. He had been struck by several paintings, especially a collection of oil portraits of Indian leaders including Gandhi and Nehru, surrounded in pale auras. As he looked through the glass at the paintings now, a woman in the shop approached him and invited him in.

Good introduced himself and learned that the woman was Elizabeth Brunner, the artist who had painted the unusual portraits. The two of them talked at length about the paintings and Brunner's inspiration; then the conversation led to things metaphysical, and finally to Good's hobby, the study of UFOs.

In the mid-1950s, while still in his teens, Good had become fascinated with the existence of flying objects no one seemed able to explain. Pilots observed them, radar confirmed the pilots' observations, yet the objects always out maneuvered and outpaced the fastest jets. Good wondered, as did many people, if the governments of various countries knew more about these mysterious objects than they were telling the public. Now traveling all over the world with the orchestra, he had the opportunity on his own to investigate reports of strange sightings and claims of contact. As he explained more of his hobby to Brunner, he sensed in her someone who also believed in the existence of extraterrestrial societies and their probable visitation to the earth. After they had talked on the subject a short while, Brunner made a suggestion to Good that he found intriguing.

As Good remembered, "She said, 'You ought to meet a chap who's fallen in love with a spacewoman. He's just left India'."

Unfortunately for Good, the man had been expelled from the country only a few days earlier, allegedly for having no money. Brunner surmised that the man was asked to leave the country for another reason, which she told to Good;

"She felt it was perhaps because he talked too much", he recalled. "It's a dumb thing to talk about UFOs in India. She advised me not to do so, publicly at any rate, while I was there".

Brunner then showed Good an article from the New Delhi Statesman dated a few days earlier, September 30, 1964: "The Flying Saucer Man Leaves Delhi—Swiss Claims He Has Visited Three Planets".

Good began reading. In the article, the writer gave the flying saucer man the pseudonym Edward Albert. He wrote that he found Albert "sitting bare-bodied in one of the cave-like monuments at Mehrauli near the Buddha Vihara". The man had been living in the cave for five months, ever since his arrival in India.

"Mr. Albert sounds rather weird", wrote the reporter. "But then he clearly is not eager to talk about his experiences which, to say the least, are remarkable. Indeed, the little that he has to say has to be pried out of him. He doesn't want publicity; he doesn't care if anyone believes him or not".

The man had revealed to the reporter, "I have not only seen the objects from outer space, but have taken photographs and even traveled in them". He showed the reporter about eighty photographs, "all taken with an old folding camera and neatly kept in an album". But when the reporter asked for two or three of the photos to illustrate his article, the man "politely" declined his request. He told the reporter, "I can't spare them". He said he had taken over four hundred such photos, but most of them had been stolen in Jordan and India.

Since the reporter could show none of the photos to his readers, he took notes on what he saw as he viewed the album and used his descriptions to give the readers a feel for what Albert had photographed. "The objects in the photographs vary in size and shape", he wrote. "One is a globular object with a round disc in the centre; another is funnel-shaped; a third is like a neon lamp; a fourth is a big, bright cross and others bright zigzag lines. Some of these have been taken on the ground and some flying in the sky". The man now sitting in the cave claimed he had taken the photographs in Greece, Jordan, and India.

Good read on. Besides having photographed the ships, Albert claimed to have been visited frequently by entities from elsewhere in the galaxy and to have traveled to at least one other inhabited planet. On this unusual planet, "All of the objects were white", he told the reporter. And the space people themselves looked very much like earth humans except they were taller, had a certain glow about them, and were spiritually more advanced. They expressed themselves through the transmission of thought patterns.

The reporter noted that the man's belongings consisted of only a few articles of clothing, his photo album, a folding camera, and two small bags. Traveling with him was a pet monkey named Emperor. At the conclusion of the interview Albert and Emperor were to pack up their few belongings and, with a new friend from Germany who had lent Albert a small amount of money, to begin hitchhiking back across the Middle East and eventually return to Switzerland.

Before they parted ways, he told the reporter, "I have a mission to fulfill", but he refused to say what it was. "I will disclose it when the time comes, positively before a year".

"The story of Mr. Albert is as incredible as it is startling", the reporter ended his article. "He proposes to relate to German scientists his experiences, show his photographs and the objects that he says he has collected from the planets he visited. Has Mr. Albert created history, or is he a mystic who has let his imagination run wild? Time alone will tell".

Many years after the article appeared in the New Delhi Statesman, the reporter, S. Venkatesh, responded to a letter inquiring about the mysterious Mr. Albert. He wrote: "I distinctly remember meeting the man and he seemed, on recollection, very serious about what he was saying. I for one would be eager to know what he did later on, whether he encountered any more space men and ships and whether he disclosed anything to anyone later, as he promised he would".

Timothy Good read the article twice and returned it to Elizabeth Brunner. She herself had met and spoken to Albert, but other than suggesting another friend who might be able to help Good locate the man, she could add little to what was in the article.

"She said he was obviously full of this girl", remembered Good, "in love with this girl from outer space". She added only that she felt he was "sincere, and very enthusiastic". Not certain of the man's name and having only the few clues with which Brunner and her friend could provide him, Good decided nevertheless that the story was sufficiently interesting for him to pursue.

"I don't like to make judgments on people until I've met them myself", said Good later, "so in 1965 I eventually tracked him down. It was very difficult".

The man lived in eastern Switzerland in the foothills southeast of Zurich. His real name was Eduard Albert Meier. During a winter concert tour in 1965 the London Symphony Orchestra played in Zurich, and while there Good went looking for Meier and found that he was living with a sister in a small village not far from Hinwil.

"I actually went out there in the snow and got out to his house and he wasn't there", recalled Good, "so I just had brief words with his sister, who didn't speak any English. She gave me a number where I could contact him, and I spoke to him on the telephone afterwards. He told me that he had recently had an accident, the result of which he had lost an arm. I can't remember much more than that. He gave me the impression of sincerity at that time. Subsequent to that, I informed Lou Zinsstag about Meier; however, she didn't do anything about it for a long while. She had difficulty getting in touch with him, he was pretty elusive. But she tracked him down eventually and had lots of meetings with him".

Considered to be the grande dame of European ufology, Louise Zinsstag, now gray haired and in her early seventies, lived in Basle, Switzerland, along the northern border where the Rhine separates Germany from France. An articulate and cultured woman who wrote and spoke several languages, including Russian, Zinsstag was diminutive and energetic. Despite her religious convictions, a colleague once wrote of her, "A true 'bon-viveur', Lou had a tremendous sense of humour and a healthy appreciation of good food and wine". In addition to her consuming interest in UFOs, Zinsstag pursued her passion for the theater, cinema, museums, and foreign travel.

Zinsstag's mother had fourteen brothers and sisters, nearly as many aunts and uncles, and scores of cousins, one of whom was the famous Swiss psychiatrist Carl Gustav

Jung. Though her second cousin was more than twenty years her senior, Zinsstag spoke and wrote to him often, especially in his later years. Perhaps their most common topic of conversation was one of Jung's lesser-known works, a lengthy essay published in 1958 entitled Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Sky. Jung wrote in his introduction to the book:

> These [UFO] rumors, or the possible physical existence of such objects, seem to me so significant that I feel myself compelled to sound a note of warning. It is not presumption that drives me, but my conscience as a psychiatrist that bids me fulfil my duty and prepare those few who will hear me for coming events which are in accord with the end of an era.

Taking their cue from the word "myth" in the title, those who denied the existence of UFOs claimed that Jung's essay explained away UFO sightings as "psychic projections" and "mass hallucination". But though Jung did not know what UFOs were, he was certain they did not leap whole from the human imagination.

"We are dealing with an ostensibly physical phenomenon", he wrote, "distinguished on the one hand by its frequent appearances, and on the other by its strange, unknown, and indeed contradictory nature".

Jung himself had studied the subject for ten years before he published the book.

> So far as I know, it remains an established fact, supported by numerous observations, that Ufos have not only been seen visually but have also been picked up on the radar screen and have left traces on the photographic plate. . . . It boils down to nothing less than this: that either psychic projections throw back a radar echo, or else the appearance of real objects affords an opportunity for mythological projections.

By the time Jung died in 1961, his cousin Lou Zinsstag had amassed the largest collection of UFO case histories and photographs in Europe. Eventually she would publish the first UFO journal in central Europe and write two books on the subject. One of the books would be about the famed contactee George Adamski, with whom she began a correspondence in 1957 that lasted for seven years. So active and outspoken on the topic of UFOs was she that a senior official of the Swiss Security Services once summoned her to his office and ordered her to publish nothing more on the subject. On his desk lay a magazine open to the page on which her most recent article appeared.

Zinsstag had met Timothy Good in 1965, not long after Good had discovered "Mr. Albert" and tracked him down to a small village in eastern Switzerland. When Good related the story to her, she recalled having heard about the man even before that, but she could remember nothing of the circumstances, only that in 1956 or 1957, somebody had written an article about a Swiss boy named Eduard Meier who had had his first encounter in 1942, when he was only five years old. In the nearly ten years that had passed since then, she forgot completely about him.

But after Good passed along what little information he had on Meier, Zinsstag made no effort to contact him until the summer of 1976, when news of Meier's experiences made its way to Basle before the first article appeared in Quick. On June 28, 1976, Good received the first of a long series of letters from Zinsstag, as she pursued the Meier case and relayed to Good her impressions of the man and his story.

"I got in touch with Eduard Meier, having found out his address through a schoolboy from Bern who came to see me", she wrote in her first letter. "I wrote to Ed and received a very friendly letter with a dozen of his pictures, some of them quite extraordinarily good. I sent money for more. He said he has about 250 of them, all shot by himself. He also has got some films. I wrote him that I shall come to see him as soon as possible. He says that he is fulfilling a task given to him almost forty years ago, so I expect him to come as a high priest, but never mind when you see his photographs".

Less than two weeks later, Zinsstag became one of the many who began to travel to Hinwil to seek out and speak to Meier. When she returned from her visit, she again wrote to Good on July 10, 1976.

"Eduard is a young invalid, 38, who has lost his left arm in a car accident some ten years ago. He was a truck driver. He looks intelligent and fit and uses his right hand with astonishing dexterity. His wife is a Greek girl spiritually handicapped as far as we found out, but they have three little children. They live in a very neglected household in a very old farmhouse with poor furniture, guarded by an enormous dog who loved me. Eduard goes out very seldom and never alone, and never without his gun, so he told me. He has been shot at once or twice. . . . He's been in contact with ET since his fifth year. Together with his father he saw a ufo and met an ET back in 1942. Since then it happened with some regularity that every eleventh year he gets new visitors.

"For a hundred francs, I shall get 50 color photos, and the young man promised me to make a good representative choice. Besides the ufo pictures and a splendid film of twenty minutes, he showed us some other pictures which I have difficulty to describe. Eduard told me that he had been in outer space several times and he has seen some of our planets from a rather near viewpoint. First, I could not believe it and just made polite noises, but then he showed us those photos. Among them is one which would make a sensation. In their flying saucer he and his companions watched the latest Soyuz-Apollo coupling, and for a moment they were at a distance of three meters. In these pictures you see the back of a Russian cosmonaut, his helmet, and the three letters 'COI' on his outfit. On another one you can see the coupling maneuver in action, much better than on TV. Other pictures I will not describe in the letter. It's too difficult.

"I'm still at a loss how to judge the man. His education is even poorer than the one of George [Adamski], but I don't mind that. Yet I don't like his manner. . . . He is anti-religious, and as far as I can see from a pamphlet of his he defends the witches, attacking the Roman Church for ignoring them, etc. He might very well be a witch himself. His eyes gave me this impression from the beginning. But he's honest, frank, polite up to a certain point, and, I can understand this very well, very impatient and a bit tired of being interrogated all the time. While we were there he had several telephone calls, one from Budapest, others from Austria and Germany".

Before a few weeks had passed, Zinsstag had traveled again to see Meier and again, on August 6, 1976, she wrote to Good of the latest impressions she garnered during this second visit.

"I have seen Eduard Meier again, the most intriguing man I have ever met. He showed me other photographs of such a nature that I can hardly mention it. When he starts talking you can well imagine listening to a demented person, everything he says is so fantastic. But lo, there are his photos from outer space, which nobody has ever seen, not even at NASA I'm sure. . . . He sends his respects and love and looks forward to seeing you sometime in autumn. He still remembers your telephone call. He is so modest and sincere he even told me of his time in jail. His life story sounds so fantastic that I can hardly believe it. But one look at his photos reassures me every time".

For nearly a year, Zinsstag read about Meier in magazines, read his contact notes and teachings, and visited with him for hours in Hinwil. An intelligent woman who for twenty years had known and talked at length with numerous "contactees" besides Adamski, Zinsstag was neither naïve nor gullible, nor was she willing to dismiss all contactee claims as nonsense. Forces exist, she thought, for which we presently have no explanation. But she clearly did not know what to make of Meier. After each meeting and often between her interviews, she wrote to Good about the case. Another letter, postmarked October 24, 1976, closed: "More than ever I think that he is a good man, although Esther [a journalist and friend of Zinsstag's] is afraid that he could be under a magic spell or even a witch himself. I don't think so, but there's something very unusual about this man, as you will notice".

In the fall of 1976, Zinsstag, accompanied by Good, flew to the United States to speak to various people in ufology, to interview alleged contactees, and to gather more material for the book on Adamski that they would co-author. A few months after they had returned from the States and she had had time to visit Hinwil, Zinsstag wrote a letter to Good dated January 3, 1977.

"Re: Meier. I am now on such good terms with him that it won't be a problem to see him anytime I like. However, I am holding back, because I can't get rid of the idea that this woman Semjase does him no good. . . . I am sure that within a rather short time she will let him drop, because it is out of the question for him to fulfill her wishes. . . . What he misses is a name, a good one, and he will never get that because he was in prison as a youngster. And most of all he misses a real education, although I must say his technical knowledge is absolutely astonishing. He seems to have gotten a certain pre-education in his twenties while he traveled in Syria and Israel and Jordan, which serves him very well for understanding the difficult things Semjase talks through with him. . . ".

A month later Zinsstag wrote, "If Meier turns out to be a fake, I shall take my whole collection of photographs to the ferry boat and drown it in the old man river of Basle".

By the fall of 1976, Meier's contact notes had grown to over eight hundred pages, and the run of articles in European magazines had aroused the curiosity of hundreds of people who had traveled to see him. Witnesses later said they saw people lined up outside the Hinwil house as though waiting in line to buy tickets for a soccer match. Perhaps more difficult to know for certain, it seemed that others even followed Meier whenever he left his house, hoping to glimpse one of the silver beamships or the fair-haired Semjase, or catch Meier in the act of fabricating his photographs with models or somehow creating the strangely swirled landing tracks. Once, Meier and others swore, he was followed by a Volkswagen with rotating antennas mounted on the roof.

But the contacts continued, and Meier described to his visitors what would happen each time the Pleiadians directed him to a contact site in the hills: First, he said, the silver beamship would appear and wait for him silently a hundred or two hundred feet off the ground. Then with the magnetic force field temporarily reduced, Meier would walk beneath the hovering ship, and in a moment, untouched by any visible force, his body would begin rising toward the hold. During the five-second transfer from ground to sky, Meier could observe the landscape.

"If you have a channel that goes up with the wind, and you put in a feather, you have exactly the same thing", he said, describing the experience.

Those who heard his stories imagined a darkened, secluded site suddenly aglow, with the inner circle of trees seeming to undulate in a pure and gently pulsating light. Though Semjase sometimes landed the ship and met with Meier in the meadow, she now utilized the "anti-gravity" system more frequently. A third, even faster, method was potentially dangerous: Meier could be dematerialized.

Meier called this method the "teleportic", which worked only, he said, "if I am clear in my head and heart". Using it, the Pleiadians could break down Meier's molecular structure as he sat in his office, rematerialize him on board the ship, converse with him for an hour or two, then break him down a second time and reassemble him in an instant inside his office again, or at the edge of a road to be picked up by Herbert, Jakobus, or one of the others who might have driven him to the contact. When he was "upped" by this method, Meier could feel nothing; the danger lay in the return, for Meier would again have to be clear in head and heart. According to Meier, if the ship hovered high in the atmosphere ready to place him back on earth, and he jumped into the teleportic shaft without his head and heart being clear, he would "die for sure".

"You see", explained Meier, "they take me up in this way only when they have checked me over and over. And if there is only a very, very small point which isn't clear, they can't go to it. Then I have to go out on my bicycle or tractor or by car, and they take me up the other way".

The opening in the ship through which Meier entered with the "anti-gravity" method was round and located at the bottom. Meier had seen it either open or closed and did not know how it worked. The interior of the craft Meier described as looking like "a watching central", or security observation room with many small television screens. The windows around the perimeter appeared to be glass and metal at the same time. As the ship entered different atmospheres they changed color; in methane they would turn yellow, in other atmospheres a shade of green, blue, or red. As the ship traveled through interstellar space, a scanning device had to be used for navigation, for in space nothing could be seen through the windows.

Near the ship's controls were three chairs, "like normal chairs, but you can use them as very comfortable seats, or two of them as beds". The beds, however, were not like those on earth, not like "a feather bed" where you sleep on top. The beds in the beamship wrapped around you.

The extensive control panel was dominated by an array of "metallic blots" accommodating one to four fingers or the entire hand. The blots were in rows of different colors—silver, gold, red, blue, yellow—and were never touched; the hand or fingers were only placed lightly over them. Small wheels, switches, and rows of levers completed the instrument panels. "The driving of the ships is very, very easy", said Meier. "There is a red knob, with a small leg, and with it you can do every maneuvering thing you like".

At each rendezvous, Meier learned more about the Pleiadians, how they viewed themselves and the earth humans, their purpose in coming to the earth and in contacting him. During one of their meetings, Meier asked, "Why do you not appear in mass and show yourselves to the public, and why do you not contact governments?"

"The masses would merely revere us as gods, as in ages past", explained Semjase, "or go off in hysteria. That is why we regard it as prudent to make contact with individual persons only for the time being, to disseminate, through them, the knowledge concerning our existence and our coming to this planet.

"Furthermore, all earth governments are made up of human beings for whom power hunger and a thirst for profits are characteristic. They only want, under cover of peace and friendship, to occupy our rayships, to exercise absolute rule over the earth. But they would not stop there. They would try to capture the cosmos, because they do not know any limits. They, on the other hand, are not even able to create peace and friendship among the nations on earth, not even in their own countries. How then could they be capable of holding such might in their hands as our rayships? We have no interest in revealing ourselves to the general public. It is for the present advisable to maintain contact only with single earth humans, and by them slowly to allow the knowledge of our existence and mission to become known, and to prepare others for our coming.

"A further warning: It lies in the frame of evolution that earth man must develop himself spiritually before he will solve certain scientific secrets. Even then, the danger exists, that the barbarous earth man, exercising his technical knowledge, might use it for evil-minded and power-hungry motives. He must remember that when he attains the necessary techniques, he cannot fly to other planets in the hope that he would always be the victor. Other cosmic inhabitants are not helplessly exposed to attack from another race. There could follow deadly defeat for earth humankind and complete slavery, which would equal the falling back to primeval times. When earth man tries to carry his barbarous greed for power into the cosmos, he must consider his own complete destruction.

"This all must be told to the earth beings, for their spiritual reason is still poorly developed. This was the unfortunate experience of a second race of humans in your own solar system. Their planet was lost in a vast explosion, and nothing remained but the desolate asteroids whirling around your sun".

The community of Hinwil had plans to destroy the farmhouse at No. 10 Wihaldenstrasse to make way for more apartment buildings. Though the official reason for the Meiers' eviction had nothing to do with the constant presence of so many cars in their driveway, or the strange comings and goings of Meier himself, or his philosophy, the neighbors and town administrators felt relieved when they knew he would be gone soon. In truth, Meier, too, wanted to find a more secluded and private place to live. By Christmas of 1976, he had found a fifty-acre farm that straddled both Kanton Zurich and Kanton Thurgau, near the village of Schmidruti, thirty minutes from Hinwil.

Considerably higher and farther back in the hills, Schmidruti consisted of a primary school, gardening shop, shooting range (made compulsory by the Swiss military for even the tiniest of hamlets), the Gasthaus zum Freihof, a post office, log business, and Subaru dealership with a garage but no showroom. The latter four stood side by side along the cobblestone row bordering the only street winding through the village. Above the farm, at the top of a hill undercut by the road, sat a single military building, used as a barracks, and an underground rocket silo, which occasionally opened its doors and pushed into view a huge and conventionally armed missile. Seventy-five people, most of them farmers, lived in and immediately around Schmidruti.

The Herzog farm, which Meier wanted to purchase, sat behind Schmidruti, a few hundred yards down the cobblestone way, which quickly turned to a dirt and pebble path. Real estate in Switzerland is difficult to find at any price, and good farmland is even more rare. The price for the Herzog farm was 360,000 francs, approximately $240,000. Meier had no money, but visitors who were impressed by his teachings eventually raised or mortgaged that amount. One woman who had recently received an inheritance secured the loan on the farm.

When Meier moved his family in April 1977 from the Hinwil house to the farm at Schmidruti, Herbert Runkel and several others came to help. They moved everything out of the three-story house and put it into cars, trucks, and a borrowed trailer to haul it up to the farm. Herbert, always suspicious, took the opportunity to investigate even more closely the contents of the Meier home.

"We had a big trailer", he recalled, "and we went, I don't know, seven, ten times, up and down. We worked together several days to bring all the furniture, beds, and goods to the cars—all the things from his office, all the books, all the big printing machines. It was a lot of goods. At that time I looked at everything coming out of the house because some people said, 'Maybe he used models, maybe there is some equipment to make models, or there is an old model, a special kind of paper, a special kind of aluminum foil, something like that'. But there was nothing. He had no equipment to make anything. It was only a house for living and for writing".

In a letter to Timothy Good, Lou Zinsstag described the Herzog farm as "a large estate". But the reality hardly fit the description. The Herzog farm was an abandoned fifty acres of weeds, mud, and outbuildings falling down.

"You could compare it to a battlefield", Meier's friend Jakobus described it.

The house had no electricity and no running water. Beneath the three-foot flood in the cellar lay two feet of mud. Old and diseased trees on the land bore little or no fruit, and underbrush grew thick in the surrounding forest. Water that could have been used for irrigation flowed at will, eroding the land in some places while leaving other sections dry.

Meier, with more help from friends, immediately began to renovate the place. Electricity and plumbing would come later. First they removed the mud by shovel and replaced it with dry gravel and poured concrete. Then they put in vegetable gardens, dammed and directed the water, filled ponds with irrigation, shored sagging walls on the barns and farmhouse until they could be rebuilt, and reshingled the roofs. They cut down the old trees and planted new ones, provided pasture for cows, and sowed several acres in crops for the animals. They often worked at night, mixing cement, and they always worked on Sunday. Meier taught everyone how to do the work that needed to be done—how to irrigate, plant, shingle, mix and apply mortar, wire, and plumb. He always worked in a beige one-piece coverall and his black cowboy hat, and was often seen at the wheel of an old green tractor. From midnight to three or four in the morning, when it was quiet, he would work in his office. In the middle of the day he often would experience a cooling perspiration across his forehead, turn pale, and suddenly disappear.

One afternoon Engelbert Wachter and two other men climbed a ladder to the top of the old carriage house, whose rotted walls had been replaced one at a time and which now was being prepared for a roof. The ladder rose and intersected with the roof at a point about twelve feet off the ground. The roof itself, a smooth, open surface thirty feet long by eighteen feet high, angled upward at a pitch of nearly forty-five degrees. Nothing stood near the building. Before they began laying shingles, from bottom to top, Engelbert and the other two men nailed a temporary brace from one side of the roof to the other near the lower edge, a simple platform so they would not fall.

Engelbert, with his pile of shingles, stood next to the ladder, and the other two men were farther over on the roof.

As Engelbert lined up the wooden shingles and pounded them into place, he saw Meier climb the ladder just to his left and start to pass behind him.

"I looked back to see whether there was enough room for him", Engelbert recalled, "and as I turned around Billy was gone. Not even a second had passed. I presumed that he fell down. I called the others and we all went looking for him. We looked out on the road. Nothing. I would have heard it if he had jumped down. But he had disappeared".

Engelbert later said to Herbert, "I felt his fingers tap me on my shoulder. Then I turned and he was gone".

Herbert had been working down below and had seen Meier climb the ladder, then step onto the roof. He looked away for a few moments, then heard Engelbert asking, "Where's Billy?" Herbert yelled up, "He's on the roof".

"Nobody saw him go", remembered Herbert, "and nobody saw him come. And five or six people were always working around the barn. Always. I saw him go to the barn, I saw how he went up to the roof. But he never came down. Nobody saw him come down. Nobody saw him for four hours". Meier suddenly reappeared, sitting on a cement slab by the barn, smoking a cigarette and appearing peaceful as he always did when he returned from a contact.

Another time Meier had left on a contact earlier in the afternoon, simply walking down the dirt path that passed through the farm and continued into the tall woods. Several people had then heard the singing of the ship. No one had seen him since that moment. Now the sun was about to set, though daylight would remain for another two hours. Engaged in more roof repair, Engelbert sat on top of the chicken coop, a building on the other side of the farmhouse that looked out over the deep and partially wooded valley forming the eastern boundary of the farm. He stopped his pounding long enough to light a cigarette, then exhaled and looked down the valley to a large nearby meadow.

"I was looking around", he later said, "looking at the trees, but somehow my glance was pulled back on that meadow. And as soon as I looked back Billy stood in the middle. In the middle of the meadow there are no trees. I looked at that meadow and I could practically see Billy appear out of nothing".

For six months, from the spring of 1977 into the fall, Herbert lived at the farm with the Meier family, the only one outside the family who slept there. The rest came in campers and trailers while they worked on weekends, and Jakobus stayed at his parents' house forty minutes away. During the six months he lived at the farm, Herbert constantly looked for but found nothing suspicious, no pictures, models, or equipment. And Meier never left the farm unless it was to go on a contact. All day, day after day, Herbert would see him either supervising the renovation of the house, barn, and outbuildings or out in the field running the old green tractor.

In the fall of 1977, Lou Zinsstag, who had visited Meier again at the farm, wrote a final letter on the Meier case to Timothy Good and a few other close friends. She entitled the lengthy missive, "Personal View of Eduard Meier".

"I had heard about this extraordinary man long before I met him", she began. "In the sixties I refused to believe the rumors that Eduard Meier was a true contactee. I rather took him for one of those numerous transmediums pretending to be in contact with space beings and spaceships, getting messages through trance. But at last, in 1976, I met him at Hinwil in the Kanton Zurich. It was because he had sent me some extraordinarily good ufo photos. I now had a feeling that, at least in thought, I had wronged the man.

"Instead of meeting a sickly, soft-spoken invalid, as expected, we found him to be a person full of vigor and strength, very self-assured with a fantastic story to tell. Although we had read and heard many exciting stories of contacts with extraterrestrials, and although we knew well that truth is often more fantastic than imagination, to hear Eduard Meier talk was a real shock. His friend who drives a car took us at once to a set of fresh traces, three identical circles in high wet grass hidden behind a wood in the neighborhood. Later, we listened for more than an hour to his story, and heard him explain his approximately three hundred photographs, including some he said he himself had shot in space. It was breathtaking. Yet, within me, I missed the feeling of joy and sympathy which I really should have felt. Some funny instinct was giving me a kind of negative pulse, signals which concerned Meier's person rather than the things he said and showed us. . . .

"Observing the man more closely, I saw that his features were worn out and hard, and that he had cold and tired eyes. His forehead was deeply lined, and he looked older than his forty years. But his voice was good and strong and healthy, and so were his movements. He was very adept in using his right arm. His smile was sometimes disconcertingly friendly and pure, but the feeling of discomfort never left me. It is still with me.

"This expose is written for a very few friends who know me well, and also know Meier's story, so I do not need to go into details. With frankness, he told us about his girlfriend Semjase from the Pleiades. At first I felt much sympathy with her for having contacted a poor handicapped man like Meier. She seemed to be giving him some extremely interesting information on space and astronomy and to take him for a ride occasionally. A few months after my visit, Ilse von Jacobi sent me part of his writings, fifteen conversations with Semjase. They proved to be rather disappointing to me and I did not like at all her manner of speech. It sounded often rather faulty and unfriendly, rather frightening. . . .

"In 1976, Meier started to attack in his magazine Wassermannzeit every religion in the world, all churches and sects, refuting the need for worship or belief in God. It sounded rather familiar, poison for the people, and so on. The articles were written in an offhand but spiteful, even vicious way, and they sounded so superficial I doubt that either Semjase or Meier knew the difference between religions and such in the established church institutions. . . .

"I liked him less and less, and I stopped writing to him. But I continued to bring interested friends to his place. He always liked meeting new people and was always polite, even friendly, with them. I never talked to him about my objections, mostly because we were never alone. His story and his films never failed to impress me. There was, in my eyes, no reason to doubt his veracity, and soon I found out that the man suffered from a deep inferiority complex, that he was haunted by bad childhood memories, by his experiences at school, in a children's home, in the Foreign Legion, in jail, in hospitals. I was ready to take this into account and stayed friendly.

"Due to his lack of diplomacy, prudence, and understanding, he lost some very good friends. As he said, they were replaced immediately by newcomers, but there were some among his former friends who betrayed him and did a lot of damage to his image without his being aware of it. A lot of them even faked some ufo photos, doing pictures on a windowpane, showing them around and telling everybody how easy this was. I've got two of those fakes. I fell for them for only a few seconds, but people without training might readily fall for the trick. I, for one, am sure that Meier's pictures are no fakes. There's too much variety in them. If indeed he would be able to produce such perfect film materials he would be under contract with the best-paying movie companies for science fiction films, and he would be paid in the hundred thousands for each movie to be sure.

"As an invalid Meier draws a state pension of about 700 francs a month. Nobody in this country can live on such an amount with a wife and three children. Reluctantly, he's now asking for money for his interviews and demonstrations, which he did not do earlier. I know that he does not make money with his photographs, since I bought them for either 1.50 or 2.00 francs apiece, which barely covers his costs. He can't do the copies himself. To fake such extraordinary films anybody would need a lot of money, but obviously, Eduard Meier is a very poor man. . . .

"It was clear to me from the beginning that in due time Eduard Meier's pictures would come under heavy attack, because it has been the fashion for the last two years to declare all close-up shots, showing clear details, as fakes, by those ufo researchers who pretend to know most and to do their research in a purely scientific manner. . . . Some of those sophisticated ufo researchers, always ready to call other people hoaxers, fakers and liars, might be helpful in a conspiracy of defamation. Intending to unmask scoundrels, they are keeping back curiosity and interest and good photographic evidence from important people at universities and in government circles. . . ". Signed, Lou Zinsstag, Basle.

In October 1977 a man wearing a sweater and a light windbreaker walked the leaf-strewn gravel path from the Freihof in Schmidruti to the Meier farm a quarter mile away. A handsome man, short in stature, with deep blue eyes and silver hair, Wendelle C. Stevens had retired a lieutenant colonel in the United States Air Force. He now traveled the world investigating unusual UFO sightings and claims of contact.

Wendelle Stevens had retired from the Air Force in 1963, after twenty-three years on active duty, over 4,000 hours of flying time, and top-secret clearance. Graduated from the Army Air Corps' first test pilot training school, Stevens at age twenty had been a project officer for the development of the P-47 fighter plane, and during World War II had commanded an aircraft maintenance squadron, seeing only limited combat in the Pacific.

After the war the Air Force assigned Stevens to the Air Technical Intelligence Center at Wright Field, where he screened thousands of documents and advanced aeronautical blueprints captured by the Americans when the Germans fled their factories and air design centers. Many of the documents had been seized from the Nazi drawing board, details of exotic flying machines and rockets. Subsequently, Stevens was reassigned to Alaska, briefing and debriefing air crews of the Ptarmigan Project, a weather reconnaissance program in which B-29 crews mapped and photographed the polar surface. Because of encounters with strange circular aircraft reported by these returning crews, UFOs had piqued Stevens' interest even before the term "flying saucer" was coined in June 1947.

Stevens' first involvement with a UFO came during a debriefing in which one of his crews claimed it had spotted a "bogey" flying at an altitude much higher than they were capable. Before long, Stevens' B-29 crews inside the Arctic Circle had reported dozens more such sightings involving speeds and aeronautical maneuvers unknown to our technology. Later, Stevens himself clocked one of these "bogeys" on radar. It was traveling 7,000 miles an hour.

"Based on my previous experience in the Air Intelligence Center", Stevens said, "I was convinced that there was no earth technology capable of producing air vehicles that could fly at thousands of miles per hour and make sharp angled turns at such high speeds, stop and even reverse instantly, stand still in the air, descend and ascend vertically at low and high speeds, land on the ice and water, and submerge underwater and emerge again and fly away".

The B-29s on the Ptarmigan Project came outfitted with still cameras and movie cameras, and many times the crews who reported witnessing such maneuverability also captured the exotic craft in photographs and on film. Stevens himself saw none of the physical evidence, because as soon as the exposed film arrived in its canister with the crew back at his base, Stevens sent it with the crew chief directly to Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, where, according to Stevens, "the officer was met by Pentagon intelligence and taken someplace".

Hearing nothing further about any of the sightings, Stevens began collecting articles and books on the UFO phenomenon. In a short while he had acquired some of the first UFO photographs ever published, and he began to exchange copies of these photos for new ones taken by amateurs, as sightings became more prevalent. By 1976, Stevens' library on UFOs included 700 books and nearly 3,000 photographs, probably the largest private collection in the world, and one that was utilized extensively by documentary filmmakers. For nearly thirty years he had corresponded and exchanged evidence regularly with most of the world's UFO researchers and investigators, and had personally investigated over a hundred cases in Bolivia, Canada, China, Ecuador, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Peru, Puerto Rico, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States; he had walked the sites, handled the evidence, and "looked the people in the eye". Occasionally, he had been warned by governments not to pry.

"When I first encountered the phenomenon in the Air Force", Stevens said, "I thought it was very interesting to know and I wanted to find out more about it. But then I found out that the people I was passing information to were denying that it ever existed. And I was running into trouble trying to tell my stories to somebody else. That piqued my curiosity, because of all the energy used to suppress the information. Why were they covering it up? If there was nothing to it, why worry about it? Then when I got to investigating my own cases and found that witnesses had turned pictures over to authorities, and they never knew really who these authorities were, and nobody could ever find the pictures again, I began to worry. Where were they all going? Who the hell was doing this and how?

"The phenomenon itself seems to be interwoven in our society from its very beginning, and we don't even understand that. If you go back through the Old Testament with different eyes you'll find some sixty-eight passages that describe UFOs. Eliza was taken up by a wheel of fire, and Moses was spoken to out of a burning bush. That's no more than a green fireball that hovers in front of the sofa in somebody's house and talks to him, which I've run into at least twenty times in my investigations.

"I think part of the reason I chase UFOs is that I find realities there that are not realities to most other people. And I wonder why. It's too widespread to be nothing but a mental aberration. There are 70,000 cases per year reported worldwide. That's far too much for accidental story telling. It's too much for a bunch of liars to be creating their own stories for their own prestige or status or whatever they seek as individuals.

"If I hadn't spent thirty years doing this I wouldn't believe it if you told me. But I have come to accept it, because I have seen so many cases and talked to so many different people who are not in touch with each other, who are sane, rational people with no ax to grind, and these things have happened to them".

Lou Zinsstag and Wendelle Stevens had never met, though they frequently had exchanged photographs and information on UFO cases. During his thirty years of collecting and investigating, Stevens had acquired a reputation for having a knowledgeable eye when it came to analyzing photographs. Zinsstag knew of that reputation, and in the summer of 1976 she had written to Stevens, telling him briefly about the Meier case and mentioning the photographs taken by this one-armed, unemployed security guard. Prior to her letter, Stevens had heard nothing of the Meier case, but he knew Zinsstag by reputation as well as through correspondence, and he doubted her fascination with the case was unfounded. Though she was vague about their content, Zinsstag had twelve photographs she wanted Stevens to see; and instead of sending them by mail as she had often done in the past, she wanted to bring them herself from Switzerland to Stevens' home in Tucson.

In early September 1976, Zinsstag flew to the United States, accompanied by Timothy Good, to meet with some of the more prominent figures in American ufology, and to conduct research on George Adamski. On the prearranged day, she called Stevens from the Greyhound bus station in Tucson, and Stevens picked them up, got them checked into a motel, then drove them out to his house. They first wanted to see Stevens' UFO library, which took up an entire wall of the living room, floor to ceiling, the same wall on the other side in the dining room, and another wall in his small study. In addition to the 700 volumes on UFOs collected from all over the world, thirty blue binders containing Stevens' collection of nearly 3,000 UFO photographs stood side by side in three tight rows.

Briefly, they discussed various cases, but Zinsstag cut short the small talk when she pulled a folder from her satchel. As Timothy Good remembered, "Lou brought a sort of 'dossier' on Meier". Inside the folder lay a large envelope, which she opened carefully, then slid out a small stack of 5 × 7 photos. As she began laying out each photograph neatly on Stevens' dining room table, Stevens took one look and whispered, "I have nothing in my collection that even comes near the quality of these prints".

When Stevens examined a UFO photograph he looked first for relative focus, then for distance graying. "Distance attenuation is what I call it", he explained. "The further away an object is the more moisture, smoke, and dust there will be in the atmosphere between it and the lens.

"Then I would look for evidence of rephotographing. If it's got a fingerprint or specks on it, I turn it at an angle in the light. If what I'm looking at is not on the surface then it's printed in the photograph, and that means that something preceded this picture. Also, the distance light travels has some relationship to the color that arrives at the lens. The closer the object is, the more red it appears; the further it is, the more blue. Another thing to look at is light scatter, because the curved surface on a larger object scatters light differently than the sharply curved surface on a nearer object. A model can be perfectly realistic, but it will cast light differently".

Stevens examined each print carefully, holding it up to the light and tilting it. In thirty years of collecting and analyzing photographs of UFOs, Meier's photos were the most spectacular he had ever seen. Rarely was a UFO photograph more than a single accidental shot taken with poor equipment by an amateur who had no time to make adjustments for proper lighting, speed, and focus. Extremely rare was the photo taken in daylight, or with the UFO below the horizon, or with multiple craft in the same picture. And no one had ever taken a continuing series of photographs of the same craft.

In the Meier photos, shiny silver disks, glinting from the sun, hovered in a blue sky above nearby hills and trees. A distinct red band encircled the upper convex rise on many of the sleekly contoured disks. Others were adorned with equally spaced knobs around the perimeter and a rococo dome on top. In all, Meier had photographs of six variations of spacecraft, each taken in daylight, some below the horizon, and some with two, three, even four spacecraft in the same picture. And each of the photos was the sharpest and clearest Stevens had ever seen.

Timothy Good later remembered Stevens' reaction. "He became absolutely in seventh heaven when Lou showed him the photographs. He was thrilled. Absolutely. Words to the effect, 'Best pictures I've seen'."

When Zinsstag and Good had called from the bus station late that morning, Stevens had been entertaining friends down from Phoenix, Lee and Brit Elders. Lee Elders had been a close friend of Stevens for five years and was aware of Stevens' reputation as a UFO investigator. He and Brit were mildly interested themselves, having been educated in the phenomenon by Stevens. No one could go to Stevens' house and see the fat three-ring binders filled with pictures of flying saucers and not have his curiosity piqued. That afternoon, though, the Meier photos that Lou Zinsstag spread across the dining table amazed the Elders as much as Stevens.

"Photographs of UFOs", said Brit, "are usually fuzzy little balls in the sky that have no definition. And they are so far away and so much out of focus they could be just about anything".

She laughed. "Sure, somebody has taken a little tiny miniature setting, put it together, and filmed it. That's what that is".

"Actually Lee used to laugh at my UFO hobby", recalled Stevens. "When he saw the photographs, his position was, 'Ah, they're fakes. Anybody could look at those and tell they're fakes'. They looked pretty good to me, but I had run across a lot of good pictures that were fakes, so I kind of half agreed. But I thought, Man, these are the best fakes I've ever seen. How did he do it?"

For the rest of the afternoon and into the evening, Stevens studied the photographs and listened to Zinsstag recount her experiences with Meier. She told him about Meier's living conditions in the Hinwil house, his wife and children, and the many people who came to see him. She explained her relationship with Meier and how she had acquired the photos. The man was poor, she said, had only one arm, and seemed sincere. How many pictures had he taken of the craft? Stevens wanted to know. Oh, replied Zinsstag, quite a few more. As he listened, Stevens perceived that Zinsstag was trying to relay a sense of the man and his experiences without telling the whole story, as though she were protecting Stevens from some sort of sensory overload. The pictures spoke for themselves, but it seemed that much of the story, perhaps most of it, remained untold. This perception intrigued Stevens.

The following morning Zinsstag and Good left for Los Angeles. For the next year, Stevens corresponded with Zinsstag until he made contact with Meier himself and began a correspondence with him. Slowly, he realized that Meier had had more than a few contacts, that details of these contacts had been recorded, that perhaps many more, even hundreds of photographs existed, and that Meier may not have been the only one to have seen and experienced strange things in the forests surrounding Hinwil and now in the hills outside Schmidruti. In October 1977, a little over a year after Lou Zinsstag and Timothy Good had come to Tucson, Stevens decided the case was worth an on-site investigation, and he made arrangements to fly to Switzerland to meet Billy Meier.

"I'm just going to go over real quick and take a look", he told the Elders. He hoped to get prints of some of the Meier photographs for his collection, and mainly "to look the man in the eye to see if he's telling the truth".

The Elders laughed. "Tell us what happens when you get there", they said.

Stevens flew to London, then took the train to Wiesbaden, Germany, where he delivered a UFO lecture. The next day, he took another train to Zurich, where he rented a car and began his drive to the Meier farm, as picturesque a drive as one could imagine. In October the green countryside lay dotted with the bright reds and yellows of turning leaves, and many tree trunks supported burlap sacks filled with fresh-picked apples and pears. On nearly every hillside roamed light gray dairy cows with the Glocke or the Treichle dangling from their necks, tinkling as they grazed. Already the farmers had stacked winter wood head high, the split logs forming a face as smooth as a puzzle.

The Meier farm stood not so picturesque. Meier and his family had been living at the farm now for only six months. Mud still lay everywhere, and Stevens saw outbuildings standing askew, their roofs sagging. The main house, which shared a common wall with the barn, had no upstairs, only open rafters, and the roof leaked. The only bathroom facilities sat behind the house, a lean-to built over a pit. In the kitchen a pressure pump now brought in cold water from a holding tank, and Meier had wired the kitchen and the main room of the house with electricity for only two bare light bulbs. Most of the floors were still of dirt.

When Stevens arrived at the farm, he saw two cars with people waiting to see Meier, one from Munich, one from Berlin. A few young Europeans, hitchhiking, or on bicycles or motorcycles, had pitched tents on the driest piece of ground they could find and lived there for a few days, working in the field or garden during the day, and talking to Meier in the evenings. Invited by the Meiers to stay at the farm if he liked, Stevens himself slept in a bedroll in the rafters above what used to be the barn. He felt that any case worth investigating deserved time, and it appeared that the Meier case deserved more than most. He wanted to get as close as he could.

A year earlier in Hicson, Zinsstag had told Stevens only that Meier had had more than one contact and that he had taken at least a dozen other photographs than the ones she had brought with her. In his first day at the farm, after meeting Meier and talking with a few other people, Stevens confirmed his earlier suspicion that Zinsstag had held back some of what she knew about the case to avoid overwhelming him at the outset.

Much to his surprise, Stevens found that Meier not only spoke passable English, but had a colorful way of expressing himself. When the two men met, Meier even offered him a challenge: He said he hoped the colonel would ask questions not asked by everyone else.

"He had so many different faces coming and going", said Stevens, "and he had answered the same questions so many times for so many different people, he got sick of it. He didn't want to talk about it at all to outsiders. Because he'd explained to somebody else yesterday and somebody else the day before, and another one the day before, and another one the day before, and he didn't care. If you didn't ask the right questions, you didn't get the answers".

During his four days in Switzerland, Stevens accompanied Meier on several long walks into the forest behind the farm, and when the weather turned bad he sat with Meier in the kitchen for hours poring over photo albums and talking. When Stevens asked about recent pictures of the beamships, Meier gave him 130 photographic prints, charging him only for the cost of printing. Through an interpreter, Stevens also interviewed Popi, the children, and half a dozen other witnesses, including Jakobus, Hans Schutzbach, and Herbert's friend Harold Proch, who was visiting with his sister. Each had his or her own stories to tell, and each was so convinced the contacts were taking place that when Stevens asked if they believed them, the common answer was, "I don't believe. I know".

With the weather socked in, cold and damp, and visibility at the sites poor, the Gasthaus zum Freihof in Schmidruti provided Stevens with a quiet place to get away from the farm and sit in a warm parlor heated by a large wood stove. One gray morning, he retired to a table by the French windows that overlooked the road spiraling through the village, and began to read the background on the contacts. Meier's alleged experiences appeared to be far more complicated than a simple meeting three years earlier.

Stevens thumbed through the voluminous pages of contact notes, beginning with Meier's account of his first contact with Semjase, a Tuesday afternoon, January 28, 1975, in a field not far from Hinwil.

According to the notes, that January had been unseasonably warm in eastern Switzerland, and the winter had been unusually dry; little snow clung to the lower elevations. Meier wrote that in the early afternoon he had been at his house in Hinwil when the twinkle of a thought had entered his consciousness, and then words and symbols had formed a message, one he had been expecting but not quite so soon: He was to leave his house and bring with him a device for taking pictures.

Responding to the message, Meier had departed on his moped, taking with him an old Olympus 35mm camera with a broken viewfinder and a focus that jammed just short of infinity. He used this camera because the film advanced with a simple thumbwheel he found easy to operate with his one hand.

On his motorbike, he had ridden aimlessly through the village, turning when the glimmer of a command directed him to. After an hour, he found himself far from the village, on a remote road bordering a nature conservancy where he received a final command to stop his motorbike and wait. After several minutes a sudden stillness descended upon the meadow, and then a large disk-shaped object shot soundlessly through light clouds, slowed in a wide graceful arc, and crossed the meadow four or five hundred feet from where Meier stood aiming his camera. But the moment he snapped a picture, the disk had vanished.

When the disk reappeared again it hovered above a truck parked at the edge of the meadow, only a hundred feet from where Meier stood. He watched the disk suspended quietly no more than three hundred feet off the ground.

Meier estimated the disk to be about twenty-one feet in diameter, with reddish rectangles, like windows, encircling its upper mound. Beneath the craft, the hull, exceedingly old in appearance, seemed to undulate "as if little waves ran continuously through the lower side of the ship". The waves radiated downward, creating an aura around the truck. Meier took a second picture, and again the spacecraft abruptly broke its hovering pattern, rushed toward the east, and disappeared into the clouds.

Climbing onto his moped, Meier had then headed out across the meadow in the direction he had last seen the disk. Only moments passed before he felt a stillness suddenly descend upon the meadow. Then the disk came streaking through the clouds again, faster than any jet Meier had ever seen. It dropped speed quickly, banked slowly over the forest, and began its descent toward the clearing. Meier took two more pictures as the craft, without a sound, dropped lower and lower, and then landed.

In the warm parlor of the Freihof, Stevens put down the notes and sipped his hot tea. The encounter Meier was about to describe in the notes, he now knew, was only the culmination of a series of phenomena in Meier's life that Meier claimed had been set in motion thirty-five years ago. Before he read further, Stevens wanted to question Meier about the earlier experiences.

Back in the kitchen at the farmhouse Meier did not hesitate to tell Stevens the long story of his involvement with the Pleiadians, a story that began in his childhood. He said his first sighting of an alien spacecraft occurred one morning when he was only five and a half years old.

"This was in 1942 together with my father", said Meier. "He was behind the house under a walnut tree, it was summertime. When I saw the ship flying, it didn't necessarily seem strange to me. It did look strange in our world, but somehow I had the feeling that it was something familiar. It fell down from the sky, to the tower of the church, and then it came to us and left westward. It was very, very fast. Altogether I watched it fall for maybe one and a half minutes, and then when it left westward there were seconds only".

The object had reminded Meier of a huge discus, shooting overhead only 600 feet off the ground, completely soundless, and disappearing over the Höragenwald.

He asked his father, "Daddy, what's happened here?"

But his father only replied, "It's a secret weapon of Adolf Hitler".

"I was thinking that can't be true", said Meier, "that's something else. I don't know if my father realized what he saw, because he didn't bother with it anymore. I started to watch the sky day and night".

Meier told Stevens that two months had passed before he again saw the silvery flying disk, this time descending slowly toward a field where he was playing alone. But as the disk neared the grassy surface, suddenly, without a sound, it had vanished. Within moments of the disk's vanishing, something "similar to a voice" arose inside Meier's head. Accompanied by the drawing of vivid pictures in his mind, the voice thereafter spoke to Meier once a day. It requested that he answer, and seek answers of his own.

"In the beginning I didn't receive entire words or sentences", he explained to Stevens. "It was more like pictures. As time went by these pictures became words and sentences. Later I received messages in symbols. Once I tried to draw one of these symbols, but I was not able to do it".

Troubled by the voice and the pictures in his head, Meier had told Parson Zimmermann, the Protestant minister in the village, of the great flying disk he had seen and of the voice that had come into his head soon afterward. Zimmermann had a reputation in the village as somewhat of a mystic, far more liberal in his thinking than the parochial outlook of his parishioners.

"I knew Parson Zimmermann", said Meier. "He was the family priest, and I used to play with his children. Another reason I probably went to see him was that even as a small child I heard talk that he occupied himself with mystical matters. I told him about the experience I had together with my father, and then the voices I heard inside of me, the telepathic calls. That's why I went to him, because I thought I was going crazy. I used to go after school, it was not far from the schoolhouse. He told me that he knew about these flying objects, back then they were not called UFOs, this was nothing new to him. The people who flew in them would come from another world, not from earth. He told me that he understood this, but that he could not talk about it. He was a priest and he would shock the people. He told me to try to learn telepathy, to try to give answers. So I tried as I was told. After a few weeks it worked, and I was able to answer. I remember very well that Father Zimmermann told me not to talk about it to anyone, otherwise everybody would say I was crazy".

Now, whenever he heard the voice speaking to him, the young Meier would try to direct his thoughts inward, and before long he felt as if those thoughts made contact with something.

"The first reaction from the other side", he recalled, "was like a gentle and fine laughter, which I heard deep inside of me and felt, pleasant and relaxing. I still hear that laughter, but I can't define it. It was a very lovely laughter". Then the contact faded away once more, and Meier neither heard a voice nor realized pictures. Suddenly, all was quiet again.

On February 3, 1944, Meier's seventh birthday, a new voice, low and clear, came into his conscious mind "and ordered me to learn and to collect knowledge transmitted to me". Meier feared that the clarity of this new voice meant he had finally succumbed to insanity.

"I was afraid, because as a small boy I hadn't any experience with the telepathic way. I again had to go to ask Parson Zimmermann what was happening, and he informed me, and I slowly understood".

The low, clear voice Meier now heard belonged to an entity named Sfath, whose thought-transmitted teachings continued frequently through the summer of 1944. Then one day in September, as Meier walked alone in a meadow, Sfath suddenly announced himself telepathically and told the boy he should wait there and not be afraid.

"This was some time later and far from our home", said Meier. "It was three or four miles away behind a very big forest, a lonely place. There I saw something falling down from the sky, very, very slow and it became bigger and bigger. It was something like a metallic pear. Then this ramp opened and it came out, going down like an elevator. I entered the ship and we went up very high above the earth. There was a very old man who looked to me like a patriarch. His name was Sfath. He was a human being, like each other one here on earth, only very old. We talked for hours, then he brought me back to the ground. The funny thing was, he knew my mother tongue better than I".

The venerable Sfath told Meier he would remain his spiritual mentor only through the early 1950s, when a much higher form of life would assume the responsibility for further teaching. Meier had been selected for a mission, but Sfath revealed only that decades would pass before the boy knew its nature. Until that time, Meier had to be prepared to meet with many things, some that would cause him again to question his sanity, others that might bring physical harm. At the end of four hours, Sfath returned Meier to the meadow then departed, never to be seen again by the young boy. For many years thereafter, though, he had continued transmitting thoughts to Meier, preparing him, Meier felt, for the next step in his spiritual evolution. Then on February 3, 1953, when Meier turned sixteen, Sfath's voice had ceased in his mind forever.

Several months passed before the silence was again filled with a new voice, at once present and talking to him. Unlike the soft and harmonic tone of Sfath, the new voice sounded young and fresh, full of force. She was named Asket.

Asket came from the DAL Universe. "To your universe it is unknown", she instructed Meier, "but our universe is parallel to yours. It lies reckoned in your time on an equal plane. Many of the universes lie in time planes and spaces completely unknown to you. Because of technological developments, the barrier has been opened from our universe to yours".

When Meier was twelve he spent eight months in a tuberculosis sanatorium, and at fourteen the local guardianship office sent him to the boys' home at Albisbrunn for being consistently truant. At Albisbrunn he ran away three times before authorities returned him to his parents, and then he quit school before completing the sixth grade. As a young man, he worked at many jobs, from laying sewer pipe to milking dairy cows. Once, with several other young men, he was picked up by police for stealing and sent to a detention center at Aarburg, from which he again ran away, this time to France, where he joined the Foreign Legion, went AWOL a few months after completing training, and returned to Switzerland and the detention center. He told Stevens that after his teenage years of reformatories and odd jobs, Asket had encouraged him to venture out into the world, to explore and to learn. Inspired by her telepathic teachings and her reassurance, Meier said he began his first travels into the Middle East in 1958.

"I was told to go over there myself and see what is really there", he said, "because there is a connection with previous lives. The most important places were Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Jordan. Very important again were West Pakistan, the foot of the Himalaya Mountains, and then India, mainly New Delhi and Mehrauli. And I have to add Turkey to this. All this has a connection with Emmanuel; that was his route and where he lived. I was told to get in touch with certain people, some of whom expected me, they were informed. In Mehrauli I learned the teachings and philosophy of Buddha from a Buddhist monk".

Weeks, even months had passed between contacts with Asket. Then suddenly her voice would be inside his head again, indicating she desired to transmit information to him.

"Do you have time?" she would say.

Most often he would say yes, because her instruction was more important than anything else. And if he said yes she would say, "Would you go to this place tomorrow and meet with these people?" Or, "I want you to go here and look at this". Or, "I want you to go there and learn this".

"It is something very normal", he explained to Stevens. "It's as if you called me and asked, 'Billy, do you have time for this?' Same thing".

Meier viewed such wanderings as part of the mission he had been given as a young boy. It was "instructive". As he explained to Stevens, he was "to get to know man, the soul of man, life of man, the background of the teachings". He was also to learn about nature.

"You learn a lot from nature", he said. "You observe plants and animals, how everything exists, how it comes to life, how it dies, how it can live together. That's how I learned the laws and commands of nature. The laws and commands of nature are the same as the laws and commands of Creation. Creation is not a separate power, Creation is in everything".

Working his way from Greece to Turkey, down through Syria, Jordan, and Iraq, into Saudi Arabia and out again through Kuwait, into Iran, further east to Pakistan and finally into India, Meier had traveled "by land, in cars, by hitchhiking, by bus and by train and by ship". He found employment as a snake catcher and a gardener, drove a nitroglycerine truck, sang in the streets, waited tables, herded pigs, sailed an oceangoing tug, sold pots, pounded nails, supervised a youth hostel, prospected for rubies and gold, posed as a veterinarian, coached, worked as a male nurse, picked grapes, designed jewelry, performed puppet shows, raised chickens, and taught German—all, he told Stevens, under the tutelage of Asket. During his travels he acquired the nickname "Billy", a result of his infatuation with the American West and folk heroes Billy the Kid, Buffalo Bill, and Wild Bill Hickok.

As Meier wandered from country to country, job to job, Asket had continued the telepathic teachings begun by Sfath, imparting to him even greater spiritual awareness.

"You are selected as truth offerer", she had revealed to him, "like numerous others at very early times before you. You have to become greater in knowledge than every other earthly human being of your time. Because of this, you have come under the controlling guardianship of a certain form of life which had to protect, lead, guide, and educate you. This embodies a law of the Creation which cannot be acted against, even by will, for truth offerers are not called for their mission at a certain age; they are destined from the time of procreation. Such a life will be difficult, for the creature concerned has extraordinary things to perceive".

Near the coastal city of Iskenderun, Turkey, on August 3, 1965, winding his way out of the Middle East, Meier was riding in an old bus when it collided with another bus, throwing him out of a window. The accident severed his left arm just above the elbow. Meier told Stevens he had been left for dead by the side of the road and lay unconscious for several hours before a doctor happened by, checked him for signs of life, and had him taken to a local hospital. He spent two weeks there, and when he felt well enough to travel again he continued on to Greece, where he settled into a hotel in Thessaloniki, selling shirts "with German, with my hand, my eyes, my mouth, with my feet, with a pencil and paper". At a party on Christmas Day of that year, he had met a seventeen-year-old Greek girl named Kaliope Zafireou.

While Meier was in India in 1964, Asket had allowed him to photograph her spacecraft high above the Ashoka Ashram on the outskirts of Mehrauli. In the photograph, the craft appeared distinctly disk-shaped, topped by the slight rise of a dome, but otherwise undetailed. Meier still had the photograph and showed it to Stevens.

That year, Asket, as Sfath before her, had left him. In her final contact, she had informed Meier that for his own benefit as well as that of his new contacts' he would be monitored for the next eleven years. At the end of that time, if assured that he had achieved the proper spiritual plane to allow face-to-face contact, the new beings would reveal their presence to him.

"Your forefathers came from the Constellation Lyra", Asket had told Meier. "And when you have become mature enough to hear the new explanations concerning these matters, you will have the answers from the descendants of your forefathers themselves. The eternal truth remains for all times the eternal truth".

And so ended Meier's story of his youthful encounters.

Early the next morning, Stevens returned to the warmth and quiet of the Freihof's small paneled dining room, where he drank more strong tea and waded through the awkward English translation of Meier's first contact with the new life-form, the Pleiadians. He had left off with the spacecraft finally alighting in the meadow. As Stevens began reading again, Meier's notes described the craft, which, now landed in the meadow, seemed to pulsate. Its nearly translucent, golden-silver skin glinted in the sun. Except for the portholes around the dome, the smooth, contoured surface remained unbroken by projections or seams and unmarked by symbols.

Meier had walked toward the craft for a closer look and better pictures, but when he had come to within a hundred yards, something suddenly checked his progress, "as if I were running against the winds of a soundless storm", he wrote. "With all my power I fought against it to move forward. I even succeeded in this, but only for a few meters, then the counteracting force was simply too great, and I sat down on the ground, stared over at the object and waited for what was to come".

In less than a minute, a figure had appeared behind the craft. As the figure approached, Meier could see that it was human in form, walked upright on two legs, and had two arms at its side. It was covered up to its neck by a tight, thin one-piece suit, dull gray in color and rough—almost like the hide of an elephant, he thought. A hard ring collar encircled the base of the neck, and the suit ended in darker, ankle-high boots.

The being, of course, was the Pleiadian Semjase, a woman with eyes an unusually pale blue. Her amber hair was parted in the middle and fell to her waist, framing her small nose, delicate mouth, and exceedingly high cheekbones. Meier had noted at the time that only two of Semjase's features truly differed from that of an earth human: Her small ears joined her head in a straight line instead of a gentle curve; and her white skin was so pale and so perfect it approached luminescence.

Semjase had walked confidently and gracefully toward him, touching his arm and gently helping him to his feet; then the two of them walked to a tree near which Meier had left his motorbike. There in the grass, for an hour and a quarter, they had talked, Semjase speaking German so that Meier could understand.

Meier wrote in the notes that for a long while the Pleiadians had desired contact with an earth human who was sincere in assisting them with their mission. They had nurtured and observed him since he was five years old, and since he responded adequately to each of several levels of communication he had continued to be contacted. In January 1975 he finally was ready to learn of the Pleiadian presence and to understand the simple mission for which he had been selected.

Semjase first explained briefly that Pleiadian civilization originated many thousands of years ago, not in the Pleiades, a star system much younger than our own, but in the Constellation Lyra. When war ensued, before the planet was destroyed, much of the population migrated to other star systems, in the Pleiades, the Hyades, and to a planet orbiting a nearby star known as Vega. On one interstellar journey, the new Pleiadians discovered Earth and its early life evolving in an atmosphere hospitable to their own. Since that time, according to Semjase, Earth had been destroyed twice by its own inhabitants: first by a civilization evolved from early Pleiadians who remained behind and mated with primitive earth humans; and second when a later generation of Pleiadians colonized Earth and produced advanced technology until war again destroyed the planet. Semjase and the Pleiadians who had chosen to return again to Earth were descendants of a peaceful Lyrian faction that now felt responsible for guiding Earth in its spiritual evolution, so the earth humans could avoid the setbacks long ago experienced by their Pleiadian ancestors.

lb help them in their mission, the Pleiadians had contacted many earth humans telepathically, but the chosen ones eventually proved to lack knowledge, willingness, or loyalty. The few who possessed these qualities feared exposure, and so remained silent about the contacts.

“In the past we have witnessed those who were unable to determine the truth and were frightened by it”, Semjase told Meier. “They claimed they would be accused of insanity, and that others would plan conspiracies to prove they were lying. This serves no purpose for the earth human or ourselves. If such humans had been sincere, we would have offered them the chance to take clear photo proofs of our beamships. We have allowed you this already, and in the future will come even greater opportunities”.

Taking photographs of the Pleiadian beamships was to be part of Meier's mission; pictures provided proof that the Pleiadians existed, and this reality was a necessary step before earth humans would begin to accept the truth that they belonged to a network of galactic societies. The Pleiadians themselves were only one of many millions of cosmic races that traveled freely in space.

"The earth human calls us extraterrestrials or star people, or however he wants", Semjase had continued. "He attributes to us supernatural abilities, yet knows nothing about us. In truth, we are human beings like the earth human being, but our knowledge and our wisdom and our technical capabilities are very much superior to his.

"One of our concerns is aimed at your religions and the detrimental effect they have had on the development of the human spirit. One thing above all has power over the life and death of each creature. This is the Creation, laws which are irrefutable and eternally valid. The human being will recognize them in nature, if he troubles himself to look, for they show him the way to spiritual greatness. While the earth human indulges in religion, the real spirit dwindles.

"On Earth", she added, "charlatans have spread the lie that we come by order of the Creation as angels, to bring to the earth humans the long-hoped-for peace, the truth, the protection, and the order of your God. This is a lie, for we never have received such orders and we never will. The Creation never gives commands. It is a law unto itself, and every form of life must conform to it and become a part of it. Bring this truth to the light of the world".

Before they parted that afternoon, Semjase had promised Meier that many contacts would follow, and that she also would transmit thoughts to him telepathically.

"Do not worry that I will do this at an unsuitable time", she had said. "I know to regard your character and your will for independence; thus I will always take my directions from you. The time will come when we will meet together in my beamship, and you will be able to fly into space with me. I will inform you later about this".

Semjase had then walked back through the meadow to her beamship. Once she was inside, waves again emanated from the craft, distorting the shapes and colors of everything around it. A blue-red corona radiated outward. Meier took several more pictures as the beamship rose slowly above the pine trees and drifted to the north. It was exactly four o'clock when he exposed the last frame on his film; an instant later the beamship shot straight up into the clouds and disappeared from Meier's view. And once again the stirring had returned to the meadow.

One afternoon, with a break in the weather, Stevens asked Meier to take him to one of the contact sites. On his moped, Meier guided Stevens and the interpreter to a grassy bluff near Hasenbol, about forty minutes from the farm. On that bluff Meier had taken a series of photographs in which a beamship approached in the distance.

"The pictures", recalled Stevens, "showed the object beginning as a speck, just a little dark speck, and getting bigger and bigger and bigger until it's the craft hovering behind a tree".

Driving up to Hasenbol, Stevens was impressed by the terrain and puzzled at how Meier could have rigged the photographs to make the beamship appear to fly toward the camera from a point out over a deep valley. But as they neared the site another problem arose that had never occurred to him. The only way to get to the top of that bluff was by climbing a dirt road barred by a locked gate. Beyond the gate the road narrowed and finally became two ruts separated by a wide swath of thick grass cutting through meadow, then traversing steeply up the side of the bluff.

At the gate Stevens stopped the car, located the farmer who owned the land, and had his interpreter ask for permission to pass through the gate and proceed across the meadow.

"When we went through there he looked at everything", remembered Stevens. "He didn't open it, but he came and looked on the back of the moped and at the car, and wanted to know what we were going to do. And I don't think that he would have allowed Meier across there with a moped loaded with disks and rigging equipment. He might have let him in there with all that rigging, but at least he would have known about it".

While the farmer looked over the contents of Stevens' rental car and Meier's motorbike, Stevens asked through the interpreter, "Do you remember Mr. Meier here?"

The man said, "Yes, he was here over a year ago".

"Did he have anything unusual with him at the time?" asked Stevens.

"What do you mean?" countered the farmer. "He had cameras and a roll pack strapped on his back, and a tripod on his moped".

"No", said Stevens, "did he have anything disk-shaped, like the hubcap of a car or anything like that?"

"No, I didn't see anything like that", replied the farmer.

Meier stood next to Stevens, as Stevens asked the questions. "He knew what I was after", Stevens said later, "but he never objected to me asking these questions of him or of anybody else".

Later, as they drove back to Schmidruti, Stevens mulled over three things about Hasenbol: the locked gate, the stern and inquisitive farmer, and most of all, the steep drop below the grassy bluff. "That and the fact that the object approached from a gray spot in the distance in the haze, getting bigger and bigger and bigger all the way, from over this valley. I don't see how he could do it".

By now, several witnesses had described to Stevens the strange landing tracks left by the beamships, and Stevens wanted to see a set for himself. Two weeks before his arrival in Switzerland, there had been a contact in a meadow and a set of three tracks had been left behind. If nothing had disturbed them, they would still be there in the short grass. With Meier directing, Stevens drove to the site, where they got out of the car and walked through the woods to a clearing. Stevens recognized the indentations immediately and understood why they had puzzled so many people before him.

"The tracks I looked at had stems bent over that weren't broken and they never stood up", he recalled. "And that's mysterious. How can that happen? All grass stands back up again if you haven't broken the stem. I have never been able to figure out what kind of equipment he could have used to produce those tracks in wet grass without leaving a track to and from, except the one Semjase walked out on. You could salt the ground, but the salt would not make the grass grow greener, and it probably wouldn't grow at all if you salted it too much. When I asked him he had a ready answer, didn't even stop to think about it.

"I said, 'How come the grass doesn't grow back up?'

"He said he asked the Pleiadians and they told him it was the magnetic vortices under the landing pads that produced a change in the magnetic orientation in the plant, and the plant grew horizontally in its induced field rather than vertically in a normal field. I could be misreading it, I could be seeing it all wrong. But how in hell was he going to do that a dozen times over and never get caught?"

Stevens had investigated over a hundred cases in a dozen countries. He had walked landing sites, handled evidence, and talked to witnesses. But the Meier case was different. In Stevens' mind what set it apart was the number of principal witnesses who had seen something for themselves. Too many seemingly honest people had too many stories about Meier that couldn't be explained—people who had watched him closely, had waited for him to slip, and who had never seen anything suspicious. One of the most common stories Stevens heard was about the time the Pleiadians had teleported Meier out of his office. The office had one window and one door, both locked from the inside with a key. One afternoon, at least two people saw Meier enter the office, but no one saw him leave. Yet later in the afternoon, when everyone thought he was working in his office, he suddenly showed up on the road in front of the farm briefly disoriented, and three men had to break down the office door to get back in.

After Stevens heard the story, the next time he and Meier sat down for a question-and-answer session, he asked Meier to define for him the precise moment he was teleported from earth to a beamship. Meier, in English, tried to explain, using the example of being in his office.

"I maybe sit by the typewriter at the window", he began, "and suddenly I feel a very, very strong force clearing up everything in my head, but still holding the position of my body by the table . . . because I am already going into the ship with Semjase. And in that same moment I know I am sitting in front of the typewriter by the table. But a very short moment only, because I forget everything that is happening here. And then, in this moment, I am there, and not here".

This led to another question. Stevens wanted to know "where" Meier was when he met with the Pleiadians.

"If I am now in the ship staying on the ground", said Meier, "or a little bit over the ground, or if we fly off in the atmosphere, or out of the earth into space, or if we are walking around the ship, it is exactly the same. You see, there is the force field, and you always are inside there".

But Stevens wondered if during the contacts Meier was somehow in another dimension, or if the experiences with the Pleiadians were similar to astral travel, "a state of ecstasy, exhilaration", he suggested. He was implying that perhaps Meier's contacts took place solely on a mental plane and not a physical one.

But Meier answered, "I know what this means, astral travel. It isn't anything like that. It's so real, like we are sitting here. You see", he said, "they are really material".

Stevens understood now why Lou Zinsstag had been reluctant to tell him everything she knew about the Meier case. The four days in Schmidruti had been crammed with reading, questioning, viewing, thinking, and wondering. For the first time in thirty years he felt overwhelmed. He returned to Tucson with 130 new color photographs, many of them far better than the original twelve he had seen Lou Zinsstag arrange across his dining room table. He had several hundred roughly translated pages of the contact notes, and many statements from witnesses who described seeing things unimaginable.

"Some of them told me they saw him return in the middle of three men standing in a group in a rainstorm. Looked like he just popped out of the ground, and he didn't have any raindrops on him. That's unique, that's a real trick. I never had people present where the witness was teleported.

"No, Meier's a smart man and he's got a good mind, but he has only one arm, and he's limited in equipment, and he's watched by a lot of people. I don't see how he can do all these things".

Stevens went back to Tucson and told his friends Lee and Brit Elders, "If this man is perpetrating a hoax on the world, he is also successfully fooling his wife and his closest friends, and has been doing so for two and a half years".

"Steve came back shaking his head", remembered Brit. "He didn't know what to do. He spent three days at our house saying, 'You're not going to believe it. You've got to go. You're not going to believe it'."

"I was worried about him", added Lee, "because I had observed so many UFO cases he'd been on in the past. He's had a hundred field investigations. But this time he comes back saying, 'You've got to go over there. This is bigger than all of us!'"

SIX

In 1967 Lee Elders had gone to work for Capitol Detective Agency in Phoenix, a job that allowed him to work his own hours and afforded him several months off each year to travel, explore, and eventually lead expeditions into the Amazon Basin, primarily the El Oriente region of Ecuador. Born in Bowie, Arizona, Elders had been reared in the desert, a place of hard edges and little subtlety. The landscape had shaped his personality: He walked with a determined forward lean, shoulders hunched, lost in thought, caring little for diplomacy. Brit Nilsson had met him at the Phoenix airport in 1974, as he returned from an expedition, banging his way through customs carrying an armload of blowguns and spears. He hadn't bathed in two weeks.

"I wish you could have met Lee back when I met him", she said later. "I couldn't stand him. He was the most horrible, arrogant you-know-what . . . he was obnoxious, is the best word to describe Lee. And he thought he was perfect". Brit, calm and well-reasoned, is a tall, buxom woman with large brown eyes from the Indian side of her heritage and blond hair from her Scandinavian ancestors. She recently had divorced. Though she was fifteen years younger, Lee eventually won her over, and she agreed to marry him.

Years of exploration in South America had etched deep fissures into Elders' face. A friend who had known him in South America in 1974, "back when Ecuador represented the equivalent of an Egypt in the early 1900s", claimed that Elders was the first non-native to enter vast regions of the Amazon Basin and forge relationships with the territorial Jivaros and Shuaras. Estimates at the time were that no more than one in every ten artifacts surviving the Spanish conquest of the Inca civilization had been recovered. During the early 1970s, based on four hundred-year-old legend and recent tribal rumor, Elders had arranged the financing and equipment for archaeological expeditions into the jungle in search of the Inca huacas.

Back in the States working again for the Capitol agency in early 1976, Lee Elders, then thirty-eight, had been assigned to a large transportation company, to find, screen, and qualify ten individuals the company could place within its employee ranks to penetrate a theft ring. One afternoon, while Elders talked to the company's head of security about the theft problem, a phone call interrupted their conversation. Elders overheard the security man say, "What do you mean you lost it?" Sensitive company data sent from one computer in one building to another computer across the street somehow had never made it to the second computer. The security man hung up the phone and said to Elders, "Holy Christ! How could this happen?" Elders explained to him that the information could have been intercepted.

Tom Welch, a close friend of Elders, worked for the same detective agency. That evening, Elders told Welch about the conversation he had had with the security guard, and Welch began searching for a "countermeasure" firm. Though he turned up several other private investigation companies like Capitol, none of them specialized in telecommunications. He expanded his search beyond Phoenix to include the entire Southwest and still found no one capable of investigating computer theft.

"Tom and I started talking", Elders said later. "'There's a tremendous need out here for a company that could protect against this; maybe we should start one'. Then we started researching it and found out there's a lot of theft going on. Then after another six months of searching we stumbled on a company in New York that had state-of-the-art telephone analyzers which you could hook up on-line and do your sweeps with".

With this level of sophistication, in less than an hour they could probe a huge communications system and determine the use of every wire out of thousands in the system.

"We're not talking about something like black boxes and wands", said Welch. "We're not talking about little RF bugs; we're talking about manipulating the wiring. That's where sophisticated data theft takes place. They can run it right in front of everybody's nose, out of the building and anywhere in the city, and in some cases across the country".

In the latter part of 1976 Tom Welch and Lee and Brit Elders purchased the $20,000 telephone analyzer and founded Intercep, a company of licensed investigators trained in the protection of corporate security. Corporate officers suspicious of sensitive information leaks quietly hired Intercep to discover the source of the leaks, either in the ranks of their employees or as taps within their telecommunications system. With most of their work consisting of non-crisis security checks, Intercep specialized in preventing computer theft and the bugging of executive phones and offices by competitors. After a year and a half, they had performed for three of the top ten Fortune 500 corporations, and business already had expanded overseas.

When Wendelle Stevens returned from Switzerland he realized he had become involved in a case potentially so big he would be incapable of investigating it. There were landing tracks he could not explain, witnesses who needed further interrogation, scores of photographs he did not know how to analyze definitively.

"I was convinced there was so much here", said Stevens, "that no UFO club could ever investigate it properly. It would take several people, well equipped, trained in proper investigative techniques. I'd spin my wheels forever trying to find out what they could turn up in two days".

The Elders had already seen some of the Meier photos the day Lou Zinsstag laid them out carefully on Stevens' dining room table. The photos had impressed them at first, but Lee Elders was certain they were fake and Meier and the witnesses crazy.

"I came back". recalled Stevens, "and told Lee I didn't think they were a bunch of kooks. As a cross section of people they probably were more intellectual than we were and as smart as any of us, probably smarter than most of our UFO researchers".

"Well then", said Elders, "they ought to be able to find out what's going on".

"The man himself is not smart enough to fool all of those people", said Stevens. "I sat down across from him and looked him in the eye. He's a simple man, he's very sincere, he doesn't have much of an education, he doesn't have any resources, he doesn't have anything going for him. Plus a lot of people are watching him, and I couldn't find anybody who had seen anything suspicious".

"Bullshit", countered Elders, "they're pulling your leg over there".

Stevens listed four reasons the Meier case appeared unique among many thousands of UFO cases. "One", he said, "there are more notes and more information, and more detailed descriptiors of events provided by witnesses, than in any other UFO case recorded. Two, there are more photographs and many of the photographs are better than in any other UFO case ever. Three, there is more physical evidence to study and analyze in this case than in any other UFO case known. And four, there are more individual contact events in this case than any other in history, and the contact is still going on!"

During less reserved moments, Stevens called the Meier story "the hands-down greatest UFO case of all time", and "the biggest, most spectacular, longest-running, most productive case in the history of the phenomenon".

But the Elders were not interested. Not only was Lee Elders busy, but he was also concerned about the reputation of his fast-growing security firm. "I'm just getting big into Intercep", he said, "and this wild colonel, who's just lost all objectivity after thirty years, gets me out chasing UFOs. My career's right down the toilet".

"What if the story's real?" Stevens asked him. "It can't hurt it then".

"But you don't have any proof that it's real", replied Elders.

"That's what I'm trying to find out", said Stevens.

"I wouldn't worry about the case", Elders told him. "It's all a bunch of baloney anyway".

"No, it's not", argued Stevens. "Something's going on there. It's changed too many people's lives".

"Steve", said Lee, "we just can't get involved in stuff like that".

Brit Elders kept a diary. Every evening she recorded the highlights of daily occurrences and conversations with friends. On November 19, 1977, she wrote the following entry: "Steve arrived Phoenix p.m. Blown away. 'Meier for real'. Three hours of ranting and raving. Lee not paying much attention. Never seen Steve so up. Can't interest Lee. Who has time to chase UFOs? Didn't phase [sic] Steve, kept rambling. Pushed for Lee to throw Intercep into investigation. Lee and I talked rest of night. He doesn't want to commit the company name to such a weird subject. Steve will have to understand. . . ".

Stevens resorted to pleading. He said, "Look, I've got a problem. I can go to the UFO organizations with this; they all would jump at the chance to get control of it. But they'll investigate it with mail order investigators, and they'll surely fuck it up like they do all of the others. I need some real investigation on this. I need people who know how to look for information, I need somebody who's got staying power, I need somebody who isn't going to waste time, who knows what to do and how to document it".

One of Stevens' main concerns was the rate at which some of the photographs were disappearing. Whether the story of the contacts was true or not, the evidence might be gone before anyone had a chance to analyze it. As Intercep grew over the next few months, and the Elders and Welch became more involved in the business, Stevens continued his pleas. Once they met Meier, walked some of the sites, and talked to the witnesses, he felt certain they would agree with him that something was going on. Elders and Welch humored, even teased him about his sudden devotion to this one case. But they knew Stevens well enough to realize something must be different about the Meier story; though for thirty years Stevens had maintained that UFOs were of extraterrestrial origin and he had a mind open to even the most outlandish of stories, he did require proof, and until he saw that proof he gave no credence to unsupported claims. The photographs were proof, but only if they held up, and despite their looking almost too good to be valid, Stevens had found nothing during his trip that would indicate they somehow had been fabricated. Though none of them would admit it at the time, the Elders and Welch had their curiosities piqued ever so slightly by Stevens' failure to uncover Meier's "technique". He had unveiled so many in the past, often by simply studying a photo in his hand.

"It wasn't just a tall tale", Welch said later. "Either there was one hell of an intriguing story how somebody did all of this and pulled it off under the guise of being a naive Swiss farmer, or there might be, for the first time, an incredibly historic event".

In April 1978 the Elders had to travel to London on business. When Stevens heard about the trip, he immediately suggested it was a perfect opportunity: After they had concluded work for their client he could meet them in London and the three of them could then take the night train to Zurich. It wouldn't cost much. Then they could rent a car and drive through the Swiss countryside . . . they would love Switzerland in the spring . . . and spend a couple of days in a quaint guesthouse. Meeting Meier and talking to some of the people at the farm might even change their minds.

The Elders had never been to Switzerland, and the client was to pick up the tab for the flight to London. A few days on a side trip with Stevens, who typically investigated his cases carrying a small backpack filled with notebooks and apples, would be inexpensive. The Elders finally decided that if it meant that much to Stevens to have them just look at the farm and talk for a while with Meier they could afford the time.

"I don't think I convinced Lee by telling him what I saw", said Stevens. "What convinced him, I think, more than anything else was my appeal as a friend to come help me take a look, because there was nobody else I could rely on to do it. He said, 'We'll come over there, but we're not coming over to investigate any of your kookie stuff'."

With the Elders scheduled to be in London the first of April, Tom Welch remained in Phoenix for the Honeywell Corporation's fourth national Computer Security and Privacy Symposium. The two-day affair promised the latest information "by many of the nation's most prominent authorities on the subject of Systems Security and Privacy". Honeywell had asked Tom Welch to give the featured address on "Electronics Communications Protection".

"Since we were trying to learn and constantly develop our abilities in our business", recalled Welch, "it required us to be at the frontier edge of computers and electronics and communications. By then we had had a ton of experience in a number of small cases, and we were picking up major clients. Some of our cases involved rather elaborate cover stories, new employees as well as an electronic penetration, industrial espionage, a variety of things. And it was here that we were developing a knack for bursting the bubble".

Their growing knowledge and experience provided Welch with the material for his presentation. He assumed it also would serve the Elders well in Switzerland. "There was a lot of potentially complicated detail involved with Meier", he said, "and if it was a hoaxing effort, it was on a grand scale. But we were very confident that by the end of a week, if there was a hoax going on, Lee and Brit would probably have gotten to the bottom of it. Our confidence stemmed from having this knack for penetrating the problems of our clients quickly. We had no expectation whatsoever of spending a lot of time on it".

At the end of March, Stevens flew to London with the Elders, and after a two-day sweep of the client's offices, the three of them reserved berths on the night train from London to Zurich, and departed the evening of April 1. After renting a tiny bright orange Renault in Zurich, they drove northeast on the autobahn to Winterthur, left the main highway, turned south, and continued through the countryside. The terrain was open and rolling, and speckled in the distance with three-story farmhouses under orange roofs, goats in the pen, and dairy cows with their heads bent into the green of the hillsides. Soon they passed through Turbenthal, then Wila, then took the unmarked turnoff to Schmidruti, and began climbing into the hills, where grayed patches of snow still clung to the ground in areas shaded from the sun. The last series of tight switchbacks finally straightened and the road leveled out just as they reached the short cobblestone row that comprised Schmidruti. They swerved off the main road, passed the Gasthaus zum Freihof, and headed down the dirt and gravel path, now overhung by gray leafless trees. When they arrived at the farm, they saw Meier outside washing his face in the horse trough.

Since Stevens' first visit six months earlier, just before the snow and cold, little had changed around the farm. Spring rains and melting snow had turned the driveway back to mud, the roof still leaked, there was no plumbing, and the only heat came from a wood stove or the fireplace, To wash dishes, Popi had to collect water from the cold pump and boil it on the stove.

"It was a disaster", Lee remembered. "I mean you talk about poverty, it was there".

Brit recorded in her diary, "First impression—disaster area. Snow on the ground, bitter wind. Tiny white flowers coming through the snow. House looks like an old dilapidated barn, needs paint. Shutter on upstairs window hangs cockeyed. Big apple trees along hillside in front of house. Dirt, or rather mud, road to house. Raining, pouring".

Despite the wind and dampness, a small band of young people from various European countries had again migrated to the farm, the first of spring arrivals. Clustered in tents near the first barn, they were helping Meier dig trenches for a sewer line.

Lee Elders had formed little opinion of Billy Meier, though he expected to dislike the man for having perpetrated a hoax and for having been responsible for his detour to Switzerland. Furthermore, if he was to begin snooping around, looking for evidence that Meier was a fraud, he had to consider Meier as his adversary, someone to be watched closely. But when he met the man he found himself totally disarmed.

Meier dried his hand and face, and walked over to where Stevens and the Elders had pulled in with the car. Stevens introduced the Elders as his friends from Phoenix. "I met Meier", Lee said later, "and his eyes . . . that's the first thing I remember, because it was like I had known the man before, like he had known me before. It was an intriguing déjà vu experience".

Stevens and the Elders stayed at a guesthouse in Dussnang, a small village over the hill and fifteen minutes from the farm, where every half hour bells pealed from the steeples of two old churches. Because of Stevens' prior visit and continuing long-distance relationship with Meier, the man and his family accepted the Elders immediately. During the day Meier accompanied them on drives away from the farm to give them a feel for the countryside. Though early spring had arrived, the ground at the higher elevations where Meier had taken most of his photographs remained either too soft for driving or still covered with snow. At a few of the sites they drove and walked close enough to see from a distance the openness of the terrain, the angular pitch of the hills. At night they ate with the family at the farmhouse and listened to Meier's stories of the contacts. They had been taking place now for over three years. In all, Meier claimed to have met face-to-face with Semjase or one of the other Pleiadians over one hundred times. The notes had grown to nearly 3,000 pages of conversation on interstellar travel, life on Erra, universal law, advanced physics, archaeology, astronomy, Creation, the fate of other human races, the destiny of planet Earth, and spiritual societies obscuring even the Pleiadians'. Only fourteen days earlier, Meier had had another contact.

The man seemed open and honest, a fact, Brit noted in her diary, that intrigued Lee. "Not hiding anything", she wrote. "Eyes sincere. Does not look away when answering questions, extremely direct. Kids cute like all kids, love chocolate drinks. Kaliope very quiet, haunting".

"I tried to focus on Meier", Elders said later. "Steve had his area of expertise, Tom had his. I felt more comfortable in focusing on the man, trying to get close to him. That wasn't hard to do, really wasn't much of a challenge. I've read many books on psychology, and I watched his body language to see if it might tell something about him, see if he was defensive in answering questions, moved his arm, crossed his legs, that type of thing. I checked eye blink rate to see if it increased when I asked certain questions. But I never really detected anything of a nervous nature with him. He was very stable, very calm. Someone once remarked that the eyes are the mirror to one's soul, and if this were true then Meier had nothing to hide, because he didn't back down from you, he wasn't shifty eyed, he didn't look at the ground, he looked you directly in the eye".

Meier offered the Elders albums full of photographs to peruse, told them to read whatever they pleased in the translated portions of the contact notes, and answered their questions with a tired patience. One evening he showed them several films he had taken of the beamships with an old 8mm camera. In one of the films, a black-and-white segment shot on a cloudy day, a ship darts back and forth near a large pine tree. Suddenly it cuts in front of the tree and as it does so the upper branches sway as if in a backwash. Lee Elders had Meier run the short clip over and over, watching closely for the blast as the ship seemed suddenly to swing in front of the tree.

In another sequence, a ship flies into the scene at Hasenbol and comes to a perfect stop. It doesn't move or swing, but hovers until it takes off again. And there are other objects in the scene: snowcapped peaks in the distance, wind blowing through the branches of a pine tree to the right. Elders and Stevens imagined helicopters and long cables, but they still couldn't figure out how Meier made the ship come to a complete stop without swinging.

The extremes that took place each day began to bother Lee Elders. In the mornings and afternoons, he might embark on one of his inquisitive tours of the farm and surrounding forests and turn up nothing; or he would be out viewing sites from a distance, increasingly curious at how Meier was able to fake the photographs; then at night he would sit around the kitchen table listening to Meier's casual recollections (he sounded almost bored) of being teleported into a Pleiadian beamship or of traveling to other planets. Elders could not accept most of what Meier said simply because it could not be true. But the next day he would go back out and view another site, talk to more witnesses, and perhaps see something new, like photos of the landing tracks, and he would get to wondering how he himself would manufacture something so convincing, and his mind would go blank.

Elders and Stevens took Meier's photos with them as close as they could get to the sites, and, using them for comparison and orientation, brainstormed on ways that Meier could have rigged a scene and photographed a hanging model. Or, far more complicated, how he could have set a model in motion and captured it on film.

"We matched them up", recalled Stevens, "that the pictures had to be taken right there, that that was the point where the photographer stood, and there was no way he could have rigged anything, because there are no trees around, no poles, nothing there, and the ground fell away downhill, at a steep angle, and the next one was four miles away coming up the hill, and the objects were out in between. We thought of rigging a pole with wires running out, but we couldn't find anything we could run the wires to because the trees were all a hundred feet away, and there was nothing else there. Plus there was no way he could have run a string of wires like that alone, getting up and down poles and trees with one arm. Have you ever tried to climb a tree with one arm? We thought if there were confederates, in three, three and a half years they would have found one, because we weren't the only ones looking for confederates; everybody there was looking for confederates".

The Elders had expected to find a commune filled with brainwashed teenagers trying to sell newcomers on the righteous message from the Pleiadians and the Prophet Billy Meier. But the only young people at the farm were the ones camped in tents who left after a few days of working and talking, and were replaced by new arrivals. Most of the people who came often to the farm, some to work on weekends, others to help Meier with his small publication Wassermannzeit, were at least in their late twenties, many of them older than Meier himself. One was a school principal, two were schoolteachers, one worked as a graphic artist, and another as a computer programmer. And nobody tried to sell anything, ideas or artifacts.

Originally prepared to dislike Meier, and still not trusting him, Elders nevertheless found himself enjoying the man's company. "It was fun talking and listening to him", he recalled. "We all had our shots of rum or coffee kirsch, and that took the edge off. I guess he was using alcohol on me as much as I wanted to use it on him, to see where I was coming from. But we'd have a couple belts and everybody'd loosen up. Meier led a fascinating life. His life reminded me so much of my years of exploration in South America. We had something in common to talk about. I was fascinated by his Middle East stories; he was fascinated by my expeditions into South America. We got along well".

One evening the Elders sat in the Meier kitchen, the only place they could get warm. Dinner that night consisted of hot chunks of a heavy bread that Popi had baked over the fireplace and a white cheese that Meier himself made from the milk of his two dairy cows kept in a stall beneath the house. Meier, in a reflective mood, sipped coffee from a white china demitasse adorned by a bright enamel rose. He told the Elders that every time he had contact with the Pleiadians he found it difficult to return to his normal life on Earth.

"If I go there", he said, "if I talk with them, if I am in the ship together with them, I never like to return to the earth. Every time I have trouble coming back. You see, if I am shouting there, really shouting, pounding my fist on the table, it's something else than if I am shouting here on the earth. I'm shouting there in peace and in love. Sometimes I have to make myself very, very angry to come back home. It's so peaceful and restful and loving there, speaking together with them. You see what can happen, and everything in the world is okay. There I am much more clear in my head, in my thinking and feeling, than here. Then I have to return to a world which is full of turmoil and shouting and everything. There is fighting, day after day, hour after hour, second after second. With them it is not so. If you are shouting there, it is with peace and love, too".

The Elders wanted to know the answer to a question that probably was the one most asked of Meier: Why had the Pleiadians specifically selected him for the contacts? Matter-of-factly Meier explained that he had been groomed for the contacts since he was a small boy, and before that, in a previous incarnation, he had had contacts with the Pleiadians. According to Meier, the Pleiadians' desire to reveal their presence slowly and without ceremony arose from events that occurred long ago, when early earth humans believed that visitors from elsewhere in the universe were gods or the angels of God.

"The Pleiadians distance themselves every time from such things", he explained. "There is one way around this problem. To tell the people, to tell them again, again and again, what's really happening, what the Pleiadians are really, that they are humans like the humans from this earth, that they are no more. What I have to do practically every day, I have to shout. I have to beat my fist on the table to tell the people what is real. And they have the same problem. But there is one way of teaching. Tell the people day after day, hour after hour, they are really not gods".

"But can they be accepted as people like ourselves?" asked Lee.

"Impossible to connect them", said Meier. "It's exactly the same thing if you have a motor that works with regular gasoline, and you go and put pitch into the gasoline, it blows up".

"They're not like us", said Lee. "They may look like us, they may talk like us—"

"But the vibrations", interrupted Meier, "the waves and everything, that's much higher".

The Elders, of course, had no way of testing Meier's story of what the Pleiadians looked like, how he came to be their contact, or what knowledge and information the Pleiadians, if they existed, had imparted to him. They tried to avoid dealing with such claims, which seemed too outlandish to believe, yet could not be disproved.

"Unless it happens to you", Brit said later, "you're always going to have that little doubt anyhow, 'Is it or isn't it real?' How do you explain it, and how do you rationalize it?"

They wanted to see more of Meier's tangible evidence, what he could offer to establish the Pleiadians' presence. Without this, Meier's stories meant nothing to them.

The next day they were out again, looking at a small meadow tightly surrounded by forest, where two sets of landing tracks had once appeared. At the site they studied the photographs of the tracks. The grass was not broken, just mashed down; according to witnesses it stayed that way for weeks; a single set of footprints led to and from each grouping of three six-foot pod marks. The Elders viewed everything from a perspective of simple logistics; how could it be accomplished: tools, time, expense, expertise? With the landing tracks, no vehicle could be driven to within 250 feet of the site. Whatever was used to make the tracks would have to be light and compact enough to carry through the woods at least that distance. It would have to be heavy enough to mash tall thick grass perfectly flat, yet light enough for one person to twirl without using a center pivot, for the tracks were smooth all the way across. However the swirling was accomplished, it would have to be carried out from a single point at the edge of one of the circles, for no footprints existed elsewhere. How could such an apparatus be made? How could it be transported? And how do you crush grass so it will never rise again, yet remain alive?

That night the Elders were back in the warm kitchen, listening to Meier talk more about earth humans being a younger stage of the Pleiadians' own evolution. "That is one of the reasons they study us", said Meier. "We represent an earlier part of their society".

"What does it feel like to be dematerialized?" asked Brit.

"It is a condition of being well-balanced", said Meier.

"Explain that, please". said Brit.

"As if you would find yourself in eternity", replied Meier. "It starts the moment the dematerialization begins".

"Does it end when you rematerialize?"

"No", explained Meier, "it does not end like that. That condition stays, depending on your own thinking and feeling. You see", he continued, "when I leave the ship, I jump into the hole, and into the hole they, what we call, 'arrange' the material. If you leave the ship and lose your material body, you will not realize it in that moment until the body touches some other material thing, like the ground or a tree".

"When they come out of the ship", asked Brit, "are they dematerialized and do they materialize when they touch the ground?"

"You can't see them", answered Meier. "But if they touch the ground, they will materialize. See, here in this hole [he points to one of the photographs], I don't know exactly if it is this one or one of these other two. But it is open here, and when they jump into the hole they will dematerialize".

"So when they jump out", said Lee, "you don't see them come down, you only see them in here?"

"Yes".

"Now, when their body forms, is there a whiteness . . . ?"

"No".

"It's just solid. It's just, They're here', and then, They're gone'."

"Yes".

'There are no stages of development".

Meier shook his head.

Called “the sunlight scene”, this photograph, taken March 29, 1976, at Hasenbol, was the last in a sequence of nine that Meier took as the beamship approached from the west. The Hasenbol site, with its radical weather and steep drop behind the tree, impressed the investigators more than any other.

Mount Auruti stands in the background to the south of Hasenbol. In Meier's 8mm film of this same scene a Japanese production crew noticed the sudden brightening of a red light on the ship's flange just above the two red lights that appear here on the bottom of the ship.

A jet fighter on maneuvers with the Swiss Air Force flew into the scene as Meier took this photograph near Schmarduel April 14, 1976.

Physicist Neil Davis of Design Technology in Poway, California, examined this photograph taken August 3, 1975. Three years later, just beyond the stacks of debarked pine, Meier recorded the beamship sounds analyzed by Los Angeles sound engineers Nils Rognerud and Steve Ambrose.

The metal fragment, which represented one of the final stages in the manufacture of the material for the beamship hull, glistens under Marcel Vogel's electron microscope at IBM. The unique sample disappeared while in Vogel's lab.

The photograph taken by Austrian schoolteacher Guido Moosbrugger one night while on a contact with Meier June 13, 1976.

Taken March 3, 1975, this is the first in a sequence of photographs of a beamship and an accompanying remote-controlled craft; one of the photos in this series appeared on the cover of Europe's newsweekly Der Spiegel November 17, 1978.

"Colonel Stevens once told me that sometimes when you came back you were out of breath". said Lee. "Is that true?"

"It's because of the atmosphere we have here", explained Meier, "and the atmosphere they have there. They have thirty-two percent oxygen. It is better and lighter breathing".

"The air on board the ship?"

"Yes. Just imagine you are somewhere out in the countryside and then you have to go to the city. And this is very fast, practically a split second from one place to the other".

"Is there anything you've been told not to discuss?" asked Lee.

"Mainly things that concern the future", said Meier. "Also not to talk too much about the teachings, because man has to think for himself to find out the truth".

"A lot of what he said had to be taken with a grain of salt", Elders said later. "It was hard to conceive of. But yet everything made such logical sense. I think what I focused on was the delivery of what he was saying. Was he emotional? Was he blase? He was just sitting there as if he were talking about going down to the corner to get a loaf of bread—which made it all appear real; made it very believable.

"Basically he made you stop and think, Why shouldn't they be like us? Why should they be any different as far as family life or education? And if they're two or three thousand years more technologically advanced than us, then sure it would make sense that they carried little devices on their belts that could translate languages instantly. I had to go back to that one phrase he kept saying. 'They're no different than we are'."

Meier talked on about civilizations that lived in harmony in the universe and traveled faster than light, about life on Erra and the androids and the spiritual leaders there, about his childhood experiences with Sfath. People came from all over Europe to hear him speak of these things. Lee Elders listened closely to everything Meier said, searching for inconsistency. Not once did Meier contradict himself, nor did he preach or try to sell them merchandise. Though they offered nothing in the way of objective proof, Meier's answers to their questions came patiently and logically.

Unobtrusively, in their comings and goings, in their conversations with witnesses, the Elders and Stevens explored the farm, the main house and barn, the outbuildings, and the nearby woods, searching for a darkroom, a machine shop, or unusual rigging or equipment. Everything about the farm seemed old and crude, a cover perhaps, but basic necessities for pulling off such a sophisticated show would require at least electricity, and other than the thin wire lighting a few bulbs in the kitchen and living areas, no power lines came to the house or anywhere else on the farm. But Lee Elders kept looking, finally narrowing his search to four closed rooms.

"One was under the old carriage house where Jakobus slept; there's a room down there. That intrigued me. Another was a storage place to the side of the carriage house. The third area that intrigued me was the basement to the house itself. And the fourth area was Meier's office. I kept wondering, What's in there?"

One afternoon, under the pretense of an urgent need to speak with Jakobus, Elders engineered a stunt Stevens would never have tried on his own. He dragged Stevens down the steps leading to Jakobus' room beneath the carriage house. "We knocked on the door and sort of invited ourselves in", recalled Elders. Immediately, before Jakobus could rise, they combed the room and started babbling in English about farming and the weather and whatever else came to their minds, none of which Jakobus understood. Before he could respond, they had satisfied themselves that Jakobus and his room were clean. Then they started laughing and shook his hand. "Danke, danke schön!"

"Very Spartan conditions", said Elders, "nothing abnormal.

"The second area I got into was the equipment room. This was the side of the carriage house facing the farmhouse, and there was nothing in there except saws and hoes and grass cutters and things like this, a lot of equipment they used around the farm.

"And then finally we got into the basement under the house itself. We just went down one day. It was very easy; you come out the back stairs there, down the concrete steps, and turn to your right and come down the other steps. The door was unlocked. We didn't make it obvious that we were skulking or anything like that; we just walked to the door and opened it. 'Ah, wonder what's in here, let's see how they store their food', or whatever, walked in, and checked it out. They used it for storing their cabbage and carrots and things like that. There was nothing down there. So except for his office we had totally explored everything that we could see which might be a hiding place for something".

Brit found herself in the office and the room adjacent when Elsi Moser, an English-speaking schoolteacher, took her back to show her some contact notes and 11 × 14 blow-ups of the photographs. But there was little to see—a few books, an old typewriter, an old desk with no drawers, two lamps, and a small cactus garden. "Nothing odd", wrote Brit in her diary. She even had the Meier children show her parts of the farm, including their rooms.

"We've seen nothing strange", Brit recorded after a few days at the farm. "Lee is in a quandary. It's hard not to like Billy and the others. We must remain objective. After all the evidence that's been presented—not analyzed, presented—Lee still questions all. Steve has no objectivity left, just wants more and more and more. I'm on overload".

Stevens and Elders also got into Meier's office after Stevens asked Meier about the sound made by the beamships. Stevens had overheard someone at the farm talking about the sounds, but neither he nor Elders knew a tape existed. Meier surprised them by offering to take them back to his study and play the recording for them. Elders turned on his own tape recorder to capture the eerie, warbling, at times piercing sound that, as far as he knew, could have been produced with a synthesizer. But the tape was nothing they could have analyzed back in the States.

"We were in one of those little crannies there next to his office", said Elders, "and there were chickens all through the damned place, and he was playing the sound and we were recording chickens clucking, roosters squawking, and the beamship purring. And it was a total disaster. When we got back it sounded like we were in a henhouse. So we had to retape them later".

After a few days of circulating around the farm and finding nothing suspicious, the only discovery that shocked Lee Elders was how Meier had his evidence organized.

"He kept everything in the closet and stuffed under drawers, in between mattresses. It was unbelievable. And that first year at the farm there were no doors to close off, just a little curtain between the living area and the area they slept in. People walked through there all the time. He used to keep these beautiful photographs in shoe boxes under his bed!" Several hundred photographs had disappeared.

Among the witnesses with whom the Elders spoke was Herbert Runkel, who told them of the first time he went on a contact with Meier, not the night of the dense fog, but an earlier night. Jakobus drove that night too. When Meier disappeared into the woods, it had been raining, there were puddles on the road, and the trees swayed in the wind. An hour passed as the two men sat in the car at the edge of the forest and talked, or walked back and forth to keep warm. They never saw any lights.

"Nothing", Herbert said to the Elders. "No animal, no light, no car, nothing. No sounds, no house, no nothing. Only the wind blowing".

After an hour and twenty minutes, Meier had returned.

"I remember when Billy came back", said Herbert. "I put my hand on his shoulder, 'Hello, you are back', and I saw his clothes were completely dry. I shook his hand. He was warm".

Lee Elders was certain this was merely a trick of some sort. He questioned Herbert. Could Meier have had a shelter in the woods, a small fire going, turned his coat inside out?

"No", said Herbert, "that's impossible because we were always looking around. We looked up at the sky and listened carefully because we wanted to see something or hear something, maybe when the ship rose up".

One thing that struck the Elders about Herbert was the confusion on his face when he recounted his experiences with Meier. The man obviously was intelligent and well read, yet he seemed totally perplexed by what he had seen. Often he would end a story by saying, "I am not crazy. I saw that with my own eyes".

Elsi Moser taught school in a nearby canton. A warm and intelligent woman of fifty who had lived for two years in England and spoke excellent English, Elsi told the Elders, "If Billy really had contact every time he said he did, I don't know. But he has had contact with extraterrestrials. I am certain of this".

One of the little things that had convinced Elsi that the contacts were taking place was a film Meier had shot with his movie camera on a tripod. In the clip, what appears to be a beamship hovers at some distance. Meier himself suddenly comes into the film from the right, the left sleeve of his old green sweater dangling as he walks away from the camera down a path. Then he stops and, with his right hand, beckons the ship to come closer. But the ship remains in the distance. Meier squats on his haunches, waiting for a minute or two watching the sky. Once, he looks at the camera and points to the ship, which still moves no closer. Finally, he shrugs, and with a look of disappointment walks back toward the tripod, as the ship still hovers high in the distance. Elsi told the Elders they would have to know German and the Swiss-German people to understand this, because the disappointment on Meier's face when the ship does not come closer is genuine.

Many witnesses had seen strange lights in the sky, perfectly silent lights, sometimes white, sometimes red and yellow and orange, often in twos, and flying crazy patterns. Even more of the witnesses had seen Meier himself do unexplainable things. Harold Proch told the Elders about New Year's Eve 1977, a night when Meier and about ten other people had been sitting around the kitchen table talking. Harold had asked Meier a question about parapsychology, but Meier did not answer directly.

"He asked if I had a two-franc piece", recalled Harold. "I didn't have one, so Elsi gave one to me. Billy took it and told me to hold his hand. I sat on the opposite side from him".

Meier wrapped his fingers around the two-franc piece, a coin the size of an American half-dollar. Harold cupped his hands around Meier's fist. Meier looked at the fist and suddenly his whole body began to tremble. The table shook, as did Meier's chair. Several people found themselves suddenly fearing the power that had been unleashed. Harold held on to the shaking fist, but when he looked up at Meier's eyes, what he saw there startled him.

"This is hard to describe", he said later. "It was as if you were looking into space through his eyes".

For fifteen seconds Meier shook violently as though the coin in his fist controlled him. His eyes grew larger and larger, deeper and deeper, his face now contorted and drained of all blood.

"Then he collapsed at the table", said Harold, "his hand opened and the coin fell out. It was black. All the people stood up, Billy was gasping, as if he were dead. It was phenomenal. And I sat face-to-face with him. I could see the reaction on his face. I have never seen anything like it. You can't describe this with words".

The hot coin had singed the palm of Meier's hand, causing a blister. When Harold had the coin analyzed, a metallurgist told him that to scorch such metal would require a heat of 1,500 degrees.

Another evening the Elders and Stevens sat again in the kitchen listening to similar stories from people who had seen Meier do things no one could explain. Meier had done so many things no one could explain that the stories had begun to sound the same to the Elders. Some people had seen him hold a twenty-centime piece between his thumb and index finger, and etch his fingerprints into the metal. Elsi had once seen him take a nail two to three inches long, stand it on its head on the kitchen table, then cup his hand on the table about eight inches away. In a moment, as though drawn by some irresistible force, the nail had started to dance across the table and vibrated upright all the way into Meier's motionless hand.

"When did you realize you had this power?" Brit asked Meier.

"When I was a small boy", said Meier. "I started to learn new thinking".

"For this power of the mind", suggested Lee, "could you use the word 'magic'?"

"You see", said Meier, "magic is a word that means only 'using the power'. Nothing else. Only 'power using'."

"And when did you discover you had magic in your life?" Lee repeated Brit's question.

"When I was a small boy".

"What did you do?"

"I was taught by Sfath", said Meier. "He told me how to use everything, how to study to learn".

"Could you make things move", asked Lee, "or put out a candle by thinking about it?"

"I was never testing", answered Meier. "I don't know".

And then he told them a brief story. When he was six years old and weighed only fifty-five pounds, his father was constructing a small addition to their house and had asked the young boy to wheel a cart filled with dirt out of a deep hole he had dug under a portion of the house. The cart weighed two or three times as much as Meier at that young age. But by "using the power", he told the Elders, he was able to lift the cart with his thoughts and transport it out of the hole.

Among the favorite stories told by witnesses who had seen Meier do unexplainable things was the time during a discussion he had melted a thick metal spoon in his bare hand. Meier had been stirring his coffee when, to emphasize a point, he raised the spoon out of the coffee and shook it. The raised spoon suddenly had turned to a silver liquid in his hand and dripped onto the table. Several people had seen this.

As he listened to this story, Stevens said, "Man, why didn't you save the liquid?" Nobody had thought to do that. With the liquid in small puddles on the table, someone had simply wiped it up with a damp cloth. But the story got Stevens thinking out loud. "God", he said, "what we could do with a piece of metal".

When Stevens said that, Meier stood up from the table and said, "Just a minute".

He walked out of the kitchen and they heard his footsteps heading out to the barn.

"He came back with this dilapidated, dirty, filthy cardboard box", remembered Lee. "And he put it on the kitchen table. Inside he had brown wrapping paper, and he started opening it. All of us were just hanging over his shoulder".

"I asked them to give me a piece of the beamship", said Meier, "but all they brought me were some metal samples".

Lee Elders stood quickly and took two pictures, one of Brit helping Meier open the box, and another of Brit and Stevens peering into the box. Inside lay several small packages of brown wrapping paper, and in each package, carefully wrapped, was a sample that Meier claimed had been given to him by the Pleiadians.

"We were in the kitchen there", remembered Elders, "and Meier had just shown us the metal. Bashenko was running amuck, slamming things against the wall, yelling, trying to get attention. On top of that, a chimney sweep was there cleaning the chimney. But we had the microphone close to Meier, you can hear what he's saying, and it was real interesting because he said one thing and that was that this metal is used to make the ship".

Meier started to unwrap the little packages, and one after another out came a small rock specimen, or a crystal, or a shiny fragment of metal.

"They told me that the metal is in four states", said Meier. "Here are the notes I made".

In each cubicle, brown and somewhat faded, lay small pieces of paper, Meier's handwritten notes on each of the specimens, describing briefly what each was and from where it came. According to the notes, one of the samples he unwrapped represented the next-to-the-final stage in a seven-step process the Pleiadians used to make the metal substance that comprised the hull of the beamships. On the table glistened a half-inch triangle appearing to be an alloy containing silver and gold.

Stevens had always told the Elders that pictures could be faked, but one thing that could never be faked was a piece of metal exhibiting unusual, possibly unearthly properties. However, this solid kind of evidence rarely accompanied UFO cases. In all of Stevens' experience such an intriguing piece of evidence had arisen perhaps twice. Yet Meier had been sitting on these specimens for over three years, and he had made no attempt whatsoever to use them to sell his story to Stevens, to "prove" he was telling the truth. Stevens had to ask about them specifically. And this was his second trip to see Meier. Again, Stevens learned that with Meier he had to ask the question or he would never get an answer.

Meier gave several metal and crystal samples to Stevens and the Elders to have them analyzed back in the United States if they desired. Now nearing the end of their five days in Switzerland, they had many signed witness statements and several items that could be tested in a laboratory by a scientist—photographs, metal samples, sound recordings, and movie footage.

"It's overkill for us by this time", remembered Elders. "We've just heard sounds, we've heard all these stories, now he's showing us metal. It's just flat overkill. Steve had been there the year before and he had no idea . . . none of us had any idea . . . that Meier had metal specimens, or sounds, or the numerous photographs he had".

At the conclusion of their stay, Stevens seemed even more overwhelmed than he had upon completing his first trip to the farm.

"It just got to the point where one man couldn't have done so much so well to fool so many people for so long", he said. "Just too much for one person to accomplish. Having tried to do a number of these things myself I realized what was involved in faking a simple picture of a suspended object in the sky. To fake all of the types and kinds of pictures successfully and not be caught, with no confederates, no resources, no equipment, no money, no lab, and a broken camera and one arm, makes it a little bit difficult to believe that the whole thing is a fabrication and a fraud perpetrated by somebody for some reason when there wasn't even an apparent reason".

Because of his obvious intelligence and sincerity, the great deal of time he had spent observing Meier, and the resulting confusion in his mind, perhaps the most convincing witness had been Herbert Runkel. Herbert warned the Elders and Stevens that people who had seen only a few of Meier's pictures and then concluded that the object had to be a model and that the case therefore had to be a hoax, just did not understand the reality of the setting in which the story was taking place.

"These thoughts always come from people who know nothing about the case", said Herbert. "They hear about the case, or they see only one or two pictures. They never go to the place where the pictures were taken. Because people who have seen the places always say, That is not possible'."

Though a shallow crust of snow remained in large patches on the ground, the Elders finally walked one of the sites, the high green bluff at Hasenbol. As he stood on top of the bluff Lee Elders thought about what Herbert had said. "My moment of truth did not come until I walked that site", he said later. "I went up to that hilltop where he shot, I'd say, thirty percent of the best photographs of his collection plus that film, and I knew right then and there something was going on—because of the distance involved, because of the terrain, everything about it. We marked fifty-two yards from where Meier stood to the tree the ship was hovering behind. That's a long distance. You're not going to use small models on that".

"And there's a drop right behind that tree", added Brit. "It just goes straight down".

"And it's always cold there", continued Lee, "wind's always blowing, cold and miserable. Yet he got movie footage on that site and photographs on that site. So that's when I started thinking, Okay, so he didn't take them with models, and they are not pasteups. So what are they?"

THE INVESTIGATION

SEVEN

On the clear blue afternoon of June 24, 1947, along the high, snow-covered ridges of Mount Rainier, Washington, a bolt of bright light hit a small mountain plane flown by Kenneth Arnold so suddenly that Arnold thought he was about to collide with another plane. Instead, he spied a formation of nine luminescent objects, bright enough to be seen a hundred miles away, skimming the mountaintops at extraordinary speed. Arnold thought he was watching a test flight of new and secret jet planes, but as they came closer he could see no tails on any of the craft.

The strange objects closed at right angles to Arnold's plane, flying like nothing he had ever seen: The echelon formed a pinnacle with the lead craft at the top, the others trailing behind and below, the reverse of military air formations. And their flight was erratic. As Arnold wrote later in his book, The Coming of the Saucers, "It was like speed boats on rough water or similar to the tail of a Chinese kite that I once saw blowing in the wind". The craft fascinated him with the way they "fluttered and sailed, tipping their wings alternately and emitting those very bright blue-white flashes from their surfaces".*

When Arnold landed in Pendleton, Oregon, he attempted to locate a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but was unsuccessful. Instead, he talked to other pilots at the airport about what he had seen; then local reporters heard of the sighting, and within two days Arnold's story had hit 150 newspapers; He told the press the craft flew "like a saucer would if you skipped it across the water", prompting one reporter to coin the term "flying saucer".

In the midst of a cold war with the Soviet Union, intelligence analysts in the United States suspected the Communists of conceiving ingenious and extravagant plots to spread their propaganda, even among the American populace. When the story of Arnold's sighting appeared in print, his politics, finances, business, and reputation in the community were investigated by Military Intelligence, the FBI, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the Internal Revenue Service, each hoping to discover that Arnold was unstable, publicity-conscious, given to exaggeration, or linked to the Communist Party. But not only was Arnold considered an excellent mountain pilot with a cool head, calm hand, and 20/15 vision, his general reputation in the community and as a family man was impeccable.

Then other reputable citizens, many of them pilots, reported strange aircraft penetrating hundreds of miles inland from the West Coast, aircraft that appeared super-sonic, sophisticated, and unconventionally designed. Newspapers reported each of the new sightings, and the public wanted to know what they were.

* Arnold timed the lead craft from the southern edge of Mount Rainier all the way to Mount Adams, a distance of 39.8 miles, which the disk flew in one minute and forty-two seconds. In the summer of 1947, the fastest experimental aircraft on earth was thought to be the U.S. Army's X-1, developed by Bell Aircraft Corporation. A bullet-shaped fuselage with a rocket engine, the X-1 was powered to exceed the speed of sound, 760 miles an hour, but no pilot had yet been able to fly it that fast. Chuck Yeager would not break the sound barrier in the X-l for another four months. Yet Arnold's figures, trimmed conservatively, had the shiny metallic disks traveling almost Mach 2, or twice the speed of sound.

Hallucination, said the Air Force. There was no need for an investigation into the presence of these flying saucers because all of the sightings were due to hallucination. Secretly, they wondered if perhaps Communist sympathizers, attempting to frighten the American public, had reported bogus sightings to increase cold war jitters. Or was the intention to get the Air Force so soft on responding to myriad reports of lights in the night sky that waves of Soviet bombers could penetrate our air defenses unchallenged?

But then their own pilots, navigators, generals, and advanced radar detectors began reporting strange flying craft that could stop on a dime, hover, ascend and descend in a straight line, turn at right angles, make no noise, and then take off at speeds into the thousands of miles an hour. If it was the Soviets, why had no bombs been dropped, no missiles been deployed, or overt strategic action taken by these craft? They would simply appear at all times of the day and night, in all parts of the country, dazzle their onlookers with their incredible speed and maneuverability, and then disappear. No one considered what later came to be known as the extraterrestrial hypothesis, the possibility that such technology might originate on worlds trillions of miles into our galaxy or even beyond.

During World War II, American and British pilots had reported seeing strange objects that flew at fantastic speeds and glowed from orange to red and white, and back to orange again. They named them “foo fighters”. One pilot saw fifteen of them during the day, describing them as five-foot golden spheres that shone with a metallic glitter. Near Truk Lagoon in Japan, B-29 bomber crews reported the balls came up from below their cockpits, hovered over their tails, winked their lights from red to orange, then back to red, then to white. One pilot said they glowed with an eerie red phosphorescence and had no wings, fins, or fuselage. Allied fighter pilots thought they were secret German experimental devices designed to cause fear and confusion. Intelligence officers figured they were radio-controlled objects launched to baffle radar. The Germans and Japanese thought they were secret weapons launched by the Allies. Scientists in New York surmised everyone had been seeing "Saint Elmo's lights", small balls of luminescence often connected with metal during electrical storms. The Army Air Forces dismissed the whole episode as a result of "war nerves" and "mass hallucination".

The summer before Arnold's sighting, hundreds of people in Scandinavia had watched flights of "ghost rockets" in the night sky, speeding balls of light that resembled meteors but behaved in what was described as "unmeteor-like fashion". American intelligence suspected the source might be Russian experiments at the captured German missile center at Peenemünde, but no evidence existed, and eventually the ghost rockets ceased flying without offering a clue as to what they were or from where they came.

But in 1947, Arnold's sighting captured the world's imagination. Only three months later, such sightings had become so frequent that General Nathan Twining, head of Air Materiel Command, wrote a letter to the commanding general of the Air Force that concluded: "The phenomenon reported is something real and not visionary or fictitious. . . . The reported operating characteristics such as extreme rates of climb, maneuverability (particularly in roll), and action which must be considered evasive when sighted or contacted by friendly aircraft and radar, lend belief to the possibility that some of the objects are controlled either manually, automatically or remotely".

Quickly and quietly, the Air Force established Project Sign, which began officially two weeks after an F-51 fighter pilot, Thomas Mantell, died chasing a UFO near Louisville, Kentucky. Mantell's last words were: "It's metallic and it's tremendous in size. Now it's starting to climb". A few seconds later: "It's above me and I'm gaining on it. I'm going to 20,000 feet". It was not yet three o'clock in the afternoon. Mantell was not heard from again; an hour later the tower lost sight of the UFO and learned that Mantell's F-51 had crashed.

Before the wreckage had cooled, the Air Force offered a solution that seemed to satisfy press and public alike—Venus. For thirty minutes, Mantell had chased the planet, even climbing without oxygen beyond the point of blackout, to get a better look at Venus. He had died in pursuit of a planet millions of miles away. Though Venus indeed would become the solution to many of the sightings, on that day, at three o'clock in the afternoon over the state of Kentucky, Venus was a pinpoint of light so faint it could not be seen by the human eye. Even the secret report filed by Project Sign investigators concluded: "The mysterious object which the flyer chased to his death was first identified as the Planet Venus. However, further probing showed the elevation and azimuth readings of Venus and that object at specified time intervals did not coincide. It is still considered 'Unidentified'."

Project Sign drew only high-level intelligence specialists, and period correspondence reveals that amid a great deal of confusion bordering on panic, they developed two categories of theory: earthly and non-earthly. In the earthly category, the Russians outdistanced our own Navy, which earlier had been conducting secret experiments with the XF-5-U-1, a circular craft nicknamed the Flying Flapjack. In the non-earthly, "space animals" placed second behind interplanetary craft.

Since the second theory was impossible to test, intelligence analysts sought initially to determine if captured German rocket and missile testing centers, now in Soviet hands, had produced these sophisticated aircraft. German aeronautical engineers had been developing several radical designs, and an intelligence rumor held that the Russians were continuing the experiments. Intelligence analysts studied every intelligence report dealing with German aeronautical research and computed the maximum performance that could be expected from the German designs. They even contacted the German engineers themselves. "Could the Russians develop a flying saucer from these designs?" they asked. The answer was that no aircraft could perform the reported maneuvers of the flying saucers. Such maneuvers and fantastic speeds would either tear apart or melt all aerodynamic materials known on earth. Even if such an aircraft could be built, the human body would not survive at the controls.

One strange sighting after another continued to baffle the Air Force. From 1948 into 1951 "green fireballs" flew over the supersensitive Atomic Energy Commission installation at Los Alamos, traveling an estimated maximum speed of 27,000 miles an hour. Dozens of scientists, Air Force special agents, airline pilots, military pilots, and Los Alamos security inspectors submitted over two hundred reports of seeing the objects—huge half moons, circles, and disks flying at extreme velocities and emitting a green light so bright it caused the contours of surrounding mountains to glow momentarily at night. Some of the witnesses reported watching flat, disk-shaped objects traveling at equally high speeds and varying in color from brilliant white to amber, red, and green.

A private pilot flying one night north of Santa Fe encountered one of the fireballs and described it this way: "Take a softball and paint it with some kind of fluorescent paint that will glow a bright green in the dark. Then have someone take the ball out about a hundred feet in front of you and about ten feet above you. Have him throw the ball right at your face, as hard as he can throw it. That's what a green fireball looks like".

The Air Force hired Dr. Lincoln LaPaz, an expert on meteors, to solve the mystery, but LaPaz concluded the phenomena were not of meteoric origin. He thought the fireballs were guided missiles being secretly tested nearby. But the military and the FBI knew that no such secret experiments were under way in this country, and they had now been assured that the Russians were also incapable of conducting such experiments.

In January 1949 a cable sent from the San Antonio field office to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover noted that at weekly conferences involving military intelligence the main topic was "the matter of 'Unidentified Aircraft' or 'Unidentified Aerial Phenomena, ' otherwise known as 'Flying Discs', 'Flying Saucers', and 'Balls of Fire'. This matter is considered top secret by Intelligence Officers of both the Army and the Air Forces [emphasis in original]".

Publicly, the Air Force maintained that flying saucers were nothing more than the sun reflecting off low-hanging clouds, or crystals from shattered meteors glinting in the sun's rays, or gigantic hailstones gliding through the atmosphere. But their intelligence analysts began to focus seriously on the possibility of extraterrestrial origin.

In 1951 several reputable scientists speculated that the green fireballs over Los Alamos were unmanned test vehicles projected into our atmosphere from a "spaceship" several hundred miles above earth. About this time, three White Sands scientists with a telescope, stopwatch, and clipboard tracked a flat, oval-shaped object a hundred feet in length and whitish silver in color flying at an altitude of 296,000 feet and a speed of 25,200 miles an hour. One of the scientists, a naval commander, later wrote in an article cleared by the Navy, "I am convinced that it was a flying saucer, and further, that these disks are spaceships from another planet, operated by animate, intelligent beings".

When an airline captain and his co-pilot sighted "a deep blue glow" along the underside of what looked like a wingless B-29 fuselage that came within 700 feet of their DC-3, intelligence analysts at Project Sign decided it was time to write an "Estimate of the Situation". The top-secret "Estimate" concluded that from all evidence collected, the presence of the mysterious flying objects could best be explained by visitations from advanced extraterrestrial societies. And this hypothesis might have formed the basis for all future UFO research if Air Force Chief of Staff

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg hadn't adamantly refused to accept it. Instead, he fired the document back to Air Intelligence, where it was quickly declassified and burned, encouraging Sign personnel still bucking for promotion to drop their original hypothesis for an official new one: UFOs don't exist.

Performing most of their security work late at night when corporate offices lay deserted, the Elders and Welch had become night people who functioned best in the early hours of the morning; Stevens could go either way, as long as he had a breakfast of sausage, eggs, and pancakes after midnight. When the Elders returned from Switzerland, the four of them spent hours in all-night coffee shops, eating breakfast or pie, drinking coffee or iced tea, and collectively scratching their heads over Meier. At 1 or 2 a.m. they might drive to Good's on Camelback Road or Carrow's on Thomas, tell the waitress, "We'll have iced tea, and leave us alone", then retire to a corner booth in the back of the restaurant to argue over Meier for the next two hours. "We became connoisseurs of iced tea", said Welch.

Between bites of breakfast and sips of coffee, Stevens would shake his head. Sometimes he would even jump up and pace excitedly back and forth next to the booth, admitting openly he had lost all objectivity in the case. "I don't understand a lot of things about this", he would tell the others. "But I am convinced that something strange happened, and I am convinced that Meier could not fake the pictures, and I don't think there's anybody around him that could".

After one of the late-night sessions, Brit wrote in her diary, "Steve excited about stuff from Billy. Thinks we've got a 'real one'. Lee still skeptical, calling in favors, hopes to find good qualified people for analysis. Initial budget $10,000 set aside. Plan trip to L.A., try to dig into universities there, maybe turn in interesting stone".

Later Brit admitted she pushed Lee hard to get involved in the Meier investigation. "He was reluctant. Deep down inside he liked Meier, they hit it off. But with Intercep and everything that was happening, it was hard to let go and start off in a new direction. But Lee's a very curious person, and this had too much to offer. He sat down and said, 'How did he create this hoax?' Steve was already committed, Lee was the balance".

Stevens' only concern was that Meier might have almost too much evidence. And the number of contacts Meier claimed, like the clarity of his photographs, made his story seem even more suspect.

"The conventional idea of a contact is a quick happenstance, a onetime experience that passes, doesn't come back", Stevens explained to the others. "When the second contact occurs it reduces in the minds of UFO buffs the credibility factor. It's kind of a 'lightning doesn't strike twice in the same place' syndrome. When it happens a third time, credibility is reduced even further. This happened over a hundred times".

Lee Elders retained his skepticism, challenging Stevens again and again, for no matter what the witnesses had said, he had difficulty understanding certain things, like Meier's sudden disappearances and just as sudden reappearances. He thought the man had somehow merely persuaded the others to imagine he had vanished: "I can't buy that somebody can be standing in his office and have all his molecules broken down into a beam of light or whatever and transferred two miles away to another locale. I just cannot conceive of this".

Then he would argue with himself in front of the others, as if he were alone. "But we have so much supportive evidence documenting other things that we can't say, 'Well, if they say this crazy thing is happening, then the whole thing has to be a hoax'.

"But, my God", he would argue again, "if this thing is legitimate, how do we logically explain Meier being dematerialized?"

Then they would spend two and a half hours trying to comprehend how he disappeared.

"Did he really disappear?" they wondered.

"Our comfort level", said Elders, "was dealing with solid, tangible evidence. But there's another level here that just taxes the imagination. You can't say that the case is a hoax because it contains this level, any more than you can leave it out and say the case is real. But it's unexplainable".

The arguments over Meier got longer and became more frequent, involved more restaurants, more sausage, eggs, and hot pie, more coffee and iced tea. As Stevens had predicted, Meier and his story had gone right to the core of the Elders' curiosity, challenging their considerable investigative skills. Once recalling the many late-night conversations, Lee Elders said, "It wasn't so much, 'Do you think Meier is telling the truth?' We were way beyond that. It was the mystery that was driving us crazy, these little things that didn't make sense".

The brief side trip they had taken to Switzerland reluctantly, and only as a favor to a friend, had piqued their interest and at the same time failed to yield an explanation for the bizarre story. But in addition to their own impressions, they now held several items of hard evidence. They could argue forever over imponderables, but proper analysis of the evidence would give them answers.

"So we went directly for the hard stuff", remembered Brit. "We worked with the photographs, the metals, the sounds, everything like that. We went in looking for how he did it, because we didn't believe it was real".

At the Elders' apartment in Phoenix and on Stevens' dining room table in Tucson sat several stacks of paper, film, and other evidence waiting to be examined—rough notes taken at a few of the sites, the interviews and signed statements of many witnesses, hundreds of translated pages of the contact notes, taped interviews with Meier, over two hundred photographs, pictures of landing tracks, metal and crystal samples, and seven 8mm films. The Elders and Stevens labeled every piece, catalogued it, then combed through it all, searching for clues and inconsistencies. In thirty-two years of studying UFOs, there was little about them Stevens did not know, and he had never heard of a case with so much evidence.

"It's a lot of work", said Welch. "You have to sit down and analyze it. Not study, not read—analyze. Do we have any correlations here? Find them all and list them, potential or otherwise. Do we have any contradictions? Find them all and list them. Everything. We had to develop an attack plan. So on a daily basis we were jamming on our notes, getting together on the things that Lee and Brit had learned from their first trip, and that Steve had brought back, correlating data, and planning our next trip in July, which was to be my first trip there".

With computer theft occurring more and more frequently, and the reputation of Intercep growing apace, the Phoenix-based security firm continued to expand. But the Elders and Welch also spent more and more time on the Meier case. Between conducting communications sweeps for various corporate clients, they met frequently with Stevens to analyze the data they had collected and to plot a course on how to proceed. At the beginning they had initiated a rapidly expanding list of questions to be answered; the next step was to pin down a precise, acceptable method for determining the authenticity of photographs.

"The photographs in a sense were too real", remembered Welch. "They were so clear and so stark, it was as if a craft was in the air over your driveway and you walked outside and took a picture of it. They were that vivid".

Stevens already had examined the photographs closely, looking for missing or misplaced shadows. The only additional test they could think to perform was to blow up a photo into the largest format possible, then search it carefully with a microscope for inconsistencies in the grain. Such inconsistencies would indicate that Meier had placed the craft in a scene either by exposing the same piece of film twice or by superimposing two separate pieces of film to create a single picture. Either way the grain would appear thickened around the craft. But when they blew up the film and examined the grain, they found nothing.

Stevens continued his work, begun a year earlier, of cataloguing the photographs according to site. In the process he discovered that, as with the Hasenbol series, nearly every picture Meier had taken was part of a sequence, with the flight path uniform from picture to picture as the object moved low over the hills or flew directly at the camera. On his first trip to Switzerland Stevens had noted that the numbers at the edge of each slide in Meier's collection were in proper order with no interruptions. Stevens also discovered that Meier's camera had a "signature", a tiny speck of dirt or lint just to the right of center near the top of each slide. The signature itself remained constant in every picture.

In Switzerland, Stevens had taken about twelve of what he thought were original Meier slides to a photo shop in the city of Winterthur. At his instruction the shop had made clean internegatives of each slide, first-generation copies that Stevens brought back to the States to have tested. But so much of the evidence in Switzerland had been through so many hands that he could not be certain of the generation of the slides he had taken to Winterthur. As he would discover later, many of the people who had come to Meier in the early days of the contacts had been permitted to borrow Meier's negatives to make copies of the photographs. They had returned the copies to Meier and kept the originals.

For several weeks the Elders, Welch, and Stevens had been sifting through the data and designing procedures for testing the evidence when an acquaintance heard about their efforts and contacted a friend of his, documentary filmmaker John Stefanelli. As an independent producer, the thirty-six-year-old Stefanelli had made two theatrical features, five documentaries, and many educational films. Before that he had worked at Disney for seven years, including two years in production budgeting on such films as The Love Bug and The Jungle Book. He knew how special effects experts transferred images on to film and how much it cost to stage such special effects.

"If this Meier thing was a fraud", he said, "it was done with some sort of special effects technique. And a lot of those techniques were used by Disney Studios and I was very familiar with them because of my experience there. I knew what it cost".

Stefanelli's friend had told him the Elders were investigating a rare UFO case, one that for the first time presented a significant amount of evidence for scientists to study; the thought of documenting on film the testing of that evidence intrigued him. But Lee Elders hesitated to show the evidence to anyone. Not until the acquaintance assured him that Stefanelli was a knowledgeable producer with a good track record did Elders confirm the investigation and offer to show some of the evidence to Stefanelli. They agreed to meet at B. B. Singer's, a mid-Phoenix cocktail lounge.

When Stefanelli arrived there he found Lee Elders and Tom Welch sitting in a corner half-circle booth. Elders had nothing with him but a thin manila folder lying in front of him on the table. After introducing themselves the three men talked for a while, about Stefanelli's background and experience in film, including his years with Disney, and about the Elders' trip to see Meier and what they had brought back with them. Once he felt satisfied that not only was Stefanelli legitimate, but he also wanted to produce a credible film, Elders opened the folder and spread before the filmmaker a dozen high-gloss 8 × 10 photographs. Stefanelli nearly came out of his seat.

"The pictures just knocked my socks off", he said. "I was very impressed. My first reaction was, 'Wow!' My second reaction was, 'Oh, come on, this is really hard to believe'."

"You could tell he was having problems with a lot of it",

Elders said later. "We must have had the same look on our faces when Meier was telling us about the Pleiadians coming to Earth in seven hours, and how they have gardens back on Erra".

Stefanelli sat there in a quandary. In his mind the crazy things Elders told him about Meier could not possibly coexist with the reality of the pictures. So either the crazy story was, in fact, true or the beautiful photographs had somehow been faked. And he couldn't believe they had been faked.

"If someone was doing this fraudulently", he said, "they were doing a hell of a job. I was fascinated by it. And the more I got into it, the more I found it really intriguing".

Stefanelli met often with the Intercep group and Stevens in his own office and Lee Elders' apartment, monitoring the progress of their investigation, and on his own, arranging for some preliminary testing of the evidence. He put together a prospectus, persuaded two screenwriters to pen a treatment, and began talking to investors. His idea was to follow the Elders' investigation, document all of the testing, even arrange a science outlay in the film budget for assuring quality scientific analysis, and then produce a two-hour docudrama.

"It's an absolutely fascinating story", he said later. "Whether it's a fraud or whether it's true, it's incredible. And my approach was not to try to prove it or disprove it; it was just to go after all the evidence and analyze it to its fullest extent".

But finding scientists willing even to look at the photographs, examine the metal, or listen to the sounds proved to be far more difficult than Stefanelli had anticipated. He knew the public still laughed at people who saw flying saucers, but with hard evidence in his hands he expected scientists to be at least intrigued. When he took a sample of the metal to UCLA for preliminary analysis, he returned with the sample and the discovery that the stigma of UFOs still existed.

"When I went in", he recalled, "I expected to be greeted with open arms, and I wasn't at all. I was just another kook coming in off the street. I explained the project, I told them what evidence there was and what the story was, and they just didn't want to be bothered. They finally turned me over to a graduate student who had some interest in it. He did some testing, kept the sample for a couple of days, and came back and said the testing had been inconclusive. He did say it was unusual, it could be from another planet, but it was certainly possible that you could find it on this planet".

With General Vandenberg's refusal to accept the extraterrestrial hypothesis, Project Sign became Project Grudge in early 1949. Grudge personnel evaluated reports on the premise that UFOs couldn't exist. They explained every sighting as a weather balloon, a meteor, or the planet Venus. What came to be known as the Grudge Report concluded that unidentified flying objects were no direct threat to national security, and that reports of such objects resulted from a mild form of mass hysteria or the misidentification of conventional objects, or were hoaxes fabricated by psychopaths and publicity seekers. But Dr. Allen Hynek, Ohio State University astronomer and consultant to Projects Sign and Grudge, had studied 237 of the best sightings and attributed only 32 percent of them to various astronomical bodies. Another 12 percent had been discarded as being weather balloons; and hoaxes, incomplete reports, and airplanes made up exactly one-third. No one could explain the remaining 23 percent, not Hynek, not the Air Force Weather Service, and not even the subcontracted Rand Corporation. The Grudge Report dismissed them with this sentence: "There are sufficient psychological explanations for the reports of unidentified flying objects to provide plausible explanations for reports not otherwise explainable". From the beginning of 1950 to the middle of 1951, Grudge remained a project in name only.

Not until 3:04 on the afternoon of September 12, 1951, did Air Force Intelligence have reason to resuscitate Project Grudge. On that day the teletype at Air Technical Intelligence Command spit out three feet of tiny print on a sighting at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, that had occurred two days earlier. At eleven o'clock in the morning, a technician at the Monmouth radar school had been demonstrating the latest tracking equipment to a group of military VIPs. Capable of automatically "painting" a target, the new device could track the fastest jets. But when it locked on a low-flying object two and a half miles east of the radar station, the set immediately kicked back into manual operation. The operator again switched the set to automatic, and again the set kicked back to manual. For three minutes the target remained in range as the radar operator frantically tried to force the set to track it automatically and the set refused to respond. Finally, the embarrassed technician turned to the VIPs gathered around the scope and said, "It's going too fast for the set".

In the vicinity less than a half hour later, the pilot of a T-33 jet trainer, with an Air Force major on board, saw flying below him a disk thirty to fifty feet in diameter and silver in color. As he rolled the T-33 and dived toward the disk, the silvery object stopped, hovered for a few moments, then accelerated heading south, and without slowing made a 120-degree turn and disappeared out over the ocean.

Immediately, the Director of Air Force Intelligence ordered a new UFO project and assigned Captain Edward Ruppelt as its head. Later in his book, The Report on Unidentified Flying Objects, Ruppelt wrote that when he arrived at Air Technical Intelligence Command he was told, "The powers that be are anti-flying saucer, and to stay in favor, it behooves one to follow suit", a carryover from the mind-set of Grudge personnel. Ruppelt described them as "schizophrenic", officially laughing at the UFO reports coming in, and individually, in private, defending the phenomenon. Grudge became Project Blue Book in early 1952, and the reports trickling in each month increased to about twenty. In April they jumped to ninety-nine. The following month, the Secretary of the Air Force said in a press statement, "No concrete evidence has yet reached us either to prove or disprove the existence of the so-called flying saucers. There remain, however, a number of sightings that the Air Force investigators have been unable to explain". Then at 11:40 on the night of July 19, 1952, seven objects suddenly appeared on the radar screen at Washington National Airport, three miles south of the nation's capital.

The seven green blips cruised through forbidden air corridors, moving slowly across the radar screen at 100 to 130 miles an hour. Suddenly, two of the objects accelerated to tremendous speed and almost instantaneously flew beyond the range of the radar, a distance of 100 miles. Four radar controllers agreed that nothing like an airplane could cause the blips on the scope. Then two other radar centers, one at nearby Andrews Air Force Base, called in. Painted on their scopes, they had the same targets performing the same speed bursts; and now the targets had moved into every quadrant on the scope and were flying in prohibited airways over the White House and the Capitol. One of the targets had been clocked at 7,000 miles an hour.

As airline pilots in the vicinity radioed that they were being followed by unknown aircraft, or that the aircraft suddenly seemed to be leaving, the luminescent blips on ground radar would appear or trail away. In the early hours after midnight, the most powerful of the radar installations, located at Washington National Airport, radioed the operators at Andrews that one target appeared to be hovering directly above them. When the operators rushed out and looked up they saw "a huge fiery-orange sphere". And then all of the objects disappeared.

One week later the same radar controllers locked again on the mysterious objects. This time the objects formed a wide arc around Washington, and the controllers called in two F-94 interceptors, which arrived just after midnight. But when the jets appeared on the radar screens, the targets suddenly disappeared. The jets returned to base. As soon as the jets departed, the targets appeared once again. In the interim, Langley Air Force Base in Virginia had received calls of bright lights in the sky, "rotating and giving off alternating colors". The Air Force scrambled another F-94 from Langley and the pilot made visual contact with one of the lights, but as he closed on it, it suddenly disappeared, "like somebody turning off a light bulb". The radar operator in the F-94 made contact three more times, but each time contact was broken as the strange object apparently accelerated out of range within seconds.

A few minutes after the object broke radar contact for the last time, the green blips appeared again en masse on the radar screens at Washington National Airport. The Air Force scrambled two more jets and this time the targets remained stationary, so the radar controllers could monitor both their movements and those of the jets as they came on to the screen. But when the pilots themselves closed in for visual contact, the objects sped away. Finally, one of the pilots saw a light hovering in exactly the position radioed in by one of the radar controllers. He flew closer and the light remained motionless. Then he cut in the after-burner and rapidly closed, but moments before he would have overtaken the light, the light suddenly blinked off, and the pilot found himself traveling at Mach 1 speed into a black sky.

Three days later the Air Force held a press conference at the Pentagon, the largest and the longest since World War II. Before taking questions from the press, Major General John A. Samford, director of intelligence, pointed out that of the one to two thousand reports investigated by the Air Force to date, the bulk could be attributed to "either friendly aircraft erroneously recognized or reported, hoaxes, quite a few of those, electronic and meteorological phenomena of one sort or another, light aberrations, and many other things.

"However", he continued, "there have remained a percentage of this total, in the order of twenty percent of the reports, that have come from credible observers of relatively incredible things. We keep on being concerned about them".

One of the press corps asked how the radar controllers on the previous two Saturday nights had interpreted the blips on the radar screen.

Samford replied, "They said they saw 'good returns'."

But, he pointed out, this did not necessarily mean the objects had to be solid body aircraft. Birds could give off good returns. Radar could even bounce off invisible temperature inversions, hit a ground target, and show up as a blip on the screen. But Samford's aide, an expert on radar, was not sure how that theory accounted for the sudden disappearances and reappearances of the targets, or the incredible speeds at which they seemed to travel. Nor did it explain the visual corroboration of several airline pilots in the air at the time.

When another reporter asked Samford his opinion of the "temperature inversion" theory, he responded, "My own mind is satisfied with that explanation". But he also felt they should continue their research, that the objects were probably some sort of phenomenon that science would someday be able to explain. Personally, because of their apparent ability to change direction and speed instantaneously, Samford felt the objects were not "material".

Late in the press conference a reporter asked Samford if he could state unequivocally that none of the strange flying craft observed during the previous five years had actually been ultra-secret military weapons. Samford replied it was always possible that an observer had mistaken a jet fighter for a flying saucer.

"What I was aiming at", said the reporter, "was this popular feeling. . . ".

"Of mystery?" interjected Samford.

"Of mystery", said the reporter. "Of something. That it's some very highly secret new weapon that we're working on that's causing all this".

Samford chortled. "We have nothing that has no mass and unlimited power!"

And everyone laughed.

By the end of 1952, 1,501, or nearly twice as many sightings as each of the previous five years combined, had been reported, and over three hundred of these remained unexplained.

While exploring every angle of the Meier case they could think to explore, the Elders and Welch began a search through campus libraries at the University of Arizona and Arizona State for information on the star cluster Meier claimed to be the home of his extraterrestrial visitors—the Pleiades.

"In an investigation like this", said Welch, "nine out of ten times you're presupposing it's a hoax because that's the way you're testing, that's the way you're interrogating. But let's suppose for a moment that it's real. Then we ask, 'If this is true, were there other Billy Meiers in the past?' We began at that point, and what popped up in a couple of weeks is what I call the Pleiadian Connection".

With the help of Lee Elders' sister and several friends in California and the East, they searched through libraries and secondhand bookstores for hundreds of books, magazine articles, trade journals, and doctoral theses at various universities.

"What was startling was a consistency", said Welch. "From an astronomical point of view you're talking about an extremely young, extremely insignificant system of stars. Yet at different parts of the globe, many times simultaneously, many times a thousand years apart, history and mythology mention the Pleiades and their importance. They're noted as being the source of knowledge in the rice culture in Asia, and in the potato culture in Europe and South America. These societies attributed their knowledge to a series of events in mythological form involving messengers from the Pleiades. Why in so many times, in so many parts of the world, are the references similar? Why all this energy toward the Pleiades? They're revered, they're looked at as the center of heaven, and they're looked at as a source of ancestry and wisdom and guidance".

Though other stars and star groups are mentioned in history, to the surprise of Welch and the Elders, the frequency of reference to the Pleiades seemed to exceed that of its closest rival, Orion, by nearly ten times. When they had collected every mention of the seven stars they could find, Welch and the Elders had scores of references to the Pleiades and their importance in cultures all over the world and from all periods of history, including three from the Bible. The Book of Job spoke of their "sweet influences".

But Welch wondered if perhaps Meier himself had conducted the same research in Swiss and German libraries.

"My first thought was, What are the odds of him doing that very thing? But a lot of these connections were not readily available; you had to be looking for them. So if you picked a star system and said, 'Let me see if I can find something on that', you're talking about quite a bit of research before you come across the Pleiades.

"At one point, I remember us all sitting down kind of tired, Wendelle was up from Tucson at the time, it was late at night, and we were talking about some of the connections that each of us had separately discovered. And we're sitting there with, oh, it must have been about seven or eight legal-sized pages front and back of noted connections we'd come across. And somebody said, 'God, we've spent over a thousand hours on this already and it seems like we've just begun'."

A tight cluster of several thousand stars, the Pleiades lie in the constellation Taurus, nearly five hundred light years from earth. The principal stars shine bluish-white and radiate intensely, illuminating surrounding clouds of gas. The Pleiades are young, too young for intelligent life to have evolved. But Meier had repeated specifically that the Pleiadians had not originated there, only that they had migrated to the Pleiades after engineering a planet to their liking.

Early civilizations recorded that the seven brightest stars were once visible to the naked eye, though today only six can be seen. Aligned with nearby Orion's Belt, the Pleiades are often mistaken for the Little Dipper, but their configuration is far more compact and appears to be enshrouded in a gossamer haze, one that inspired Tennyson to describe them as looking "like a swarm of fire-flies tangled in a silver braid". Of all the stars in this beautiful swarm, Alcyone is the brightest, shining with a brilliance one thousand times greater than our sun.

In Star Lore of All Ages, published in 1911, William Olcott wrote:

> No group of stars known to astronomy has excited such universal attention as the little cluster of faint stars we know as 'the Pleiades'. In all ages of the world's history they have been admired and critically observed. Great temples have been reared in their honour. Mighty nations have worshipped them, and people far removed from each other have been guided in their agricultural and commercial affairs by the rising and setting of these six close-set stars. . . . This little group, twinkling so timidly in the nights of autumn in the eastern heavens, links the races of mankind in closer relationship than any bond save nature's. No wonder that they have inspired universal awe and admiration, that within this group of suns man has sought to find the very centre of the universe.

Legends from pre-Inca peoples living in Peru speak of inhabited stars and "gods" who visited them from the Pleiades. The astronomical writings of China mention the Pleiades as early as 2357 B.C., worshipped by young women as the Seven Sisters of Industry. The Greeks aligned temples with their rising and setting. In Egypt, on the first day of spring, the south passageway of the Great Pyramid perfectly framed the Pleiades; some scholars even maintained that the seven chambers of this enormous monument were inspired by the cluster's seven visible stars. May Day and the Japanese Feast of Lanterns are remnants of ancient rites in honor of the Pleiades. The Hopi call the star cluster Choo-ho-kan, Home of Our Ancestors. And Navajo legend holds that men arrived on earth from the stars, particularly the Pleiades, and that we continue to be visited by our celestial relatives.

Attempting to explain the seeming coincidences between customs of ancient cultures and those of more modern societies, R. G. Haliburton wrote in Nature Magazine in 1881 of the universal reverence for the Pleiades. He noted that the Samoans of the South Pacific called their sacred bird the Bird of the Pleiades, and that the Berbers of Morocco claimed that paradise lay in the heavens circumscribed by the cluster. Haliburton concluded his article, "Even if the theory of prehistoric astronomers and of some modern men of science, that the Pleiades are the center of the universe, should prove to be unfounded, I am persuaded that the day is coming when the learned will admit that those stars are the 'central sun' of the religions, calendars, myths, traditions, and symbolism of early ages".

Agnes Clerke, in The System of the Stars, written in 1907, called the Pleiades "the meeting place in the skies of mythology and science. The vivid and picturesque aspect of these stars riveted, from the earliest ages, the attention of mankind; a peculiar sacredness attached to them, and their concern with human destinies was believed to be intimate and direct".

Though the Pleiades form little more than a speck in the visible night sky, no other star group has been mentioned as frequently in the literature and mythology of world cultures for the past two and a half millennia. And in every instance, the tiny cluster of seven was portrayed as female: the sisters, the virgins, the maidens, the goddesses.

Puzzled over how to analyze the Meier evidence and how to capture the scientists and their work on film, John Stefanelli had looked for a consultant. In Phoenix he located a sound and light technician, Jim Dilettoso. Short, gaunt, and mercurial, the twenty-eight-year-old Dilettoso was involved in myriad projects in the entertainment industry staging sound and light shows with lasers, computers, and sound digitizers. A friend had recommended him because the young technician had been a part-time consultant for a documentary film on the testing of the Shroud of Turin, the 2,000-year-old funeral sheet that purportedly had covered the body of the crucified Christ; Stefanelli wanted to subject the Meier photos to the same computerized image analysis as that performed on the shroud.

At their first meeting, Stefanelli showed Dilettoso six of the photographs of extraterrestrial spacecraft allegedly taken by Meier.

"Good special effects", thought Dilettoso. "I was trying to figure out how I would make them. Couldn't be models because of the properties of the edges and the reflective surface. No, I'd build a rigid structure out of aluminum or titanium, shaped like a flying saucer, actual size twenty feet, and fill it with helium like a Goodyear Blimp. That was just my initial reaction. Later I came to find out that the cost is tremendous, or it doesn't look real.

"But the first thing Stefanelli wanted to know was, 'Well, can we test these pictures?' and, 'What labs can we get into?' I'm looking at the guy, thinking, Does he have any idea what he's asking? That's not equipment you go out and rent by the hour".

Using contacts from his film days in Hollywood, Stefanelli already had begun his search for scientists; at the same time he had launched his campaign to attract investors. He later estimated he traveled to Los Angeles between thirty and forty times, trying to interest someone in backing the film, someone who at least could finance the cost of properly analyzing the evidence.

"There were a lot of things we wanted to do", he said. "And I had a fair amount of success at finding people to tell me what sort of tests should be performed. The problem was getting the people who would do them without having to spend a small fortune. Everyone I did uncover wanted a lot of dollars—we're talking maybe tens of thousands—to do testing. But I didn't have the money to do that".

Stefanelli found himself in a catch-22: Without sufficient testing having already been completed yielding positive results, it was nearly impossible to interest anyone in funding the project; and without funding he could not hope to have the evidence tested by qualified scientists.

"Once I found out that there were substantial costs involved", Stefanelli admitted, "I really didn't push it so hard".

The Elders, Welch, and Stevens saw less and less of Stefanelli, but at the same time they began seeing more and more of Jim Dilettoso. With Stefanelli's project on the wane, Dilettoso, now thoroughly intrigued with the Meier story, offered to help direct Intercep's efforts in the scientific areas to interest scientists in government and university laboratories without having to pay enormous fees. To the group, Dilettoso looked and spoke like a former child prodigy who simply had become bored with school. He had attended several universities but never earned a degree, though he seemed to understand computers and had a knack for ferreting out information. Despite his Einstein hairdo and dizzy ways, they liked him; he could talk faster and better, and seemed to know more about a variety of subjects than anyone they had ever known.

"My first impression of Jim", said Welch, "was that he seemed to have an extremely detailed mind. He was involved in creating the support behind entertainment-oriented events, the science behind it, computers, electronics, sound systems. I could tell by the way he spoke that he was very familiar with certain kinds of technical equipment, particularly in the computer field. And he was unique in one sense: He could sit down and carry on an intelligent conversation with people having different areas of expertise and hold his own in each one technically. So I thought he might be what we needed to further the investigation".

After the wave of sightings around Washington, D.C., in 1952, the National Security Council ordered the Central Intelligence Agency to determine if the existence of UFOs created a danger to national security. One CIA memorandum, written August 1, stated that "so long as a series of reports remains 'unexplainable' (interplanetary aspects and alien origin not being thoroughly excluded from consideration), caution requires that intelligence continue coverage of the subject. . . . It is strongly urged, however, that no indication of CIA interest or concern reach the press or public, in view of their probable alarmist tendencies".

With influential people in Washington wanting answers, the CIA appointed a team of five eminent scientists to study the UFO problem: Dr. H. P. Robertson, from the Office of the Secretary of Defense; Dr. Luis Alvarez, a physicist who fifteen years later would receive the Nobel Prize for physics; Dr. Samuel Goudsmit, an associate of Einstein from the Brookhaven National Laboratories; Dr. Thornton Page, deputy director of the Johns Hopkins Operations Research Office; and Dr. Lloyd Berkner, also of Brookhaven. Dr. Allen Hynek, the Ohio State astronomer and special consultant to Blue Book, attended selected meetings as an associate member, but was not asked to sign the final report.

The group, known as the Robertson Panel, secretly convened on January 14, 1953. The first morning they watched two color films, one taken at Tremonton, Utah, the other at Great Falls, Montana. The films represented what Air Force Blue Book personnel considered the best evidence of extraterrestrial visitation.

The Navy Photograph Interpretation Laboratory had analyzed the Tremonton film for a thousand hours and concluded that the twelve objects flying in loose formation could not be birds, balloons, aircraft, or reflections; and whatever they were, they were "self-luminous". But despite the Navy's findings, the panel assumed that the cinematographer, a naval commander, was probably mistaken in his estimate of how far away the objects were, that they probably were considerably closer, and that therefore the formation of flying objects was probably nothing more than sea gulls or some other kind of bird "reflecting the strong desert sunlight but being just too far and too luminous to see their shape". Similarly, they dismissed the two objects in the Great Falls film as probably jet airplanes that had been seen in the area a short while before, though the man who took the footage testified he knew the difference between jets and the two objects he filmed.

After reviewing only six cases in detail, and fifteen cases generally, the panel concluded that nothing they had seen or heard offered scientific data of any value. The reports, while great in number, were poor in quality, and any attempt to "solve" them would be a tremendous waste of resources. They stated that most sightings could be reasonably explained, and that "by deduction and scientific method" they probably could explain all other cases as well.

An aeronautical engineer, who for fifteen months had served as the Air Force project officer for UFOs in Washington, reviewed several of the better sightings from Blue Book files for the panel and concluded that he saw only one explanation for the presence of the unusual flying objects—extraterrestrial visitation. But the panel would accept none of the cases cited by the engineer because they were "raw, unevaluated reports".

After a total review of approximately twelve hours, the panel concluded: "We firmly believe that there is no residuum of cases which indicates phenomena which are attributable to foreign artifacts capable of hostile acts". However, "the continued emphasis on the reporting of these phenomena does, in these parlous times, result in a threat to the orderly functioning of the protective organs of the body politic". The panel was concerned that if the reports continued, the American population might be vulnerable to "possible enemy psychological warfare" through "the cultivation of a morbid national psychology in which skillful hostile propaganda could induce hysterical behavior and harmful distrust of duly constituted authority".

Among other things, the panel recommended that the two major UFO research groups—Aerial Phenomena Research Organization (APRO) in Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, and Civilian Saucer Intelligence (CSI) in New York—"be watched because of their potentially great influence on mass thinking if widespread sightings should occur. The apparent irresponsibility and the possible use of such groups for subversive purposes should be kept in mind". The panel also recommended that national security agencies "take immediate steps to strip the Unidentified Flying Objects of the special status they have been given and the aura of mystery they have unfortunately acquired".

Last, the panel outlined a program to educate the public to identify known objects in the sky, and to "debunk" the phenomenon and therefore reduce interest. The program would consult psychologists versed in mass psychology, utilize an army training film company and Walt Disney Productions, and employ famous personalities selected for their believability. The panel specifically suggested Arthur Godfrey.

Twelve years after he sat on the panel, Goudsmit wrote in a letter (to David Michael Jacobs, author of the definitive treatise, The Controversy Over Unidentified Flying Objects in America: 1896–1973) that the subject was "a complete waste of time and should be investigated by psychiatrists rather than physicists". To Goudsmit the extraterrestrial theory was "almost as dangerous to the general welfare of our unstable society as drug addiction and some other mental disorders".

Dr. Hynek, the Air Force special advisor to Blue Book who in time would evolve from a skeptic to the recognized dean of UFO study, disagreed with the panel's conclusions. They had rendered judgment in just four days on a phenomenon he had been studying for four years and still could not explain. And the more he studied, the more perplexed he became.

Before Dilettoso had joined their group, Stevens located a physicist in San Diego, Neil Davis, who was part owner of Design Technology, a photo optics laboratory under contract with General Dynamics and the U.S. Navy. Though Davis could not perform the ultra-sophisticated computer image processing possible at some of the government-sponsored labs, he could quickly eliminate several possibilities of hoaxing technique or tell Stevens he was wasting his time with the photographs.

Davis consented to test one color print, three by four and a half inches. His conclusions, he told Stevens, would have to be preliminary because a complete and proper scientific analysis could only be conducted on an original negative; Stevens could not be sure the internegative he gave to Davis was even first generation.

The photograph Stevens selected to be analyzed by Davis was of a silvery beamship hovering approximately 150 feet off the ground near two long piles of cut and debarked pine. Emerald grass and a dark green tree line, a bluish sky, and smoky hills in the distance filled the rest of the picture.

Davis first examined the print under a microscope to compare the sharpness of the object with the sharpness of the scene. “There is no discernible difference in image sharpness”, he wrote in his report. Next he magnified the photograph ten times, made color separation black-and-white negatives, and scanned them with a microdensitometer for uniform density. “Examination did not reveal any details which would cast doubt upon the authenticity of the photograph”.

Then Davis carefully examined the print and his freshly made negatives for evidence of double exposure, superimposure, photo pasteup, or a model at short range suspended on a string. He wrote, “Nothing was found to indicate a hoax". Furthermore, "Examination of the location of the shadows and highlights in the photograph verifies that the object and the scene were apparently taken under the same conditions of illumination".

After conducting all tests on the photo, Davis concluded, "Nothing was found in the examination of the print which could cause me to believe that the object in the photo is anything other than a large object photographed a distance from the camera".

Davis' findings encouraged Stevens, but Elders, still cynical, punched holes in his enthusiasm. The results gave them a green light on the photographs for now, he admitted, but much more sophisticated analysis would have to be performed. And Elders reminded Stevens that a metallurgist at the University of Arizona had already examined one of Meier's metal specimens and labeled it "potmetal", a low-grade casting alloy used to make such things as tin soldiers.

"These were the initial steps in the analysis", recalled Welch. "Compared to what ultimately occurred, they were very, very, very basic".

Welch suggested that before they ran more tests on any of the evidence, they needed additional information from Switzerland. No one yet had stood on the sites with the Meier photos in hand, determined where Meier had stood, and then measured distances to objects in the pictures. Such comparisons might give them clues as to how Meier could have staged the scenes. Welch, too, wanted to roam about the farm with both eyes open. As the son of an ex-FBI agent, he knew he might see things the others had missed.

EIGHT

As a boy Tom Welch remembered watching his father circle tough FBI cases, some of them involving attempted Communist infiltration of unions in Chicago and Tucson. His father had probed and thought, gathered his information, and assessed it. Welch's fascination with his father's work influenced his own curiosity about how things are, as opposed to how they seem to be. "My interests have always run along the lines of investigation", said Welch, "of digging behind mysteries. Even when I was young I remember distinctly a number of cases of my dad's where things so elaborately obvious turned out to be so different in reality. And how that was dug up just fascinated me".

Ten years younger than Lee Elders, Welch was six feet tall and thin, with a narrow brown beard and mustache outlining his jaw and upper lip. A Roman Catholic, Welch had been educated by priests of the Jesuit Order, which perhaps explained his demeanor. Whereas Elders visibly simmered, quick to exude charm or release a formidable temper, the soft-spoken and articulate Welch remained detached, composed, and analytical. The two men greatly complemented one another.

Welch was the only one in the group who had yet to visit the Meier farm, to speak with Meier and the witnesses, to observe at least the countryside where Meier had taken his photographs and shot his movie footage. Welch knew Lee Elders well, and through him had spent time with Wendelle Stevens. He respected their opinions, but until he experienced for himself the feel of the place, the demeanor of the people, and had the opportunity to test some of his own hypotheses, he reserved judgment on the case.

The Honeywell Symposium in Phoenix had been an international conference attended by representatives of government agencies, the banking industry, and the military of various countries; and Honeywell had presented Tom Welch as an expert in electronics communications protection. Already, another international client had called from outside London, requesting the services of Intercep. Elders and Welch continued to sweep corporate offices and search for leaks in corporate telecommunications systems. But their curiosity over Meier and his story was growing, and as it did, Intercep slowly received less and less attention. Welch ceased making his frequent speeches at service club luncheons, and the firm no longer solicited business through private contacts.

"We were still doing a lot of work for Intercep", said Elders. "Steve was working on Meier. But we reached a point where we finally had to just put Intercep on the shelf because we didn't have time for it".

At the end of July, a large financial institution eighty miles outside London contacted Intercept through the Honeywell Corporation. Fearing that a competitor had tapped into their telephone system, the directors of the company wanted an immediate sweep of the entire office building. Elders and Welch blocked out a full two weeks on their slowly shrinking Intercep schedule and told Stevens to meet them in Switzerland after they had concluded their work in London. Now warm and dry in the hills southeast of Zurich, they finally could walk and measure the sites where Meier had taken his photographs.

Elders and Welch flew to London and after several long days of work solved their client's problem. Then they boarded the train for Zurich, where Stevens was to pick them up in a rental car and drive them to the farm. With better than a week to investigate Meier, the people, and the sites, and to pursue the theories they had formulated back in Phoenix, Welch figured they would leave Switzerland with answers. But by now Elders had seen and heard much with his own eyes and ears, and he was beginning to sense the difficulty of Meier's having fabricated the entire story and all of the evidence. No education, no accomplices, no resources. It was becoming easier to believe that perhaps part of Meier's story was true.

Still, some things seemed not to fit, others simply were too outlandish to believe, and nothing definitive had yet been done with the photographs. It even appeared that the metal sample was anything but extraordinary. Though Elders admitted confusion, Meier's evidence had to pass several more tests before he would concede there might be some degree of truth in what the man claimed.

As planned, Stevens met them at the train station in Zurich and drove through Winterthur to the small village of Dussnang, over the hills and about fifteen minutes by car east of the farm. They checked in at the Gasthaus Brückenwaage, where the Elders had stayed the previous spring, a three-story guesthouse with green shutters bordering many windows, each sill now bursting with bright red geraniums.

Though they had had little sleep on the night train to Zurich, it was a sunny morning in Switzerland, and Elders and Welch wanted to get to the farm as soon as possible. After they had unloaded the car and carried their things up to the room, the three of them drove over the hills, through the farms and pear orchards, to Schmidruti. Welch sat in the backseat, observing the countryside and thinking about the information he wanted to collect at the sites, from the configuration of the forests surrounding the landing track sites to the distances between objects in the photos. But he kept reminding himself not to overlook the less obvious.

"I wanted to get a feeling as much as I wanted to get facts", he said. "I wanted to get an insight into the people there as much as I wanted to get measurements and other things that we had scheduled out".

As when Stevens had arrived at the farm late the previous fall, and again when the Elders had been there in early spring, young people from all over Europe had come on motorcycles and by foot to Hinterschmidruti, and pitched their tents in various places around the farm, some in the large grassy field below the duck pond. As it was midsummer, the weather had turned mild and warm, and the number of those camped there had greatly increased. Others, many of them older, had driven there, and of these many slept in the tiny, simple rooms at the Freihof along the cobblestone row in Schmidruti. Verena Furrer, the Freihof's cherub-faced proprietress, said that in summer the people who came to see Meier accounted for 25 percent of her business. "A few French", she explained, "but most are German, some are Austrian, Americans, a lot of Swedes, some Dutch".

Meier was waiting for them in front of the farmhouse when they arrived. He now had a full beard, reddish in spots and beginning to curl. As they shook hands, Welch looked into his eyes as Elders had done before, but he saw and felt nothing familiar, no magnetism, no déjà vu. Welch saw only an "earthy man wishing for a simpler life".

"He looked to be in the middle of something not under his control", said Welch, "something he was learning from".

Welch noted immediately that Meier was not an "eager" man. Although he acted cordially toward Welch, he seemed at the same time almost indifferent to his presence. Welch soon discovered this indifference pervaded the farm.

"I expected either to have a story laid on me—in other words, people making an effort to explain things out of enthusiasm or some ulterior motive—or the reverse, people trying to hide something. Instead, it was as though we weren't even there. They would answer any questions that we had, and they related to us one to one, but they had no reaction one way or the other to what we were doing".

Though Welch had many questions for Meier, he had already decided that little of substance could be learned from the man himself; the story lay in the eyes of the witnesses and the terrain of the contact sites. Meier served only as a focus for the story; not someone to question, but someone to question others about. Welch was more interested in walking the sites and talking to the Swiss weather bureau than in chatting with Meier.

The procedure they had devised for assessing the contact sites was to take each 3 × 5 print in the series photographed at the site, locate the exact point from which the photographs had to be taken, and begin measuring. "Measure distances, measure heights, measure the width of trees, even the height of blades of grass", said Welch. "Looking for that kind of detail is the way we walked onto each site".

Beginning that afternoon and continuing for the next several days, they visited four of the alleged contact sites, accompanied by Meier. Just driving to the sites, Welch perceived problems with the theories they had formulated back in Phoenix: some of the sites were up steep grades, passable in summer, but a strain for the car to climb. Yet Meier had taken many of his photos on these sites in late winter or very early spring, when snow covered the paths or melted and turned them to mud.

Welch remembered, "That's where the theories started disappearing".

They had been at the first site only briefly when Welch noticed another similar problem, one of many experiences he soon labeled "gross consistencies". A gross consistency was usually a simple observation that in some small way corroborated Meier's story. Singly each added little weight; collectively they made a curious story seem even more mysterious.

What Welch noted at the first site and every one thereafter was that from the time they got out of the car, looked over the site, and began taking measurements, no more than twenty minutes would pass before someone came up and asked them who they were, or what they were doing, or why they were there. Or they would simply stand and watch. Once, Welch walked onto a site, expecting it to be secluded, only to find a farmhouse not more than a hundred yards from where Meier had taken his photographs.

Driving to the site near that farmhouse along a side road, Elders, Welch, and Stevens had encountered another car traveling in the opposite direction. Moments later, when Meier directed Stevens to pull off onto a narrow path leading to the site, the other car had turned around, followed them, and parked. Then the occupants had watched them walk around the area measuring trees and distances for most of the time they were on the site.

"Essentially we thought we were dealing with remote sites", Welch said later, "where you could fairly well do anything you wanted unseen and uninterrupted for a lengthy period of time. And that you could get to that site without being observed. This was another factor just blown out the window".

Welch obtained weather reports, thinking he could use them to confirm or invalidate the background of the pictures taken at each site. For example, he offered, August 8, 1975. Was that actually a cloudy day? "Wouldn't it be funny", he said, "to learn that the shot here with the deep ruffled clouds in the background, storm clouds, could not have been shot in 1975 in August". Although he found no inconsistencies, Welch discovered that often the weather reports themselves could be misleading. The sites lay mostly in the foothills where the weather could change in minutes. And having experienced these radical changes at the sites, Welch could then listen to the nearest weather source reporting mild temperatures and consistent skies during that same period.

"The weather impressed me to no end", said Welch. "Particularly Hasenbol. You can stand there for an hour, and in some cases nothing will happen; it'll be a beautiful sunny day. At other times you'll go from beautiful sunny to deep clouds and a little mist and rain and fog to what seems like it's definitely going to snow and get cool and then hefty breezes pop up all of a sudden. It was like standing in one place and going to three or four different climates, and not moving an inch. And that presented another angle we hadn't thought about—the further difficulty of faking anything on those sites because of the weather. And you can't just visit those sites for five minutes to learn this; you have to spend some time at them".

One thing Welch had starred in his notes was to view the drop behind the tree in the Hasenbol photos. He had formulated various theories on how Meier could have rigged these photos of a beamship that appears to be almost in the branches of the tall leafless tree. Late on a sunny afternoon they climbed the steep, rutted path to the site, where Welch found a grassy bluff facing into the setting sun and in the distance a succession of jagged peaks as far as he could see. When he walked to the tree at the edge of the bluff and saw the land drop sharply away, roll down and down across a wide valley, his theories simply "dissipated in the wind".

The tree was fifty-two yards from where Meier had taken the picture. By measuring the trunk of the tree as it stood, and as it appeared in the photo, basic triangulation gave him the size of the beamship.

"That's often a simple mistake people make when they're hoaxing", explained Welch. "The ship they film just couldn't be the size they say it is when compared to the other known objects in the photograph".

According to their measurements, the beamship at the edge of the tree over Hasenbol had to be approximately twenty-one feet in diameter, as Meier had always said.

"We had developed some possible theories by that time that we wanted to apply to the circumstances", said Welch, "taking a real strong look at the sites and doing some measuring. But you go to one of those sites, and you compare the photographs right there, and you see the perspective for yourself. Just eyeballing it you know you're not dealing with something that is easily rigged by amateurs, because of the nature of the terrain, the topography, the wind, and even the laws and regulations of Switzerland. The country is so small and jets run down those valleys sometimes no higher than two, three hundred feet, and you'll see them doing barrel rolls, loops, and dogfights at that height. So there were a lot of little technical things that kind of blew out the perception of this being an easily explained circumstance.

"Now . . . here's the conditions under which these photographs were taken at Hasenbol. You have severe cold, you have high winds, you have a good amount of snow on the ground. We were there in summer and you could barely get up the hill because it was too muddy and slippery. What we're talking about here is passing that farmer's house on a very wintry late afternoon. Anybody out in that kind of weather is a little unusual and the people there are nosy as hell. Now here comes a man on a moped, all right, and he's going to go up through this farmer's land, up this bluff, in this weather . . . and it's not snowplowed up there . . . he's going to go up there in the wind and the weather, and he's going to deal with all the technical factors in the midst of all that".

Always present, yet far more subtle than the difficult terrain or the curiosity of strangers, one thing that would have made the hoaxing of the photographs virtually impossible occurred to Welch only slowly as he stood at site after site. Finally, he focused on what he had been feeling in the air—moisture—heavy, constantly changing, and invisible, except to a camera lens. For all its beauty, perhaps largely responsible for that beauty, Switzerland is a damp country. A large object posing independently could be photographed several times in a matter of seconds and the atmosphere would remain constant throughout the series. A model of any size would require setting up and repositioning, a procedure that could consume an hour or more. In that time the background might change.

"You have weather so inconsistent", remembered Welch, "that in fifteen minutes you can go from literally zip, clear sharp air to very thick air, actual mist. That alone would drive a technician crazy trying to fake photos. It would cause too much bluing.

"Also", said Welch, "you need time. Because if it's a model, you've got to throw it five times before you get your shot, or hang it and run it and play with it a bit. This would drive you crazy with the wind, the moisture, there are probably a dozen factors. If you're going to fake this you need time. The one thing you can see that Meier did not have a lot of at any of these sites, whether he's faking them or taking them, is time".

By the mid-1950s, a coterie of men claimed not only to have seen remarkable spacecraft, but to have flown in them and to have talked at length with the occupants. They were known as contactees, and their stories so captured the public imagination that they completely thwarted Air Force efforts to downplay flying saucers. They also undermined the work of private UFO organizations searching seriously for answers.

The contactees, most notably George Adamski, Truman Bethurum, Orfeo Angelucci, Daniel Fry, and Howard Menger, each claimed to have been contacted by "space brothers" who gave him a "mission" to save the world from greed, corruption, and the atomic bomb. The space brothers took them aboard a Venusian, Saturnian, Jupiterian, or Martian spaceship, where they saw beautiful women and received further instruction from Orthon, Aura, A-lan, or Neptune, and heard of idyllic conditions on their home planets, a situation to which the people of Earth could aspire. National interest in the contactees was so great that over a hundred fifty flying saucer clubs sprang up dedicated just to them. In 1954 contactee George Van Tassel sponsored the first Giant Rock Convention in Yucca Valley, California, a carnival affair with contactees giving lectures on their experiences and selling souvenirs from booths. Over five thousand people came.

In the fall of 1956 the thirty-four-year-old Menger, a pipe-smoking sign painter with black wavy hair and a long thin neck, appeared with his story on the Tonight show with Steve Allen. Journalist Jules B. St. Germain described the scene in the November 1957 Argosy: "The audience's original reaction, which ranged from snickering to outright laughter when it learned that Menger claimed to have ridden on a 'flying saucer', changed to a mood of perplexed wonderment and keen interest shortly after he started speaking. Amusement soon became interested silence". Menger told the audience that earlier that year the space beings had taught him to communicate through telepathy, and had flown him to Venus where he saw "beautiful domed buildings".

"I rode through space in a Venusian scout ship", he said. "It is a difficult feeling to describe, a feeling of no motion, of suspension in space. I was shown, through some means of tele-projection, a view of life in a city on Venus. It was not too different from ours. More orderly, quiet, much more beautiful".

He also had traveled to the Moon, where he could breathe the air with little difficulty.

"Most of the people who have contacted me", he said, "have been from the planet Venus, although I have seen others from Mars and Saturn. Some live on our Earth among us".

After Menger's radio and television appearances, so many thousands of people came to his home in Highgate, New Jersey, that at one point the police had to be called in to unravel a traffic jam in front of the house. St. Germain, visiting in late fall 1956, found three hundred people there on a single afternoon.

The public demanded little proof, seemingly content with a contactee's "sincerity". As evidence of his contacts, the father of contacteeism, Adamski, showed skeptics eighteen photographs, some of spots and shadows, and some of a murky, bell-shaped object with what appeared to be wheels on the bottom. He also had one Venusian footprint cast in plaster of paris and containing a coded message. Other contactees had less to show. Bethurum offered a note written in French. A contactee named Buck Nelson sold $5 packets of hair from a Venusian St. Bernard he said weighed 385 pounds. Angelucci and Fry had only their word.

Like Adamski, Menger had photographs, five of them, one of a black mummy shape standing before a glaring rounded object—a Venusian in front of his scout ship, said Menger. Menger also cut a commercial record called "The Song From Saturn", "actual music that came from another planet". He once wrote to one of the UFO organizations, "We are tired of mysteries, hearsay, and ugly rumors circulating about saucer researchers and contactees. Incidentally", he added, "we have a scientist who is working on the qualitative analysis of the vegetables brought back from the Moon".

In January 1957, Major Donald Keyhoe, a graduate of Annapolis, retired Marine Corps pilot, and former aide to Charles Lindbergh, became head of a privately organized group called the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. Formed only several months earlier, NICAP eventually boasted a membership of 12,000, including many politicians, scientists, and high-ranking military officers. Keyhoe established NICAP headquarters in Washington, D.C., and appointed prominent people to its board of governors, one of whom was Vice Admiral Roscoe Hillenkoetter, a Naval Academy classmate of Keyhoe's and the first director of the CIA in 1947. Intent on pushing UFOs into the political arena, Keyhoe and other NICAP members appeared on television and radio nine hundred times from 1957 to 1966.

Because of close and reliable contacts within the military, Keyhoe had been privy to much of the early (and secret) information concerning the Air Force's confusion over flying saucers. He knew that many sightings had been made by impeccable witnesses who had reported fantastic things, and that lacking feasible alternatives many intelligence analysts had leaned toward "interplanetary" as an explanation. Based on this information, Keyhoe had written many of the early articles and books on the subject. In 1950 he had concluded that the Air Force knew the origin of these splendid and mysterious craft, and that official statements, "contradictory as they appear", were simply "part of an intricate program to prepare America—and the world—for the secret of the disks". Seven years later, if the Air Force had a secret, they still were keeping it.

As head of NICAP, Keyhoe opened war on two fronts: one with the Air Force for keeping UFOs classified, and the other with the "lunatic fringe" for tainting the study of UFOs by legitimate investigators. Too many people constantly confused NICAP with the crazies who had flown to Venus and eaten "space potatoes". Though he was convinced UFOs were of extraterrestrial origin, he refused membership to anyone who claimed contact with the occupants.

One of many letters he wrote to contactees went to Howard Menger. "We have been informed", he said, "that during your lectures and upon other occasions you have stated that this Committee endorses your claims and views, including your claims to have met and talked with space people and to have visited the moon. This is to inform you that this Committee does not in any way endorse such claims by you or anyone else".

While battling to avoid the stigma of the contactees, Keyhoe also fought the military on Capitol Hill by pushing for congressional hearings on UFOs. He wrote letters, made speeches, and provided current information to congressmen, impressing many with the quality and quantity of the facts he presented. But each time his lobbying efforts persuaded a House or Senate subcommittee to consider an open hearing on UFOs, the Air Force would somehow convince one or two of the members that the whole matter of UFOs perpetuated itself only because the public had an insatiable appetite for the fantastic. Congressional hearings, they said, "would merely give dignity to the subject out of all proportion to which it is entitled". Whatever they were, said the Air Force, UFOs were harmless, at the most perhaps curious. The country was safe.

Keyhoe, however, felt he had abundant proof that something indeed was happening, and that the Air Force not only had been inept in its efforts to solve the problem, but had made "contradictory, misleading and untrue statements" to congressmen and the public. So strongly did Keyhoe believe the Air Force was concealing what his editor had called "the biggest story since the birth of Christ", that he proposed a showdown: Before the House Subcommittee on Space Problems and Life Sciences, NICAP and the Air Force would present evidence on the existence of "superior" craft piloted or otherwise controlled by extraterrestrial beings. Then NICAP would answer Air Force questions, and the Air Force would answer NICAP questions. If the subcommittee agreed with NICAP, Keyhoe wanted an end to the secrecy. If Keyhoe's proof failed to convince the subcommittee, he would dismantle the entire NICAP organization.

But before the scheduled pre-hearing, one member of the subcommittee spoke with Blue Book personnel privately and concluded there was no need even to consider the hearings. The head of the subcommittee then attacked Keyhoe for his "malicious intent toward a great branch of the military". He called Keyhoe's proposal "a cheap scheme to discredit the Air Force".

But the Air Force's own special advisor to Project Blue Book, Dr. Allen Hynek, had secretly and consistently suggested that the Air Force delve deeper into the UFO phenomenon. Although he could explain most of the 15,000 sightings that had come to his attention, he wrote in The Saturday Evening Post in 1966 that "several hundred are puzzling, and some of the puzzling incidents, perhaps one in 25, are bewildering".

As Keyhoe waged his war in the halls of Congress during the late fifties and early sixties, the public sighted fewer and fewer mysterious objects flying in the sky. Constituents lessened the pressure on congressmen for answers, and reports coming into Blue Book decreased so markedly that Hynek himself thought the phenomenon might go away. Then one night in March 1966 eighty-seven coeds at Hillsdale College in Michigan watched a glow of red, yellow, and green lights rise from a swamp only a few hundred yards from their dormitory.

Roughly "football-shaped", the glow seemed suddenly to fly at the dormitory. Then it stopped. Then it flew back to the swamp where it hovered. The county civil defense director watched the glowing object through binoculars for three hours. The following night, sixty-three miles away, a dozen people in Dexter, Michigan, several of them police officers, watched another glowing object rise from a marshy area on a farm. At about a thousand feet the object stopped, hovered for a few minutes, and then flew away. A farmer and his son had approached to within five hundred yards of the object and heard it take off with the sound of a ricocheting bullet.

The two sightings sent reporters into a frenzy, and the Air Force dispatched Hynek to investigate. But when he arrived at the Hillsdale campus, he could hardly get to the witnesses. Journalists looking for answers had swarmed the campus and the farm, and emotions ran so high that even the police now saw flying saucers everywhere. The head of Blue Book called Hynek in Michigan and told him to stand up before a crowd of reporters in this near hysterical community and issue a statement on the cause of the sightings. But Hynek had nothing to say. He had no idea what could have caused the lights.

"Searching for a justifiable explanation of the sightings", he wrote in the 1966 Saturday Evening Post article, "I remembered a phone call from a botanist at the University of Michigan, who called to my attention the phenomenon of burning 'swamp gas'."

Three days after he began his investigation, in the midst of being pulled in one direction by TV cameramen and in another by news reporters at the largest press conference in the history of the Detroit Press Club, Hynek uttered the words "swamp gas". He had only meant to say that this rare gas, known to burst into tiny flames that sometimes floated above the ground, was a "possible" cause of the sightings; but no sooner had the words slipped out of his mouth than the press conference erupted in a clamor of reporters rushing to the phone.

The Air Force and Hynek both looked foolish. Not one of the hundred-plus people who had witnessed the lights accepted the explanation. The civil defense director said that the pulsating lights he had watched through binoculars for three hours that night unquestionably came "from some kind of vehicle".

House minority leader Gerald R. Ford castigated the Air Force for their "flippant answer" to the Michigan sightings and called for a "full-blown" congressional investigation into UFOs. Two and a half weeks later, for the first time in the nineteen-year history of the phenomenon, the House Armed Services Committee held open hearings on UFOs.

"At that point", said Hynek in an OMNI magazine interview in 1985, "I had to ask myself when I would become scientifically honest and say that I just didn't know what the sightings were and that they deserved further investigation".

During the congressional hearings of April 5, 1966, Secretary of the Air Force Harold D. Brown revealed that an ad hoc group of scientists called the O'Brien Panel had secretly convened only six months earlier to review the UFO problem. The panel had concluded that UFO sightings had potential scientific value and recommended that the Air Force supplement Blue Book with science teams from selected universities who could mobilize quickly, gather data while fresh, and evaluate that data thoroughly. But with few sightings being reported and public interest on the wane, the Air Force had felt no pressure to implement the panel's recommendations, so it had done nothing. Now, with press coverage of the recent Michigan sightings firing public interest, and Congress pressuring the Air Force to find answers, Secretary Brown told the House Armed Services Committee that the Air Force would immediately begin a search outside the military for teams of scientists to study the UFO problem. The subject embodied so much misunderstanding and sensation, however, that several universities, including Harvard, MIT, University of North Carolina, and University of California, refused to participate. After months of searching, the Air Force Office of Scientific Research finally offered a $313,000 grant to Dr. Edward Uhler Condon at the University of Colorado to conduct the entire study with the help of special consultants and a staff of twelve, half of whom were scientists or psychologists. What became known as the Condon Committee remains the most controversial episode in forty years of UFO history.

Condon, sixty-four, a noted physicist and former president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, had once served as deputy director of the highly secret Manhattan Project at Los Alamos, where he provided several pieces to the A-bomb puzzle. He also had been instrumental in the development of radar. His stature as a scientist satisfied both the Air Force and the science community, and his reputation for bucking governmental authority (he was one of the few to checkmate young Richard Nixon and the House Un-American Activities Committee) seemed to assure that UFOs would receive a fair hearing.

But in September 1966, two weeks prior to the first meeting of the committee, Hynek had dinner with Condon. Later, in the OMNI interview, Hynek recalled that the renowned scientist was "quite clearly negative" toward the subject of UFOs. When Hynek then visited the project offices, he found the project coordinator, Bob Low, already writing on a blackboard the chapter headings and conclusions for a report that as yet had not been researched and would not be complete for another two years. Hynek's early experiences with the two men running the project would prove prophetic.

Though the Air Force at the behest of Congress had established the Condon Committee to settle the UFO controversy, within months the committee itself was adding to the confusion. In January 1967, Condon addressed an honorary scientific fraternity, telling them, "It is my inclination right now to recommend that the Government get out of this business. My attitude right now is that there's nothing to it". Then, according to the Star-Gazette in Elmira, New York, he smiled and added, "But I'm not supposed to reach a conclusion for another year".

A mesmerizing storyteller, Condon loved to spin a good yarn and kept many audiences in near hysterics with material provided him by the lunatic fringe with which he came in contact during his tenure as head of the committee. For instance, a well-dressed gentleman in his fifties arrived at committee headquarters one day in a chauffeured Cadillac, announced himself as "Sir Salvador", agent of the Third Universe (the Second Universe was populated by bears), and demanded three billion dollars to build a spaceport to accommodate ships from the Third Universe trying to land on earth. According to UFOs? YES!, a book published in 1969 by Condon Committee psychologist Dr. David Saunders, Condon actually researched the "case" and found that Sir Salvador had recently been released from a mental institution. Nevertheless, Condon soberly reported his findings to Washington. When an Ontario, California, man gave a specific date and time for an imminent landing on the Bonneville Salt Flats, Condon notified the Governor of Utah and dispatched an investigator who waited for two hours in vain next to members of the Utah Highway Patrol and a brass band. In September 1967, the Rocky Mountain News in Denver quoted Condon as saying, "The 21st century may die laughing when it looks back on many things we have done. This [the UFO study] may be one".

Condon himself investigated few if any of the truly perplexing cases and rarely discussed the progress of serious research with his staff. In fact, his staff saw little of him. And Low, who ran the project in Condon's absence, refused to investigate potentially important cases suggested by the staff; at the same time he occupied himself with what other members considered irrelevant research. On one trip to Europe, ostensibly to research UFOs, Low spent much of his time in Scotland studying the mystery of the Loch Ness Monster. According to Saunders' book, Low "explained later that this was relevant to UFOs because neither one exists and it was important to see how they were studying something that does not exist".

Because of his own experiences as a scientist, Hynek anticipated that the committee would find UFOs "of importance to the national interest", and that the committee would recommend that Congress establish a commission for studying "the many truly scientifically challenging cases". In a letter to Condon in January 1967, he wrote, "There are so many scientists who have now expressed a 'subterranean' interest in UFO's that I am moved to organize as loosely as possible, an 'Invisible College of Interested Scientists'."

But as months passed, Hynek and others who addressed the committee noticed both Condon's and Low's disturbing preoccupation with the obviously explainable reports. Condon continued to make jokes in public about contactees, giving the impression that such stories formed the bulk of UFO facts. And Low was too quick to point out how easily most cases proved to be some sort of astronomical phenomena or a misidentification of a known object.

UFO researchers had known this for years; they wanted an explanation for the difficult cases.

Then in the summer of 1967, one of the scientists on the staff discovered a memorandum written by Low in August 1966, just before the university signed the contract with the Air Force. Low had titled the memo "Some Thoughts on the UFO Project", and addressed it to university officials. In the memo he noted that several of the scientists at the university wanted to avoid the project because the study would have to be objective, and that meant admitting the possibility that UFOs exist. Low capsulized their feelings by saying, "It is not respectable to give serious consideration to such a possibility". But Low had an answer. He wrote, "The trick would be, I think, to describe the project so that, to the public, it would appear a totally objective study but, to the scientific community, would present the image of a group of nonbelievers trying their best to be objective, but having an almost zero expectation of finding a saucer". One way to achieve this, he suggested, would be to stress the investigation of the psychological makeup of people who claimed to see UFOs, and to downplay the physical evidence.

Low's memo so offended Saunders and Dr. Norman Levine, an electrical engineer on the staff, that they sent it to Donald Keyhoe, who turned it over to a prominent scientist outside the committee. Condon countered by firing Saunders and Levine for "incompetence". Two weeks later, February 15, 1968, Mary Louise Armstrong, Low's administrative assistant, resigned, stating in her letter of resignation that there was "an almost unanimous lack of confidence" in Low, and that Low "had indicated little interest in talking to those who carried out the investigations or in reading their reports". She could not understand how most of the scientists had "arrived at such radically different conclusions" from Low's and noted there was "a fairly good consensus among the team members that there is enough data in the UFO question to warrant further study. . . .

"To say in our final report", she continued, "as I believe Bob would like to, that although we can't prove 'ETI' does not exist, we can say that there isn't much evidence to suggest it does, would not be correct. I do not understand how he can make such a statement when those who have done the work of digging into the sighting information do not think this is true. . . . I do not think it is an unfair conclusion on our part to say that Bob is misrepresenting us".

Other staff members quit, too, and an article in Look, May 14, 1968, publicly exposed the problems within the Condon Committee, promoting a new congressional investigation. On July 29, 1968, as the Condon Committee began winding down its operation and writing its final report, Hynek, Dr. Carl Sagan, and four other scientists, including Dr. James McDonald, testified before the House Committee on Space and Astronautics.

In only a few years, Jim McDonald had become the most articulate proponent of UFO study. Tall, lean, dynamic, with a photographic memory, he was far more vocal than Hynek. David Michael Jacobs, in The Controversy over Unidentified Flying Objects in America, reported that at the first meeting between McDonald and Hynek in 1967 McDonald had walked into Hynek's office, pounded on his desk, and exclaimed, "How could you sit on this information for so many years without alerting the scientific community!"

Holder of a master's degree from MIT and a doctor of philosophy from Iowa State University, McDonald headed the Institute of Atmospheric Sciences at the University of Arizona. Highly respected, he had done extensive research on cloud seeding, hurricane reduction, and ozone problems caused by SST emissions. Though he had discovered UFOs much later than Hynek, he called the study of UFOs "the most important scientific problem of our time", adding that "we do not know what they are because we have laughed them out of court".

"My own present opinion, based on two years of careful study", he told the House Committee on Space and Aeronautics, "is that UFOs are probably extraterrestrial devices engaged in something that might be very tentatively termed 'surveillance'. Indeed", he added, "I have to state, for the record, that I believe no other problem within your jurisdiction is of comparable scientific and national importance. These are strong words, and I intend them to be".

Hynek told the committee that only two things kept scientists away from UFOs: One was lack of hard data (the Air Force, interested only in national security, had failed to collect sufficient scientific data); the other was the sensationalizing of UFOs by contactees and pulp magazines. Between the two, said Hynek, the science community's misconception of UFO information was "powerful and all-encompassing".

Each of the experts to testify before the committee recommended the subject be given further scientific study. Then the committee adjourned and everyone awaited the Condon Committee's final report.

On November 15, 1968, the Condon Committee released a document 1,485 pages long. The committee had examined ninety-one cases, each listed in one of five categories: astronaut sightings, optical and radar sightings, old cases, new cases, and photographic evidence.

Astronomer and professor of astrogeophysics Dr. Franklin Roach wrote the chapter entitled "Visual Observations Made by U.S. Astronauts". A consultant to NASA, Roach had briefed and debriefed the astronauts on their experiences in space aboard Mercury and Gemini flights. After examining ten of the more intriguing sightings, Roach could explain only seven of them. He wrote that, "The three unexplained sightings which have been gleaned from a great mass of reports are a challenge to the analyst. Especially puzzling is the first one of the list, the daytime sighting of an object showing details such as arms (antennas?) protruding from a body having a noticeable angular extension. If the NORAD listing of objects near the GT-4 spacecraft at the time of the sighting is complete as it presumably is, we shall have to find a rational explanation, or alternatively, keep it on our list of unidentifieds".

Physicist Gordon Thayer wrote the chapter "Optical and Radar Sightings" and concluded that one case, which occurred in Lakenheath, England, in August 1965, was "the most puzzling and unusual case in the radar-visual files. The apparently rational, intelligent behavior of the UFO suggests a mechanical device of unknown origin as the most probable explanation of this sighting".

One of the photographic cases examined by astronomer and photoanalyst Dr. William K. Hartmann involved two photographs taken by a farmer in McMinnville, Oregon, in 1950. Hartmann and his staff not only analyzed the original negatives, but found and interviewed the farmer. Hartmann concluded: "This is one of the few UFO reports in which all factors investigated . . . appear to be consistent with the assertion that an extraordinary flying object, silvery, metallic, disk-shaped, tens of meters in diameter, and evidently artificial, flew within sight of two witnesses.

"It cannot be said that the evidence positively rules out a fabrication", he added, "although there are some physical factors such as the accuracy of certain photometric measures of the original negatives which argue against a fabrication".

Hartmann noted that about two percent of cases involving photographic evidence "appear to represent well recorded but unidentified or unidentifiable objects that are airborne—i.e. UFOs". This, wrote Hartmann, "is not inconsistent with the hypothesis that unknown and extraordinary aircraft have penetrated the airspace of the United States".

Many of the case reports contained conclusions like this: "If the report is accurate [it was made by six Air Force officers and confirmed by ground and airborne radar] it describes an unusual, intriguing, and puzzling phenomenon, which, in the absence of additional information, must be listed as unidentified". And this: "Taking into consideration the high credibility of information and the cohesiveness and continuity of accounts, combined with a high degree of 'strangeness', it is also certainly one of the most disturbing UFO incidents known today". Or: "In conclusion, although conventional or natural explanations certainly cannot be ruled out, the probability of such seems low in this case and the probability that at least one genuine UFO was involved appears to be fairly high".

Condon, who investigated few if any of the cases and talked rarely with his staff about their research, wrote the conclusion for the report.

"No direct evidence whatever of a convincing nature now exists for the claim that any UFOs represent spacecraft visiting Earth from another civilization", he claimed. Furthermore, "nothing has come from the study of UFOs in the last twenty years that has added to scientific knowledge". And finally, "Careful consideration of the record as it is available to us leads us to conclude that further extensive study of UFOs probably cannot be justified in the expectation that science will be advanced thereby".

In the OMNI interview eighteen years later, Hynek said, "It almost seemed to me as if Dr. Condon had not read his own report. The report itself presented real mysteries".

An eleven-member panel from the National Academy of Sciences reviewed the Condon Report and approved its conclusions. "On the basis of present knowledge", noted the panel, "the least likely explanation of UFOs is the hypothesis of extraterrestrial visitations by intelligent beings". They agreed with Condon: UFOs did not warrant further scientific study.

In a press conference, January 11, 1969, Keyhoe complained that the committee had examined only fifty cases from 1947 to 1967, and those were hardly typical of the "reliable, unexplained" reports. NICAP had ten to fifteen thousand such cases in its files.

Hynek wrote in his review that he would never have wasted his time on nearly two-thirds of the cases studied by the committee. The Air Force consultant also noted that members of the committee sometimes stretched so far to explain a sighting they came up with solutions like this: "This unusual sighting should therefore be assigned to the category of some almost certainly natural phenomenon which is so rare that it apparently has never been reported before or since".

Dr. Peter Sturrock, professor of astrophysics and space science at Stanford, wrote a lengthy evaluation of the Condon Report for the Institute of Plasma Research. Sturrock concluded, "It is my opinion that the substance of the Condon Report presents a persuasive case for the view that there is some phenomenological fire hidden behind the smoke of UFO reports, and that the Report therefore supports the proposition that further scientific study of UFOs is in order".

On May 16, 1969, Roach, who had been responsible for the section on astronaut sightings, wrote to Hynek that he had attended a recent Condon lecture entitled "UFOs I Have Loved and Lost". "He was amusing, hilarious at times, but did not touch on the serious part of the investigation", said Roach. "The listeners must have gone away with the erroneous impression that his encounters with psychopaths or retards represented the essence of the investigation rather than a peripheral aspect of the matter". Roach referred to "all the errors and comedies of the investigation", and ended with, "The fallibility of scientists has been revealed which is important and the public may now enter a new era of confusion".

Two years after the Condon Report, in November of 1970, a subcommittee on UFOs sponsored by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics found that many of Condon's conclusions were his own, not based on research in the report. Nor was there "a basis in the report for his prediction that nothing of scientific value will come of further studies". The subcommittee recommended increased study, finding it "difficult to ignore the small residue of well-documented but unexplainable cases which form the hard core of the UFO controversy".

"Nevertheless", Hynek recalled, "when the Condon Report came out in 1968, it was the kiss of death".

The Condon Report recommended that the Air Force's efforts at Project Blue Book be discontinued. One year later, December 17, 1969, the Secretary of the Air Force announced that the Air Force's twenty-two-year study of UFOs would be terminated. The Air Force "got out of the UFO business", folded Project Blue Book, and declassified all files: forty-two cubic feet of paper, over 80,000 pages. In twenty-two years the Air Force had investigated 12,618 reported sightings, only 701 of which remained unsolved. The rest the Air Force attributed to balloons, satellites, aircraft, lightning, reflections, stars, planets, the sun, the moon, weather conditions, or outright fabrications. Using the figures provided by the Air Force, once every eleven days for twenty-two years someone in the United States sighted a flying object that no one could explain.

But many people in the field had felt for some time that the Air Force and its Project Blue Book served only as a publicity front, that in fact the real investigation had been conducted by another agency or agencies. Bill Spaulding of Ground Saucer Watch examined the newly declassified Air Force files in the early seventies and came away feeling something was missing.

"It's always been our contention", said Spaulding, "that there was another agency or entity involved. In other words, the Air Force is not the bad guy. If you look at it logically you'll see that the Air Force projects consisted of about five people, including some secretaries, very miniscule, who did nothing. The Air Force went around and gathered information. But after reviewing all the Project Blue Book files, we came across none of the cases that people had given to us. Where were they? What we found out was that another agency was involved, so we said, 'To heck with this. Let's go after the CIA'."

In 1975, under the newly revised Freedom of Information Act, Ground Saucer Watch filed a request with the CIA for one copy of the 1953 Robertson Panel Report. Responding to the request, the CIA declassified the controversial report, but stated that the CIA's only involvement with UFOs was the Robertson Panel.

"At no time prior to the formation of the Robertson Panel and subsequent to the issuance of the panel's report", read the reply, "has the CIA engaged in the study of the UFO phenomenon. The Robertson Panel Report is summation of the Agency's interest and involvement in this matter".

Three and a half years later, after extended litigation, the CIA was forced to admit to Ground Saucer Watch that it not only investigated the phenomenon before and long after the convening of the Robertson Panel, but that it possessed 412 UFO-related documents that had originated within the CIA, and another 199 documents that had originated with other government agencies. The CIA relinquished 900 pages of UFO sightings and internal policy on UFOs.

While the litigation between GSW and the CIA progressed through the legal system, an independent UFO researcher filed another Freedom of Information request, this one with the super-secret National Security Agency. He received this reply: "Regarding your inquiry about UFOs, please be advised that NSA does not have any interest in UFOs in any manner [emphasis in original]". But during its suit against the CIA, GSW learned that some of the CIA documents they sought had originated with NSA. After a new and again protracted legal battle NSA released only two of its admitted 239 documents relating to UFOs, a decision upheld by the courts for reasons of national security.

During the late 1970s and early 1980s, UFO groups and independent researchers utilizing the Freedom of Information Act prompted the release of 3,000 pages of previously classified material concerning UFOs—reports, correspondence, minutes, and memoranda—all pieces of a historical puzzle that when put together revealed over thirty years of interest in UFOs by the State Department, Army, Navy, Air Force, FBI, CIA, NSA, and Defense Intelligence Agency.

Among the thousands of pages of UFO-related documents researchers found many old and revealing memoranda such as this one concealed in CIA files since 1950. On November 21 of that year, an engineer named Wilbert B. Smith in the Canadian Department of Transport wrote a proposal for a study of the earth's magnetic field as a possible energy source. In the secret memo, he stated, "I made discreet enquiries through the Canadian Embassy staff in Washington who were able to obtain for me the following information:

a. The matter is the most highly classified subject in the United States Government, rating higher even than the H-bomb.
b. Flying saucers exist.
c. Their modus operandi is unknown but concentrated effort is being made by a small group headed by Doctor Vannevar Bush.
d. The entire matter is considered by the United States authorities to be of tremendous significance".

Since no one had ever uncovered a photo lab or darkroom where Eduard Meier might have developed and possibly fabricated his photographs, Elders and Welch wanted to know who processed his film. Perhaps that person could offer clues or even answers, making the testing of the photographs unnecessary. They discovered that Meier had all of his film developed at a small photography and video shop in Wetzikon called Bar Photo, part of a downtown shopping strip about thirty or forty minutes from the farm. Bar Photo was owned by a couple in their mid-thirties, Beatrice and Willy Bar, each of whom during the interview appeared to be bright and well traveled, far more cosmopolitan than most of the people they had met at the farm. Each spoke English well.

When Meier had first brought in rolls of black-and-white film to be developed, Bar himself had done much of the processing.

"I never saw anything suspicious in the black-and-white film I developed", said Bar, "nor was I ever told to manipulate anything. A lot of people have suspected I did that, but no. When someone brings you pictures like this your first reaction automatically is, 'This is a lot of crap'. But he aroused my curiosity".

Meier had even invited Bar several times to accompany him on a contact to photograph the beamships if he desired, but Bar had declined. At the time he did not believe strongly in Meier's story, nor did he have time to drive and walk with Meier through the Swiss countryside late at night. He had been curious, but not curious enough.

When Meier had first brought his exposed film to Bar, the shop owner had studied the photographs closely with a magnifying glass. He was certain he would be able to recognize a double exposure because the portion exposed twice always appears "stronger". But he never saw any evidence that Meier had tinkered with the photographs.

Bar said, "My personal opinion was always, 'I don't know about UFOs, but the pictures are real'. You could drag me before a court of law and I would say the same thing I have told you".

During the interview Bar said he had always sold Meier equipment he could handle with one hand. That was the major selling point. Meier would come into the store and experiment for hours with every model until he found one that would be the easiest for him to use. Bar had once sold Meier an old 8mm camera made by Alcom that had been sitting around his shop for years; nobody wanted to buy it, but it was by far the easiest movie camera to use with one hand.

"If he had an accomplice", Bar pointed out, "he would not have to try out all the models to see what could be used with one hand".

Beatrice Bar also knew Meier and often had spoken with him in the shop. Unknown to Meier she, too, had studied his photos.

"I don't believe in the same thing he does", she said. "But I always wondered just how he could do that, because the pictures looked real, they didn't look faked. As a rule, if you have a double exposure or any reproduction, you can see the outline, but with his pictures you could see nothing.

She and her husband often had talked about Meier, but neither understood how the man could create such authentic-looking photography. Beatrice herself had decided that Meier fabricated everything, but she couldn't see how he was doing it. Nor could she understand, with so many people traveling to the farm to visit Meier, and now so many actually living with the Meiers, how some of them could not know or even be involved in the hoax. She wondered how Meier could keep all of them quiet, especially the children.

"Children always talk", she said.

Both Willy and Beatrice Bar had learned nearly everything they knew about photography and developing from a younger man who several years before had been employed at the shop when it had a different owner, and who had encouraged the Bars to buy the shop when it came up for sale in 1970. Fritz Kindliman, who recently turned thirty-one, had now worked there for ten years. He knew Meier better than anyone in the store, had handled and inspected hundreds of his photographs, and often had talked with him since Meier began bringing his film to Bar for processing in 1973.

Kindliman had been taking pictures since he was a small boy. When he turned sixteen and under the Swiss educational system had to select a profession for study and apprenticeship, he chose video and television. Whenever new equipment came out on the market he bought it so he could study how it worked. He now owned and could dismantle and reassemble many cameras, video, and 35mm.

Quiet, somewhat disheveled, with hair sticking up in the back, and appearing almost lost when out of the lab or not behind a camera, Kindliman met one morning with Elders and Welch in a small pastry shop a few doors down from Bar Photo. At first the conversation was of congenial things—Kindliman's interest in cameras, his years of experience at the Bar shop. Then, speaking through an interpreter, Elders asked Kindliman, "Did Mr. Meier ever ask you about darkroom techniques or film developing?"

Kindliman shook his head.

"Never?" said Elders.

Kindliman turned to the interpreter and said that Meier never asked any questions about such things. "Of course I must admit", he added, "in the beginning I was very critical when he came in with these pictures. But he kept bringing them in. Today I am convinced this is the real thing".

The photographer seemed equally positive that Meier had no color photo lab of his own hidden away somewhere. The processing and equipment were far too expensive and complex to be owned and operated by a single individual. Bar Photo itself had no such sophisticated laboratory. Every roll of film Meier brought to the shop, and often there were as many as four or five a week, Bar sent to one of three places: slides to Lausanne Kodak, Ektachrome to Studio 13 in Zurich, prints to Wädenswil Labor Pro-Cine.

Since Meier used both print and slide film, his negatives had to be sent to all three Swiss laboratories. Kindliman's job included scanning random pictures when they came back from the developing labs, checking through the packets to ensure the quality of the photos and slides they returned to their customers. He had examined many of Meier's photographs before Meier himself had seen them. And he was certain there had never been any of what he called "manipulation" of the photos.

Welch asked him why. "Warum?"

On the table in front of them lay a picture of Meier's they had brought to the interview, two beamships close up, one below the crest of a hill and one just above. Kindliman picked it up and immediately began to talk.

"If you wanted to superimpose those two UFOs on the landscape you would have to practice for a long time to get the upper one without any shadows on it. You must understand when you bring in a whole strip of film there are many pictures on that strip. If this shot had been manipulated you would assume that on that strip of film you would have several shots of the same scene but of different quality, because he's experimenting with that scene.

"Now if Herr Meier had come into the store just to order one picture and on the strip to the left and to the right there were the same scene with different lighting techniques, then I would have immediately noticed these pictures had been manipulated. But I never had the slightest suspicion the pictures had been manipulated. I exclude such a possibility. Whenever he brought in negatives to have prints made, the negatives were always in strips, not cut up".

Welch asked Kindliman if there was any way Meier could have manipulated some of these pictures without his being able to detect it. Kindliman became indignant.

"I can't imagine that", he said. "Absolutely not!"

Kindliman also said they had told Meier again and again to take better care of his negatives, because he would bring them in scratched and smudged.

Elders and Welch had surmised that when they got to Bar Photo they would discover that Meier frequently had been in asking about darkroom techniques. But according to the man in the shop who had spent the greatest amount of time with him, he never asked such questions. Kindliman told them that most of Meier's film was in slides and that if Meier had wanted to fake pictures of that size he would have needed specialized macro equipment, but Meier didn't have any.

"Had he ever asked me questions about macro technique or how to light macro shots, then I would have become suspicious", said Kindliman. "Had he asked me pointed questions, I might have studied those photos more carefully, but he never gave me reason to disbelieve him".

Perhaps the single thing that impressed Kindliman was Meier's 8mm films of the beamships—Meier's footage of the beamship that appears to cut in front of a tall pine causing it to sway, of the ship coming to a stop over Hasenbol, and of the craft that begins to dematerialize above a hillside and seems to be reappearing down below in the same frame.

Video and movie film had become Kindliman's specialty. He told Elders and Welch, "When I saw these shots they looked real to me".

Even on warm summer evenings, the large Meier kitchen with its many chairs continued to be the place for everyone to gather. After a dinner of boiled potatoes from the garden, with perhaps some cheese and a loaf of bread out of the oven, most everyone simply remained at the table, especially if there were guests. Chairs got rearranged, people tilted back or leaned on the table, and the conversation went on until the evening light showing through the kitchen windows first had softened to gray, then finally turned black.

"We had many such evenings", recalled Welch. "On one that I'll always remember we talked about the Pleiadians, what Meier had been told, their knowledge of their past, tracing it from Lyra, how they for the first time came in contact with Earth. I think we sat there spellbound for about two hours. And the way it came out of him was more than interesting. He found it interesting, and so he would highlight points that were interesting to him or somehow had surprised him, as a couple of things had.

"1 looked at all of it in a dual sense: The question whether it was too far out to believe I felt we'd find the answer to later, so that wasn't important to me. At that time I was more interested in experiencing, watching, and hearing all of it, and I enjoyed the experience. And what was impressing me to no end was that a lot of what was coming out of Meier . . . was not Meier. It was alien to the man, and to his style of describing things. He was explaining something he'd been told by somebody else. Whoever was the source of all this description was very, very intelligent, very, very good at communicating a fact or an event. And very philosophical at times in an alien way, or highly technically accurate in a way that Meier didn't even seem to be aware of".

"We are the Pleiadians", Meier was explaining to the people at the table. "We came from a cross between the Pleiadians and the human beings from the earth".

"Why don't we live as long as they do?" asked Welch.

"We have to build up our age", said Meier, "like they had to do on their planets some millions or billion years ago. The age of a living form, especially of a human being, will evolve very slowly, like his wisdom and knowledge, and his technology. You can see here in Europe some twenty-five years ago we had an average age for the European people of seventy-two years. And now it's up to seventy-five years".

"What does Erra look like?" asked Elders.

Meier said he had never traveled there. "But it looks nearly like earth", he explained. "It's a little bit smaller than earth, and the buildings there are round. The vehicles have no wheels, they hover, and the work is done by robots and androids. The androids are half mechanical and half organic, and they are able to think by themselves, but humans oversee everything that's done. Each family is not more than five persons, the parents and a maximum of three children".

Meier told them that about three thousand ships from other star systems in the galaxy visit the earth each year.

"There's eight different human races that have stations here on earth", he claimed. "They are here exploring, they are here studying, they are here watching".

"Are any of them here to try to destroy us?" asked Elders.

"No", said Meier. "If a human race can cross a very, very great distance, maybe light years of space, they will not be coming here to make trouble or start a war. The earth human is a fighting creature—his whole life is based on fighting—so he thinks if there is a human race on another planet those creatures will be exactly the same as he is. But that isn't true".

If they so desired, the Pleiadians could destroy the earth in a matter of minutes, said Meier; they could have enslaved all earthlings thousands of years ago. Meier admitted that some of the other ships had picked up humans against their will, but he compared the situation to earth scientists and anthropologists who, upon discovering a primitive people still on earth, dispatch teams to study them and return them to the lab.

"Humans are humans", said Meier.

If the Pleiadians or other entities abducted earth humans, it served only to satisfy their legitimate curiosity. Occasionally a mistake might be made and an abducted human would die, much as earth doctors made mistakes causing people to die. But human life was never taken purposely.

Meier was certain that World War III would take place.

"That will be for sure", he said.

"When will it happen?" asked Welch.

"That's a good question", said Meier.

"Very soon?"

"It's not so far", replied Meier. "They know the exact dates, but it's not so good to know them".

"Won't the Pleiadians try to stop it?" asked Welch.

"It is impossible", said Meier. He told the people at the table that the Pleiadians are not allowed to interfere with the development of earth. "It is absolutely impossible to stop all these things. Some two thousand years ago, World War III was called by several prophets. Nobody heard them for two thousand years. And now it's really too late".

Such a holocaust could be prevented only by change, and change could be effected in only two ways: One was by teaching, by showing earth humans how to advance spiritually from within, which the Pleiadians desired to do; the other was to use force, which the Pleiadians forbid. They would not step in to prevent war unless our earth war threatened civilizations elsewhere. Though they possessed the power to stop the ultimate conflagration, they would stand idly by and watch us destroy ourselves if we chose to do so, even if a crazy man reached for the button. The Pleiadians attempted only to effect small changes in people of clear head and heart, by teaching and allowing the person to grow from the inside.

"If you travel into space", said Meier, "you will find humans wherever you go. And when they start to think, they need a teacher. If they have never seen a flower before, never heard anything about a flower, the one who knows the flower can teach them. And this is the way over the whole universe. The photographs are only to make people think, to show them something; people shall come for these pictures, but they shall study the teachings, and they shall come to know".

Meier told Welch of many things that had been explained to him by the Pleiadians, one of the most intriguing and controversial being perhaps the most fundamental to the Pleiadian presence on Earth.

With the Pleiades nearly five hundred light years from Earth, conventional Earth physics dictated that traveling at the greatest speed conceivable, the speed of light, a trip from the Pleiades to Earth and back again would require one thousand years. Yet Meier maintained that the Pleiadian propulsion system was capable of speeds many millions of times faster than light, and that Semjase frequently traveled back and forth between her home planet Erra and Earth. The Pleiadians, said Meier, made the trip in seven hours.

During the fourth contact and again in the eighth Semjase had explained to Meier aspects of the propulsion system that enabled the Pleiadian beamships to transcend distance and the passage of time.

"For traveling through cosmic space", she said, "a drive is necessary which surpasses the speed of light many times over. But this propulsion can come into action only when the speed of light is already attained. This means then that a beamship needs at least two drives—a normal drive which provides acceleration up to the speed of light, and a second hyper-drive, as you would call it. With this we are able to paralyze time and space simultaneously", explained Semjase. "They collapse into null time and null space. And only when time and space have ceased to exist are we capable of traveling through distances of light years in a tiny particle of a second. This is done so quickly that living forms are not aware of it.

"The reason we need seven hours to reach Earth is because first we must fly far into space before we can convert to hyper-speed. We then comes back out of the hyper-space condition far outside of your solar system, and fly to here once more in normal drive.

"I am not allowed to give you any further details. But I can tell you that your advanced scientific circles are already working on systems known as light-emitting drives and 'tachyon' drives. The elemental principles are already known to them. The light-emitting drive serves as the normal propulsion system to move the ships to the limits of space and time. Once there, the tachyon drive is brought into action. This is the hyper-propulsion system, which is able to force space and time into hyper-space. We use other names, but the principles are exactly the same".

Before Stevens' first trip to Switzerland in 1977, Lou Zinsstag had sent him the contact notes pertaining to the Pleiadian propulsion system. But Stevens had never heard the term "tachyon". Nor had the Elders or Welch.

After Welch had read in the contact notes Semjase's explanation of Pleiadian propulsion to Meier, he questioned the man often about the concept. Welch came away thinking that Meier knew more than he should, both for his station in life and for the dearth of information on the subject in all but the most sophisticated scientific circles.

"He wrote down in the notes what he had been told", said Welch, "and then he elaborated on what he understood of the concept as a method of space travel. I saw those notes in '78. We did learn later that for some period of time specialists either connected with NASA or with companies like General Dynamics had been quietly working on that as a propulsion concept. What's interesting is that the man who wrote the notes has a formal education equivalent to the fifth or sixth grade. He does not live near major libraries, he does not live near major scientific centers, he doesn't have immediate contacts in those fields. At the time, we didn't know what 'tachyon' meant. Most physicists didn't know what a tachyon was. And to apply the concept of theoretical tachyon to space propulsion is a huge step to make. There was no evidence that we could dig up that he had collaborated with anybody on this.

"But the thing that was startling to me was that as soon as we started to dig into that, all of a sudden something else would pop up, in the notes or through Billy, that was equally sophisticated, unique, and advanced in a different field. In the notes there were conversations about the universe and celestial mechanics, about healing methods and advanced medical equipment that just did not make sense coming from a man out in the remote countryside of Switzerland. Most of it, though, I noticed in the way he carried himself in conversations—the way he dealt with knowledge. It all seemed out of context with his personality. It seemed as if the man had a tutor in various fields who was one incredible tutor".

"After my first trip in the summer of '78", said Welch, "we got together and decided there was a tremendous amount of information here, a tremendous number of unanswered questions. We were intrigued, we were hooked at this point. Witnesses we had met seemed quite sincere as well as changed. That was the thing. They seemed changed. There was a sense of change in the area all around the Meier farmhouse, something that you couldn't put your finger on, just something you sensed. I can give you an analogy. Some of the people we met reflected the same kind of change you would detect in someone who's been on an operating table and has been termed technically dead for two or three minutes and then comes back. I had talked to two people like that, so I knew the difference. They have a light airiness about them, a sense of harmony about their lives that envelops you when you talk to them. I sensed that in some of the witnesses.

"When I left after that trip, I had the feeling, 'I don't know what it is, but something is going on. Something here is going on'. And I wouldn't have been satisfied if Meier himself all of a sudden had stood up in front of everybody and shocked them by saying, 'I faked everything!' I wouldn't have believed that, because he couldn't have known how".

NINE

Although little known in the United States before 1979, the case of Eduard Meier would emerge as one of the most controversial in the history of UFO phenomena. No case had ever offered so much evidence; in fact, Meier seemed to possess more evidence than nearly all previous UFO cases combined. But that evidence would be seen by few and studied by even fewer, because Meier's preposterous and sometimes misunderstood stories of traveling back in time to see Jesus and photographing the Eye of God would be laughed at and dismissed as nonsense—the same as Lee Elders had reacted before he had seen with his own eyes the conditions in which Meier lived, talked with the witnesses, and walked the sites. Meier's stories couldn't be true, but neither could the witnesses and the evidence be dismissed easily. Instead of space potatoes from the Moon and piano music from Saturn, Meier offered scientists what they had asked for for thirty-two years—something they could place under a microscope or enter into a computer and examine. And Lee Elders held all of it in his hands.

But in the late 1970s in the United States at least a dozen private groups vied for such evidence. The Aerial Phenomena Research Organization (APRO), headquartered in Hicson, and the Mutual UFO Network (MUFON), in Sequin, Texas, were the largest now that NICAP was defunct. Both organizations boasted several scientists and experts in various fields who lent prestige to the groups' activities and publications. But the research, the gathering of facts, the interviewing of the rancher who had observed the strange light in the night sky, often was conducted by volunteers whose only qualification was the dues they paid to be members of the organization.

"Hobbyists", Stevens called them. "Often their investigations are no more than meeting the witness in his living room and discussing his experience over tea or coffee".

Usually short-lived and poorly financed, most investigations generated one or two pieces of paper to be mailed to the organization's headquarters, which most often was the home of the director.

Though united in a common cause, this small community churned with dissension. Because each organization remained viable only through the energy, dues, and contributions of its members, keeping their interest high was important, and this often led to intense competition for the more compelling stories. Should one group discover an intriguing case with claims or photographs to captivate its membership, it would often conceal such discovery as long as possible. Debate over old cases raged for years. Newsletters and bulletins mailed to memberships of a few hundred or a few thousand became forums for attacking not only cases, but other ufologists. Emotions ran high and accusations were sometimes vicious.

When Stevens returned from Switzerland after meeting Eduard Meier in the fall of 1977, he felt the case was so big, complex, and potentially sensational that if he took it to one of these groups it would become embroiled in the politics of the UFO community. He wanted to avoid this. (Stevens had his own critics: One prominent ufologist, Stanton Friedman, had labeled him a case "collector, not investigator"). Stevens also knew that most ufologists still automatically dismissed contact cases, especially claims of repeated contact. But he felt that the Meier case had hard evidence and that this evidence needed more than the typical short-term, poorly financed investigation by one of the UFO groups. Instead, he had approached the Elders and Welch, who were experienced in investigation and the preservation of evidence, and, most important, had no connection with any UFO organization. Immediately, Elders had capped the case with a tight lid of security.

"I guess I was overly protective with this case in the beginning", he said later. "And rightfully so. I still wasn't totally convinced it was for real, but I'd be damned if I would let anybody get near the evidence. We're talking about hard evidence. I made a lot of enemies that way. Our problems really began right after that with the UFO community".

In the summer of 1978, Jim Dilettoso set out to explore, experiment, and talk to people about how the Meier evidence might be legitimately tested. If he was to organize the testing, he needed to know the latest equipment, the qualified scientists, and the proper procedures. He searched first for the experts. Then he spent a year writing and phoning them, sometimes interviewing them in person, before he understood what tests should be performed and what equipment should be used, and which scientists were not only knowledgeable, but also open-minded enough to analyze evidence associated with UFOs. After he felt he understood the procedures, he tried to locate and use the equipment at various labs and universities before he approached one of the scientists with the actual evidence in his hand.

"At times I cringed about it", said Welch. "It would have been much nicer to have somebody with a Ph.D. who'd spent five years in research at Harvard to be there carrying on that conversation for us. Also, I cringed many times because we couldn't be sitting there with a $20,000 check in our hand when approaching someone to ask to use their equipment or to do the work".

Once he understood what needed to be done, Dilettoso then had to convince the scientists themselves to perform the actual procedures on the metal, sound recording, and photographs, and that proved difficult. A scientist's reputation remains only as good as his credibility, and many if not most scientists felt their credibility would be seriously threatened if it were known they were studying UFOs. But after many tries, Dilettoso discovered an Achilles' heel he suspected might exist—the natural curiosity of the scientist.

Marcel Vogel was a research chemist, one of less than a dozen senior scientists at the IBM facility in San Jose that employed 9,000 people. The holder of thirty-two patents, he had worked for IBM for twenty-two years, inventing for the huge computer company the magnetic disk coating memory system still used in IBM disk memories throughout the world. Research begun in 1960 by Vogel also had introduced the use of liquid crystals for optical display. Now a specialist in the conversion of energy inside crystals, Vogel probed the interior of crystalline structures with the most complete optical microscopic equipment available in the world—a system of scanning electron microscopes costing $250,000.

In his forty years as a scientist, Vogel had received many unusual requests for his expertise, but the strangest came in mid-April 1979, in a phone call from Jim Dilettoso. Searching for scientists to examine the Meier evidence, Dilettoso had discovered Vogel at IBM and felt he represented the perfect blend of expertise and curiosity: Eminent in his field, he had a reputation for being open to new ideas, even those on the fringe of science. When Dilettoso contacted Vogel, the scientist seemed amused with the story, but intrigued as well. Stevens followed with a letter cataloguing the samples in his possession—various crystals that Meier had labeled as coming from certain planets in other star systems, and four states of metal used in forming the hull of the Pleiadian beamships.

"These specimens are available for any kind of non-destructive analysis", wrote Stevens.

Both men explained to Vogel that the samples had been entrusted to Stevens by a Swiss farmer named Eduard Meier, who claimed since 1975 to have met face-to-face over one hundred times with beings from the star cluster known as the Pleiades. "I am personally convinced that the contact is actually taking place", wrote Stevens, "and is still to this date proceeding on an irregular basis".

Skeptical but curious, Vogel agreed to conduct an analysis. Later he admitted, "I've had a rather negative feeling toward UFOs because, I said, 'Unless I have something physical that I can get my hands on, just reported sightings and things like that have no interest to me'."

One Saturday morning, not long after he had agreed to examine the Meier evidence, Vogel found lying on his doorstep a small padded mailer addressed to him. Upon opening the package he was surprised to find a note from Stevens and four smaller packages, one enclosing a lavender crystal, two filled with darkened metal specimens, and the last containing a half-inch triangle appearing to be an alloy of silver and gold.

Vogel studied the samples in his hand and conducted elementary testing in his IBM laboratory. Except for its clarity and the beauty of its soft violet tinge, the amethyst crystal revealed no unusual properties. And the two metal specimens darkened by oxidation contained only small and impure quantities of aluminum and sulphur, with some silver, copper, and lead. But they held at least one surprise for him.

"When I touched the oxide with a stainless steel probe", Vogel later remembered, "red streaks appeared and the oxide coating disappeared. I just touched the metal like that, and it started to deoxidize and become a pure metal. I've never seen a phenomenon like that before. It's just something that was unusual".

Though the two darkened samples exhibited this unusual property, Vogel considered them no better than standard silver solder. "You could have gone to a jeweler and gotten a specimen of that", he said. "The other fragment that I had, the triangle, was different".

In the separate packages, Vogel had found handwritten notes with information about each specimen. The note enclosed with the triangle said that when the Pleiadians gave it to Meier in 1975, Meier recorded in the contact notes that they had warned: Earth scientists would easily be able to analyze the components of the alloy, which included the basic building blocks of the universe. But the alloy was bonded in a unique way involving seven separate development stages that by twentieth-century earth technology would be impossible to duplicate.

"This information", one of them told Meier, "can be only a suggestion to the earth scientists for the still distant future".

One evening, several days later, Vogel remained late at IBM to begin analyzing the burnished triangle. Placing the metal in the electron microscope, he turned on a video tape to record his analysis and peered through the lens. Though he had expected to encounter nothing new in the specimen, to his surprise he was looking at the most peculiar maze of elements he had ever seen.

Since arriving in Tucson in 1966, Stevens had investigated cases for the Aerial Phenomena Research Organization, sometimes piloting a private plane to the sites. Though he was friends with Jim and Coral Lorenzen, who had founded APRO in 1952, he told them nothing of the Meier case for over a year. "I didn't want them meddling in it yet", he said, "because I didn't know where it was going". But after visiting the farm and talking to Meier in April 1978, he and Elders had discussed bringing APRO in on the case: The UFO organization had connections in the science community that might prove useful in having the evidence analyzed.

"So we decided to invite APRO to come into the case with us", said Elders. "I really respected at that time the work they were doing, and so did Steve. They were the oldest and largest UFO group in the world, and they had a great reputation, they were dedicated, they had pioneered in a lot of areas. I liked Jim Lorenzen. And Jim was interested in the case, he seemed sincere".

Lorenzen said later he had "serious doubts" about the case. But he would reserve judgment until the evidence had been examined by "outside experts". For the present, he said, he considered Meier's photos to be "art". "They were exciting and interesting", he added, "but we didn't consider them proof of anything".

The alliance with APRO began with a basic misunderstanding. Lorenzen saw the gesture as an invitation to him to supervise the investigation so that the APRO stamp would make the efforts of Stevens and Intercep "beyond question".

"I got involved in this with the idea it was to be an objective investigation and that I was to have control of the investigation", said Lorenzen. "I would decide what tests would be done and what scientists and labs to use".

"Mostly", said Stevens, "he asked questions about where I was on the investigation. Had I tested this? Had I looked at it this way or that way? Did I ask this or that question? The only inclination he gave me that he was sympathetic to it was that he said several times, 'There seems to be an awful lot here for one party to fake. Either it's a big group with a big scam, or something is going on'",

For a while Lorenzen met frequently with the investigators. He talked at length with the producer John Stefanelli and traveled to San Francisco to speak with Marcel Vogel, the scientist Dilettoso had discovered at IBM; he met with representatives of a computer company that manufactured image processing equipment for analyzing photographs. But as time went on, Stevens held back on much of the evidence and information coming from the case. He did not want to lose control to Lorenzen. Furthermore, Dilettoso was now digging into the science for them, and he had begun to establish his own contacts; they no longer needed APRO's connections in the science community.

At the same time, Lorenzen had been speaking with other ufologists who had European contacts, and one of them passed on a rumor that the whole case was a big joke, that each time the Americans left Switzerland to return home, the Meier group laughed behind their backs at how easily they had been fooled. Lorenzen also heard that affidavits from alleged witnesses not only failed to support Meier's claims, but actually refuted them.

"I think he used models", Lorenzen said later, "and he threw away those pictures that didn't turn out. See, they never checked out his avenues of developing and printing to see if they stood up. They never checked anything like that, which is one of the first things I would have checked". Lorenzen said that as far as he knew, no scientist ever analyzed the photographs.

Then, over a year into the investigation, Lorenzen and Elders had a disagreement.

"Lorenzen asked if we would cover his expenses to Europe", said Elders. "At that time, we were using our own money, Intercep money, to cover our segment of the investigation. Wendelle was using his retirement pay from the Air Force. So we were operating on the 'ten dollars a day through Europe' program to save money to try to conduct the investigation. We told APRO no, we couldn't do it. APRO said, 'Okay then, fine, we want all the evidence turned over to the APRO organization'. Hell, who needs someone to help you under those conditions? So we said, 'Thanks, but no thanks'. Made them mad".

"We all finally agreed", Stevens admitted later, "that we wouldn't discuss the facts in the case anymore with anybody outside our group, and if anybody pressed for answers, try to get out of it, and if we couldn't get out of it, to drag a hare across the trail and throw them off. It was probably not the best thing to do, but we were trying to keep people from stirring our pot at that time. We already were inside government laboratories, and we didn't need anybody else trying to help us get in there".

Before 1978 scientists had used image processing exclusively to extract data from a photograph everyone knew was legitimate: A satellite had beamed it back from the Moon or Mars; it was real. The challenge with the Meier photos was to detect possible fabrication. Dilettoso discovered a UFO group in Phoenix, Ground Saucer Watch, that claimed to have a reliable computer method for authenticating UFO photographs. Since 1974 they had received five hundred photographs from around the world, subjected them to their new process, and pronounced a large majority hoaxes. A few, less than 5 percent, they proclaimed to be genuine.

Unknown to Dilettoso, a West German researcher had sent ten Meier photos to GSW for analysis two years earlier. After analyzing the photos, GSW had reported: "All of the pictures are hoaxes and they should not be considered evidence of an extraordinary flying craft". Nearly every method of photo fakery possible had allegedly been employed by the one-armed Meier—a suspended model, the double exposure technique, the double print method. The West German UFO group had immediately ceased their investigation of the Meier case.

Later, Ground Saucer Watch had received a photograph of a disk-shaped craft taken by a man in Calgary, Canada. They analyzed the photograph and found it to be "genuine", which they announced publicly. Sometime later, through an intermediary, the man from Calgary sent a second photograph he had taken of the same disk on the same roll of film. GSW concluded that the photo "depicts the crudest attempt at a hoax that we have ever seen". Since that blatant contradiction was publicized, few people had given weight to the findings of the organization.

In his research of equipment and procedures, Dilettoso learned that GSW performed none of the alleged computer work. They sent all photographs to a firm in California, where technicians entered them into a computer by taking another picture with an inexpensive video camera, and applied basic software programs to enhance the photographs with bright colors. Then they took another picture off the computer screen and sent these pictures back to GSW to be studied with the naked eye. By then, the information in the original photograph had been greatly distorted.

"This frustrated Jim", said Welch, "it frustrated Steve and me. Because there was no structured approach. They could have been looking at stuff that came from a dirty lens".

"Or", said Dilettoso, "the angle of the light on the photo could be wrong and create surface reflection from the gloss on the picture. There's a hundred things that could happen. I spent a lot of time talking to GSW and found I wasn't going to get anything out of them. They really were playing with toys".

After GSW, it took Dilettoso little time to discover the father of image processing, Dr. Robert Nathan at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. Dr. Nathan had conceived image processing in the 1960s and developed it for nearly twenty years. Although other government labs now had comparable equipment, as well as scientists competent in image processing, JPL was considered first in the field. After several calls form Dilettoso and Stevens over a period of months, Nathan finally agreed to look at the photos, but he would not commit himself to examining them: The procedure was costly and time consuming, and though Nathan's job was to detect and analyze objects in space, whatever their nature, he had no time to waste. Still, he kept an open mind.

In his office, before even viewing the photographs, Nathan told Stevens and Dilettoso he would look at the photos as an individual, not as a scientist at JPL, and that any opinion he rendered would be his own, not that of the NASA facility. That made clear, Stevens pulled out several 11 × 14 prints he had had made of Meier photos and laid them on Nathan's desk. The scientist perused them, saying nothing. Then he reached for the phone and called the photo lab to tell them he was coming over. After looking at the photos for a few more minutes, he escorted Stevens and Dilettoso to the lab to have copies made of a set of transparencies also in Stevens' possession.

"We took the internegatives that I had to their processing facility", recalled Stevens. "And they made copies from those. They wanted to keep the internegatives, but we wouldn't let them, because every time somebody has kept one they end up talking with it in front of them and little spit balls fall on it, and when you put it under super magnification the next time you've got little blues in the picture".

Bob Post, the head of the photo lab where every JPL photo of planets, stars, asteroids, and comets was processed and printed, had worked there for twenty-two years. "Over the years of looking at photographs and judging photographs", he said, "you get to the point where you can see a lot of things in a photograph that the average person doesn't see".

About four o'clock in the afternoon, Nathan entered the lab and showed the large prints to Post. "I'd seen pictures of UFOs before", said Post, "and I looked at them as a bunch of bull. There's no definition to anything. But these were good. Whatever they were, they were good. You've got a nice spacecraft sitting there, you've got some good ground out here, you've got a sky with clouds in it once in a while, and you can see some detail. The pictures look good. Under further scrutiny you might find out, 'Yeah, they're fake'. But some of his pictures I thought were gorgeous, absolutely gorgeous, best stuff I've ever seen for UFO pictures.

From a photography standpoint, you couldn't see anything that was fake about them. That's what struck me. They looked like legitimate photographs. I thought, God, if this is real, this is going to be really something".

By the summer of 1979, the Elders, Welch, and Stevens had spent over $30,000 traveling to Switzerland to see Meier, traveling to San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other locales to speak with scientists and computer companies, and telephoning all over the United States. With Dilettoso beginning to open doors at major laboratories, they decided they needed more money if they were to continue investigating the case properly. A few scientists had conducted preliminary tests on some of the evidence, and so far they were getting interesting results, but nothing conclusive as yet. Without consulting Lorenzen further, Intercep formed Genesis III Publishing and produced UFO . . . Contact from the Pleiades, a large-format photo journal containing many of the Meier photos, a sampling of quotes by Semjase, a brief outline of Meier's experiences since 1975, astronomical and mythological information on the Pleiades, and some of the preliminary findings on the testing of the evidence. "Sort of a mix of what we had done up to that point", said Elders.

Seventy-one pages long, the Pleiades book claimed that a number of scientists had been consulted on the Meier evidence and that some now were conducting "a most exhaustive and painstakingly detailed investigation". But the text mentioned no names. The book displayed pictures of various people sitting around a table in the Meier kitchen and noted there were "a substantial number of local witnesses who had personally observed these remarkable events", though it identified no one in the pictures. The book informed that scientists were analyzing the Meier photos more thoroughly than any UFO photos had ever been analyzed, "utilizing additional, highly advanced procedures and technology drawn from sophisticated aerospace and nuclear medicine applications", but it included no signed reports or statements from the scientists. Near the end of the book was one page comprised of two short paragraphs entitled "Metal Samples Analysis". The first paragraph claimed: "From the beginning, unique qualities in the metal samples were detected". But the text referred to those who had performed the analysis only as "the scientists involved". Then it claimed that these scientists "had never seen anything like it before", and that "these detailed analyses continue today". The text failed to divulge even one source, yet the writing abounded in hyperbole.

Elders' earlier refusal to release any of the evidence to the UFO community had caused considerable controversy over the Meier case months before publication of the photo journal. Many ufologists thought Meier's claims of having traveled in space and time were outlandish; they laughed when he said that a tree in a photograph had later disappeared because Semjase had "erased its time", and reports constantly drifted back from Europe that someone had seen small models hanging in Meier's barn. With Intercep's extravagant claims now public and totally unsupported in the text of the photo journal, accusations from the UFO community increased and became more heated. While pretty to look at, alleged the kinder criticism, the pictures, and whatever other evidence the Elders and their group claimed to have, represented no proof of anything. Harsher critics screamed fraud.

Mutual UFO Network director Walt Andrus wrote in 1980 in the MUFON UFO Journal that the photo book produced by the Intercep group "is an outright fraud perpetrated upon the public for financial gain". He added: "A U.S. investigation had identified a balloon in several of the photographs that supports the model on a string while Billy Meier, with one arm operating his camera, moves through several different angles". Andrus lamented even mentioning the photo journal in his group's publication. "However", he wrote, "it is imperative that such opportunists be exposed".

A 1980 book review in Fate magazine concluded: "I think this book is nonsense—handsomely packaged, to be sure, but nonsense all the same". The reviewer, George Earley, later wrote in a spring 1981 edition of a UFO newsletter called Saucer Smear that what Stevens offered as proof was "cheap twaddle".

"Stevens well knows what constitutes legal and/or scientific proof here on planet Earth", he continued, "but he and his compatriots have consistently and persistently failed to provide any such proof. Until they do, they deserve every bit of criticism sent their way by the rest of us".

In the fall of 1979, Jim Lorenzen, who had had more exposure to the evidence than anyone outside the Intercep group, told the audience gathered at UFO '79, the APRO convention in San Diego, "My present disposition is that the Meier case is a hoax". Then he paused and added, "It's not that simple though". Some aspects of the case and some of the evidence presented, he felt, were "very difficult to explain". But too often Meier's inflated claims required Lorenzen to suspend common sense. He accused Stevens and the Intercep group of going to Meier "as skeptics and as investigators" but becoming "disciples spreading the word. . . . Part of it, I would say, is mysterious and I can't account for it", he concluded, "but that doesn't mean I have to buy the whole package".

In the APRO Bulletin of October 1979, Lorenzen's words were more pointed. Addressing Stevens he wrote: "I submit, seriously, that you and your associates have rushed to judgment on this matter because of a strong will to believe—a predisposition toward exotic explanations. . . . So far, each instance of evidence that Meier has offered, when pursued to its logical limit, ends up being a zero as far as compelling proof is concerned. Add any number of zeros and you still have zero".

One ufologist, Lucius Farish, a columnist for the MU-

FON UFO Journal, publicly defended Stevens and the Intercep group. "You are free to think anything you wish concerning the Meier case or Stevens' investigation of it", he wrote to the journal's editor. "However, the fact remains that you have no proof that the case is a hoax. I've heard all kinds of accusations, but I have yet to see one iota of real evidence. . . . When anyone takes thousands of dollars out of his own pocket to investigate UFOs, I think he deserves to be heard without a bunch of clowns harassing him because he showed them up at their own game".

Later, in a letter to another ufologist, Kal Korff, who more than anyone else had repeatedly attacked the Meier case, Farish wrote: "The opinions of persons who have never bothered to investigate the case and who are willing to accept negative statements concerning it without investigation are totally worthless. . . . I would say that 98% of the criticisms of the Meier case which I have read/heard are merely 'sour grapes'. . . ".

In the MUFON UFO Journal of December 1980, Korff published an article entitled "The Meier Incident: The Most Infamous Hoax in UFOlogy", which he later expanded into a booklet and distributed among other ufologists. Korff concluded: "After a careful review of all of the major purported events as stated by Genesis III and those individuals involved with the Meier case, it can be conclusively shown that none of the events as claimed contain the slightest shred of evidence to support their authenticity. Therefore it must be stated that the Meier case gives every appearance of being nothing more than a grandiose and elaborate hoax. It is certainly the most extravagant of all of the known contactee cases contained within the records of UFOlogy".

"At UFO '79 in San Diego", remembered Lee Elders, "the character assassination started against us. They started attacks that were unbelievable. They sent out flyers and brochures talking about this Meier hoax that we had perpetrated. We went through a bloody mess for a year and a half after that, so we quietly rallied our forces together. We're being attacked day and night for perpetrating 'the wildest hoax since time began', and we can't lay this card on the table with IBM or any of the other labs. We don't want people bothering the scientists. So at that point we refused to release any more information on the case. We took it underground. And this haunted me for two years. I felt we had tangible evidence as an investigator. I didn't know if we could prove the case to be real, but I knew we had tangible evidence. Not one of these UFO people had ever been to Switzerland. They hadn't spent five minutes with Meier. None of them has been there. So how can they say it's a hoax? That's what frustrated me the most".

"Then", added Brit, "letters started coming in here saying, 'We want to see what you have. Send it to us'. We wrote back saying, 'No. If you want to see what we have, you come to Phoenix and look at it. It does not leave our possession'. So then everybody starts saying, 'They don't have anything. They're not going to let anyone see what they have because they don't have anything at all'. That's how this little merry-go-round works. I said, 'It's here, but if you want to see it you come here to see it'. None of them ever did".

While Dilettoso conducted his campaign with the scientists, Lee Elders returned from Switzerland with a new sound tape from Meier. Eva Bieri, one of the witnesses present when the sounds were recorded, had described to Elders the experience of listening to the sounds as a beamship, unseen, hovered overhead. An attractive Swiss woman in her mid-twenties, Eva had stood in a meadow only two miles from the farm, balancing her two-month-old son on her hip. Popi, a tape recorder in her hand, stood nearby. Near the edge of a pine forest 200 to 300 yards away, Meier had sat on his tractor, as another tape recorder turned in the small trailer behind it. Soon, Engelbert and Maria Wachter and others had joined them, and then everyone had watched the sky and waited.

Eva, who had sensitive ears, disliked loud music and loud people. But when the deafening sounds suddenly filled the sky over her, she became angry not for her own discomfort, but because she felt it would harm the ears of her baby.

"On tape it sounds different than it really was", she said. "It was like the sky was full of sound, not from one place. The sound was everywhere, and we were thinking it must be very loud because people came from far away to see what had happened, and they were running, not walking".

Shrill and unnatural, seeming to echo from within as it rose and fell, the sound, though loud, seemed almost pleasant to Eva's ears. Her child did not cry, but only craned his neck and blinked his eyes and listened.

For years Dilettoso had worked at creating sound using digital sound synthesizers; whereas analyzing photos involved techniques new to him, he understood the analysis of sound. Through a former employer, Micor Corporation, he arranged one evening to examine the recording with a digital audio analyzer. But after taking the sounds apart he could not figure out how to duplicate them.

"That was the point at which I was blown away", he said. "To the ear they don't sound that unusual. It sounds like what you'd expect a sci-fi flying saucer to sound like. But upon analysis, they're continually shifting and changing, and combinations of them are getting louder and softer and doing things at such a rapid rate that even with a synthesizer being able to generate that many sounds it would be really, really complex".

But needing independent verification, Dilettoso sent the tape to Rob Shellman, a sound engineer with the United States Navy sonar sound laboratory in Groton, Connecticut. Also intrigued with their complexity, Shellman immediately eliminated one major possibility: Meier could not have used any electrical AC source to create the sounds.

"The equipment was set up to analyze for 50 or 60 hz line frequencies, which are common electrical outlets", Shellman wrote to Dilettoso. "If the device that generates the sound was an electric motor or machine the line frequencies would be evident. No such frequencies were detected".

Seeking further verification of what seemed to be an unusual recording, Stevens located in Los Angeles an electronics consultant and computer engineer, Nils Rognerud. A designer with a large electronics firm, Rognerud took the tape to a sound lab and converted the sounds to wavy lines on a spectrum analyzer. As he watched, the various frequencies vibrated up and down across the screen, converged into a thick zigzag, then split apart and converged again.

"I was being very skeptical from a scientific viewpoint", Rognerud said later, "but the sounds were unusual".

At a loss to explain them, Rognerud called in a second consultant, Steve Ambrose, who built custom microphones for rock stars and was the sound engineer for Stevie Wonder. Recently, Ambrose had built a tiny wireless radio receiver and speaker that fit inside Stevie Wonder's ear. The radio, called a Micro Monitor, was one of two inventions Ambrose had patented. He also toured regularly with Simon and Garfunkel, Engelbert Humperdinck, Diana Ross, and other popular singers as a sound specialist. He understood sound synthesizers and their capabilities. Rognerud had asked him to listen to the Meier recording to see if he thought Meier somehow had fabricated the sounds with a synthesizer.

Later Ambrose said, "Nils knew that if I thought it was a hoax I would just flatly say, 'I'm sorry, I could do this'. He's like that, too".

Over the phone Rognerud explained to Ambrose that the alleged source of the sounds was an interstellar beamship coming to earth from the Pleiades. He added that from everything he could discern the sounds seemed to be authentic. Such a strong endorsement from Rognerud piqued Ambrose's interest, but the recording still held surprises for him. After listening to it awhile and watching it on the spectrum analyzer, he told Rognerud the sounds could not possibly have been made with a synthesizer. They were analog, or natural, sounds, and he agreed with Rognerud that they seemed authentic. "If someone is perpetrating a hoax", he said, "they went to some length".

"Synthesizers use oscillators that are capable of making things that sound real", Ambrose explained later. "But the frequencies that this sound generated were so random and varied it was beyond the capabilities of an oscillator or even a group of oscillators. You'd have to use a microphone of some analog, natural sound like a lathe, metal cutting metal, which has low frequencies and high frequencies, and if you speeded it up or slowed it down you could get the various frequencies that would resemble what this had on it. But even then you'd have to take that and layer it several times, mixing one sound in with another, and this just didn't sound like something that had been layered, track upon track upon track. When you've dealt with recording and electronic sound you get to be able to hear what happens when you layer one sound on top of another. This was a single sound source recording that had an amazing frequency response".

Ambrose knew many people in Hollywood involved in creating special effects, and the sounds, he said, were something none of them could have conceived.

"How would you duplicate that sound?" he asked. "I'm not just talking about how it sounded to your ears, but how do you show those various things on a spectrum analyzer and on the 'scope that it was doing? It's one thing to make something that sounds like it, it's another thing to make something that sounds like it and has those consistent and random oscillations in it.

"If it is a hoax", he continued, "I'd like to meet the guy who did it, because he could probably make a lot of money in special effects".

Since the spring of 1977, the farm had been slowly transformed into a functional place complete with electricity and hot and cold running water. Finally the mud was gone; the water that had once spilled down the hillsides was now dammed, directed, and fashioned into small pools. Running in long, well-tended rows, a huge garden spread from the old carriage house along the path to Schmidruti. Pear and apple trees produced large fruit in the fall and provided fresh juices kept on the back porch in large glass jugs. At the entrance to the farmhouse, screen mesh covered the large aviary filled with canaries and finches, one snow-white, fluttering back and forth between nests made of little baskets. From the front porch came a constant chirping and twittering.

But one thing at the farm had not changed. It continued to attract large numbers of strangers—the religious, the scientific, the philosophical, the cynical, the merely curious—all wanting to speak with Meier. Families came, as well as priests, ufologists, film crews, couples on motorcycles, single women, reporters, and an occasional disciple searching for the Messiah. At dinner the Meier kitchen often filled with people they had never seen before, and because of Semjase's request that he educate earth humans on the existence of other races in the universe, Meier felt obligated to speak to them all.

In November 1978, after a dozen or more articles about Meier had appeared in the European press, Der Spiegel, the huge international magazine, had run an eleven-page cover story on UFOs: "Apparition or Reality? The UFOs Come". The magazine cover was a dramatic Meier photograph—a beamship accompanied by a remote-controlled craft, the latter just below the horizon.

The people who now sought out Meier came from all over the world. An old guest book signed by only a very few of the visitors bore addresses from Tahiti, Japan, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Mexico, and Belgium. Actress Shirley MacLaine flew to Switzerland to spend five days with Meier, helping to weed the garden and trim tree branches by day, and at night probing Meier for answers about the universe. When MacLaine left she signed the guest book: "To Billy and his loving fight for all. Thank you for your dedication, your patience, and your LOVE. Always shine. Shirley".

Popi remained disgusted with the visitors. "I was fed up many times", she said later, "but we didn't have a choice. They would come into my house and say, 'Okay Billy, let's go'. Not a word to me. I got aggressive, I could not see why people could not understand when I told them that Billy was busy right now. They came here with their problems and Billy had to be here no matter what. He didn't care about his health, and the people didn't see that he needed time to relax, to take care of himself, and to be my husband. Nobody ever asked Billy, 'So you have a problem? Can we help you with anything?'

"I learned to accept the way it is. Von Däniken came. He wanted information. Billy talked to him. I was glad that I didn't have to speak with these famous people".

"We were there", recalled Lee Elders, "when cars came in from France, Holland, Denmark, from all over Europe. It created a nightmare for him".

"At the very beginning", added Brit, "Billy sincerely questioned his sanity. 'Why me? Why here? Why now?' Then he got to where it became fun. All of these people he'd never met before, coming to talk to him. Then the photographs hit the magazines, and all of a sudden he was swamped with people. They started lining up outside. Literally lining up. And that he didn't enjoy. People would say, 'Give me this photograph', or 'Let me have that photograph'. Then they would disappear and he would never see them again. Here I think all of the fun left it, because half of everything got stolen. The kids were being harassed in school. His wife was unhappy, and he wasn't real happy. Because there was a constant flow of human bodies. Always".

Popi still would have nothing to do with any aspect of the contacts. She refused even to discuss them with her husband. "Popi was very jealous of the contacts anyway", said Brit, "not just the fact it was with a female space traveler, but also that Billy was doing something she couldn't be a part of, and that she, deep down inside, didn't want to be a part of. She didn't want anything to do with the contacts, she didn't want to know what was being said, she didn't want to see the photographs. And she didn't want to talk to the people who were invading her privacy. I've seen her take on everybody in the kitchen, tell them to get out, leave, leave the house, go away, she never wants to see them again. Because they were making demands on her husband, and in her mind that was separating her husband from her. She finally got to the point where she didn't care. She didn't care if anybody showed up, she didn't care if her house was a mess. She didn't care what happened to her kids, herself, or her husband. Everything around her was overrun with strangers".

Meier predictably had become a cult figure, visited by individuals searching for something to give life meaning. Some of those who had gravitated to him looking for an answer even took up residence at the farm, as rooms were completed and outbuildings renovated. They always wanted more contacts, notes, and photographs. The new people helped keep the farm going and assisted Meier in printing his contact notes, but now he spent much of his time and energy settling disputes among his "followers". Women frequently clashed with Popi, and men vied to become Meier's confidant. Even the contact notes had acquired a decidedly terrestrial tone, often concerned merely with the problems and personalities inhabiting the farm, and attributing conflict among the members to the acts of dark forces called the "Gizah people". The warm and stimulating, even magical atmosphere that many had experienced in Meier's presence began to erode with the arrival of more and more people.

Finally, rules had to be drawn, work schedules enforced, and dues collected from those who lived at the farm, as well as from regular visitors. Everyone remaining at the farm longer than thirty minutes was expected to work. And if anyone wanted to speak with Meier they either had to do so in the field as they worked next to him or in the kitchen after they had earned a piece of his time.

In the fall of 1979, with a Japanese production crew from the Nippon Television Network Corporation waiting in London, the Elders had traveled ahead to Schmidruti to see if Meier would agree to being interviewed for a documentary on his experiences. But when they arrived at the farm they found Meier locked in his office not speaking to anyone.

"He wouldn't come out of his office", Lee Elders remembered. "He wasn't eating. They would take a tray of food to the door and it would sit there. All he wanted was his cup of coffee and his cigarettes and 'leave me alone'."

For three days Meier remained alone in the small room he used for an office. When he finally broke silence it was to send an urgent summons to Elders.

"What an experience that was. I'll never forget it as long as I live. I walked in, the room was dark, there was one little lamp on, and he was sitting there in the chair. We were about this far apart. And the light was on my side. I couldn't see him fully but he could see me. His hair was wild and he had this wild look in his eyes and he would just sit there. I mean he was just a beaten man, totally withdrawn, staring at me.

"Somewhere along in my life I was told that the first man that speaks under conditions like that loses. So I thought, I'll wait him out. I went through three cigarettes. Nothing. Him staring at me, and me looking at him and smoking a cigarette and waiting and waiting.

"Finally I knew he wasn't going to say anything, and I could have been there all day, so I said, 'How are you, Billy?' And he goes, 'Oh, Lee'. And then he poured his heart out to me for two hours. Talked and talked and talked about problems on the farm and how the pressure was getting to him, and he couldn't go on anymore and he was going to break the contacts. He says, 'I will break them. Break them'. He kept talking.

"So I sit for two hours in this darkened room listening to him and finally I said, 'How about some tea?' So I got up, went to the kitchen, got some tea, then went back over.

"I was there six hours total with the man. I did everything in my power to convince him to continue what he was doing. I'll never forget . . . it sounded hokey at the time, but in a way, when I started thinking about it, it wasn't that hokey because it worked. I drew the analogy of Michelangelo. I said, 'Look Billy, you're familiar with Michelangelo, aren't you?' He nods. 'Well, look at this man, look what he created, look what he did while he was on this planet, look at his artwork, look at the things that he accomplished, look at what he gave to humanity. You're doing the same thing. Your photographs are like Michelangelo, they're the best anybody's ever seen'. I said, 'You're contributing to raising the consciousness on this planet, and that's very important'.

"I went on and on. And he started listening, and then he started thinking about it. His problems were minute because he was accomplishing something great. See, by that time we had gone through a period where people were hounding us day and night over Volume I, letters from kids and letters from doctors and letters from people with terminal illnesses trying to get to the Pleiadians for help. We had undergone this onslaught of individuals. There was meaning behind it to them, and they weren't UFO nuts. It was sort of like hope during troubled times. So I knew what he was going through, but I also knew what it meant to these other people. Finally I said, 'Billy, I've got some Japanese waiting in London, what'll I tell them?' And he says, 'Bring them in'."

While they waited for the film crew to arrive, Brit continued to record everyday life at the farm in her diary. "Popi fixed three-minute eggs, bread, sausage, cheese, enough for an army. Last night we had potatoes and cheese.

They laughed at us because we ate the potato skins—they peel theirs. I'm going to teach Popi how to fry eggs, make omelets and sausage the U.S. way".

One night eight people piled into a Land-Rover, and Meier drove on back trails across meadows to a small guest-house restaurant.

"Billy drives like a madman". wrote Brit, "lights off, shifts with his foot, laughs all the time, says he's protected, 'Don't worry', At the restaurant Lee had his first coffee kirsch, we all joined in, had coffee kirsch, coffee schnapps. Came home same way—no lights, Billy shifting with his foot, 'Don't worry, we're protected'.

"Back home after a jigger of the strongest rum anyone could ever make, we all felt extremely 'relaxed'. Billy asked if we had ever seen this done before, and at that point he threw a spoon across the table and when I picked it up it was bent, twisted. Then he did one for Lee".

After Meier had bent the spoons, Brit said, "Are you the next so-called Prophet?"

"No", said Meier. "All people are prophets, and everyone has the power to bend spoons".

Meier explained that he used the force from the people around him and the force of his own mind in channeling it.

"I call them 'foolish turnarounds'," he said. Then he held up one of the spoons he had bent. "This I do only for Brit".

"And between his thumb and index finger", Brit wrote in her diary, "he melted the spoon and broke it in half".

Lee still watched Meier closely, searching for a weak point or a clue. But Meier was so quick and so natural, Elders had yet to see anything suspicious or revealing. "I was fascinated with what he could do with a nail", said Elders, "with what he could do with a compass making it spin around without touching it. He'd say, 'It's just power of the mind', so he didn't equate it to his Pleiadian contacts. It was something he had learned perhaps years ago, perhaps in India. But this fascinated me, because at this point I was pretty well convinced in my own mind that he was not hoaxing this thing through normal means".

Jun-Ichi Yaoi and the Japanese production crew arrived in Schmidruti the latter part of September to begin three weeks of filming. Their first night at the farm, they sat in the living room watching and filming Meier's 8mm footage of the beamships off a white screen. In the first sequence the ship darted back and forth over a farmhouse and a tall pine tree, and then appeared to cut quickly in front of the tree as the top branches suddenly bent as if caught in a backwash. Talking excitedly in Japanese, the crew had Meier run the sequence over and over as they focused on the top branches of the tree. Then while watching another series filmed at Hasenbol, one of the crew members noticed something unusual about a seeming reflection off the ship's flange. Meier ran it back, and the Japanese cameraman zoomed to the edge of the ship. There on the silver rim, like the slow brightening of a lighthouse beacon, a distinct red light flashed on and then off again.

During the day Elders and Welch accompanied the film crew to the sites where Meier's alleged contacts had taken place. They both had surmised for some time that if Meier's story were true, each of the landing sites would have some degree of radiation left behind by the beamship. The proper instrument at the right sensitivity might be able to detect that radiation. After several phone calls they located a gamma radiation detector at Wild-Heerbrügg, a precision instruments company in Switzerland. Similar to a Geiger counter, the instrument measures electromagnetic radiation, and Welch spoke to a physicist there who had used it many times.

"I told him what we were trying to determine", said Welch, "and he indicated that this would be the equipment to use".

The physicist told Welch that the instrument would detect any artificially caused change in the molecular structure of grass and soil.

While the crew filmed Meier in a meadow not far from Hinwil, where Meier claimed the first Pleiadian beamship had landed and remained for an hour and a quarter nearly five years earlier, Elders and Welch set up the radiation detector. To establish a comparison, they first took readings in the grass of the surrounding area, which measured a low .00 to .05. Each time a stronger reading appeared on the dial, they marked the spot on the ground. But before they had finished taking readings in all of the areas, they noticed that the spots marked on the ground were beginning to form roughly the shape of a circle. Inside the circle the radiation level consistently measured .2, roughly 400 percent higher than the background measurements. And the readings inside the circle pulsated.

"It didn't go up and hang", remembered Welch. "It went up like this and then down a little bit, and then went back up, back down a little bit. We didn't expect this".

In diameter, the circle in which the readings pulsated and the radiation rose so much higher measured roughly twenty-one feet.

According to Welch's notes taken at the time of the measuring, "Immediately after that we went back to the hotel and I contacted the physicist who provided the equipment to determine if there was any significance at all to the findings, or if it was a calibration of the equipment that needed to be done. The physicist, who was somewhat reserved in his personality and approach, was surprised".

"Tell me again the background readings", said the physicist.

Welch read them over the phone.

"And the other readings?" asked the physicist.

"One point five, up to two point zero", said Welch.

"Where did you find these readings? Specifically".

As nearly as he could describe the area, Welch told the physicist its location. The physicist then told Welch that he and others had been using the equipment in his laboratory and in the field for about ten years, and it had always read accurately. No brand name appeared on the equipment, and the physicist could not remember its manufacturer.

When Welch suggested that either the readings were insignificant or the equipment needed calibration, the physicist dismissed both possibilities: The equipment was sound and the readings were indeed significant, since they represented gamma radiation levels of between 100 and 400 percent above the highest background levels.

The physicist recommended they immediately contact the Swiss Nuclear Safety Commission for further information and guidance, and allow their team to investigate. He did not know what the readings indicated, but he felt that a specialist should take them again and analyze them.

"He did not go into further detail", read Welch's notes, "except to explain what would be required to cause any such gamma radiation detection—an unnatural source strong enough to change the electromagnetic nature of every molecule where the readings were obtained". Like a paper clip that has been magnetized, articles near a strong electromagnetic field would acquire a "memory" of that force.

After this experience, they took the instrument to the Meier farm and got .00 readings in the vicinity, until they got within four hundred yards of the house, a giant circle. Within the circle, the needle suddenly jumped from .00 to .15.

"But it wasn't consistent", said Welch. "You'd be walking and there'd be no reading, and all of a sudden you'd get this jump. And it would hang at .15 for a second, and then it would start to go down".

At one alleged landing site at the edge of the forest below the farm, Welch again got sporadic readings up to .15. At another landing site in the gravel road leading to the front of the house, he got lightly pulsating readings from .05 all the way up to .2.

At this point they decided to check all of the articles

Meier carried to the contacts. They went into Meier's office and got his gun. First they took out the bullets and got no reading on those. When they asked Meier how long he had had the bullets, he said they had been purchased only recently. On the gun the meter went to .01. Meier's watch registered .05. A metal charm Meier kept in his pocket registered .1.

While checking the objects, they discovered that Meier himself gave off readings. His left shoulder fluctuated from .1 to .15, and his right arm from .05 to .1.

Welch again called the physicist at Wild-Heerbrügg.

"Did you slam a door on it?" asked the physicist. "Did you crush it, or anything like that?"

"Absolutely not", said Welch. "Is it something you have to handle like a feather? Because if that's the case, maybe a slight bump when you're picking it up out of its case could knock it off".

"No", said the physicist, "it's not like that. That's a steel plate you're hitting".

"So at this point", Welch remembered later, "I was very intrigued. He didn't have any answers. And we sure as hell did not want to go to the Swiss Nuclear Safety Commission".

After obtaining the unusual readings, Welch experimented with the instrument for a few days before they had to return it. He turned it on in his hotel room, while they were in restaurants, in open fields and forests; but each time, he recorded nothing near the readings he had gotten at the sites, at the farm, on the small articles, and on Meier himself.

Herbert Runkel rarely came to the farm now. Whereas the Hinwil house had been a place of intellectual freedom, and the farm in the early days a joy to help rebuild, the new religious "feel" of the group with their enforced meditation and their regulations had stifled what remained of that earlier atmosphere.

Meier had disenchanted Herbert two years earlier when he produced a series of photographs he said resulted from time travel with Semjase. The pictures showed the rubble of San Francisco following a massive earthquake that would occur sometime in the future. Later a friend of Herbert's discovered an article in GEO magazine that showed an artist's conception of what the long-predicted catastrophe might do to the city, and Meier's photographs obviously had been taken of this lifelike painting. With all of the beautiful photographs that no one seemed able to duplicate or explain, Herbert had been unable to understand why Meier would resort to such an obvious fabrication. Meier had said that the Pleiadians simply placed in the artist's mind an accurate picture of the real future, the same one Meier had photographed. And then the photographs had disappeared.

The pictures of San Francisco had confused Herbert because he had seen so many things for himself, some trivial, some remarkable, that contributed to a fascinating story he still could not explain. One October afternoon after he had been interviewed by the Japanese and they had departed, Herbert wanted to show Lee Elders a site that long ago had particularly intrigued him. He drove to the site, one that he and Harold had once visited with Meier shortly after Meier had had a contact there. Herbert stopped the car in a field crossed by railroad tracks, where he and Elders got out and walked down a dirt trail into the forest. After about a quarter of a mile they came to a secluded clearing the size of four or five football fields and surrounded by fir trees a hundred feet tall. A short way in from the meadow two trees in the forest bore large wounds frozen in sap and black from singeing.

Herbert told Elders that on the day he and Harold had come to the site with Meier three years earlier, they had wanted specifically to see these two trees: Meier allegedly had shot them with a laser gun the Pleiadians had demonstrated to him. And when Herbert and Harold had looked at the two trees that Herbert now pointed out to Elders, they could not figure out how Meier had created these marks that ate through the thick tree bark unless maybe he had used some kind of laser gun.

That day, while Herbert and Harold were studying the two trees, sometimes up close, sometimes stepping away to check distances, Meier had gone off nearby to look for mushrooms. At the edge of the clearing rambled a thicket of waist-high bushes. As he stepped all the way back to the meadow to eye one of the trees, Harold spotted from the corner of his eye a twig on a small bush. Something had snapped it in two. Something also had charred both of the broken tips. When Harold bent to examine the twig, he saw another one broken a few inches from the first. It, too, was charred. He called Herbert over and they discovered a perfectly straight line of broken twigs, each of them charred, that went through the tangle of thin branches, bush after bush after bush. It looked as though a narrow beam of intense heat had shot through the thicket.

Harold had called to Meier, who came over with his mushrooms to look at the small broken branches. After examining them for a moment, he said he remembered aiming the laser gun at the two tall pine trees, but not in the direction of the bushes. Maybe he had, he couldn't remember.

Three years later the charred branches no longer could be found, but Herbert had pictures of them he showed to Elders. The straight line that ran through the bushes, Herbert estimated, continued for at least a hundred feet.

Later in Munich, Elders also questioned Harold about the incident and Harold told him, "You could recognize the line of fire by the cracked branches and the blackened tips. It was so thin you could not do it with a welder".

At the site Elders had seen immediately that a bullet fired through the bushes would not leave the branch tips so finely charred, and the painstaking use of matches could not be carried out in a straight line. What mystified Elders even more was why Meier would go to so much trouble to fabricate such intricate evidence, when it seemed highly doubtful anyone would ever see it.

The trip that afternoon with Herbert typified how Elders and Welch spent most of their time in Switzerland—stumbling further and further into the unexplainable. The discovery of the charred twigs offered little concrete evidence that Meier's alleged contacts had taken place, but they were one more item on Welch's list of "gross consistencies".

While the Elders and Welch were in Switzerland, Stevens and Dilettoso traveled to Pasadena to meet with Dr. Nathan at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory. Since Nathan could not work from the prints Stevens had showed to him, he had instructed Bob Post at the photo lab to have 4 × 5 color film positives made from Stevens' internegatives. These copies then would be "digitized" and the information stored in a computer where Nathan could analyze it later.

Post asked an Englishwoman, Audrey Adkins, who had worked in the photo lab almost as long as he had, to remain after work to process the transparencies, and Stevens instructed her not to discard any of her test strips or rejected copies. But when Adkins retired to the darkroom, placed the first internegative in the enlarger, and brought the actual grain in the film into perfect focus with a 20X microscope, the picture itself remained blurred. As Adkins brought each of the internegatives into the finest focus possible, she thought to herself, If Dr. Nathan can make anything of these, he's lucky.

Both Post and Adkins skipped dinner that night to work on transferring the Meier photos from the internegatives to positive transparency film. After Adkins had finished her work around seven, she handed Stevens a large padded envelope and said to him, "This is all trash". She left the copies she had just made for Dr. Nathan.

The new transparencies revealed that Stevens' internegatives were several generations away from the originals. In fact, they appeared to be so inferior to the beautiful prints Stevens had shown him at the outset that Nathan immediately suspected Stevens of using him, of deliberately offering evidence that could not be tested.

"All I know is the negatives he gave us to work with were already out of focus and that's all he would let us have", said Nathan. "They had to be a different, later generation, or a generation specifically made that was intentionally out of focus. They couldn't have been used to make the very high resolution prints he flashed by me. He was not giving me his best data, he wasn't showing me anything that I could work with".

"The key problem here", recalled Lee Elders, "was a problem that originated with Meier himself. Because there had been so much theft of the original material, we didn't know if we had originals. If we had had the originals going in, it would have made life much easier for us. But we didn't. We knew we had a negative, but we didn't know how far down it was. Is it first generation, fifth generation?"

Nathan placed the new negatives in a drawer and never looked at them again.

"I was never impressed with the pictures", he said. "I was very unhappy with them. At no time was I ever of the feeling they were anything but a hoax. But don't forget, all of my examination on this was extremely cursory. These things have not really been given a good examination because it isn't worth the time, from the quality of the images given us, to do anything. I have no proof that this is a fraud. But I have no proof that it is real. That's the second statement that should always accompany the first".

For some time Lee Elders had been trying to track down a key witness, Martin Sorge. Of the many Europeans who had once traveled to Hinwil to investigate Meier's early claims, Sorge repeatedly had been mentioned as the chief detractor, the man who, some alleged, had exposed Meier as a fraud. After finally locating Sorge by phone and arranging for an interview through an interpreter, the Elders drove to Locarno, a summer retreat on Lago Maggiore, one of many narrow lakes forming the border between Switzerland and Italy three hours south of Zurich. They found Sorge in a fine white house surrounded by summer hedges a few blocks up from the lakeshore.

Sorge was an articulate man in his late forties, and though his interests over the years had turned to psychology and the paranormal, he held a university degree in chemistry; he had published two books, one on hypnosis. Like many others in the summer of 1976, Sorge had read of Meier's claims of contact with extraterrestrials in a magazine, and, pulled by his own curiosity and the urging of a friend who had met Meier, he had traveled to Hinwil.

"I used to go there with my girlfriend at the time", he told the Elders, "and we would stay there for three or four days. As a personality I felt a certain fascination with the man". But Sorge had soon found himself in a quandary: On the one hand he thought Meier's pictures were convincing; on the other, he was skeptical. "So I wanted to be around to see what happened".

Sorge discovered that at the Meier house on Wihaldenstrasse the family was never alone. Always there was one, two, or three of the curious, often many more, squeezed into the modest living space.

"They stayed the whole night", he remembered, "or they left in the middle of the night, or they came in the middle of the night. And the whole atmosphere there was overshadowed by Billy's mission. He was like a dictator, he said what had to be done and that would have to be done. Even the needs of his family were overruled by his ever readiness to be at Semjase's call".

As he had watched and reflected on Meier, one thing had impressed Sorge above all others: the certainty with which Meier spoke. As Sorge put it, "The man appeared to be one with his story". He said he sometimes saw Meier so lost in his thoughts he could not communicate for days; he seemed filled with a power that originated from without, and this power so possessed him he was able to put people under a spell. Sorge recalled watching Meier point to the sky one night. "See that", Meier had said. Sorge himself had seen nothing. "But", he said, "I can imagine how he could persuade others to believe that they had".

Sorge remembered well the electric atmosphere that pervaded the Hinwil house when Meier was about to have a contact in those early days. There was always great excitement, he told the Elders. People hurried about, bringing Meier his gun, his hat, his boots, his walkie-talkie, his leather coat, preparing him to venture into the forest. Others brewed strong coffee, or warmed the engine of their cars. The ones to accompany Meier wondered if this might be the night they would see the beamship descend or glimpse the ethereal figure of Semjase.

The only nights that compared with these were the nights before publication of the pamphlet Meier called Wassermannzeit, The Age of the Waterman, who was Meier himself. On those nights Meier would be up all night, sweating in the lighted room on the third floor, feeding and pumping the printing machine furiously with one arm, not resting or even slackening his pace until the job was finished.

"It was unbelievable to see him running around this machine working it with one hand", said Sorge. "Real fast, real hard, like an obsessed person".

As Meier in a frenzy cranked out the pages of the pamphlet, music boomed from two speakers, the same pounding beat, over and over, causing the walls to quiver, a tempo that matched his own slamming of the press.

After describing his early experiences with Meier, Sorge began telling the story of how he had turned up the most damaging evidence anyone had ever discovered against Meier: several partially burned slides obviously taken of a model that looked similar to the beamships. It was the story the Elders had come to hear.

According to those in the UFO community who claimed

Meier was a fraud, Sorge had reached into a fire to rescue the slides before Meier could dispose of them. But when told of his alleged role in the story, Sorge said no, the incident had happened differently; he had never pulled anything from a fire. While in Hinwil, Sorge had shrewdly cultivated a friendship with Popi, surmising that the man's wife, if anyone, would know the truth behind the story, and that in the right situation she might reveal that truth.

"Billy and his wife always had many 'disturbances'," he explained.

One day when Sorge was visiting, Popi had suddenly run from the house crying and screaming at her husband; when she returned hours later, she went to Sorge and secretly gave to him many color slides that had been charred by fire. "She had the feeling she had to confess to someone", thought Sorge.

When Sorge examined the partially burned slides he saw immediately they were of a model, either suspended in the setting or somehow superimposed. A prominent shadow appeared against the background. With proof that Meier had apparently experimented with models, and being himself skilled with his hands, Sorge had resolved to fabricate pictures of the same quality as Meier's better photographs.

"To prove it could be done", he said.

Sorge had studied the burned photos at length, then built a ten-inch model and photographed it with a plain background from different angles. Next he had gone into the forest and shot many scenes of trees, sky, and green rolling hills. Using two slide projectors, he had then cast one forest scene onto a silvered screen and simultaneously introduced another slide of the model he had constructed, centering the model in the background of forest. Then he had brought both slides into sharp focus and photographed the screen. As he spoke now of his photography experiment, he began laying before the Elders a sampling of his fabricated pictures.

Sorge's photographs showed a crude and somewhat stark beamship frozen in an otherwise familiar setting; but they lacked the feel of Meier's, the natural relationship that appeared to exist between his background and his ships. They had no depth. Lou Zinsstag had referred to Sorge's photography experiments three years earlier in her final letter to Timothy Good: "A lot of them [former friends of Meier]", she had written, "even faked some ufo photos, doing pictures on a window pane, showing them around and telling everybody how easy this was. I've got two of those fakes. I fell for them only for a few seconds".

Sorge admitted that his pictures were of lesser quality than the ones Meier had produced, but his experiment convinced him that by superimposing projected images or using some similar technique Meier somehow could, and in fact did, fabricate this part of the evidence.

"I saw pictures of a UFO and it really was a model", he said. "In the first place I saw that it was a model, and in the second place I learned it from his wife. She said, 'Yes, he is working with models'."

What Sorge didn't know is that long before he had seen the slides, Meier himself had shown them to Hans Schutzbach, the one who had driven Meier to so many contacts and who had been with him the day the first sounds were recorded. According to Schutzbach, he had been in Meier's study one day in the early fall of 1976, when Meier presented the slides and explained to him that he had carved a model of one of the beamships and then tried to photograph it. In the pictures the model sat on three blocks of wood and lacked the luster and refined appearance of the glistening beamships in Meier's other photos. Meier said he thought the photographs should be destroyed to avoid confusion, but Schutzbach had persuaded him to keep them.

"I told him, 'These are an important document'" Schutzbach had explained later. "'You can't throw them away'."

Meier agreed and gave the slides to Schutzbach, who kept them safely in his apartment. Then one day Popi went to Schutzbach and asked that she be allowed to have the slides. A few weeks later, after fighting with her husband, she snatched up various documents, photographs, and slides, including those of the model, and threw them into the fireplace. Schutzbach said he had arrived at the house in time to see Meier himself stamp down the flames and then reach into the fire to save the slides. The next time Popi fought with her husband, Sorge had been visiting Hinwil with his girlfriend, and in a rage, instead of setting fire to the surviving slides, Popi had given them all to Sorge. This had caused problems, said Schutzbach, because Sorge had later written to Meier and promised to expose him as a fraud. When Popi denied knowing anything about how the slides had gotten into Sorge's hands Meier had threatened her, she pulled out his gun, and he took it away from her. Then Popi had tried to kill herself with pills.

Interested only in "scientific proof" supporting Meier's claims, once Sorge had seen the obviously contrived photographs and heard the accusations from Popi, he considered Meier a "swindler" and lost interest in the case. Since then, he had neither seen nor communicated with Meier; Meier, he said, was now far in his past. But his opinion of the man and the contacts curiously had changed.

"At that time", he explained to the Elders, "I was not as far along as I am now. There is more behind it".

Sorge then paused for a long while as though he were organizing his thoughts. When he spoke again he said, "The result of my investigation is that these things can be made, but . . . now comes the big but . . . this is no proof that the other 'thing' does not exist. I doubt that these pictures are real, but that doesn't mean that all of the pictures are faked or that the story is a hoax".

Lee Elders wanted this statement clarified. Sorge answered immediately.

"Billy's intellect and his spiritual level are much below the message he preaches, therefore it is not possible that he could have invented this. So this indicates he must have gotten it from some other source. I am certain that these are messages from a spiritual being unseen by us but seen by him, coming from another world, and he's capable of hearing these messages".

The interpreter and Sorge talked back and forth in German, as the interpreter made sure he understood Sorge's position.

"I am certain he has these contacts", Sorge continued, "but not in the way he's telling us. He may receive them in the form of visions, the way mediums receive things. He may not even know himself if these visions are real. But for him it is reality, and to prove it he has to go out and build these things".

For technical reasons Sorge felt that Meier must have had at least one accomplice to help him, but he believed Meier actually had two or three, though he had no idea who they might have been.

"He is not flying away", he concluded, "and he is not meeting with Semjase, but he is able to put himself into a parallel world, and he has experiences in this parallel world. He fakes the evidence to make people understand his experiences".

Irina Froning, a tall, attractive blond woman in her mid-forties, sat in the silent back room of an office in San Pedro, California. It was night, and only lights shining softly on the plants enabled her to see. In the outer office, she could hear her friend, whom she was visiting for the weekend, typing reports and correspondence.

"It was Sunday evening", Irina later recalled, "and we were going to stay home, at her house, when my friend suddenly started. It was as if a bolt had struck her that she had to do some typing that night. So she said, 'Will you come with me?'"

Whenever she visited a new place, a home or office, Irina went immediately for the bookshelves to learn more about the person who lived or worked there. But on this night, as her friend typed, Irina wandered past the bookshelves to a small darkened doorway. She walked through the doorway, and in a back office, illuminated by the plant lights, she saw a credenza; on top of the credenza lay a large, square picture book entitled UFO . . . Contact from the Pleiades.

"I really was not interested in UFOs", she said. "I sat down and admired the plants, and then I thought, What am I going to read? and that was the only book. So I put it on my lap. It was intriguing. But nothing really stunned me until I ran across that page in the middle of the book".

Her eyes focused immediately on the word "tachyon".

"This space being", she recalled, "is telling a man that earth scientists are now working on a 'tachyon' propulsion system. That blew my mind! Because for years David had been hugging the table with a pencil in his hand, working with the ideas coming to him about tachyons. He had just published a paper on tachyons! I said to myself, Nobody knows about this".

From Brit Elders' diary, February 20, 1980:

"Tempers flared tonight. Tom, Lee, Steve all arguing. Poor waitress must have thought they were going to blow. Odd thing, the three argued same issue, just different words. Point of problem: additional security needed. After all the trips/work convincing scientists it's okay to research, phone calls, etc., etc., no one willing to attach name to analysis. No one wants to release reports, only verbal. Too much going out of our office, not enough coming in. After three trips to San Jose we gained one video tape, lost one priceless metal sample. Photo tests jump ahead three feet, fall back two. Labs closed to UFO testing. Guys are using each other as verbal punching bags, venting frustration.

"Lee said, 'At least with a goddamn murder case you know you've got a crime. With a UFO case you don't know what you have'.

"Maybe our biggest problem: We're used to tangibles, bodies, bugs, etc. Can't touch a UFO. Metal confuses people. Photos representations only. Bottom line: There's no yes, no no. Round robin conversation finally brings out all tension.

"Reorganize thoughts, get out of frustration's way, proceed. (1) tighter security; (2) no open release of material or information to anyone; (3) one of us present for any analysis; (4) no more verbal reports; (5) low-key research, find the right ones for the right work; (6) no info to outsiders, gets too twisted; (7) everything done must be signed for, creates paper trail; (8) all work must be made known to Lee, he will coordinate and authorize research from here on.

"Suggest no discussion of UFOs until arrive, unless absolutely necessary. Has slammed too many doors in face in the past. Personal opinion: Wish more people with education, reputation, background, qualifications, had courage and curiosity to pursue subject. Tom says it's the nature of the beast.

"Finally all calm. Feel waterlogged from coffee, tired of sitting, 3:30 a.m., ready to sleep, much needed".

A year and a half into the investigation, caught between the antagonistic UFO community on one side and the reserved scientific community on the other, they had stalled. Until they could get all of the evidence thoroughly examined by qualified scientists, they had no defense against the attacks. The refusal of JPL's Dr. Nathan to analyze the photographs had discouraged them, even though results in other areas such as the sounds still looked promising. They now needed somehow to persuade more scientists to look at the evidence and to go on record. But one piece of evidence, the most important of all, had disappeared—the burnished triangle that had so intrigued Marcel Vogel at IBM. No one had any idea what had happened to the piece, and though it had disappeared almost from his very hands, Vogel seemed the most perplexed of all. One minute he had it, and the next minute it was gone. Though the fragment itself had disappeared, Vogel fortunately had already taped his entire analysis on video. The Elders now held that tape, and they concealed it, refusing to acknowledge its existence even in the face of endless attacks from the UFO community.

Colman VonKeviczky of Inter-Continental UFO Network (ICUFON) sent out a flyer to his membership claiming that UFO models had been found hanging in Meier's barn, and that a picture Meier claimed to be of an extraterrestrial named Asket was actually Meier's wife in a blond wig. Proclaiming the case a hoax, however, did not deter VonKeviczky from advertising at the bottom of the flyer's front page: eleven slides of original Meier photos for only $33; and, for an additional price, copies of Meier's contact notes.

The magazine Second Look in 1980 quoted Jim Lorenzen as saying that Eduard Meier was a totally unreliable witness because he "was jailed for thievery as a teenager, escaped from prison, joined the French Foreign Legion, deserted and served out the remainder of his jail term in Switzerland".

One reporter from the London publication The Unexplained wrote that Meier's story "has now become so bizarre that even the most gullible devotee of the extraterrestrial hypothesis ought to be feeling just the teeniest twinges of doubt". After dismissing the evidence as unconvincing, the writer said that Meier's story had "all the hallmarks of American George Adamski's extravaganzas, updated and technically sophisticated for a more demanding age".

After MUFON's Walt Andrus had called the Elders' photo journal an "outright fraud", a prominent ufologist, Bill Moore, distributed a letter among several ufologists pointing out that the Elders had failed to sue Andrus for the accusation. He added that "Andrus and all the rest of us would welcome with open arms [a lawsuit] since none of us believe they have any evidence which would stand up in court. On the other hand if they fail to sue, then they are in effect admitting that what Andrus has said is true. The legal precedent of 'in silence is consent' would certainly apply here, I believe". Then Moore closed: "I firmly believe that these people, down deep in their hearts, know exactly what the truth is in this matter. It is only their greed for money and profit that keeps them from telling it to the world. Think about it".

In another open letter, published in Saucer Smear, after accusing the Intercep group of suppressing some of Meier's more absurd statements, Moore wrote, "Let the record show that when confronted with a legitimate opportunity to present evidence to a qualified forum and thus settle the Meier controversy once and for all, [Intercep] has, by means of a conspicuous and revealing silence, patently refused to do so. The very fact that they chose not to reply at all speaks volumes".

"They're saying the case is a hoax", remembered Elders. "We're coming back and saying, 'We don't believe it's a hoax. We've got evidence that indicates there's something really happening'. They're saying, 'Prove it'. Well, they know we can't prove it. We tried for five years to prove it, and it probably never will be proven".

"We spent the first two years", said Brit, "trying to disprove it".

"And after two years", interjected Lee, "we discovered we couldn't prove it, so we said, 'To hell with it, let's try to learn from it'.

"This is the point", he continued. "I think the Lorenzens began APRO with dedication, as we did with this case, to try to get to the bottom of things. But I think after years of searching and years of frustration, they became jaded. Perhaps they became wise: They suddenly realized they'd never prove the existence of UFOs. So therefore, 'Let's just report the cases and forget it'. Because getting involved takes a lot of time and a lot of money, and nobody's going to believe it anyway. I think somewhere along the line people do become jaded, as we almost did with Meier. Throw in the towel, because you're tired of the hassle".

One night Lee Elders met Stevens at Picacho Peak, an extinct volcano that rises out of the desert floor halfway between Phoenix and Tucson. When the two men wanted to get away and go for a drive, they would meet in a park at the base of the peak and talk.

"So I met him that evening", recalled Elders, "and I was really upset over what was happening. There was talk at that time that we would get totally out of the case, because I didn't want to get into mudslinging, I didn't want to get into legal battles, I was tired of the character assassination, tired of the cheap shots, tired of the attacks against the case. So we met, and Steve gave me this book. He said, 'I want you to read it. This problem is nothing new, it began thirty years ago'."

The book Stevens gave to Elders was The Report on Unidentified Flying Objects, by Captain Edward J. Ruppelt, still considered a classic on the subject. As head of Project Blue Book for its first two years, Ruppelt had created the term "UFO" for "Unidentified Flying Object" to replace "flying saucer". After resigning his commission, he had gone to work at Northrop Aircraft Company as a research engineer and published His book in 1956. At Blue Book, Ruppelt had spent two years talking to pilots, engineers, generals, and scientists, and his book contained many sightings, experiences, and other things he could not explain. But Stevens gave the book to Elders for what Ruppelt had written in the foreword.

> The report has been difficult to write because it involves something that doesn't officially exist. It is well known that ever since the first flying saucer was reported in June 1947 the Air Force has officially said that there is no proof that such a thing as an interplanetary spaceship exists. But what is not well known is that this conclusion is far from being unanimous among the military and their scientific advisers because of the one word, proof; so the UFO investigations continue.
> The hassle over the word 'proof boils down to one question: What constitutes proof? Does a UFO have to land at the River Entrance to the Pentagon, near the Joint Chiefs of Staff Offices? Or is it proof when a ground radar station detects a UFO, sends a jet to intercept it, the jet pilot sees it, and locks on with his radar, only to have the UFO streak away at phenomenal speed? Is it proof when a jet pilot fires at a UFO and sticks to his story even under the threat of court-martial?

The at times hotly debated answer to this question may be the answer to the question, "Do the UFOs really exist?"

Ironically, while the photo journal UFO . . . Contact from the Pleiades acted like a lightning rod drawing the wrath of ufologists, it began to serve as a calling card when asking scientists to examine the evidence. In time, it also became a beacon—an attractive coffee table display that occasionally intrigued a scientist, engineer, or special effects expert who then tracked down the Elders or Stevens, wanting to know more about the story. After nearly a year and a half of knocking on doors, in late 1979, 1980, and 1981, some new doors began to open: Besides doors at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory and IBM, another door opened at Arizona State University, and one at the U.S. Geological Survey, then at Film Effects of Hollywood, and McDonnell Douglas Astronautics Company.

Probably as a category having the least probative value to a scientist, the photographs remained the most exciting and most controversial of the Meier evidence. But there would never be a definitive answer concerning their validity. Every scientist involved with photogrammetrics whom Dilettoso had spoken with had said at the outset that before they could render any conclusive statement they first would have to be assured that either the negative or the positive transparency to be examined was an original. Perhaps a first-generation copy would be sufficient for study, but anything lower than that would begin to leave room for the possibility of manipulation in the photograph. And no one knew the generation of the Meier photographs. But Dilettoso found two scientists willing to analyze them anyhow: They could always examine a photograph of lesser generation and likely detect a fabrication if it existed, but were they to find nothing, they could never be certain that a fabrication indeed had not taken place.

In late February 1981, with the photographs now properly "digitized" on magnetic tape at the University of Southern California's Image Processing Institute, Dilettoso made an appointment with Eric Eliason at the U.S. Geological Survey in Flagstaff, Arizona. For eight years Eliason had been a research computer scientist at USGS, developing image processing software so astrogeologists could analyze photographs of the planets beamed back from space. He had spent two years producing the intricate radar map of cloud-covered Venus acquired by Pioneer 10, and later applied his software in the processing of space photography beamed back by both Viking and Voyager.

Dilettoso arrived at Eliason's office after working hours with two of the Meier photos on magnetic tape. After Dilettoso's preliminary explanation of the photographs, Eliason took them to the computer room, mounted the magnetic tape into a tape drive, typed in the appropriate commands, then went to a library of programs that allowed him to turn the image, filter it, stretch the contrast, and perform other image enhancement techniques.

On the screen in the darkened room, Eliason brought up the edges of the craft extremely sharp and studied the precise point at which the image of the craft met the blue of the sky. Describing the test as "pretty sophisticated", he said he could not imagine anybody being able to fool it.

"One conclusion I made was that it certainly hadn't been dubbed in". Eliason said later. "There was just a natural transition. If you had a sharp contrast boundary, you might think, Well, that looks pretty hokey. But right along these boundaries there were no sharp breaks where you could see it had been somehow artificially dubbed. And if that dubbing was registered in the film, the computer would have seen it. We didn't see anything.

"That doesn't eliminate the idea of somebody taking a little model and throwing it out there", he added. "That's a hoax, but you couldn't tell that with image processing".

But Eliason wanted more information about the film.

"You need to start with the original if you're going to play games like this", he said. "So in a sense this is not really a scientifically valid statement".

Eliason's concern was that superimposure, double exposure, or any other laboratory technique used to fabricate a photograph could occur right at the limits of the film; then by carefully rephotographing the doctored print, any obvious contrast would now be gone.

What bothered Eliason, and had bothered other scientists as well, was being viewed as an authority figure. "I really don't like being in a position of so-called expert on things like this. The guy who came in here kind of struck me as whatever I said about a particular issue would be the all-encompassing truth. I don't like that because the world just isn't that way. There are too many uncertainties".

He cautioned Dilettoso that although he had expertise in image processing and worked with sophisticated equipment, his testing of the Meier photos could not be considered definitive. He needed concrete information about the film. "But the guy wanted so badly to believe that this was the real thing", said Eliason, "he went ahead and believed it anyway. There is no doubt about it", he continued, "it is emotionally charged. But it is intriguing, and I'm sure it's one of those cases you'll never know one way or the other. All I can say is that whatever I started with, I didn't see anything hokey going on there in terms of dubbing. If it was dubbed, it had to be pretty clever".

At Arizona State University in Tempe, just outside Phoenix, thirty-one-year-old Dr. Michael Malin taught in the Department of Geology. He had a degree in physics from Berkeley and a Ph.D. from Cal Tech in Planetary Sciences and Geology, and had written his doctoral thesis, much of which involved the science of image processing, on the analysis of spacecraft images of Mars. He then had worked at Jet Propulsion Laboratory for four years before joining the ASU staff in 1979, where he now taught Geology of the Moon, Geology of Mars, and Geomorphology.

A few weeks after Dilettoso spoke with Eric Eliason, he discovered Malin and the Image Processing Laboratory at ASU. With joint funding from NASA and the university, Malin and a colleague had acquired for the lab the equipment for analyzing spacecraft images. Local papers often carried articles about the analyses the two scientists performed on photographs beamed back from space, and Dilettoso happened to see one of the articles and called Malin.

At their first meeting in mid-May 1981, Dilettoso lay before Malin the array of photographs in the photo journal, plus digitized images of two of the Meier photographs. As Malin's business was the analysis of pictures, he found the photographs interesting, "very pretty, very clear, very nicely processed". And he liked to study photographs, so Dilettoso did not have to try to persuade him to look at them.

"These pictures are much nicer pictures of UFOs than any I'd ever seen before", Malin said later, "in terms of the number and the quality for that number. You can see they look like real objects. Not just on the impression level, but on a demonstrable level. They glint in the sun, there are distinguishable reflections in the metallic objects, things like that that make them much better pictures. I don't think there's any question that, at least in the things that I've ever seen, these are by far the best UFO pictures taken. Whether they're authentic or not, that's a totally different matter".

Malin tried to keep an open mind, willing to consider topics often avoided by his colleagues; but he demanded facts and rendered his opinions with cold objectivity. The senior science editor at National Geographic once remarked, "If Malin says it, you can believe it".

Like Eliason and others before him, Malin wanted far more information than Dilettoso could provide. He told Dilettoso he wanted to see "the stuff that actually went through the camera". He wanted the camera itself, to study the lens and metering system. Because of the apparent clarity within the image, he was not bothered by the focus on the camera being jammed just short of infinity.

"Absolutely not", he said. "It shouldn't have an effect on whether you're hoaxing it or not". But he wanted to know the shutter speed, the aperture setting, and where the lens was focused.

"The important thing would have been the original film", he said. "Without the very detailed information about the originals, there's almost nothing you can say".

One more thing he pointed out: Photographs are pretty, fun, and impressive. But photographs of anything are poor evidence. In a hierarchy of probative value, photographs and sound lie at the bottom, because they both are "a recording of an ephemeral event, subject to manipulation after the fact. The only real physical evidence", said Malin, "would be some physical manifestation that could be tested and measured and physically examined. If you had a piece of metal whose manufacture could not be done on earth, that would go a long way".

As Malin considered the photographs, he also sized up Dilettoso. His first impression was that the young technician was a smooth and fast talker.

"My guess is that he was using my name to JPL and their name to me in an attempt to get something done, but I don't fault him for that. I think he's a pretty bright guy. I think he was perhaps more in favor of this thing being real than he was in favor of debunking it. But he was quite bright, and obviously had worked around computers. For the most part, he knew what he wanted to say, and I don't think he misrepresented anything".

Dilettoso met with Malin several times, in the professor's office, in front of computer screens in the image processing facility, and once at his own studio in Phoenix, where Malin had driven to see the image processing system Dilettoso had assembled for himself during the course of his research on the Meier case. Malin was impressed with the system. Dilettoso's computer setup, an estimated $50,000 worth of equipment, was as sophisticated as what Malin regularly worked with at ASU's image processing center.

"I'm not sure that he could do with it what I could do with it", said Malin, "but he could do things with it". And Malin felt that he himself could do "some real science" on the equipment.

Back in his own lab, Malin entered the digitized images Dilettoso had given him into the computer and began studying them with Dilettoso, and sometimes Stevens, present.

"I zoomed up a given section and then just looked for edges", he said. "I looked for contrast differences between various parts of the sky. I looked at the color of the sky reflected in the object versus the sky immediately around it. People say the sky is blue, but it isn't uniformly blue. So I did things like that. And what I found was that the quality of the data he gave me was insufficient to do a detailed analysis, a numerical analysis, of what these things were. But to the level of the quality of the data he gave me, I could not see anything obviously wrong with the images. Couldn't see any hoax to it. There was a proper amount of blurring of edges and distance fading and things like that. To the level that I saw it, I can say that the thing was not a photographic fake. But that doesn't mean that it wasn't a photographic fake. If I had the details of everything I wanted I might still say there is no obvious thing in it that is fake. But that's 'photographically fake'. It could still be an object twenty feet across held up by a helicopter above it on four strings.

"I wouldn't know what would motivate someone to fake them so I don't know how much trouble it's worth, what they expect to get in return. But my opinion would be that it would probably take more than a little camera and more than sending it to the local drugstore. It requires a lot of time. A person's got to want to do this.

"If they are hoaxes then I am intrigued by the quality of the hoax. How did he do it? I'm always interested in seeing a master at work. On the other hand if they're real, then I also have an academic interest in that my own research is involved in exploration of other planets. And if there were other organisms visiting our planet, they must be doing that for the same reason we explore other planets. Why do we explore other planets? We have a need to expand the sphere of human perception and thought and so on. Maybe that's what aliens do as well. So either way I win. If they're a hoax I win by learning a neat technique. If they're not a hoax I win by having potential colleagues from another planet.

"I find the photographs themselves credible", he concluded. "They're good photographs. They appear to represent real phenomena. The story that some farmer in Switzerland is on a first-name basis with dozens of aliens who come and visit him . . . I find that incredible. But I find the photographs more credible. They're reasonable evidence of something. What that something is I don't know".

Though Dr. Nathan at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory had refused to analyze the Meier photos because they provided him with too little information, he consented one morning to view several of the Meier films recorded on a half-inch video cassette. The first sequence was black and white, a beamship moving from side to side above a tall evergreen. At one point the ship appeared to cut in front of the tree, and the upper branches at the same instant blew as if caught in a sudden stiff wind or a backwash. Nathan laughed.

"That's pathetic! Ha, ha, ha. Oh, for God's sake! Look at that thing oscillating! Did you see that? That's the response you'd expect of an extremely light, small object that doesn't have any serious amount of mass associated with it".

To Nathan the object seemed to be oscillating on a very short tether from a point just above its dome. But it would take "a tremendous amount of analysis" to determine that. "My concern", said Nathan, "is that if we show him at any time involved with a hoax, then it's all a hoax. All you have to do is catch him in one lie and the whole thing goes to hell".

Two sequences later, a beamship seemed to disappear from a point fifty feet above a hillside and reappear only a few feet above the ground almost in the same frame. As far as Nathan was concerned it could be a model tethered on a long pole held by an assistant standing behind the photographer. The sites, however, had been described as wide open, with no place to hang models or to stand in such a position to extend a long-enough pole into the scene. Nathan said it could be a helicopter.

Then three ships hovering behind tree limbs appeared in the sky.

"Oh boy", laughed Nathan, "look at that".

He surmised they were small objects perhaps ten feet beyond the branches, and possibly suspended from a long pole with something like a puppeteer's wrench.

With his arms folded across his chest, he stood and watched a few more sequences on the television monitor until he saw one where the ship flies in front of snowcapped mountains at Hasenbol and comes to an abrupt halt. It then hovers motionless.

"The concern here", said Nathan, "is how he could very steadily move the object from one side of the scene to the other and have it come to an abrupt halt without it appearing to swing. If it were hanging from a long string, and you went ahead and moved the pole and then brought it to a halt, the whole object would tend to move back and forth. But it doesn't".

An assistant asked, "Do you think it could be tethered from someplace?"

"I have no idea", said Nathan. "He would still have to be awfully clever, because that's a very steady holding. It would have to be a very, very good tethering".

"I could imagine him filling a weather balloon with helium", speculated the assistant, "and then dropping a piece of monofilament, tying it to the object, and then dropping another piece of monofilament from the object and holding that from the ground".

"It would have to be a set of balloons", said Nathan, "because he's able to make the thing go back and forth and it doesn't blow like this off the boom. So it's got to be held rigid somehow, from a point right above the object. Apparently he's a sharp guy, very clever. So he should be given some points for effort".

Another intriguing aspect of the Hasenbol sequence appeared subtly in the lower right corner of the film—the branch of a pine tree blown continuously by a stiff wind as the ship hovers motionless over the valley.

"If this is a hoax", Nathan remarked, "and it looks like it is to me but I have no proof, this is very carefully done. Tremendous amount of effort. An awful lot of work for one guy".

Nathan suggested that maybe Meier was utilizing something like a clothesline with two poles set about twenty feet apart and a model operated by pulleys. "The camera can be alone", he noted, "and he can be the one all by himself moving the string".

But how did Meier transport all that equipment to the site and get those poles in the ground so they provided steady support by himself without being seen?

"That's his problem", said Nathan. "I'm sure he's clever. He's sharp. He's a sharp guy. We're still challenging whether or not this is a hoax. And whether or not that kind of thing is involved is no longer a scientific question. Now you have to bring in people with a detective mentality".

"My training has always been not to make models which are features in themselves, but rather something that melts into the woodwork so people don't notice".

Wally Gentleman had been involved with special effects for over thirty-five years. As a teenager in England he had begun his film career developing techniques for "shooting down planes" by using photographic images on a dome.

He studied animation and eventually joined the special effects team at the famous Pinewood Studios in Buckinghamshire, working with rear projection and using photographic means to create backgrounds and avoid expensive sets. From England he emigrated to Canada in 1957 to serve on the National Film Board for ten years as director of special effects.

While in Canada in 1961, Gentleman made a short film of mostly visual effects titled Universe, which was later discovered by Stanley Kubrick, who contacted Gentleman: He wanted to utilize the techniques Gentleman had created for Universe in his new film 2001. For the next year and a half, Gentleman had served as director of special photographic effects for the Kubrick film. In 1977 he moved to Hollywood and, among other projects, served as an expert visually re-creating actual flying saucer reports on the new Jack Webb series Project UFO.

"You can build a model to fit a certain background, even though it's a scale size", Gentleman said. "These are called 'foreground hanging miniatures' in the trade. And if you do it very skillfully, no one can tell the difference. But the skill that you need for that is really quite specific, because when you reduce the size of a model you are still building with full-sized textured pieces of wood, plastic, whatever. The trick is to render a model with the right microscopic textures that will fit the true scale of the situation. And then you have to worry about things like the scale of movements, the movement of the background, the simultaneous activity that's going on. Models that are done badly show up like a sore thumb".

In early 1980, Bill Jenkins, who hosted a popular Saturday night talk show on KABC radio, Los Angeles, called Gentleman.

"I have some interesting stuff to show you", he said. "Can you tell me if it's authentic?"

At the time, Gentleman worked for Film Effects of Hollywood. When Jenkins brought by the photo journal, UFO . . . Contact from the Pleiades, Gentleman perused the photos and told Jenkins, "I'd like very much to see more of this".

With Jenkins' help, Gentleman located the Elders in Phoenix and a few weeks later flew over to meet them and to view their video tape of Meier's movie footage. After watching each of the eight segments several times, he said to the Elders, "They have a ring of authenticity. But I'd like to examine them to be really sure".

In addition to examining the films, Gentleman subjected several of the Meier photos to "perspective interlock", a drawing board geometric analysis which he had applied in the independent frame process at Pinewood Studios. If Meier maintained that the beamships he had photographed measured approximately twenty-one feet in diameter, Gentleman could take the size of a known object in the scene, a measured tree trunk for instance, and locate where in the scene a beamship of that size would have to be. The photograph could appear to be authentic, but perspective interlock would expose subtle inconsistencies. Placing the photos on his drawing board and then tracing perspective lines, Gentleman calculated that the beamships were exactly as Meier had said they were, in size and location.

"My big problem area with the Meier pictures", said Gentleman, "is that I have never seen an original negative. And without that I could never really be sure that it had not been doctored in any way at all. But given my particular background, I know it would take an expert of many years of experience even to doctor a picture to make it look authentic".

Holding one of the Meier photos in his hand, Gentleman said, "My greatest problem is that for anybody faking this [he points to the photograph], the shadow that is thrown onto that tree is correct. There are many things that are correct on many of the shots. Therefore, if somebody is faking them they have an expert there. And being an expert myself, I know that that expert knowledge is very hard to come by. So I say, 'Well, is that expert knowledge there or isn't it there?' Because if the expert knowledge isn't there, this has got to be real".

Gentleman explained that if you throw a model into a scene it will be frozen by the camera in a certain position, and the scale of the lighting on the model's surface (the angles and intensity of reflection) will indicate its small size and its relatively close proximity to the camera. Besides, he could see no way for a one-armed man to throw three or four models into the air at once and photograph them.

"Some of them are behind the twigs on a tree", he noted. "You've got to be some special effects man to do that, I can tell you. And the objects that were behind the tree appeared to be at the right distance for ships that were a long way away. That's called 'aerial perspective'. When you look at mountains you see different colors that deepen in blue as you go farther away, and all of these photographs had that aerial perspective indicating distance. If you threw a lot of little silver things in the air at once, they'd all be lit within the space that you could throw them, which might be, what, twenty feet? But these certainly had the aerial perspective in the change of hue and tone on them. If the photographs were a 'cheat', they were superbly cheated, but I don't think they were".

After studying the films, Gentleman concluded that considering the expertise necessary, the logistics, and the expense, a one-armed man with no assistance could not possibly have produced the footage.

"That's the bottom line of everything", he said. "This Meier really had to have a fleet of clever assistants, at least fifteen people, who would know what the interface reflections of a shiny object were at certain times of the day, how to support these objects so that wires are not seen, how to rig it, how to watch it and stand by with their little airguns to spray the strings when they begin showing up.

"What we would do is go out and shoot the scene, and then bring it back to the studio, and then shoot the object onto that film by duplication processes, which is a very sophisticated procedure. It's difficult to do on 35mm, even worse with the 8mm film he was using. And the equipment was totally out of his means. If somebody wanted me to cheat something along those lines, $30,000 would probably do it, but this is in a studio where the equipment exists. The equipment would cost another $50,000.

"I think the one telling part of all this is that a single man with one arm, if he indeed was on his own, could not have done it. I think it would be well nigh miraculous for a person with even two arms to do that sort of work by himself up on a mountain top. Even if you get a balloon and you hang your object on a fine piece of thread underneath, it's going to blow in any direction it wants to go. And with a lot of those pictures where you've got three or four flying saucers, you would need balloons with strings of varying length, otherwise you could pick out where the string comes from. It would be very difficult to do those shots in that sort of condition outside. And the fall of the land makes it very risky to do anything like that. It's all that sort of complication that leads me to think that the objects he's photographed and filmed were there independently and he simply snapped the shutter".

Irina Froning, the woman who had discovered the photo journal on Meier in her friend's office late one night, was married to H. David Froning, Jr., an astronautical engineer at McDonnell Douglas Corporation for twenty-five years who worked primarily in the highly classified field of military defense. A staff manager, he had helped to develop missiles for ballistic missile defense, and had done exploratory research to develop ideas and technology for advanced spacecraft design. A longtime member of the British Interplanetary Society and the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, Froning had presented many papers on interstellar flight at technical conferences in Europe and the United States.

The idea of actually transcending vast interstellar distances had intrigued Froning for fifteen years. Searching for a way to take humankind beyond the speed of light, he spent much of his spare time examining Einstein's theories of relativity and considering new ways to encompass those theories in a more general law, much as Einstein's laws of relativity had not violated, but encompassed Newton's laws of motion.

As far back as 1966, Froning, among others, had maintained that the barriers of space and time were not insurmountable, that someday humankind would indeed surpass the speed of light. In an article he wrote that year, he pointed out that only twenty years earlier hardly a scientist or engineer believed that man could break the sound barrier and survive. Many pilots had been killed trying. Yet, predicted Froning, in the late 1980s hypersonic airliners would fly from New York to Madrid in less than an hour, or five times faster than the speed of sound.*

In his early research, Froning immediately had concluded that rockets consuming terrestrial fuel would be too heavy and costly to achieve the speed of light. He also had considered and discarded the feasibility of interstellar ramjets that would scoop up hydrogen atoms and convert them to fuel as the craft traveled through cosmic space: The "scoop" would have to measure sixty miles in diameter. But Froning continued to search.

When Irina returned home that Monday, David was still out of town. Looking for the photo journal she had seen at her friend's office, she called around to several bookstores before locating a copy. When her husband returned home she presented it to him before saying hello.

"I guess I was never so impressed by a book", said David. "If what this Meier is saying is just a hoax, he's being cued by some very knowledgeable scientists".

Later he said he felt "numb". "But it was exciting", he added. “Kind of like a tingling and a numbing at the same time. It was a revelation. All of a sudden many things made sense. It had never occurred to me that tachyons might exist completely outside the dimension of time”.

*In 1986, President Reagan announced plans to develop the technology for a hypersonic airliner called "The Orient Express".

Froning had designed a theoretical quantum ramjet that could power starships to nearly light speed in a matter of hours by ubiquitous energy pulses that some scientists believe exist in the “fabric” of space. He also had theorized on the other side of the light barrier and had developed a conceptual model of what a craft might look like traveling faster than the speed of light.

“But I didn’t have anything to tie these two concepts together”, he said. “What hung me up was the seeming impossibility of being able to cover these tremendous interstellar distances within a matter of minutes, rather than centuries here on earth. Then I read the Meier book, and suddenly it all seemed plausible”.

Within two weeks, Froning conceived a possible way to reach the speed of light and then make the transition to faster-than-light travel. “Most people think that fqster-than-light speeds occur on our normal space-time realm of existence”, he explained. “But when Meier mentioned that the trip took seven hours and the longest part lasted only several seconds, it occurred to me that during that interval almost no time at all passes. And this gave me the further idea that you could actually arc above our space-time plane of existence and travel trillions of miles through space with only several seconds passing. I had never thought of that possibility”.

With the help of a bookstore owner, Froning located Wendelle Stevens in Tucson and called him for additional information on the reputed propulsion system. One thing impressed him about the more detailed contact notes sent by Stevens: The voice of Semjase addressed each of the major scientific requirements to accelerate to the speed of light, make the jump or hyper-leap, and then decelerate.

“Though she doesn’t say specifically how it’s done”, Froning recalled, “she gets technical enough to satisfy me as a scientist. And that's very convincing when someone does that".

What further impressed Froning was that almost a year before Irina discovered the photo journal, he had calculated the propulsion efficiency of his new quantum ramjet and determined that typical times for such a craft to reach light speed would be about four hours. According to Meier's figures, the Pleiadian ships required approximately 3.5 hours to accelerate to the speed of light, only seconds to traverse a distance of nearly five hundred light years, and then another 3.5 hours to decelerate and fly to earth. The credibility of Meier's numbers amazed Froning. To arrive at his figures, Froning had utilized complex formulas involving acceleration rates. Then he discovered that not only did Meier claim it required 3.5 hours for the Pleiadian beamships to reach the speed of light, but that at that point the ships would have traveled approximately 92 million miles. That figure, too, was within 20 percent of his own previous calculations.

"I think it would be very improbable for someone with Meier's educational background to hit on this combination of figures and have them be within a scientifically acceptable range", said Froning. "He would have to be coached by someone who's very knowledgeable in the sciences, who has knowledge of special relativity and of flight mechanics to know what kinds of times and distances make sense. If this is a hoax, it has to be with the assistance of someone like myself who could account for the plausible things that take place.

"I've only discussed this Meier case with scientists who are fairly open-minded about interstellar flight, but I'll tell you, the majority of them think it's credible and agree with at least part, or sometimes all, of the things talked about by the Pleiadians".

Before the golden-silver triangle had disappeared from the possession of Marcel Vogel, the IBM scientist had placed it under his $250,000 scanning electron microscope and turned on a video tape to record his findings. The tiny specimen held very pure silver, and "very, very pure" aluminum, plus potassium, calcium, chromium, copper, argon, bromium, chlorine, iron, sulphur, and silicon. One microscopic area revealed "an enormous mélange of almost all of the elements in the periodic table". And each was exceedingly pure.

"It's an unusual combination", Vogel said later, "but I would not in any way, shape, or form say that this would make it extraterrestrial".

What intrigued Vogel more than the number of elements and their purity was their discreteness: Each pure element was bonded to each of the others, yet somehow retained its own identity.

"It is uncanny when you look at the juxtaposition of the metals", he said as he looked through the microscope and talked out his findings for the video tape. "One layer against another is very pure, but they do not interpenetrate. You have a combination of metals and non-metals together, very tightly bonded. I don't know of anybody even contemplating doing something like this".

In one small area in the middle of the sample blown up five hundred times, he found two parallel grooves joined by furrows, precise hairlines somehow micro-machined into the metal. But even more surprising to him was that the major element present in that small area was the rare-earth metal thulium.

"It is totally unexpected", he said. "Thulium was only purified during World War II as a by-product of atomic energy work, and only in minute quantities. It is exceedingly expensive, far beyond platinum, and rare to come by. Someone would have to have an extensive metallurgical knowledge even to be aware of a composition of this type".

The magnification of the half-inch piece went from 500 to 1,600, and Vogel saw things he had never seen before. "A whole new world appears in the specimen. There are structures within structures—very, very unusual. At lower magnification one just sees a metallic surface. Now one sees a structure composed of various types of interlacing areas. This is very exciting".

Vogel probed deeper and deeper into the metal.

"We are now at over 2,500 diameters and one can see birefringent structures. Very exciting! It is very unusual for a metal to have these birefringent areas. When you first take a section and grind it off, it looks like a metal, it has the lustery appearance of metal, but now when you take it and go under the polarized light you find that, yes, it is metal, but at the same time . . . it is crystal!"

For hours, Vogel continued to roam through the interior of this tiny specimen, fascinated by what he saw. The next morning, he called a research scientist at NASA's Ames Research Center, Dr. Richard Haines.

"Why don't you come down", he said. "I want to show you something".

"He gave me just enough information on the phone to tantalize me", recalled Haines. "So I went down".

Vogel's office was next to the stairs on the second floor of one of the many buildings at the IBM Research Center. When Haines entered the office, Vogel said, "I want to show you something". Then he reached into his pocket for a small plastic bag in which he had carefully placed the triangle fragment the night before.

"He reached in his pocket", recalled Haines, "and couldn't find it . . . he looked at me with a blank expression I will never forget, he was flabbergasted. He's either a very good actor or he was telling the truth, and I think he was telling the truth".

Somewhere between the lab and Vogel's office the small metal fragment had disappeared. "He said he must have misplaced it somewhere. So we frantically looked all over the place. He checked his desk in his main office, and we went into the lab and looked around and couldn't find it there. He apologized profusely because he felt that he had gotten me all the way down there just to see the metal that now he couldn't produce. He did show me some photographs, color photographs, that he had taken of the sample and he alluded to something anomalous about the specimen. That's one of the reasons I went down. Because that's quite an offer, to have somebody like that with that kind of reputation making a claim like that".

Vogel never recovered the lost piece of metal, nor could he explain its disappearance. He hoped that Stevens could provide him with another, but that was the only sample that allegedly represented one of the final steps in the manufacture of the beamship hull.

"I needed additional pieces to look at to be sure there was something really unique", said Vogel. "I was enthusiastic. I was emotionally wound up in the study of it because it was an ideal challenge, something that many scientists would have very eagerly gone into. What was unusual was the purity of the individual spots of metals in the tiny specimen. Their discreteness. That's what intrigued me and that's why I wanted more specimens to look at. I would have gone much further into metallurgical analysis, looking at bending action and melting characteristics. I wanted a second opinion from another person at MIT, so we could compare notes on this before we put anything into print. It was a virgin opportunity, and I had gone to NASA to elicit as well the support of their own scientists who were interested, because here was a bit of material that could be looked at. I had many contacts within IBM who were deeply interested in exploring this with me. I could have had about an eight- or nine-man team. But I shut it all down".

The disappearance of the unusual metal disappointed Vogel, but he was equally disappointed that Stevens and Elders, eager to establish support for the case, had published his preliminary findings in their photo journal before he had been able to complete the testing, and without giving him an opportunity to review for accuracy what they had written.

"It was garbled-up bits and pieces of remarks", he said later, "not a cohesive way of presenting anything. It was technically wrong, and I resented it. It's unfortunate because I was willing to use all of the technology I had to find a real answer to this".

Vogel lost his enthusiasm for the project. "Not because of the metal", he said later, "but the way people acted". Of course, the metal was now gone anyway.

"I was enthusiastic", concluded Vogel, "I was interested, I went through a lot of effort. But the case is incomplete. That's the best way you can report it".

Just after the metal sample had disappeared, and before the photo journal had been published, the Japanese crew from Nippon Television had flown to San Jose to film Vogel for their documentary on the Meier case. Vogel had spoken openly with interviewer Jun-Ichi Yaoi about the results of his initial findings.

"I cannot explain the type of material I had", he told Yaoi. "By any known combination of materials I could not put it together myself as a scientist. With any technology that I know of, we could not achieve this on this planet! I showed it to one of my friends, who is a metallurgist, and he shook his head and said, 'I don't see how this can be put together'. That is where we are right now. And I think it is important that those of us who are in the scientific world sit down and do some serious study on these things instead of putting it off as people's imagination".

EPILOGUE

Long before the Air Force terminated Project Blue Book, citizens of this country and others claimed to have been abducted by strange-looking but apparently merely curious entities and taken aboard their disk-shaped craft. Even as far back as the fifties, respected citizens, including police officers and ministers, many of them shaken, had reported to authorities disturbing experiences where they had observed creatures in or near what appeared to be a spacelike craft. Sometimes to support their claims they pointed to pod marks and broken tree limbs, and they told of car engines that had died and then sprung to life. But they insisted on anonymity. The first publicized abduction, that of Betty and Barney Hill, remained unknown even to the abductees themselves until over two years after the abduction.

The Hills' experience had occurred on a September night in 1961, as they traveled toward home through a deserted stretch of highway in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. They noticed a bright light, seeming at first to be a star, that came closer and closer until it was huge, disk-shaped, and hovering only fifty feet from where Barney had stopped the car. He got out a pair of binoculars and approached the object on foot. Through the lenses he could see clearly a row of windows and behind them six beings watching him. From that point the Hills remembered nothing, except a strange beeping sound that seemed to fill the car as they drove off. When they arrived home, they found peculiar shiny spots the size of silver dollars on the trunk of their car; Barney had an unusual mark on his groin; and two hours had passed that they could not account for.

Then the Hills began suffering inexplicable anxiety attacks and nightmarish dreams about flying saucers, until finally, two years later, they sought help from a Boston psychiatrist, Dr. Benjamin Simon. Under hypnosis the Hills revealed a detailed story in which the beings observed by Barney through the binoculars had directed them off the road and into their ship, where they examined Betty and Barney, including a "pregnancy test" with a thin needle inserted into Betty's navel. While regressed Betty alternately sobbed and spoke firmly. Barney screamed and trembled, "What do they want? What do they want!" And, "I've never seen eyes slanted like that!"

One night three years after the first regression, Dr. Simon invited Allen Hynek to observe the Hills under hypnosis and ask them questions. The session lasted for an hour and a half. Afterward, on January 5, 1967, Hynek wrote of his experience in a letter to Edward Condon: "I asked them to relive the episode, and they did so, talking to each other, presumably reliving the scene under total recall, including such little asides as remarks to the dog, etc. I have a tape of this and there is no question of the terror in Barney's voice when he views his object through binoculars. Whatever it was, tangible or imaginary, these people were terrified. Your committee should hear these tapes". They never did.

Twelve years after the Hill experience, Charles Hickson, forty-two, and Calvin Parker, nineteen, two shipyard workers in Pascagoula, Mississippi, were fishing off a dilapidated pier one night when a glowing craft suddenly appeared behind them expelling three mummylike creatures who levitated upright, floated them back to the craft, examined each under intense light, then returned them to the dock. Deputy Sheriff Glenn Ryder answered Hickson's call to the sheriff's office and picked up the two men. Parker was crying.

'They convinced me something happened to them", Ryder recalled in an interview later. "Especially the boy. He was scared to death. There's no way he could have acted that out. He kept saying, 'They're gonna come back and get us. They're gonna come back and get us. We gotta get outta here'. He wouldn't sit down. He was just standing up shaking the whole time. Never would sit down".

Ryder and the sheriff interviewed Hickson and Parker for over an hour, then purposely left the two men alone in an office for five minutes while a concealed tape recorder continued to turn. They expected to record Hickson and Parker snickering over how they had fooled two people so far. Instead, they heard Hickson say, "Calvin, you okay, hoss?"

"Tellya", said Parker, "I'm scared to death. This evenin' I like to had a heart attack, I ain't shittin' ya".

"I know", said Hickson.

"I came damn near to dyin'".

"I know, it scares me to death, too, son".

"I'm just damn near cryin' right now". said Parker. His voice trembled. "Reckon why they just picked us up?"

"I don't know, I don't know", said Hickson. "I'm telling you, man, I can't take much more of that".

"I'm just damn near crazy", Parker seemed to say to himself.

Hickson said, "When they brought you out of that thing, goddamn! I like to never in hell got you straightened out, man!"

"My damn arms", said Parker, "my arms, they just froze up and I couldn't move. Just like I stepped on a damn rattlesnake",

"I've never seen nothin' like that before in my life", said Hickson. "You can't make people believe—"

"Did you see how that damn door come right open in front of us all of a sudden?" Parker interrupted him.

"I don't know how it opened, son", said Hickson, "I don't know".

"All I see was this here zzzzzzip, then looked around, them damn blue lights and them sonsabitches, just like that, they come out". Parker started to panic. "I gotta go to the house. I am done sittin' here gettin' so damn sick right now, I ain't shittin' ya. I gotta go to the house".

Hickson left the room to get the sheriff and Parker began praying. "It's just hard to believe . . . Oh God, it's awful . . . I know there's a God up there . . ". he babbled. The last thing heard on the tape was Parker saying, "Why did it have to happen to me?" Then Ryder and the sheriff returned and found Parker raking the walls with his fingernails.

In 1975, the third in the trio of famous American abduction cases occurred in the mountain forests of eastern Arizona just north of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation. Returning home along an old logging road a seven-man timber cutting crew encountered a saucer-shaped yellowish glow not a hundred feet away. Travis Walton, twenty-two, riding shotgun in the truck, jumped out and ran toward the object. Suddenly, a bolt of blue-green light hit him in the chest, knocking him into the air and back ten feet. Mike Rogers, the crew foreman driving the truck, hit the accelerator. About twenty minutes later the crew returned, but Walton's body was gone.

When Rogers and his crew reported the incident to the county sheriff's office they found themselves suspected of murder, and the sheriff had each examined by a polygraph expert flown in from Phoenix. One of the questions was: "Did you tell the truth about actually seeing a UFO last Wednesday when Travis Walton disappeared?" All six answered yes. The examiner concluded that five of the young men had told the truth. In his formal report, the examiner wrote, "These polygraph examinations prove that these five men did see some object that they believe to be a UFO and that Travis Walton was not injured or murdered by any of these men, on that Wednesday (5 November 1975). If an actual UFO did not exist and the UFO is a manmade hoax, five of these men had no prior knowledge of a hoax". The results on the sixth were "inconclusive".

Five days after his disappearance, Walton reappeared collapsed in a telephone booth at a small-town filling station. He said he remembered crouching behind a log to get a look at the glowing object, and that when he stood up he was hit by a "physical blow" that knocked him unconscious. He had awakened on a table on board the craft, surrounded by humanoids dressed in brownish-orange, whom he pushed away, and escaped to the ship's interior. There an entity appearing to be human found him and escorted him to a room in a much larger ship where two other humans, a man and a woman, laid him on a table and placed a mask over his face. When Walton again regained consciousness, he was lying on the pavement at the side of the road, watching the lighted bottom of the craft rise into a black sky. Walton flunked one polygraph exam and passed another.

In the past several years, hundreds of people, perhaps thousands, have claimed either to have been abducted or to be in contact with space beings, or both. And increasingly, these abductees and contactees are being thought of less as crazy people and more as a manifestation of a little understood but widespread and growing phenomenon. As a group they exhibit no mental deficiencies. The subject of a recent doctoral thesis by Dr. June Parnell at the University of Wyoming, 225 persons who claimed to have experienced highly unusual UFO sightings and/or to have been in communication with UFO occupants surprisingly were found to be above average in intelligence, assertive, experimental in their thinking, reserved, defensive, self-sufficient, resourceful, honest, and, most significant, devoid of mental disorders. Yet, although they suffer from no psychoses, and often have good jobs, families, and respect in the community, some claim to hear voices inside their heads instructing them. But most of these stories go no further than the office of a therapist where the individual showed up one day unable to explain strange dreams, small incisions or puncture wounds on his or her body, and a peculiar loss of time associated with the chance sighting of a UFO. Many have had contact experiences, ones they cannot explain, and they tell stories similar to Meier's but have no proof, only bizarre and detailed accounts of abductions that have surfaced during hypnotic regression. The number of such claims has increased so dramatically over the last several years that a few sociologists and psychologists now feel the answer to the UFO enigma lies in their study and understanding.

Attempting to understand the intense nature of the ten-year-old phenomenon of UFOs, Jung wrote in his essay Flying Saucers almost thirty years ago: "In the threatening situation of the world today, when people are beginning to see that everything is at stake, the projection-creating fantasy soars beyond the realm of earthly organizations and powers into the heavens, into interstellar space, where the rulers of human fate, the gods, once had their abode in the planets. Our earthly world is split into two halves, and nobody knows where a helpful solution is to come from".

Jung foresaw the end of an era, the dawning of a new age; and flying saucers somehow symbolized the transition. Suddenly a significant number of his patients had begun speaking to him of dreams in which inexplicable circular shapes descended from heaven. And he read of many others all over the world who reported seeing similar shapes in a daytime sky. He postulated that if the will were strong the awakened mind could conjure circular shapes that to the eye appeared as flying saucers, much as the palms of faithful Christians had been known to bleed spontaneously. And either these visions or the presence of an actual physical object, or both, could be the catalyst for what he called a "visionary rumour". But why this sudden need for the masses to clothe unexplainable things in extraterres-trial garb? Perhaps the omniscient God of the prophets like Moses and Jesus, once so radical in the eyes of Greco-Roman paganism, no longer fulfilled man's spiritual needs; perhaps this intense, unconscious desire to believe in the existence of flying saucers signaled a wrenching shift in religious paradigms. But—and this is where Jung disqualified himself—the breakdown of religious paradigms and flying saucers in dreams do not explain the trained fighter pilot who chases a silvery fifty-foot disk confirmed on radar, only to have the disk suddenly accelerate to a speed of several thousand miles an hour, execute a 90-degree turn, and quietly disappear.

After three years of research I have concluded that UFOs exist: Something we cannot explain indeed sails through our skies from time to time. This does not mean that representatives of extraterrestrial societies visit us, though there is some evidence to suggest that. I find it difficult to believe that anyone who looks seriously and objectively at the evidence—secret government documents that only recently have been discovered, the writings of and interviews with the coterie of scientists who have investigated the phenomenon, the reports themselves—can come away insisting the whole matter takes seed in the human mind. Though I have sampled only a small portion of the literature written by debunkers like Phil Klass and Robert Sheaffer, I find their arguments strained and unpersuasive, often more convoluted and difficult to believe than the sightings themselves.

On the other hand I empathize with the scientist who refuses to become involved. Never has there been a more frustrating subject, where questions abound, and answers only shimmer in the distance. With our recently acquired knowledge of the origin of the universe, the birth-and-death cycle of star systems, and the evolution of life on our own planet, many, if not most, scientists now believe that intelligent life probably exists on other planets in our own galaxy. However, many of these same scientists also believe that travel in space is impossible: The galaxy is simply too vast. In winter 1986, I spent several days with NASA scientists who are engaged in the Search for ExtraTerrestrial Intelligence (SETI) at Ames Research Center in California. The SETI people theorize that since alien civilizations cannot travel in space they communicate with one another across interstellar distances with speed-of-light radio waves. The scientists now search for such magnetic waves in the galactic "neighborhood" out to a distance of a hundred light years. Meanwhile, things no one can explain still dart through our earthly atmosphere. Maybe someday they will turn out to be, as many have suggested, merely a misunderstood natural phenomenon. In April 1984, Allen Hynek, in a column for OMNI magazine, even suggested that the seemingly solid, yet ephemeral nature of UFOs might best be explained as "an interface between our reality and a parallel reality, the door to another dimension. Surely", he added, "we haven't had our last revolution in scientific thought".

And where does Meier fit into all of this? I don't know. I would not call him a prophet, though he may be. I would not rule out impostor, though I have no proof. I know that if you boiled the story in a kettle you would find a hard residue composed of two things: One would be Meier's ravings about time travel, space travel, philosophy, and religion; the other would be the comments by the scientists and engineers impressed with the evidence he has produced. I can't believe the former, nor can I dismiss the latter.

"We can't prove the case is real", Lee Elders said to me in an interview in 1984. "We just can't do it. We can't prove that the metals are from a Pleiadian beamship, only that they are unusual. We can't prove anything. There are still things I question about the case", he added. "I don't know how to explain it".

"It took us two years", said Brit, "to figure out you're never going to prove it and you're never going to disprove it, it's just there".

When I met Meier in the spring of 1984, I saw a tired man with a deeply lined face who walked with a shuffle. His bright green, once playful eyes, described to me by so many people, had turned weary; and the beard he had begun to grow in the summer of 1978 was now curly and half gray, and fell nearly to his waist. Only forty-seven, he looked to be at least twenty years older. People at the farm told me he rarely slept, he had ghost pains in his missing arm, and he saw well out of only one eye. In the fall of 1982, Meier was in the bathroom early in the morning when he slipped and hit his head. A doctor diagnosed the injury as a severe concussion.

Meier still lives on the farm in Schmidruti, and people still come to visit. But rarely does he speak with anyone. When visitors drive up the gravel path, he may slip his index finger beside the sheer curtain in the parlor and peek out; more likely he will continue to stare at the television screen. Others at the farm usually intercept the visitors and talk with them about Meier and his experiences and show them photographs from several large albums, and then send them on their way. I was at the farm for three weeks in the spring of 1984 and again for two weeks that fall; in the spring of 1985 I lived in Switzerland for two months, traveling frequently to the farm. In all that time I rarely saw Meier anywhere but on that sofa in the parlor in front of the television.

Though years had passed since Meier left the farm for a contact, he told me the Pleiadians still spoke with him, and had even appeared in his office several times. But since it was customary for them to run things in cycles of eleven years, even that would end in 1986. “At present”, he told me, “there isn’t much happening in my head”.

I doubted Meier’s story from the beginning, but only for the typical reason: It couldn’t be true. Two years later, out of frustration, I jerked open my file drawers, emptied everything into large cardboard boxes, and carried them into the basement of my office building. I could find no answers. The photoanalysis came up inconclusive because originals could not be studied. The unusual metal sample had disappeared. Except for the Intercep group, almost everyone I interviewed in the UFO community warned that I was wasting my time on an obvious hoax. But in Switzerland and again in Munich, I talked for days with Herbert Runkel, and I saw a sincere, curious, and intelligent man truly baffled by his experiences with Meier. His friend Harold impressed me the same way. With my translator Frank Stuckert I spoke often with the people at the farm about their myriad and unusual experiences; I walked the sites in the hills, and I talked at length with the people at Bar Photo. I spoke with village administrators, interviewed neighbors, and explored the old Hinwil house from the basement to the attic. I found the alleged detractors Martin Sorge and Hans Schutzbach: Sorge now believed the contacts had actually taken place, though in a different fashion; Schutzbach remained convinced that Meier had faked everything, but after two years of searching he had "found out nothing but a lot of ideas". He couldn't explain the landing tracks, photographs, or sound recordings, and still had no idea who even one accomplice might have been. He told me, "Around Billy the oddest things always happened". I met several intelligent and well educated adults who rarely visited the farm but who told me their lives had been changed upon meeting Meier. One afternoon, as I sat out front of the farmhouse talking with Meier, a taxi pulled up next to the aviary, and out stepped two Japanese women who had seen the television documentary on the Meier story. They had flown twenty-two hours from Tokyo. As the older woman stood next to the taxi, both hands enveloped the stem of a red rose.

The scientists who had examined the evidence cautioned against premature conclusions, but the evidence impressed most of them. That, of course, does not make Meier's story real, but having experienced the setting in Switzerland I, like others before me, could not understand how Meier could have created sophisticated special effects in his photography. Then there were the sounds, metal, landing tracks, films, the explanation of the beamship propulsion system, all of which lent credibility to the story.

Yet Meier's contrived photos of the San Francisco earthquake and his other outlandish claims tore at that credibility. He may simply be one of the finest illusionists the world has ever known, possessing not the power but the skill to persuade others to see things that did not happen and do not exist. Perhaps he has no such ability; perhaps beings on a much higher plane have selected him and controlled him and used him for reasons far beyond our comprehension. I do know this: Trying to make sense of it all has been the most difficult thing I will ever do. Finally I realized, as the Elders had years before, that the truth of the Meier contacts will never be known.

AUTHOR'S NOTE

During my research into the Meier story I located certain persons who had not been interviewed in the original investigation, but whose participation I felt was relevant to a retelling of the story. At the same time, I wanted to avoid the confusion of introducing myself as a character. So, for purposes of clarity and continuity, I have in two instances attributed scenes from my own interviews to characters in the story. The interviews with Willy Bar, Beatrice Bar, and Fritz Kindliman, all of Bar Photo, which I attribute to Lee Elders and Tom Welch, I actually conducted myself with a translator in the late spring of 1985. The interview with Martin Sorge in Locarno, which in the book appears as an interview by Lee and Brit Elders, in fact occurred only in my presence and that of my translator's, also in late spring 1985.

In 1983, two years after the completion of the Meier investigation, the prosecutor's office of Pima County, Arizona, charged Wendelle Stevens with child molestation. Stevens pleaded guilty and as of this writing is incarcerated in the Arizona state penal system. I believe that these charges, though serious, are irrelevant to the Meier investigation; but I pass the information along to the reader so that he or she may judge accordingly.

After completing the manuscript I mailed to each of the scientists, engineers, and the special effects expert a packet which included everything in the manuscript pertaining to each. I asked that each make any corrections, technical or otherwise, he cared to make Either by phone or by mail each of the scientists responded. Some made minor changes; some changed nothing at all. Everything concerning the scientific analyses of the evidence appears in the book exactly as the scientists themselves have authorized it to appear.

An Investigation into the Extraterrestrial Experience of

EDUARD MEIER

Eduard Meier, an uneducated Swiss farmer, claims since 1975 to have had over 100 UFO sightings and encounters with 'beamships' from the Pleiades

Leading experts, including eminent NASA scientists, have investigated his evidence: photographs, films, soundtracks, advanced physics principles for propelling a spaceship faster than light and samples of a mysterious metal that appears to be, quite literally, out of another world. Even these die-hard sceptics have been unable to come up with an explanation...

Light Years, an undeniably gripping account, tells the sensational true story – a blockbuster that has confounded Earth's finest scientists.

PREFACE

This document contains a summary of translated notes that were written by (Billy) Eduard Albert Meier of Switzerland. These notes not only provide detailed descriptions about his initial 76 contacts with extraterrestrial human beings from within our universe, between the dates of January 28, 1975 and May 23, 1977, but also his contacts with extraterrestrial beings from an entirely different universe ever since the age of five, in 1942.

The contacts are ongoing and do not consist of simple dialogue. They contain real arguments, discussions, humor, agreements, and even outright threats. The only official version of the notes written by Mr. Meier of these contacts is presented within several volumes, known as "Plejadisch-plejarische Kontaktgesprache" and these are only available in the German language from FIGU (Freie Interessengemeinschaft fur Grenz- und Geisreswissenschaften und Ufologiestudien [The Free Community of Interests in Fringe and Spiritual Sciences and Ufological Studies]). Their website is: www.figu.org and their mailing address is: FIGU, Semjase Silver Star Center, CH-8495 Schmidrueti ZH, Switzerland. There are some books that have been translated into English, but the correction work progresses very slowly because it is FIGUs directive and task to make sure that the translations are as close to the original German transcripts as possible.

Fortunately, Lt. Col. Wendelle Stevens USAF (Retired) published four hardbound books of the Meier contact notes into English in 1988 through 1995, titled Message From The Pleiades. Currently, they are all out of print. But, they are now available on computer CD compact disks at: UFO Photo Archives, P.O. Box 17206, Tucson, AZ 85731, U.S.A.

Mr. Stevens explained that the translation process occurred in two basic steps of translating written information from one language to another. The first is transliteration; changing the words. The second is interpretation or re-phrasing of the converted words to most accurately express the original idea in proper form in the new language. The second step was more troublesome. He writes that a Christian, a student of Theosophy, and a University scholar all created different translations that conformed to their own personal perspectives.

Mr. Stevens further explained in his books that the actual translation was made by a young German college student who spent a great deal of time at the Meier home, living with them and observing the various witnesses in their daily lives, and seeking very careful explanations. Although the translations were not personally reviewed or approved by Eduard Meier, he did not forbid Wendelle from publishing them either.

Unfortunately, these translations are difficult to read, contain inaccuracies, and have many omissions. But, they represent the best translations into English that are available to date. Another problem is that the notes represent dialogues involving topics that are presented in no particular order at all and there is no index provided. It has been thirty years since the notes were first made public and only a few of the contact notes have ever been translated by FIGU and officially released to the public.

It is important to consider that, historically, there have been misinterpretations, revisions, omissions, etc. of important information intended for earth people that ended up corrupted and turned into religions, which further falsified and distorted the original meaning and intention. The information presented in this document represents a true and accurate summation of the contact notes, as presented in Wendelle Stevens first three books, without any biases or desires to change the content to any preconceived notions. The only things omitted are inconsequential interactive dialogues between the individuals involved and the reader is encouraged to review the contact notes in their original sequences for that information. The reader is also encouraged to verify the accuracy of this document and to notify the author of any inaccuracies, which will be confirmed and expediently corrected.

The information within the contact notes has been reorganized in this document for easy access to specific topics. However, a table of contents for the original notes is also included in the appendix, which indicates where to find the related information within this document. Each portion of the notes within every subsection is prefaced with a line that indicates the original contact number, reference numbers and heading. Each portion is generally presented in the same order that it appeared in the original notes. However, some portions are presented out of sequence in order to keep all related information together and maintain an easy-to-read format.

The extraterrestrial beings that Mr. Meier has had contact with since 1975 have indicated that they are from an area of space where there is a cluster of seven stars known as the Pleiades within the Taurus Constellation. It is 420 light years from Earth and can be seen with the naked eye on a clear night. However, these extraterrestrial beings are actually from another space and time configuration, 80 light years beyond the Pleiades, known as the Pleja System (pronounced play-ya). The central star there is known as Tayget. It is orbited by 10 planets. Four are inhabited and one of them is the home world of the human beings that have contacted Mr. Meier and it is named Erra. These beings refer to themselves as Plejaren (pronounced play-ar-en) in relation to the Plejaren system where they are from.

The reader is likely to find much of this information to be shocking, enlightening, and rather disturbing. Only by reviewing this material with a dispassionate, discerning, and open mind, will the reader obtain the most benefit from this information.

Chapter 1 INTRODUCTION

Most people believe that "Billy" Meier's fist contact with an extraterrestrial race occurred on January 28, 1975 in Switzerland. This is not true. Actually, he saw his first UFO at the age of 5 and has had many contacts throughout his whole life. In this chapter, four important aspects of Mr. Meier's life before his contacts with the Plejaren will be presented. First, there will be a summary of Billy's autobiography of between the years of 1937 and 1966. Then, Meier's acquaintance with a being from another universe is described. This is followed by a description of a trip that was taken into the 13th century. And finally, a conversation is presented between Meier and Jmmanuel, also known as Jesus Christ, at the Dead Sea. All of this information comes from notes that were written by Meier while he was in Mehrauli, India in 1964. Those notes were inserted within Contact Report 31.

CONTACT REPORTS WITH ASKET FROM 1953 TO 1964

Eduard Albert Meier was born in Switzerland on February 3, 1937. When he was six months old, he became ill with a bad case of pneumonia and was not expected to live through the night. While unconscious and close to the point of death, an extraterrestrial being by the name of Sfath (pronounced Sfaht) interfered and gave Meier back his life. When the doctor discovered that Meier had made a recovery, he declared that there must have been a miracle that was completely unexplainable for him since Meier should have already been dead.

At the age of five, Meier observed an extraterrestrial beamship for the first time. At exactly nine o'clock in the morning, on the 2nd of June, 1942, Meier and his father observed a craft as it flew from the East at an incredible speed over the chain of mountains of his home village in Switzerland near the German boarder, close to the Rhine River. Like a silver flash, it quickly flew towards a church steeple, about 75 meters high, in the center of the village. At the last moment, it exercised a crazy evasive maneuver to the right and shot to about 20 meters below and beside the top of the steeple. Meier knew nothing of such things and was amazed at the gigantic size of the ship, which appeared to be about 3 or 4 times the height of the church tower. They saw this from their house, which was two kilometers from the church. Then, like a flash, it was 200 meters directly over them. It disappeared moments later far behind the Horagen Forest, 5 kilometers away, all in complete silence.

The object was disk shaped, like two plates together, and was nearly 300 meters in diameter. His father told him that it was a new secret weapon from Hitler. But, Meier could not accept this as it seemed too fantastic. The experience left him with a peculiar, small stirring within him that he did not understand. His father thought nothing more about it, as he was involved with his duties on the German frontier for the prior two years during World War II. Meier felt extraordinarily acquainted with the craft and realized that it was from the cosmos. He also felt as though he had seen the craft before, but did not know where. This troubled him greatly and within three months, he began to feel alone and no longer connected to his environment.

Alone within himself, he soon became teased and abused for being eccentric, willful, and isolated. He was often beaten, for he lost the desire to defend himself or oppose the false charges against him by others. In his deep thoughts, he became isolated from the world as life became hard, remorseless, silly, primitive and degenerated. He found that within himself, he was greater, more powerful, and gigantic than all the reality of the world. He started to study his fellow human beings and soon discovered that they no longer could keep any secrets from him. He learned that many of them were dishonest, rather silly, and tried to delude and deceive him. But, he kept this knowledge to himself in fear of reprisals. Why he allowed others to lie, steal, and use him is something that eluded him. He knew that every human being needed to go their own way of development, which could not be avoided.

Often, old people, who were grieving and tired of life, came to Meier and poured out their troubles to him. This child of 6 was able to advise and help them. He was invited to attend spiritualistic and religious circles and communities without the knowledge of his parents. But, those who pretended to be inspired or mediums could not hide their deceptions from him and Meier took actions to unmask them. This caused him to become even more alone and he dedicated himself to the secrets of free nature, deep thinking, and spiritual matters.

Meier began scrutinizing the sky and often saw points of light like stars moving over the firmament. For years he pursued the flight trails of these lights in the sky. Sometimes they passed slowly or hurried over like a flash. Often, they would become motionless or oscillate back and forth in the sky. The size of these objects were varied, from only a few meters, to hundreds of meters and their shapes were like disks, spirals, orbs, and huge spheres. He often had the feeling that he was acquainted with these objects.

After two seemingly endless years, Meier was shocked to hear a silent voice within him on his birthday of February 3rd, that ordered him to thoroughly learn knowledge that would be transmitted to him. He feared that he had suddenly become delusional and did not trust the voice that always tried to calm him. He decided to confide in a preacher who listened to his whole story. This soft and wise man smiled and said that Meier had no need to fear because he was the best person informed about such things. He agreed to educate Meier in certain things on the condition that he kept silent about it because it would not be agreeable with his profession. It was the mission of the priest to slowly initiate humanity regarding the truth about religion.

Priest Zimmerman explained that the voice within Meier had nothing to do with madness or delusion, but was telepathy from another human being far away in the universe and that this means of communication was over unlimited distances and knew no obstacles. He also revealed that Meier would only be receptive to the high frequencies of higher developed forms of life and that beings of lower levels would not be able to penetrate into him because he was being protected from under developed entities for a special mission. The priest also told Meier that his life would become extraordinarily hard, full of depravation and needs. Meier overcame his fear and devoted himself to not only receiving transmissions, but to asking questions and receiving answers.

So, in the year 1944, Meier took up telepathic contacts with an entity, who called himself Sfath, and became initiated into huge matters that often seemed to him to be delusional. Sfath informed him that he was being prepared for a very important mission and that he would have to decide for himself whether to take on the burden of the mission, or not. It was explained that, before his birth, Meier had been elected for this mission. Sfath also explained many other things such as the fact that the Earth had come into a new age and that the day of Meier's birth was the passage into the middle point in time of the new age. It was the passage from the Age of Pisces into the Age of Aquarius. This occurred at exactly 11:20 AM on February 3, 1937 and had a most important meaning. It was the exact moment when Meier began to have self-supporting consciousness and the moment when he started to prepare himself for his mission.

On a summer's day in 1944, Meier was strolling alone in his thoughts when suddenly he heard Sfath say that he should wait for some minutes and not be frightened. A few minutes later, a peculiar appearing silver metallic object quickly came down from the sky. It was a pear shaped object, no more than 5 or 6 meters in diameter, that landed and a very old man walked out wearing a silvery deep-sea-diver's type of suit without a helmet. He approached Meier and spoke in his native dialect. He stated that his name was Sfath and that Meier should come with him. Meier followed Sfath into his craft. Inside, Meier noticed 3 peculiar looking chairs and desks. The walls were full of apparatuses and instruments with little windows having strange figures and the landscape outside. Sfath told Meier to sit down while he handled some controls that caused the craft to ascend. He explained that the windows were actually viewing screens. The craft rapidly ascended above the earth to a height of 70km. They remained there for a few hours as Sfath told Meier some important information and taught him very important things.

He stated that Meier's spiritual development had already surpassed earthly standards and that no one else on earth would be able to answer his questions. Meier was not afraid. Everything appeared to be familiar and self evident to him. He was calm and not astonished when Sfath explained that in the early nineteen fifties, he would be passing down his obligation with Meier to a very much higher developed form of life because he would be near the end of his life and that Meier would be equal to his own knowledge. Sfath told Meier that he would need to be much further developed for his mission and so would be taken under the care of a much higher intelligence. Meier was also told that mankind on earth would be walking into a very dangerous time and that the Second World War would end in the following year of 1945. He was also told that on August 6th, 1945, the events of Sodom and Gomorrah would be repeated to end the war. Sfath also told Meier many other things about which he was ordered to keep silent.

At the end of this meeting, Meier lay back in the chair and a strange contraption was laid on his head. Suddenly, vast knowledge and perceptions entered his head. Strange powers penetrated into him and he was able to realize matters of the future, wanted to cure human beings from suffering, and many other things. Then the influences ended and Sfath removed the strange apparatus. Meier was told that he would never lose his new abilities, but that he was never allowed to use them egotistically, for profit, for demonstrations, or scientific evaluations. He could only use these abilities to further his own development and help others unselfishly and without profit. If at any time these rules were not followed, then all abilities and knowledge would be blocked by an implant until the danger passed. The same thing would happen if outside influences would attempt to penetrate his knowledge or abilities. Then, Sfath brought Meier back to the earth exactly where he had started four hours previously and disappeared again with his pear-shaped ship.

As a consequence of this, Meier became more isolated from his environment and he endured even greater wicked intrigues. He became the scapegoat for all evil that happened in his village. He would simply smile silently to himself and paid a hard price with thrashings. He became known as a problem child and was placed in several institutions. But, he was never wanted wherever he went. He escaped under life-threatening circumstances and crossed forests for weeks, living on wild berries, fruits, grasses and roots. His bed was the ground and his roof was the firmament. He became incorrigible, querulous, and antisocial. He was accused of every evil act that occurred and the police automatically seized him. Meier kept silent and did not defend himself against the false accusations. The consequence of this was that he was committed to a psychiatric hospital for evaluation because he told the police about certain facts regarding beings from other stars.

Meier fabricated a key from a piece of wood that opened a second story restroom window. He went through the window and jumped eight meters down, outside the wall. He severely injured his right foot and the pain was very intense. But, he climbed over a two meter high enclosure and disappeared into a wide field. He evaded a search party and dogs by running through a forest, falling down a slope, and swimming several kilometers down the Rhine River in November. After climbing painfully to shore, he limped for days through fields and forests towards the French boarder, eating only scarce plants. In France, he joined the French Foreign Legion and received medical help for his foot. He was sent to Algeria where he learned discipline until he became tired of it and escaped after enduring many hellish situations.

Meier returned to Europe and presented himself to the police where they returned him to the same mental hospital. He was befriended by the chief psychiatrist who certified him as above average normal. Meier was then transferred to a house of correction. He found himself unable to clear up the false charges against him in a court of law. The result was that he remained in prisons and asylums for four and a half years. While there, he learned of spiritual concerns and discovered that he would have to become modest and unselfish to be a real human being. After his release, he joyfully disappeared abroad for 12 years. He came to realize that all of the hardships in his life have been learning experiences that he was able to take advantage of and that they only represented a small part of his life.

On February 3, 1953, Meier heard Sfath's voice once more and transmitted to him many matters and a huge amount of knowledge before saying goodbye. His voice sounded very old and tired. Then, his voice became silent forever. Only a few hours after Sfath's voice became silent, a new voice came into Meier's head. This new voice was young, fresh, and full of force, quite unlike Sfath, namely very smooth and harmonic. This new voice explained that she was a woman called Asket (pronounced Ahs-ket) and that she would now be his new companion. Meier was finally able to meet Asket in person on February 3, 1956. She showed him inside of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh and they spent 2 days together while she explained many things to him. Then, 2 days later, they met again for 7 days of time travels. In the following years, Meier learned many things and obtained phenomenal perceptions.

With Asket's help, Meier was led out far into the world for many years to explore and find out many things. Meier was especially taught about spiritual matters which were completely different from his prior religious teachings. Over the years, Meier attended special schools secretly to become a priest. Asket ordered Meier to dedicate himself to the Christian and other religions in order to explore them for the sake of study. So, he became a Protestant, Catholic, Buddhist, Hindu, Jew, Muslim and others. This demanded many years of study and in June of 1969, it finally ended. During the 12 years of travels, Meier undertook more than 320 different professions.

In the course of his duties as a private detective and guard, Meier lost his left arm in a car accident on the third of August, 1965 in Iskenderun, Turkey. On December 25, 1965, Meier met his wife-to-be and asked her to marry him on January 25, 1966. But, this was not acceptable to her parents, so they eloped on February 25, 1966 after many difficulties.

1.2 Meier's acquaintance with Asket in Egypt

ASKET'S AQUAINTANCE: inside the Gizeh pyramid

At about 2:00 in the morning of February 3, 1956 in Switzerland, Meier was ordered by Asket's voice to come to a certain place where he would be taken. Meier was anxious to finally be able to meet Asket and quickly went to the designated place. Suddenly, without a sound, a clear lighted disk shot down and touched the ground near him. Following a soft coercion, Meier went towards it and suddenly became carried into an opening. A door closed behind him. There was only one chair inside with no one else around. As soon as Meier sat down, the shining light from everywhere inside turned off and the ship appeared to sit in free space. Meier and the ship appeared to become invisible as the craft lifted and hovered over his parents' house. Then, Asket's voice was heard to explain about Meier's future way of life, of his family below him, and of his own family in the future. Then suddenly, the craft shot rapidly into the night sky without Meier feeling any differences. Within minutes the ship was in outer space. Suddenly, Meier and the ship became visible again in bright light and a door opened. This ship had landed and when Meier went outside, he saw that the earth was red and sandy with massive mountains nearby.

Suddenly, a huge ball of light fell rapidly from the sky. Then it stood motionless at about 80 meters in the air before slowly descending to the ground. A half hour later, a figure came from behind the ship and walked close to Meier as the shinning of the ship dimmed and then turned off. The figure was a woman that emitted a loving sympathy. She incited the appearance of an angel as she wore a long dress of silver-white color that was cinched at the waste. Over the shoulders, fell her long blond hair and her face was very beautiful. Sensing Meier's feelings, Asket said that he should remember his other lifetimes before the present.

After the welcome, Meier was invited by Asket to step into her ship. Once inside, the ship hurtled into the sky and became invisible as with the other ship. Meier could see the Mediterranean Sea in the early morning light. When the craft landed beyond the sea, Meier could see the Sphinx and pyramids of Gizeh in Egypt. There was a small Bedouin camp nearby with several Arabian clothed people that took no notice of the landing ship because it was invisible. Asket placed an instrument on Meier's belt that enabled them to see each other and the craft, but were invisible to everyone else. To test this, Meier first kissed one and then all of the women in the camp, which surprised all of them and delighted Meier.

Asket then led Meier by the hand into the great pyramid. They walked through long, dimly lit passages until they reached a huge square stone that suddenly dissolved itself into nothing. They walked through the space that had previously been stone and then it reappeared. They silently crept past guards who took no notice of them. They descended very deep down steep stairs and then went through a passageway into the pyramid until they came to a huge, brightly lit hall. They could see a large, disk-shaped spaceship resting in the hall that was about 300meters in diameter. This was at least 300 to 400meters within and under the great pyramid of Gizeh. Asket then led Meier upwards to a small plateau to see a very old and heavy wooden cross. Beside this, laid three bloodstained and hand-crafted, rusty nails. There was also a bloodstained wreath with abnormally great thorns, a purple colored coat, and a little leather bag from which precious stones had rolled out.

Meier believed these items to be the genuine crucifixion items of Jesus Christ and began to be religiously influenced. He wondered why Sfath had said that the Christian religion was an unscrupulous and wicked piece of work for stupefying and enslaving as all the other earthly religions. He also said that Jmmanuel should never have been called Jesus Christ, considered to be God's son, and that God was not the Creation. Asket seized Meier by the arm and led him back out of the pyramid as they had come. When they return to their craft, it rapidly flew towards the sky. At an incredible speed, the ship returned to the same place from which they had departed for the pyramid. For 2 full days they remained there while Asket taught Meier of very many things.

ASKET'S EXPLANATION on February 3, 1953

As Meier listened, Asket explained that, in order to perform their mission, they had to neutralize the space and time structure of our universe for harmonic passage without hurting their ships and the universe. Asket's home world was in a similar system called Akon in an entirely different universe known as the DAL universe. It is one among others that enclose this universe. Many lay in other time planes and different spaces. The DAL universe is a parallel universe to this one and in the same time plane.

The reason for Asket to come into our universe is in a spirit of research for the human race because of earlier centuries. Due to their technology, a universal barrier was opened and they explored the widths of this universe. 3,300 years ago, they discovered Earth in the Sun's solar system. In their research, they also discovered the original home world and history of the human race because humanity did not originate on Earth. Human beings are the descendants of a race from the Ringed Nebula. The actual descendants of earthly forefathers no longer populate the Ringed Nebula, but live on planets in the region of a cluster of stars referred to as the "Seven Sisters" or the Pleiades. Meier was told that, within twenty years, these matters would be cleared up by the descendants of humanity's forefathers themselves, when he becomes mature enough to bear the new explanations and concepts.

Until that time, Meier was told that it was his obligation to gain much more knowledge and wisdom in order to fulfill his very heavy mission. He was informed that he was elected to be a truth-teller, like innumerable ones in early times before him. But, in order for him to be prepared for this mission, he would have to become greater in spiritual knowledge than any other earthly human being of his time. Because of this, he was placed under the guardianship of a certain form of life which had to protect him, lead, guide, and educate him since before his birth. This also happened for all former truth-tellers that were chosen before their births. This embodies a Law of Creation that cannot be disobeyed. It is false to believe that truth-tellers are called for their missions in certain years of their lives because their way is already destined at their birth and will develop itself accordingly. Such a life is extraordinarily difficult and hard because there is so much to be learned. Profits are never able to have easy and smooth lives.

True truth-tellers and prophets only offer words of liberty and knowledge, of love and wisdom in absolute logic. Wrong truth-tellers and prophets only bring heresies and illogic which must be continuously developed over time while actual truth-tellers and prophets offer lessons of truth, being eternally the same and never altered. Meier was told that within twenty years, he would write a great lesson of truth, being transmitted to him from a very high spiritual entity. It will come from the same level as where also the carpenter's son Jmmanuel, whom is erroneously known as Jesus Christ, received his knowledge. It will become the final lesson of the New Time; a lesson of truth, knowledge, the clearing up of love, and a lesson of the Age of Aquarius. It will be a lesson of absolute truth about many other things and for all coming times. If new forms of life come and want to change it, then they are only of deceptive character and evil lies.

Asket explained that it is the obligation of each higher developed form of life to assist under developed forms with help in responsible measure to influence its evolution. This obligation is for all forms of life in all universes because it is in creational law. So, when they come from another universe, this duty requires them, at a certain time, to officially make contact. After many years have passed, Asket said that she would contact Meier again when she has returned to her universe. They have recognized many matters in our universe in need of change and especially on Earth, which are very dangerous. Mankind has entered an age of knowledge and development that is badly disturbed, especially by religions that influence enslavement, humiliation, and exploitation of humanity.

The limitless greed for power is evident in all earthly religions and represents the most dangerous threat for the eventual goal of a world government. All earthly governments are subjected to religious influences that endeavor to unite them under a single world government. These wicked efforts have always resulted in wars and the death of innumerous human lives. Mankind has developed deadly weapons of destruction and will soon venture out into space in manned rocket ships. Earth humans will walk on the moon and speak words of peace and love. But they are only words of deception for the unconquerable greediness for a world government. Humanity has evolved to a high level, but only technologically and in pure materialistic regards. Spiritual evolution has been wickedly prejudiced and forced aside in favor of the worldly and material concerns. That has resulted in many kinds of degeneration and fanaticism. The most evil factors of earthly religions are in the cursing and denial of all reality and truth.

Nowhere else do such religions of delusion exist in the universe as they rage on Earth. They become a danger as they slowly and deadly begin to spread. Not only have earthly human beings pushed their world and the whole solar system dangerously close to destruction, but also space traveling races have excited three of their home worlds with earthly religious delusions, requiring them to be brought under control again by outside forces. Expeditions were sent to Earth to explore the facts concerning religion. All of their nations were educated in the earthy Christian religion and after thousands of years of living in peace and harmony with all forms of life and themselves, their world changed into the very picture of life on Earth. Soon, they murdered each other until they degenerated into an evil worldwide war.

Eventually, transgressions against the other two worlds ensued and caused one of them to be destroyed. At last, other space-traveling races interfered and ended the deadly dissension which was already being carried into the universe. All religious material was destroyed, Christianity was strictly forbidden, and the old form of living came back again. All visits to earth were prohibited and a regulation was established that, if anything should go wrong with a ship on the Earth, the whole crew had to eliminate itself along with the ship. A great spaceship had malfunctioned over Russia and was unable to leave the Earth's atmosphere. As a consequence, the ship and 4,300 extraterrestrial beings turned to dust in an explosion and damaged the landscape, causing an extensive crater.

Many other dangerous events have also occurred. Humanity is now able to destroy his world with atomic explosions and cause very dangerous consequences for the whole solar system. Thousands of years ago, a similar catastrophe occurred when another inhabited planet in this solar system became destroyed by the unreasonableness of the humans living there. The planet blew up into thousands of pieces that have come to be known as the asteroid belt. The name of the planet was Malon and the explosion forced Mars into a closer orbit to the Sun. A further such event must be prevented and it is the duty of higher forms of life to prevent it. An atomic destruction of the earth could damage the whole solar system and expel very dangerous missiles out into space. This could result in the destruction of other solar systems and could lead to a cosmic catastrophe. Even adjoining universes could be damaged because this solar system has giant planets with extremely large gravitational fields. With the destruction of earth, the whole time and space structure could become distorted and whole universes could fall into a deadly destruction.

Asket said that it was their main obligation to prevent this possible occurrence and, together with many other forms of live from other worlds in the universe, to control the earth by interfering in politics and religion by coercing leading personalities unconsciously toward lowering their intrigues and political agendas. So, it is unfortunately unavoidable that several leading forces of different states on the earth will be destroyed by smaller organizations, deposed or even murdered. This succession of leaders will be very long, that will die by assassination. But, they cannot change that. It is not their guilt that this will come to pass because it is the earth human beings themselves who are to blame. They do not want anyone to die, but they want peace for all in the universes. Unfortunately, they only have until the autumn of 1974 to prevent the destruction of Earth and this time is very short. Should there mission fail, then this could result in a universal catastrophe. However, they have very good expectations for success of their mission.

Once they have completed their mission, then a short time later Meier's mission will become due, for which there is still more to prepare for. As a truth teller and prophet, Meier well bring to mankind eternal and absolute truth. Asket informed Meier that it was his mission to clear up the real truth for mankind and to offer a way of peace, love, knowledge, and wisdom in truth. His time would be short because of further dangerous affairs that are coming to pass from power-hungry powers. In addition to America, Russia, and China who seek to enslave the world, Jewish Zionists, with the help of the Christian religions, will sharpen their bloody swords to control the Earth. Already, they prepare for a first decisive strike to enlarge their country and generate dangerous land-commanding emplacements.

However, Asket tells Meier that the time is not right for these matters to appear openly and that he is ordered to keep silent about it until she gives him permission to speak. The course of evolution must take its normal steps and should not become hampered by a too early release of this knowledge. Earth humans will succumb to their thirst for power and their own deadly intrigues will be changed for good purposes.

Asket said that the series of events will be very long and that she could only tell about a few dates that will become very important in world affairs. She also explained that Meier would have to keep absolutely silent about these events until she gave him permission to disclose them because the future events must occur as destined in order to prevent a catastrophe that could destroy the whole universe. She cautioned him that his life will be in danger when he reveals these secret events. Meier was instructed to write down these predictions and keep them hidden until when he is permitted to reveal them.

Asket stated that the events of the future have already begun with the poisoned death of Joseph Stalin on March 5, 1953 in Russia. The motive for the poisoning was because of the Zionist-friendly behavior of Stalin, which will result in a Zionist-enmity within the next two decades. His successor was Nikita Chruschtschov, who will be coerced to resign in order to justify a Zionist-enmity. During the term in office of Chruschtschov, Fitzgerald Kennedy will be elected as the American president and be murdered on November 22, 1963 in Dallas, Texas by secret order of the American CIA. Five years later, his brother, Robert Kennedy will be murdered by the same orders on June 6, 1968 in Los Angeles while running for President. Pope John XXIII will also be murdered by poison in 1962 after only a short time in office and his successor, Pope Paul VI, will die the same way by cardinal intrigues in cooperation with Zionistic Jewish extremists. King Paul I of Greece will also die of poison on March 6, 1964. His successor will be Konstantinos, who will later be removed by a revolting military regime. In Egypt, a dictator named Adb el Gamal Nasser will also die of poison in the mid 1970s along with his friend, Emir from Kuwait in 1965. And, King Feisal, of Saudi Arabia, will be shot to death in 1975 by a relative.

Different religions play into one another. Asket said that they have not come to interfere in the religious or political concerns of Earth, make close contact with humanity, or help with mankind's evolution. They are only here to fulfill their mission of preventing a catastrophe and preparing Meier for his heavy mission of spreading these truths. In matters concerning human evolution, other forms of life from our own universe can help. They have controlled Earth's boarders for thousands of years against evil space-traveling races that would use religion and it's illusions to win control over mankind.

Asket tells Meier that she noticed his thoughts in the great pyramid regarding his doubts concerning the heresies of religion. She knew that he thought Sfath had lied about Jmmanuel, alias Jesus Christ, because the artifacts in the pyramid caused him confusion. She said that Sfath had spoken the truth and that the Christian religion is a wicked and enslaving piece of work by earth humans who were promised riches and power by an extraterrestrial race if they agreed to teach their religious lessons to others. This race desires to obtain overall command over all of mankind through different religious beliefs. To protect their spaceship they built the underground hall below the pyramid where their ship has been stored for thousands of years. From there, they command everything religiously suited for the enslavement of man.

In order to validate their claims, they produced the artifacts in the pyramid. They are false replicas. The true artifacts of Jmmanuel, as well as the cross, have long since fallen to dust. The imitations appear to be very real and even experts are unable to tell that they are false. The guards belong to a secret group that will kill anyone who strays in there. Their technical abilities are very small, since they were able to pass invisibly without notice. The purpose of the falsified Christian artifacts is so that humans can become influenced by hallucinations to believe that the experience is true. The images of spaceships can also be projected as reality.

The whole purpose of this wicked deception is to cause a stir in humans to believe in Christianity and commit different deceitful manipulations as proof of their beliefs in benevolent extraterrestrial beings. To make these deceptive affirmations appear more believable they will even give the appearance of extraterrestrial beings that are interested in the earthly Christian religion. The first threatening steps in the direction of making religion acceptable have already occurred. It will appear that extraterrestrials would find great salvation on the earth and would carry it out into the cosmos. They will express gratitude to humanity for this and recognize God's son, Jesus Christ, for their redeemer and master of the universe.

Humanity must become aware of this conspiracy because it only serves to enslave mankind by those who maintain their station in Gizeh. If humanity continues to work for their desires and demands, then soon they will appear once more in public to force mankind to commit murder, punishment, and barberry under their control. This will enable the evil creatures, as in earlier times, to once more appear as angels and gods. If this does not work, they will try to reach their goal by barbarous cruelties and a worldwide war.

Two thirds of mankind would become eradicated by this and die a horrible death. Humanity must prepare itself for this in order to prevent these events from occurring while the possibility still exists. Human beings must look very carefully at these things, as a worldwide destructive war menaces to bring the final defeat and slavery upon the earth, ruled and managed by wicked extraterrestrial creatures.

Once the menacing catastrophe has been eliminated and the evil removed, then Meier will be able to reveal the truth. The last sign of the elimination of the catastrophe will be the murdering of the king of Saudi Arabia in 1975. Because of this, they only have until the autumn of 1974 to end the danger of a universal catastrophe. The fight will be very extensive with heavy loses because the evil-minded creatures will institute intrigues that push the human beings of Earth into fanatical religions and many new religious sects will be started.

Ufology groups, which should actually reveal the truth, will gain worldwide importance and be used to spread disinformation for wicked extraterrestrial intelligences in 1975. A sausage seller in California that pretends to be a contactee will become the most important person in Ufology and the most important organization will originate in Germany. Many of its members will pretend to have extraterrestrial contact and they will produce a magazine that will influence the world religiously for the next two decades. Meier is told that, when the time is right, it will be his difficult mission to convince these people of the truth.

But first, Meier must learn very much more in order to recognize the truth and acknowledge it. He is told that his life will be very difficult with great deprivations and he will wish for an early death. But, he must not give up because his mission is of worldwide importance which has ramifications far into deep space. He will receive much help, including travels into the past and future with their technology to see the truth about many things of great importance. Among his travels, he will be taken to the year 32 so that he can see for himself how the New Testament has been wickedly falsified, not only by human beings, but also by evil-minded extraterrestrials who seek to rule from the great pyramid of Gizeh. He will learn the truth about Jmmanuel, who has wrongly been called Jesus Christ. Later, it will be Meier's mission to reveal these truths to the world.

EXPLANATION of time with Asket and another man

Meier became visibly shaken by Asket's explanations, which seemed monstrous to him. At Meier's request, he and Asket exited the ship and strolled through the Jordanian mountains so that he could clear his head in the cool night air. After about two hours of walking, they noticed a camp fire. Suddenly, a man jumped toward them with a gun in his hand. Asket calmed the man, first in English and then in German. He was about 55 years old and had been a Russian state member who now traveled alone throughout the world for many years. He became startled by their sudden appearance and believed that he was being attacked by dark forces. He invited them to sit with him in his camp and offered tea and food. After eating, Meier and Asket turned to leave and the man pleaded with them to stay and talk more. Asket assured him that they would meet him again on the seventh of February at the same place and time. They returned to their ship and fell fast asleep.

ASKET'S EXPLANATION OF FEBRUARY 4, 1953

The next morning, they ate breakfast together and went outside to clean themselves with water. Then, they returned to the ship where Asket explained many more things to Meier until the sun went down. She said that the whole existence of all universes, world bodies, and forms of life can be represented in a perfect mathematical formula that works faultlessly to provide life and death for all. This important mathematical formula consists of numbers three, seven, and twelve. These numbers always appear as the result of an equation, which is a perfect circle with many interims of a multiplication of seven times seven. Asket said that she was not permitted to reveal this formula because this would go against the laws of the ancient-eternal itself. Mankind must solve these riddles for themselves. If humanity were to receive this knowledge too early in their development, then an unpreventable catastrophe would result.

This menace now faces the earth because of unscrupulous and evil extraterrestrial entities that have transferred information to some scientists, which they are still unable bear. They disclosed knowledge about the foundation of life; the atom, which resulted in the atomic bomb being created. This resulted in a repeat of the events of Sodom and Gomorrah on August 6, 1945 which injured all of nature and disturbed weather conditions. Humanity, along with the fauna and flora of earth, will suffer wicked mutations and Metamorphosis. Although they are aware of these consequences, the scientists create new atomic bombs for examination purposes that bring the Earth toward even larger dangers.

However, neither Asket nor any other extraterrestrial entity, are allowed to interfere. Humanity is at a level of development in which this knowledge must be prohibited in order to prevent the madness in delusion of power-hungry, selfish, and autocratic individuals from causing further damage and destruction. Humanity may only be helped when it leaves its ways of destruction and finally frees itself from the delusions of religion and its enslaving powers. A complete change in the way of thinking of mankind is necessary in order to observe the laws of creation. Humanity cannot receive the consciousness of very important matters until the danger of catastrophe has ended. Then, It must learn the truth about Creation, the spirit, and eternity.

Meier is told that this is a very long and hard lesson that he, as a prophet, must announce to the world. In less than two decades, he will be given permission to speak the truth and his very difficult mission will then begin. Fortunately, he will have friends and an interested group that will assist him. Other groups will be of only limited help because the evil entities in the pyramid of Gizeh, known as Bafath, are in great numbers and seek to promote their influence everywhere. They do not shrink from any intrigues or infamous pieces of work.

When the time is right, Meier will meet with the leaders of the group in Germany. But in less than ten years, he will need to break contact with them because his life will be in danger and he will not resume contact again for another decade when ordered to do so. Then, his presence will be known, his proof will have been seen, and his reputation established. The wicked entities will tell lies about him in an attempt to destroy his reputation. But, reasonable and intelligent human beings will see the truth in what he has to offer.

It was late at night when Asket finished with her explanations. The two of them said good bye to one another with the understanding that Asket would return for Meier again on the 7th of February. Then, Meier left Asket's ship and returned to the ship that had brought him here two days before. Just as before, the ship raised high into the sky and returned him to the exact spot from where he had been taken. He was only a few steps away from the ship when it slowly lifted and then shot up into the night sky and disappeared.

1.3 Travel with Asket to the 13th Century

EXPLANATION of 2/4/53 of a ride to the Dead Sea

In the early evening of February 7, 1956, Meier returned to the agreed upon location. Soon, a dark object landed in a field near him. Asket appeared and called to him. Together, they entered the craft, sat down in the comfortable chairs, and let the ship take them rapidly into the sky without any feeling of movement. No words were spoken as Asket controlled the ship and returned them to the same spot as before in the Jordanian mountains. They exited the craft and wandered, hand in hand, through the wilderness. When they reached a large flat rock, they sat down and Asket began to speak.

Meier was told that he would now learn about many things that will be useful to him and to many others at a later time in their search for the truth. Because he is to take on an important roll as a speaker of facts, it has been decided that Meier will travel back into different epochs of time, to examine the true events and realize how history has rarely been reported accurately. But first, Asket provides many more explanations. She says that his lessons of life are not finished yet. The next 20 years will be even more difficult and he will experience an enormously hard fate in order for him to accomplish his mission. Within the next few years, he will enter into war services outside of his homeland in order to learn the ways of a fighting human being.

Meier is told that he will indulge in different vices. He will experience heavy physical and mental pain. He will live in hell from the persecution of others and learn to conceive of heaven. Within ten years, a big change will suddenly take hold of his body and he will live a different life. (This is in reference to the loss of Meiers left arm.) Meier is advised to prepare himself to meet these coming events with clear vision. It is believed that Meier is strong enough within himself to endure everything. However, Asket does not wish to tell the exact date in which he will lose his left arm, but that it will occur between the first and fifth of August in 1965. This is destiny and it cannot be altered.

Asket says that, shortly before the loss of his arm, he will take on the name of Billy and carry this name for another ten years which will bring upon him much grief from other people. Meier's own family will hate and not understand him, which will enable him to learn the last secrets of human beings and their psyche. The name of Billy will be known worldwide and become a menace to drown him in misery. At the end of ten years, peace will slowly, but surely, come to him as he begins to perform his essential mission.

Eight months after his accident, Meier will marry, under difficult circumstances, a 17 year old woman that he will meet at Christmas time in 1965. He will be forced to elope in Korinthos, Greece because of extraordinarily bad intrigues and confusion. Within the next ten years of marriage, he will have 3 children. The girl will be named Gilgamesha and the two boys, Atlantis and Methusalem. The births of his children will provide Meier with no peace as his difficult lessons will not end until the year of 1975. Until then, he must endure everything without any further help from anyone.

Then, in 1975, another extraterrestrial entity will contact him and he will be required to begin his mission with all possible means of truth and righteousness.

During this time, Meier is to come into contact with the greatest Ufolofy organization of Europe. But, many within the group will be religiously prejudiced against the spread of the real truth. They will not acknowledge him for being a prophet, not allow him to appear at their conferences, and will hamper his efforts. After that, Meier will go his own way and will seek a publisher to disperse the truth with the help of his friends and group of supporters. His efforts will become very difficult against the unreasonableness of ufology groups that are established in religious beliefs. He will be hated around the world and be at risk for his life. Asket tells him that he will need to work fast and he is informed of the exact date and time of his death, which cannot be prolonged.

After Meier has made contact with the German ufology center under the name of Billy, the group will lead its first strike against him in the second half of 1975. Many deceivers will say that he should not accuse them of deceit and will wrongfully say that he accuses all contactees of deceit. But eventually, the truth will become known. At present, 2.7 million people on Earth have seen UFOs. Among these, only 3,104 have had direct contact with extraterrestrial beings and few of those have disclosed it. Meier is told to give up the name "Phantom", which was given to him in Persia and reestablish himself under his given name of Eduard, which means "Guardian of the treasure". He will become the guardian of the treasure of truth, knowledge, wisdom, and love and peace as well as the guardian of true spiritual lessons. This will represent the largest treasurer for mankind.

Asket says that in 1964, Meier will write down the words of their conversations with her assistance. All spoken words and thoughts are stored in her subconscious and their technology enables her impressions of the spoken words to be recalled, word for word, centuries later. Asket assures Meier that when they undertake their travels into the past and future, she will always be near in order to notice everything and store it in her subconscious. Since they will encounter others who speak different languages, Meier will have a small device attached to his belt that enables him to understand any spoken language and for others to understand what he says to them.

Now, Asket was becoming tired. They walked back to her ship and lay down on the couches to sleep. Early the next morning they were startled awake by the sound of a gun being fired. They went to the viewing screen and discovered the same man that they had met 3 days before, standing about twenty meters away, looking upwards at the ship. Asket and Meier exited the craft and the man walked forwards, stretching out his hand to them. He forcefully shakes Asket's hand and then Meier's hand as he expresses his surprise at their ship and introduces himself as Jitschi Ustinov. He asks if they are from Venus or Mars and they tell him that Meier is from Earth and Asket is from another world.

Asket considers what to do with Jitschi who says that he did not wish to interfere in the activities of God's angels and explains that he is a devout Christian. She says that she is sorry to disappoint him because she is neither an angle nor acting on God's orders. She tells him that those stories are misleading by wicked elements who seek to use religious concepts for evil purposes. She also says that when he is a believer of religion, then he has fallen for evil heresies. Jitschi is shocked by this. Asket then invites him to come with them in order for him to learn the truth. Jitschi confesses to be afraid of dying and when he tries to quote a passage from Jesus, Asket tells him that the correct name for Jesus was Jmmanuel. After many deliberations, Meier leads Asket back to the ship in disgust of Jitschi until he asks for them to wait. Many words are exchanged before Jitschi agrees to come with them.

They enter the craft and Jitschi sits in terror until he finally calms down and remembers that he left his belongings at his campsite. So, he exited the ship and was gone for more than an hour before returning with all of his belongings. Asket explained that they would be traveling for the next week into the past and future in order to observe certain events in time. The first destination would be back to the 13th century. Reluctantly, Jitschi agrees to go. But when Asket asks him to remain silent about all that he sees, including ever having seen Asket and Meier, Jitschi complains that it would prevent him from becoming rich by selling his story to the magazines. He is told that if he were to speak about this, he would have a short time to live. When Jitschi asks why it is so important for him to remain silent, he is told that it depends upon the existence of mankind on Earth and the whole universe. So, he agrees to remain silent.

The ship rapidly ascends into space. Jitschi's face becomes white and he vomits into a pot from his belongings. For a moment, everything appears to disappear and then Asket announces that they have arrived in the 13th century. Meier attached the language translation device to his belt and they all exited the ship. Jitschi ran about 50 meters into the forest. Everything appears normal except for the sounds of many birds and the air seemed fresher with more oxygen and no pollution. All that could be seen were only forests, hills, and meadows with no house of village anywhere. There were a herd of deer that took no notice of them in this beautiful paradise.

Asket explained that they were in 13th century France during the rein of Louis the Holy. They all walked through the forest toward a small recuperation house that Asket knew about from previous visits. It belonged to a rabbi by the name of Jechieli who was known as a scientist, sorcerer, and magician. There was a horse tied up behind the house and a dog barked inside. A door opened and a bearded man came out and went quickly towards the three advancing people. Asket introduced the two men to Jechieli. She explained that they were from a far away land and also far into the future.

He asked about the device on Meier's belt and was told that it was an electric lamp with batteries. Meier shows it to him and he is very amazed by it. Meier gives it to him as a gift along with four batteries and Jitschi explains how it works to him while Meier and Asket take a stroll through the meadow. When they return, five hours later, Jitschi tells them that Jechieli is very cleaver and plans to create a dynamo for creating electricity and intends to provide protection for his house. Asket laughs at how Jechieli will certainly go into history as a secretive magician. Jitschi is now interested in researching French history to see if this is true. He asks Asket if he can take with him some gifts given to him by Jechieli for historical worth and she agrees. But, she says that they will not grow old inside her ship. They returned to her ship for another six days of traveling to different events into the past and future to see things that will never be agreeable to historians or scientists.

EXPLANATION of reactions to 6 days of time travels

Meier had to recognize many scientific thesis of his time to be completely untrue as well as many events of history. Often he believed himself to be dreaming because it all seemed crazy and unbelievable. Many times he felt the need to test his reality and always found that he was not dreaming or hallucinating. Jitschi also had difficulty accepting everything. Often, he would angrily mark out whole chapters in his bible with red crayon and curse all the while. It troubled him greatly to discover things were completely different than had been written in the bible and grew to become hostile against religion.

1.4 Meier's contact with Jmmanuel

EXPLANATION of Meier's contact with Jmmanuel

Asket tells Meier and Jitschi that because they have gathered the necessary perceptions from their different travels into the past and understand the need to keep everything confidential, they will now travel back to the year 32 in order to learn that what is written in the New Testament is false. Jitschi realizes that this is the year of Christ's crucifixion and becomes angry over having to witness it since he has come to realize how religion has been created by power-hungry people to exploit humanity. Meier warns him to be nicer to Asket and reminds him that he forced himself upon them and agreed to come along. He is told that only he is to blame for having been led astray by religious heresies and not seeing it for what it truly is. The mistake was in converting religion into a cult and being governed by principles of delusion. Religion is not bad in itself, only what has been done in connection to unreal principles.

When Jitschi says that he will choke Jmmanuel (pronounced Yie-mahn-ou-el) when he sees him, Meier tells him that he will not do so because Jmmanuel is a wonderful human being who cannot help having been used against his will as the foundation of a new religion. Jitschi apologizes and says that his emotions have overcome him. Asket gives the men clothing from her home world to wear under native clothing of the period that they will be traveling to and they dress accordingly. They all carried a language translator.

Then, Asket guided the ship into the year 32. Their landing site was the same location as where they had left in Jordan. It appeared nearly the same except for changes in the mountain range, villages, and the small town of Jerusalem. They exited the ship and walked through rugged mountains for four days toward a small walled village. They ate food that Jitschi procured before their start and Asket acquired a bag of coins of that period. During their long walk, Asket explained how to behave and not appear conspicuous to others, until they reached the Mount of Olives near Jerusalem, in front of the village of Bethphage.

They noticed some men coming their way. Asket said she knew that Jmmanuel and his followers would be walking past this way at this time. Jitschi becomes excited and angry that Meier is so calm. Meier tries to calm him, but to no avail. So, Meier hits him in his nose and causes it to bleed. This brings Jitschi to his senses once again and he apologizes for his behavior. The group of men, sat near a path and Jmmanuel walked toward them. They exchanged greetings in peace. Jmmanuel directs Jitschi to go over to the other men who will nurse his injury. Without a word, he obeys and the men care for him. Jmmanuel calls Meier by the name of "Eduard" and indicates that he knows of Asket. He also complements Meier for his actions because Jitschi had lost control over his senses and was in need of pain. Meier is impressed and says that he now knows why Jmmanuel is thought of as a god-like superman. They exchange complements and sit together on a stone to talk.

Jmmanuel explains that he knows them through the force of his spirit and is able to foresee these times. He is surprised that Meier understands about his clairvoyant abilities and recognizes Meier's ability to do the same. He says that living provides for many things and that it is necessary to walk their own way with honor, under the laws. Jmmanuel agrees to answer some burning question from Meier before he asks them. He says that the lessons that he gives to others are not new and are well known to the scribes who disregard, distort, and interpret them for their own purposes. They abuse him with their lies because he preaches against their lies.

They have constructed cults out of the old lessons of creational laws and the laws of the spirit, which take away the freedom of the spirit and force their followers into bondage for profit. The have committed heresy by humanizing the Creation as a human being which they call God. Their God is a ruler over humanity and all of his dominion. It is never allowed to be equal to the Creation for it is considered to be above everything else and nothing else exists.

They accuse him of lying because he offers the truth and the truth is not always requested. When someone like him speaks about the truth, he will be hated and persecuted. Jmmanuel says that he will not escape persecutions for this is his destiny. He tells Meier that he will also be persecuted because he will perform his mission in the future as Jmmanuel has done. He says that his coming days will be very difficult and he feels pain and bitterness inside because he knows what lies ahead. But, he will not evade his destiny. People of this world have been forced into need and confusion by the wrong lessons of scribes, preachers, and all of those who walk in their footsteps.

He says that, truly, this will lead the world into very much need and misery. The scribes and preachers are hypocrites that preach lies, deceit, and distortions of the truth. Outwardly, they appear as being pious and good, but inside they are full of hypocrisy, deceit, and falsehoods. They are worse than any snake. They want to be great in spirit, but yet they have no brains. All those who are just, have been murdered by them, from the first prophet whom their fathers and forefathers killed, to those that they will murder in the future. They murder in the name of love and goodness, but actually do so for profit and power.

They have altered the lessons of spirit and the laws of Creation into a very wicked cult and cause humanity to worry about death, revenge by their blood-greedy god, and angels armed with swords. They educate humanity to fear the magnificence and unity of Creation. They deny its existence and substitute it with their god and saints. This is truly the way things are and the future will become very evil. There will be fear and howling in the world. Innocent human beings will be sacrificed and their blood will deeply soak the dry earth. The fate of this world and humanity will truly become very hard.

Jmmanuel is righteous and fights against injustice, which is thought to be evil within him. Yet, he knows the truth, the wisdom of the knowledge, and has the force of spirit to fulfill his mission. No amount of hate against him will cause him to go astray. The truth is more important than the temporary pain of the body, which may be tortured and damaged, but the truth and spirit can never be killed. Even though one can see this truth in him now, this will change in the future. From his having been a human being, a cult will cause very evil consequences. He will be slandered as being equal to the Creation. Although he knows of these things occurring in the future, he cannot change them. He will live as a human being, perform his mission, and suffer his fate of bodily death after 83 years. Although his body will be very old, his spirit will remain unbroken. The coming event will change nothing except for being thought of as a martyr. The event causes only bodily pains, which will drift away by force of the spirit and he will end his mission.

Jmmanuel recognizes how sensitive Meier is to be able to understand his grief, which is something that no one else has been able to do. He notices how far Meier has progressed in his evolution in comparison to others in his world. He considers Meier to be well educated with very high spiritual abilities, which is something that he had not realized before. Meier asks if he has written down any of his lessons for posterity. Jmmanuel says that only certain circles of society are able to write. He has learned to read, but does not have the time to write down his lessons. His lessons are actually the lessons of all great times, of spirit, and of the laws of Creation, which are eternal. These are things that he learned while he was in India. So, the lessons that he preaches are not originally from him. He knows that his lessons will be altered, but there is no chance to change the coming events because the masses of erring and distorting human beings are too large.

However, the truth will not be lost because it will remain in written form at a secure place. Among his followers, he has a scribe, by the name of Judas Iscarioth, who writes down the important parts of the lessons and events, which will be well preserved and shall endure the times in order to transmit the truth for posterity. He tells Meier that the scripts will be found in his time and that he will reveal their contents for all of mankind. Although humanity will not be mature enough for them at that time, within two decades, a grain of truth will find a bit of nutritious ground. Meier asks where the scripts are hidden and if he could retrieve them in his time. Jmmanuel says that he knows where they will be hidden and, at a later point in time, he will tell Meier the exact place. But, it is not provided for him to take the scripts from their hiding place as this is provided for someone else.

At first, the scriptures will be doubted and accused of being lies and falsifications, but the eternal truth will overcome all. Many attempts will be made to cast its truth and authenticity in diffused light and falsity. One lie will be that, although the scripts are of worth and contain certain truths, they do not contain the actual lessons because they are the lessons of someone else with the name of Jmmanuel. Another lie will be that he is not Jmmanuel, but someone else. It will also be pretended that Jmmanuel and Jesus Christ are two different persons. But, this will only be accepted by ignorant and misguided spirits. The breakthrough of truth in the future has already become destiny.

There is now a search being conducted for the scripts, to destroy and use them as proof against him. One script roll was stolen from the writer and was given to the preachers and scribes. A preacher's son named Juda Iharioth seized it secretly out of the bag of Judas Iscarioth in order to sell it for 70 silverlings to the bailiffs. It will be used to accuse Jmmanuel of blasphemy. He ordered Judas Iscarioth to write the scripture another time and preserve it well so that it endures the future times. When Meier asks if Judas is the one that is said to be a traitor, Jmmanuel confirms this, but says that he is not the culprit. The one who will surrender him to the bailiffs is the same one who stole the writings and sold them. His father will spread the lie that Judas is the traitor in order to preserve the preacher's name of Iharioth. It will be said that, because one of his followers betrayed him to die on the cross, his lessons cannot be true. But, it will be Juda Iharioth who hangs himself in the bloody acre.

Jmmanuel warns Meier that he will be accused of lying, and of blasphemy, but that he should not care about that because he has learned a lot in his previous life and has learned the truth about Moses, which will enable him to stand up to his enemies. Those who will accuse him will be totally unreasonable and not be able to recognize the truth for themselves.

Meier's meeting with Jmmanuel will seem to others to be monstrous and fantastic for they will not be mature enough to conceive of the whole truth. His worst enemies will be those from the cultic circles who are lost to their heresies and all sense of reality. Jmmanuel tells Meier that he is aware of how people in his time wrongly believe him to be the personification of the Creation and "The Savior" because of deep spiritual darkness.

He warns Meier that many of these people will make attempts on his life. So, he must be watchful and protect himself from them. Their actions are always directed toward a fanatical demand for blood. Meier is also told to beware of his critics and those who believe themselves to be knowledgeable about all things and live for their own silly perceptions of the world. Outwardly, they appear to be very educated, but inwardly, they are poor in spirit, ignorant, and full of evil thoughts. During Meier's time, all human unreasonableness and cultic heresies reach their height of power.

When Meier tells Jmmanuel about him being called Jesus Christ in the New Testament, he says that this is a false name and an evil abuse because, until that time, that name has never been spoken. Only at a later time, will that name be originated by a human being with a confused spirit. The Paulus is one of his worst enemies for designating him as the Creation and using Christianity as the foundation for his own wrongful religion of Paulianity. Being named as Jesus Christ grieves Jmmanuel very much as he never wanted to be called this. This name will be spoken by mislead human beings who live in spiritual confusion and are unable to come to terms with the truth. However he knows that this is inevitable for human development as mankind must first go wrong in order to find the truth. Only truth-conscious individuals will call him by his correct name. He offers lessons of truth for all of eternity and performs no injustice by this. But, when someone refers to him as Jesus Christ, they are accusing him of injustice and lies.

Many will not believe this because their understanding about the truth is incorrect. They will say that these are only half truths that only serve to find the real truth. This is true when all things are considered as many ways do lead to the truth. But, what is offered is the truth in the truth. This truth does not lead to the truth, but is the eternal truth. It can never be altered and always keeps the same worth. It is the final, existing, and eternal truth for all periods, whereas religious truths are changed constantly.

Meier asks if it is proper for people to celebrate his birthday as Christmas. Jmmanuel says that many feasts are celebrated in honor of important people who have died. However, this is no more than a cult function, and a means to enrich a few others. Honor should be given to those worthy of it and to preserve the memory of those who have passed on. It should never be given in the form of religious cults or for riches. The Christian religion is interspersed with many kinds of heresies and falsehoods about his birth. His birth is celebrated on the 24th of December each year, but it is actually the day of a blood-thirsty false deity from Persian lands and does not even come close to his date of birth. The future counting of time does not correspond with reality or of his time of birth. From Meier's understanding of time, Jmmanuel's date of birth was the third day of the second month. This date was changed because of wrong transmissions, false conceptions, and the novelties within the counting of time.

Meier asks why Jmmanuel often uses the word, "Truly" when he speaks and is told that it is used to substantiate his words. It is only a peculiarity, just as everyone speaks with different expressions. By interspersing this word, he is able to bypass many descriptive words that would need long interpretations. So, he uses "Truly" to mean, "It is as I say", "It is the truth", "It really behaves so", and "It keeps its integrity".

Jmmanuel notices how much Meier is educated in spiritual matters and that he lives ahead of his own time by about 300 years. Because of this, he is told that he will suffer greatly in his time because humanity's spiritual knowledge will be at its lowest beginnings. Meier asks Jmmanuel how far ahead that his spiritual knowledge is in relation to his time and is told that he lives in Meier's future time. He states that his spiritual development is 2,000 years ahead of his time and that Meier is 300 years ahead of his time, which makes them both at about the same level of development.

Jmmanuel also says that, during Meier's time, he will not be active on Earth as he is in the year 32, but that he will occupy himself with other missions that will not cause him to become too far evolved so that he can remain close to earthy concerns. At the time of his rebirth in the 20th century Jmmanuel will have a spiritual evolution level of only 128 years in advance of the world's time. But, with hard work during the next 20 years, this level will increase to 359 years in advance of his time and will eventually reach a level of 400 years when he leaves the earthly world and returns to another world.

Meier asks Jmmanuel how his lessons should be presented when the New Testament says that he is the son of God, that God embodies the Creation, that God is the heavenly father and redeemer of mankind, etc. He is told that religion remains always wrong and only spirituality is truly justified. Religion and spirituality can only become united when the truth is purified again. Religion and spirituality can form a harmonic unit when dogmas and heresies have been removed and destroyed.

People of Meier's time already recognize this profound truth and seek to replace the wrong, purely religious facts with spiritual forms. But, their spiritual forces still stay at their infancy and they remain captured by cultic religions. They have much confusion and are unable to separate the wheat from the chaff. Unfortunately, they always search for the truth along wrong pathways and do not recognize that it lays much nearer to them then they assume. It will be very difficult to convince humanity of the truth. It will always be obtained by fighting.

Meier asks why Jmmanuel has not spoken at all with Asket who just sits nearby and listens to their words. He expresses concern that she might feel slighted and left out. Jmmanuel recognizes his feelings for her, but assures him that she is there in peace with the knowledge that they are all equal and that no one feels left out of their circle. She has brought Meier there into the past so that he could recognize the truth. She already knows it in great detail and needs no explanations. Asket agrees and Meier is calmed by this.

Jmmanuel says that their time for the present day is over and that he must go on his way, but they will meet again and speak further about many other things. Asket, Meier, and Jitschi follow Jmmanuel and his group. Jitschi had made friends with the followers of Jmmanuel and no longer cared about Asket and Meier. Unfortunately, the notes about all that occurred thereafter were lost and Meier was unable to recover them.

EXPLANATION of reactions to 6 days of time travels

After they had visited with Jmmanuel to witness the true events in the year 32, they returned to the current period of time for the last time and Jitschi became mad. He ran amok and began to hate religion as a pestilence. This was a man who, a week before, was a good Christian that believed in the redemption, God, and Jesus Christ. Because of Asket's insistence, much of what occurred during their time travels must be kept secret in order to hide truths that are too hard to bare and allow events to occur for the natural evolution of mankind. They concern things about Jmmanuel which have been wickedly falsified in order to cause a mass psychosis and create religions.

First Contact with Semjase on January 28, 1975

At 1:00 PM, Meier was occupied at home with trying to record "tape-voices", which is something that he had been unsuccessful at for the last two months. Suddenly, there was a force inside of him which caused him to hear a voice that slowly became understandable to him. The voice was very peaceful and familiar to Meier even though he had never heard it before. Suddenly, he understood the symbolic pictures and words, which told him to take a camera and leave the house. He did as he was directed without questioning or understanding why. The voice seemed like a soft coercion.

Meier got on his motorcycle and drove away. It seemed to him as though he was driving aimlessly, but was actually being guided to a certain place. He drove through the village of Hinwil, across fields, meadows, and forests until he reached an isolated area in the Frecht Nature Preserve. There was a large moving van parked on a small road near the nature preserve region with the driver nowhere in sight. Meier looked at his watch and noticed that it was 2:12 PM. Then, he heard a silent, yet familiar, peculiar stirring sound in the air so he looked up into the cloudy sky. He did not expect to see what he saw because Asket had told him that this would not occur for another year.

From out of the clouds, an object rapidly descended and reduced its speed considerably. It slowly curved along at about 350 meters above the forest. The stirring completely stopped and Meier was able to see its exact form. It was disk shaped with similar shapes on its top and bottom. However, the upper dome was somewhat larger than the base and was equipped with red, highly placed rectangles. Hastily, Meier seized his camera and took his first picture at 2:15 while the object was 150 meters away and flying about 150 meters above the ground. Then, the object rapidly sped away to the West and disappeared.

The stirring resumed once again and the flying object rapidly returned and hovered about 100 meters above the truck. Meier was standing 44 meters away from the truck as he took his second photograph at 2:18. Then, the object moved again and suddenly stopped at about 50 meters above the ground and beyond the truck. However, it appeared as though the object was in the foreground and the truck was much further away. He could see that the object was not an earthly flying machine, but an extraterrestrial vehicle of unknown origin. The lower side of the disk appeared to vibrate with little waves running continuously in and through the under side of the ship. The skin appeared to be damaged and old like a washing board. Solid matter seemed to dissolve in the radiation of the waves. The truck became difficult to see as it looked like it was suddenly enveloped in heat waves. Then, the object sped away and rapidly ascended toward the East, disappearing into the clouds. The newly heard stirring quickly faded away and tranquility returned.

Meier returned to his motorcycle, started it, and drove across the fields toward the edge of the East woods. He traveled about 250 meters into a large boggy clearing, got off his bike, and walked alone deep in his thoughts. He noticed the truck being driven away. While there alone, he noticed birds fighting and then they suddenly disappeared. He heard a dog barking and saw grazing deer suddenly run past him to a southern wooded area. A few minutes later, Meier heard the familiar stirring sound again and saw the object rush down from the clouds, then slowed its speed quickly over the woods. The sound died out again as the object curved down over the forest towards the clearing. Meier shot his third photograph of the object at 2:31 as it slowly descended. One minute later, he took a fourth picture from a distance of about 180 meters. Finally, the object touched gently down on the meadow of the clearing in complete silence.

Meier boldly walked toward the object in order to get a closer view of it, but at a distance of about 100 meters, he discovered a great power that stopped him. It was as if he were bucking the winds of a silent storm, so he just sat down on the ground and waited. In less than a minute later, a figure appeared from behind the object. It was obviously a human being, wearing a peculiar gray colored coverall suit that was very pliant and light. The suit was close fitting to the body, extremely durable, and the material resembled the skin of an elephant. Around the neck, there was a ring which evidently served for the mounting of a helmet.

This entity was a normal female human being with nothing that indicated super abilities, pretentiousness, or spirituality, although she was devilishly attractive. She also walked quite normally for a woman, yet somewhat stronger, more confident, and graceful without being particularly dainty or trying to make any special impression. Slowly, she came near to Meier, seized him by his arm and pulled him up. Her grip was strong and sure, but also very pleasant and secure. With slow steps, they walked toward Meier's vehicle and sat down in the dry grass together. This extraterrestrial woman then began to speak in perfect German with a strange accent.

The woman stated that Meier is a fearless human being. She says she knows because she has studied him for years in order to make something clear to him. Meier asks if no one else is suited for that and is told surely, but they have selected him because he has already occupied himself for many years with their problems and he thinks sincerely in similar ways. Meier thanks her for the complement and asks her who she is. She says that she is called Semjase and she originates from the Pleiades. Meier is surprised by this and asks if she arrived here through hyperspace. She responds by saying that he often knows more then they desire, but they know that he can be trusted to keep silent about certain things and that his knowledge is in the right place.

Meier is told that he is to publicize the photographs that he has taken and that the way in which this is to be accomplished will be explained later. Meier expresses concern that someone may see her ship and he is told that no one can come nearer then 500 meters in circumference around her ship which is obscured by the hill and forest. Meier expresses regret about knowing why she is here and is told that nothing can change this or his future. Earth human beings have a long way to go for spiritual understanding. But, Meier has taken the trouble and has learned to find the truth and acquired knowledge. Because of this, he stands out from the great mass of humanity and this is why they have decided on him. Meier realizes that Semjase is not just speaking for herself and she asks that he keep silent about that. He agrees and Semjase says that she knows he will cooperate, even if forced to speak.

Semjase tells Meier that there will be no more questions and answers, that he is to listen carefully, write down everything that is said, and go to the public with it. She tells him that she will give him the thoughts of their conversation later so that he can write down everything exactly, word for word. It will be transferred in the same manner as Semjase was able to have Meier come to that location. She tells Meier to listen carefully and only interrupt when he does not understand.

For some time, they have been urged to make contact with another Earth human being that really and sincerely wants to be helpful to their mission. They have often tried this, but the human beings chosen were not knowledgeable enough, willing enough, or lacked sincerity and loyalty. All of those that they had selected for their endeavors, feared for their lives and kept silent about their contact. They stated that they would be abused for being thought to be insane, they might be harmed by human intrigues, and that they would be accused of lying.

There have also been many boastful people who pretend to have contact with them and have even claimed to have flown in their ships. They are nothing more than deceivers who sun themselves in dubious glory and profit. Earth humans have whole organizations that endeavor to explain their beamships. But, above all of this, there were a few that were really authentic. There are many photographs that expose nothing more than some lights or appearances of natural origins as well as deliberate falsifications. Very few of these photographs really show their beamships. Most photographs are deceitful creations manufactured by deceivers and charlatans whose names become known worldwide by this. Their books and manuscripts are also deceptive for purposes of elevating their reputations and obtaining self glory.

Others dare to connect their beamships with human religions, which they do not want to be associated with in any way or at any time. Human so-called sects do not shrink from this step and deceive their fellow human beings by such beliefs. These infamous and primitive machinations should stop before the whole world is overcome by it. If these deceivers were really in contact with them, and remained so, then they would have offered them the chance to get clear photographic proof of their beamships. But since they are not sincere humans, they have not given them this opportunity. For evidence of this fact of truth, they have given Meier the opportunity to take distinct pictures of one of their beamships. Later, they will offer him the chance to obtain still better and clearer photographic evidence.

Earth human beings call them extraterrestrials or star people or whatever they want. They associate them with supernatural things, but do not know them in the least. In truth, they are human beings like Earth human beings. But, their knowledge, wisdom, and technology is superior to that of humanity. Although Earth humans have taken their first very small steps toward cosmic space flight, these are no more than the first primitive attempts. Even though mankind has reached the moon with their missiles, it has not reached cosmic space. By using this method, humanity will never accomplish this for it requires a means of propulsion that is able to penetrate hyperspace and dissolve infinite distances. Space and time are not overcome by space and time, but by spacelessness and timelessness, which means that space and time collapse into one another and become equally directional to zero time. In this way, only a few fractions of a second are enough to rush through billions of light-years, practically without loss of time, because the zero time neutralizes space and time simultaneously.

Many deceivers pretend to be in contact with other planetary human beings of this solar system and have even claimed to have flown in their ships. That is false because most of the planets indicated are so desolate that human life is not even possible there. The other planets in this solar system have been long since devoid of life or are in the first stages of development. However, other solar systems have many kinds of life that are not only human. The animal and human forms of life are varied. Also, many animal forms and even plant forms of life have developed higher states of consciousness. So, there exists life that has acquired much knowledge and have freed themselves from their home worlds and traveled through the universe and have also come to Earth. Many of them are rather nasty contemporaries and live in a certain barbarism than exists on Earth. Mankind ought to be on its guard because these entities often attack and destroy anything that gets in their way. They have destroyed whole planets or beaten their inhabitants into barbarous bondage. It is one of their missions to warn Earth humans of these creatures. Meier is told to let this be known to humanity because more and more time approaches when a conflict with these entities will become unavoidable.

A further mission is aimed at Earth's religions and the associated underdevelopment of the human spirit. Above everything, there remains only one that possesses the power of life and death over each creature. This is the Creation, which has laid its laws over all. These laws are irrefutable and of eternal validity. Human beings can recognize them in nature when he troubles himself to do so. They expose for him the way of life and the way of spiritual greatness, embodying the goal of life. While the human indulges in his religions, and by this a heresy, he passes more and more away until he finally reaches a bottomless abyss.

Humanity should realize that a God can never take over the part of the Creation or destine the fate of a human being. A God is only a Governor and moreover, a human being who exercises a powerful reign of tyranny over his fellow creatures. God is not the Creation, but is only a creature of it like all Creation-dependent creatures. But, Earth humans hunt for their religious wrong beliefs and affirm God as the Creation itself. They go even further and pretend that a normal Earth human by the name of "Emmanuel", who is also called "Jesus Christ", is God's only son and the Creation itself. Different sects of the modern time go on to maintain these same things, which approach delusion.

Yet, as mentioned before, beamship deceivers also walk in the same direction. They put out the lie to the world that extraterrestrials would come at the order of God, as angels or similar, to bring Earth humans the long hoped for peace and truth of religion with the protection and order of God. That is nothing more than a well-considered falsehood from sectarians and deceivers, for they have never had such orders and they would never do that. The Creation itself gives the commands because it embodies the greatest power in the universe and it is never in need of commands or religions. Religion is only the primitive work of human beings in order to lead, suppress, and exploit those who are spiritually deficient. Meier is told to bring this truth to the light of the world and make it known. This is a further part of his mission. If this does not happen, then mankind will slowly destroy itself and fall into complete spiritual darkness.

They know that he is aware of a secret old scripture. The originals were unfortunately destroyed by the carelessness of their commissioner, who was Meier's friend, and who by regret has failed in fear. He is told to diffuse and spread the translation of this scripture, because it is the only one which is the authentic truth. They know he also writes about this scripture and the truth. They consider it to be the most important book to be written. But, its language will be harsh and will be met with hatred. It only offers the truth to Earth humans, though some speculations are in it. It is finally able to destroy, for many, the madness of religion or at least temper it very deliberately. It is an extraordinary piece of work that Meier ought to make accessible for humanity.

Semjase says that this is the first time that Meier has been told all that is necessary, but it is not enough. Many further contacts will follow after this and she will call him at a given point in time. She will also use telepathy to transfer further information. She assures him that she will do this at a suitable time and only when he wants it. She says that she will always direct herself to him with respect to his character and desire for independence. The time will come when they will meet in her beamship and fly through cosmic space. This will not be possible at their next meeting because of certain circumstances and regrettable occurrences. She will inform him about this at a later time in detail.

Semjase tells Meier to live well until their next meeting when she will give him further important information. At that time, the conversation will no longer be so one-sided as it was then when she had so much to explain to him. In the future, the conversation will be quite normal with questions and answers. She says that she will see him again and, until then, she bid him farewell. She re-entered her ship at 3:51 PM.

Meier noticed that the bottom and sides of the ship appeared to merge together in strong heat waves that seemed to dissolve the environment. The trees and everything else changed into different colors. Distances seemed to alternate and everything gave the impression of being distorted. There was an absolute clearness of a blue-red radiation around the ship. Meier took more photographs of the ship from about 185 meters away. The ship turned away and flew over the top of three fir trees before withdrawing into the sky toward the North. Then it stopped and Meier took his last photograph at 4:00. Seconds later, the stirring sound began again and the ship shot straight upwards into the cloudy sky before disappearing from view.

Chapter 3 EDUARD ALBERT MEIER

Meier - thinking capabilities 02/03/75 2.1-17

Semjase tells Meier that she was astonished by how receptive he was to her thoughts. Even though his thoughts are often very extreme, they are focused and find solutions for problems which others are unable to do. Semjase was surprised that he did not ask any questions during her explanations at their first meeting. She considers his way of thinking to be enormous and phenomenal as he is able to think in all forms desired. His spiritual knowledge and wisdom are decisive.

However, Meier does not like to be praised and flattered as he believes that to be very primitive. He asks her not to do that anymore. But, Semjase did not want to praise or a flatter him as they have been over such things for a long time. She only intended to make clear statements of fact. When Meier asks if he should give an apology for his comments, he is told that apologies are empty words that seldom offer real opinions. She has not taken offense by his words because she knows that he only says what he truly feels.

Semjase is also pleasantly surprised by the way in which Meier will suddenly disengage from a subject that is uncomfortable for her and appreciates his unselfishness without egotism. When Meier tells her to not make him out for being better then he actually is since he does have an ego, Semjase says that his egotism is only a form of play that deceives others from exploiting him. Again, he begs her to stop talking about him.

Meier studied thoroughly by the Plejaren 05/20/75 20.52-61

Meier is told that they have studied all aspects of him for years and tested his spiritual abilities. They know that he possesses extraordinarily good intuitive senses. When Meier says that her compliments made him feel like a superman, Semjase asks why he said something that was not true. He states that it was meant as a joke because he felt embarrassed. He often describes these feelings as having flowers thrown at him, which makes him feel stupid, foolish, and like a poor little wretch.

Semjase speaks about the character of Meier 05/20/75 20.62-91

Semjase says that his unpretentiousness goes too far because there are numerous other humans that boast about themselves when it is not suited. He does not give himself any special prominence according to his importance in relation to others. This causes others to have a wrong impression of him. He even withdraws from comparisons of his experiences and does not take credit for them. Meier is ordered to confess his abilities and not try to hide in anonymity. He must accept the fact that he is a hero, even if he does not want to. He responds by saying that he does not like what he has been told. He is not interested in showing off about anything and finds this to be disgusting and foolish. He does not care about what others think about him. Semjase realizes that Meier is very upset by this and decides to speak further to him in private.

Meier's character 05/27/75 21.27-30

Semjase tells Meier that he is very intuitive. He says thank you for the flowers, but others are not very impressed. She says that he occupies himself too much about self judgments and he responds by saying that he is only human and deliberates about many things. She says that he should not do it because his judgments about himself are far below his spiritual abilities. Meier asks her not to always throw gardens of flowers at him because he does not want to cultivate them.

Meier's abilities to ascertain truth 09/14/75 34.238-251

Meier asks Semjase to find out if a certain spiritual medium is genuine. He is told that she could do this, but that he is able to find the truth himself since he is as experienced as she is at this, from his training by Sfath and Asket. When he says that he is unable to get close to the medium, Semjase suggests that he confidentially contacts someone that he trusts from the medium's group and offer him the chance to clear up any doubts about the person. But, because he has been ordered by Sfath and Asket to keep the formula for finding the truth secret, he asks if he is now able to reveal it. He is told that the prohibition is only valid for those who go astray from the truth.

Meier's abilities 12/03/75 39.19-32

Semjase tells Meier that, because of his work with Arahat Athersata and Petale, they are allowing him time to recover. Meier laughs and says that he can bear a lot. Semjase says that she does not doubt that, but he should not have to exhaust his last reserves. For many long years, he has always given more, and demanded more from himself, than was suited for him. He has traveled to 43 lands on the Earth and has been relentless in his explorations. He has often robbed his forces to the point of exhaustion. Another Earth human might have broken from that. When he says that he does not understand her growth in sentiment, he is told that he is more important than ever now and he still has much work to perform. This work will be arranged according to his strength so that he does not exhaust himself. This has nothing to do with sentimentality.

Meier says that he is no molly-coddle and he is told that nobody has said that about him. But, he is often too hard on himself. Because of that, he must leave it to them as to how much work they can burden him with. Judging from his hesitations, he might not be able to fulfill his mission. He always wants to perform everything very correctly and thoroughly. They have never burdened him with more than has seemed to them to be bearable. But now, he really needs some rest in order to recuperate himself. This is something that they are better able to judge. Meier says that he will have to dance to the music that is played for him and Semjase says that surely, he will not be able to do anything else.

Meier should address needs of family 09/22/76 63.26-45

Meier is reminded that his children are growing and need many more things than before. He is urged to pay more attention to such matters. He says that he knows this, but he cannot make wages from his mission. Semjase says that he should not care about such things. Others will assist him very willingly. He only needs to allow this to be done for him. Semjase believes that it is the development within his family, which requires much more notice by him. Conditions are starting to be much better and faster paced then their analysis of probabilities showed. She asks him to convey her heart-felt wishes to his wife and many thanks.

Meier - burial directive 01/07/76 42.54-57

Meier asks what the best way is to dispose of a body after death; cremation, burial, or elimination as is done for Plejaren. He is told that elimination may be possible on Earth, but Earth burial has been the natural way since ancient times. There is nothing wrong with elimination when certain fluid forces are negated. These forces can remain in the body for hundreds of years or until the skeleton is deteriorates. They can be of importance to the descendants for posterity. Meier decides to have his body buried when he dies as he does not like cremation.

After your death we have fulfilled our mission 01/27/76 43.94-96

Arahat & Petale will discontinue their messages 01/27/76 43.97

Meier is urged to find a suitable inheritance of his work so that, after he dies, the value of the transmitted lessons are not forgotten and so they ultimately accomplish their objective. He is asked to find knowledgeable persons to whom he can entrust to distribute and preserve all of the lessons and other valuables so that they continue when it is his time to finish his Earthly life. This must be done because after his death, they will have fulfilled their mission here and will return to their home world. Also, Arahat Athersata and the Petale sphere will discontinue their messages from that point in time and will no longer maintain contact.

Meier - knows when & how he will die 02/03/77 72.29-39

Meier's spirit on Earth for 25 million years 05/27/76 53.

Meier knows Semjase many thousands of years 04/27/76 51.

Meier knows how and at what time he will leave, unexpectedly and not assumed by others, from his life on Earth. This cannot be revealed, nor can the time when he reincarnates on Earth be revealed. This is to prevent others from making an idol of him, if the dates were known. However, it is allowed to be known that, after 800 years, he will again be the center of his innermost group, as it exists today and will also exist then. He wants to perform his mission until its end. He will not be able to stay, during the next few millenniums, for more than 2,000 years. He will incarnate in rapid sequence several times at different places on Earth in order for him to fulfill his mission with other nations and races of the world. Meier's spirit has incarnated on Earth as a human being for the last 25 million years and he has been acquainted with Semjase for many thousands of years.

Group finds Meier's writing style too harsh 05/20/75 20.32-50

Meier asks Semjase for her opinion about a pamphlet that he has written and tells her that members of his group have found his writing style too harsh and open to be well received by readers. One of them said that readers would be shocked by it. After reading it, Semjase said that she finds nothing that she could not agree with or anything that she would consider too harshly written. Quite the contrary, she found the words to be well chosen, the style to be pleasing, and it is factual. Facts of truth are important and these include names. It would not be adequate for pretty sentences to be used.

The truth can only be described with clear facts and not by indirect phrases or long speeches. From the beginning, that type of writing is destined to fail. This is something that many other tellers of truth have had to experience. Their indirect phrases and long speeches evoked the wrong impressions and consequently, all that they presented became misinterpreted, not taken seriously, and led to new heresies. Under the circumstances, Semjase considers his style to be correct and advises his critics to realize their mistake.

They find his writing offensive because they still have not found the truth in its basic form. They defend their criticisms with misunderstandings of love, justice, and creational laws as opposed to the reasonable use of force under natural laws by announcing spiritual and creational truth accordingly. Their minds are still based too much on the worldly and are intent on maintaining their reputations. Although they like the truth, to represent it clearly, is quite another thing.

They are neither interested in having a global organization sensor their information or in swamping all of humanity with the truth right away because such things are not of use for their mission here. Small groups are sufficient, if their members remain dedicated to the truth. Through small groups, the truth becomes diffused and will eventually be seized by mankind. Meier is only providing the basic ground work. His group can only be assured of receiving the truth when clear words are used, even if they express the hard truth. This insures that there are no doubts, heresies, or wrong opinions that would undermine the meaning of what is basically important.

It is advised that further pamphlets should be written in this same format. To do otherwise, would only be damaging. The group's members ought to consider the truth in its hardness and defend it. The truth is hard and can never be exposed with soft words. They should calmly deliberate the lessons of truth by ancient true prophets that were much harder expressed than is the case in the pamphlet. The truth is never heard with delight, but is condemned with a vengeance. This was the experience of previous prophets, who often had to give their lives for it, and the same will occur in the present and future as well. Meier is asked to make this known to the group's critics so that they can learn the logic from it.

Meier notices that the automatic writings of the contact notes are different then when his and Semjase's thoughts are exchanged between each other. He states that, during the transmission of the contact reports, he has often had difficulties in writing them down fast enough because she dictates continuously without ever repeating a single word. The report transmissions reach into his consciousness as though he were experiencing the conversation once again.

He says that sometimes, it seems as though her thoughts were coming from a machine, like a tape recorder. So, he determines that Semjase does not personally perform the transmissions, but instead, allows a machine to retrieve her subconscious memories and transfers them to him. He assumes that she is not capable of recalling previous conversations, word for word, but that the subconscious never forgets anything. Semjase is surprised that he has determined this correctly on his own. She is horrified by this and is puzzled about what to do about it. She says that it may be dangerous for Earth humans if he were to tell about his deliberations openly in certain circles because the scientists and others of this world are not mature enough for it. The scientists might use this knowledge to subjugate all of mankind within only a few hours and destroy them. They would make themselves as gods and do exactly what they are endeavoring to prevent.

Semjase says that she will have to seek the council of others so that their high council can make a decision on whether to eliminate certain things.

Meier becomes alarmed about the possibility of having part of his memory erased and says that he will not stand for it. Semjase tries to calm him by saying that he would not feel anything or be injured in any way. She says that their technology is so precise with absolute sureness, that he would neither be able to do anything to prevent it or feel anything at all. But, Meier said he would know that something would be missing inside of him and threatened to no longer fulfill his mission if this were to happen to him.

Semjase says that no one wants to endanger their mission or hurt him in any way. She assures him that there will be no elimination of his memories if he agrees to never tell anyone what he knows. But this enrages Meier because they should know he can be trusted to keep secrets without menacing him with an elimination of his memory. Semjase explains that the elimination was only intended so that he would no longer be in danger. Then, no one would be able to extract the knowledge out of him, even by force, which is something that must be considered. It is possible for this knowledge to be elicited from him by force without his consent, which causes a measure of insecurity.

Meier suggests a third possibility. First, he asks how long it takes to cause an elimination to occur after he has given a telepathic order to do so and is told less than 4 minutes. He says that he will retain his knowledge unless a situation is forced upon him to reveal his secrets and then he will send his thoughts toward her to have an elimination rapidly occur. Semjase says that this is a good solution that solves her many troubles. She will tell his proposal to the others and offer it to their high council, who will surely agree to it.

Meier critical of conversations being omitted 05/28/75 22.15-17

Meier notices that the transmission of the reports did not include their parting words and personal comments that were not of a secret nature. He asks if this could be changed. Semjase says that she will do this, if he desires it. She had made the omissions in order to avoid burdening him with too much work. For the private and other things that do not belong in the reports, she will transmit them simply as an annex. Meier says that he does not mind the added work and Semjase says that she is happy to comply with his wishes.

High Council has agreed to Meier's suggestion 25.11-13

Semjase was ordered by the High Council to inform Meier that they have agreed to his suggestion and there will be no elimination of his memory regarding certain things, unless he gives permission to do so. His compromise has found large agreement and it was decided that this was the best way.

Meier's new typewriter 02/25/76 45.166-168

Meier announces that he was given a new electric typewriter and that it was much easier to work with since he had to press each key strongly with his prior one.

However, he was not yet as fast with the new machine as he was with the previous one and asked if Semjase could transmit the reports a bit slower. He is told that this was not possible because retardation elements are not built into the transmitter and transmission emitters. But, she says that, with sufficient practice, he will soon type faster with the new machine. She was very delighted that he had so much relief with the new instrument.

Meier's writing style and transmissions 11/10/76 66.222-223

Meier and group write similarly 11/12/76 68.59-60

Semjase explains why the contact notes are written in Meier's own style of writing. She says that this is a consequence of his conversion of the symbolic picture transmissions into word values that are expressed in his own manner of speaking and writing. Meier expressed concern that others will not understand this and that they will think what is written does not directly correspond to the actual spoken words. Semjase assures him that they are, in spite of his style. However, she can give no advice about those who cannot conceive of this method. She and many others in his group, accommodate themselves to his way of speaking.

3.1.2 Meier's Mission

Semjase informs Meier he is the prophet 03/26/75 10.266-270

Semjase says that the truth has become very rare because of the heresies of religions. Meier agrees with her and says that the truth is not desired here. She tells him to not be grieved about it because the spiritual evolution of Earth human beings cannot be stopped. She says that he should assist in that process and spread the truth because he is the prophet of current times. Meier asks how that could be and how he could possibly do that. He expresses concern that it is too much to expect from him. When Semjase tells Meier that it is destined for him and that it has been prophesized in the Talmud, he is surprised and says that this is crazy. She says that nothing can change this destiny and Meier says that he must give this a lot of consideration. He does not know if he can accommodate himself to this. Semjase assures him that he will because it is his destiny.

Meier has finished writing his book 02/08/75 3.1-4

When Meier has finished his book, Semjase tells him that it is a great piece of work. Even though it may be harsh, it corresponds to the right style and it is understandable to read. But, Meier is concerned that publishers will reject it. Semjase assures him that human beings will pay attention and have his work printed. He says that he hopes so and that it would please him very much.

Meier's mission, publishing book sooner 02/16/75 5.1-8

When Meier has his book published sooner than anticipated, Semjase states that she is pleased about it and that they have no objections. He says that he could tell this will require a lot of work and he has begun the difficult preparatory work. Semjase agrees with him and says that they want to leave all decisions about this up to him. He thanks her for the confidence in him, but asks if they expect too much from him. She responds by saying that no one could expect too much from him because he always gives his best efforts to obtain the best outcome. When Meier says that she flatters him, she says surely not, as it is just the truth.

Meier exhorted to begin his mission 03/21/75 9.213-260

Five weeks later, Semjase says she knows that he has undertaken the task of distributing their contact reports and other things, but regrettably, this is not enough. Meier is asked to form a group that would occupy itself intently with these matters.

For the last two weeks, his efforts have not been as successful as they had expected. This is not his fault, but their fault because they allowed themselves to be deluded into trusting the loyalty and love of truth of certain individuals. Unfortunately, they are more imprisoned by their religions than they had calculated. Since they did not want to penetrate into their deepest secrets, their devotion to religions evaded their detection. Thus, it has become necessary for him to undertake new ways to diffuse the truth.

Meier says that this is easy for her to say. He asks what he is supposed to do when he is a stranger to the field and have no relationships with anyone. He has no idea about how to reach the public. Semjase assures him that all of those who are searching for the truth will not be blind and dumb. They will recognize the value of his information. She tells him to not worry that he is unknown in the field and that he should concern himself with obtaining good friends that want to help him in this matter. Such friends already wait for him. With their help, reach the newspapers, magazines, TV, and radio stations. They can also help to arrange for meetings, lectures, and public addresses. She says that he should do everything possible to enlighten humanity.

Meier says that she demands too much from him. He expresses concern about presenting himself to the world where he feels helpless against the intrigues of authorities and others. Although some people would listen to him, others often fear the truth and know how to suppress it by all wicked means. He admits to being afraid of this as well as of those who would ridicule him and accuse him of lying. In addition, he fears that newspapers, radios, and authorities will publish completely distorted and false information about him, which would not be beneficial to their mission.

Semjase says that she understands his arguments completely. She asks him to consider an old proverb that says, "No soup is eaten while it is hot". Of course Meier and his friends will be made to look ridiculous and ridiculed. But, while this happens to one or more people, there are still other friends who can continue the necessary tasks. Meier responds by saying that this works only when these friends are really true friends. True friends, who will stay with you during misery, are hard to find. In addition, there is the problem of finances because, what is called for, requires a lot of money.

Semjase responds by telling him to not worry about having good friends, for she has already mentioned that they are already waiting for him. They are such good friends that they will endure all unjustified ridicule and even be amused about it. The lies, criticism, and ridicule represent only a barrier that is raised by spiritually poor and ignorant people in order to cover their own stupidity because their own knowledge does not suffice to enable them to conceive of the truth. Truth and knowledge is horrifying to them. Together with his friends, he will never be alone. In addition, Semjase assures him that she will always be with him and he can talk with her whenever he wants to. However, she will deliberate about his problems and consult with others so that they can offer him advice. But, it is solely up to Meier to determine how best to proceed and form a suitable group of friends that will serve their mission.

In regards to financial concerns, she tries to assure him by saying that she will assist him with crystals and precious minerals, but Meier says that such things are forbidden by law and he would be accused of deceit and quackery. Semjase admits that she is unaware of any problems. However, as an alternative, she offers to bring him crystals and rocks from other planets for him to sell as trinkets. But, Meier explains that it would also be against the law for him to sell things as coming from other planets without proof. In addition, the authorities would certainly confiscate everything in order to analyze them and he would surely never see them again. Semjase finds this surprising and illogical. As a solution, she will bring him crystals and precious rocks that are found on Earth and cannot be detected as coming from anywhere else. This calms Meier and he decides to deliberate about this further to ensure a viable solution.

Semjase states that the members of Meier's group do not know how to grasp the spiritual concepts. Although they are willing to proceed spiritually, they do not know the way to go about it. So, she orders Meier to pay special attention to helping them with this. Because they are both at the same level of spiritual evolution, she leaves it up to him to explain the basic factors that will enable them to conceive of spiritual concepts and labors. However, she recommends that he records his explanations verbally and then writes them down. She suggests that he does this with all of his lectures.

Meier says that he would be happy to do this, but he is surprised by Semjase's sudden change in her perception of the group. She explains that she had been mistaken about the true intentions of the group because she had only collected superficial experiences and did not penetrate deeper, since each person has secrets which should be preserved. Meier asks if the superficial impulses of people represent their actual conscious thoughts which are able to suppress other thoughts that are not as strongly expressed. When she says this is correct, he states that he finds it illogical that she has not considered that the consciousness is the regulating apparatus for learning and thinking processes while the subconscious embodies the registering computer. The thoughts in a person's consciousness may not necessarily conform to the knowledge or desires in the subconscious, where the spirit is firmly established.

Semjase says that he is correct and that his explanation is worthy of honor. She also admits that her actions were illogical because she operated from the wrong premise that the conscious thoughts of Earth human beings represented their true intentions. Meier says that he understands what she has said, but doubts that others will. He believes that she meant to say that she had the wrong premise that the conscious thinking of Earth humans repeats what the consciousness and subconscious have generated together for thought. When she agrees with his interpretation, he says that humanity is too spiritually enslaved by religions and materialism to understand such spiritual explanations. Semjase says that she did not consider this because she had forgotten that others did not have the same spiritual development that he has.

Meier asked if he failed a mission 05/15/75 18.141-143

Two weeks later, Semjase says that, although Meier agreed to do what he was asked to do, she could not see any progress. She asks if he has failed in this regard. He explains that many things have come together in order for him to perform his task thoroughly. He has completed the necessary preparations and only requires that he give the information to the others of his group. This calms her because she wanted this matter to be completed before she departed for a long time. She will remain in telepathic contact with Meier while she is away.

Meier rebuked for not beginning his lessons 06/16/75 25.14-25

During this contact, Meier was reminded that he had promised to give lectures about enlightenment, beginning that month. Semjase says that he has done nothing to organize these lessons. Meier agrees that he has failed at this and says that he needs help. She tells him that he must overcome all obstacles and accomplish this task because some matters have become urgent. If he cannot get help from his group members, then he must do whatever is necessary himself because enlightenment has the highest priority. It is no longer sufficient that he spreads his knowledge with only his group and other interested circles because the time has come for the broad public to become informed.

Meier is told that this has become urgent. Even if he has prepared a lecture, it must now be changed to include certain other facts. The most important fact regards the ozone, which is rapidly becoming destroyed. He must also include this fact in a pamphlet and distribute it. This must be told to the newspapers, television, and in every possible way. In addition, the fact that the atomic menace has increased in huge measure again must also be included in his lecture.

Meier responds by saying that others are offended by what he writes down on paper. They complain that it is all from his imagination and that it is too harsh. In addition, he is always being asked silly questions like, why the Plejaren do not assist him financially. He states that sometimes he really wants to weep because he finds such things just too damned unreasonable. Several times he has thought about throwing it all away and taking up any daily work. Then, he will loose his financial sorrows and he will not have to be troubled with illogical questions.

Semjase tells him that the performance of his mission is his decision. If he wants to retreat, this would be bad for his fellow humans. He is free to decide without any coercion from them. But, he should consider that it is up to him alone whether mankind is provided with a great advantage and is able to walk a better way, or not. She knows that he feels like each human should fend for themselves, but she asks him to consider that only very few humans on Earth have similar abilities and the courage to face facts. As a human being, it is his duty to spread his knowledge and help his fellow human beings. She reminds him that he knew from the beginning that his mission would be difficult.

When Meier tells her that it is easy for her to talk, she says that she can see he is angry over the lack of help provided and the illogical comments directed at him. But, there is no need for him to be angry when he recognizes that his fellow human beings are far behind him spiritually and they have much to learn. Human rage occurs when laws and other things exist and are broken. Ignorance should not incite rage in him as it offends against the laws. Meier is cautioned to calmly consider everything very thoroughly before coming to a negative decision. He should think about the fact that mankind is in need of his help and that he is able to help more than any other human.

Meier is the first human chosen in 2000 years 06/16/75 25.42-47

For 2,000 years, no one has been chosen for contact by a very high spiritual entity and has had important information transferred to him as is the case with him. He should consider how important he is to the Plejaren and to high spiritual beings such as Sfath and Asket. He is the first prophet of current times and the most important person of his world for he is the basic way-preparer in these times. He is asked to endure the very difficult preparations for truth-announcers who will come after him. He should consider everything very thoroughly before coming to a decision that has only been raised in anger.

Former prophets became enraged 06/16/75 25.48-69

They are very aware of the rage in the Earth human beings for they have always had problems with it in them. Many prophets were agitated with rage because of the lack of intelligence and reasonableness of their fellow beings. Often, they needed this rage in order to fulfill their mission. But, he should be reasonable because his follow creatures are simply ignorant. In regards to the illogical questions about financial aid, it is suggested that Meier should respond with the fact that they have no similar goods or money as on Earth. They will never manipulate games of chance as they consider them to be excessive and evil endeavors. They will not be challenged by the talk and questions of Earth humans. They are here to fulfill their own voluntary obligation of helping in the development of humanity and do not take orders from Earth human beings.

Humanity must trouble itself to contribute its share of the work by undertaking voluntary duties and bearing certain things by themselves. It is wrong for them to think that they can just take their goodwill and help without contributing anything as well. Earth humans must learn that their selfishness and limitless egotism is not called for and provides no justification. This contribution now includes the supply of all necessary capital and labor. Giving and taking must be joined together into a unit. When humans think that it is more blessed to take than to receive, then they will not free themselves from their evil egotism. Meier responds by saying that this was damned clear.

Meier is told that he is now allowed to disclose the reports that he wrote in 1964 about his contacts with Asket. He says that they have been well preserved and that he has just been waiting for permission to reveal them. Meier asks Semjase if she knows Asket very well. She says that, after concluding the contacts with him in India in 1964, Asket communicated with the Plejaren High Council which resulted in relations being established and rapid cooperation.

Plejaren obtained higher technology 07/17/75 31.91-100

With the assistance of Askets race from the DAL universe, the Plejarens received highly advanced technical knowledge. This enabled them to construct great spacecraft known as Greatspacers, which they have had in use for the last four Earth years. Her race had mastered the ability of traveling great distances in their ships for more than 700 years. In earthly counting of time, Asket's race is 350 years ahead of the Plejaren in technical abilities. They assisted the Plejarens with very important concepts and acquisitions which enabled the construction of the Greatspacers.

Meier says that he now understands the connection and asks Semjase to give Asket his best greetings when she sees her again. When Semjase responds affirmatively with a smile on her face, Meier realizes that she is keeping something a secret from him and accepts it. He asks what the diameter is of the Greatspacer and is told that it is exactly 17,182 meters. Semjase notices that he is surprised by this and tells him to recover soon because he will still see many other things. Meier says that it has already happened.

During this same contact, Meier meets Semjase's father, Ptaah. At one point, when Ptaah reminds Meier that he already knows the concepts of hyperspace, Meier calls himself silly, old, and stupid. Ptaah tells him that he should not speak about himself in that manner because he has been astonished by Meier's extreme intelligence and logic abilities. Meier complains that Ptaah, like his daughter, throw whole gardens of flowers at him.

When Ptaah says that he should not be so modest, Meier says that he does not understand why he is given all of the compliments and has been called a great prophet. He takes offense to such talk because he does not believe that it applies to him. He says that he only reports what others tell him and he is not a prophet. He has turned away from Arahat Athersata because of such talk and he must deliberate if he will continue to write his reports. It is very strange for him to be considered as a great prophet, which he could never become. If he were to continue in this way, then others would inevitably accuse him of deceit, lies, and megalomania.

Ptaah says that it is very unfortunate that he has interrupted contact with Arahat Athersata. They were aware of this, but were unable to determine why since he is able to block their reading of his thoughts. His motives are now accepted and understood as simply not wanting to be considered as special and believing himself to be a normal human being. Ptaah says that they had made a mistake in not explaining to him about the position of a prophet. There is no fault with Arahat Athersata since he was unable to ask questions of Meier and determine the problem. They will endeavor to remedy this mistake, but it will take some time to be corrected.

In regards to Meier being a prophet, he must first acknowledge that his spiritual evolution is extraordinarily developed and very comprehensive. At the present time, he is the only person on Earth with such phenomenal knowledge and wisdom. This is partly due to the fact that he received great assistance from Asket and witnessed actual events in history by traveling into the past. On Earth, this is a uniquely special occurrence. He experienced time travels with Asket four years before the Plejarens accomplished this feat with the assistance of the DAL race. As a result, Meier must become conscious and offer understanding about his special status.

It is good that Meier is modest, but not too modest. Those who may accuse him of megalomania are ignorant, foolish, and primitive creatures. Although they have contacts with others on Earth, he is the only one with such knowledge and wisdom. He may reject the approval and respect of others, but must also acknowledge the stating of a fact. When Arahat Athersata designates him as a prophet, he is not only justified in saying so, but respects Meier for being the presenter of very important spiritual and epoch-making messages from a very high spiritual level.

Meier is called a prophet because his messages are of a prophetic kind. That designation is very justified because it does not identify him as being mighty over others. That impression is wrong and unfortunately, widely believed on Earth. The heresy of considering a prophet as a powerful person was caused by fanatics, charlatans, deceivers, and religious leaders for the express purpose of tightening their own control on Earth. Meier is told to not be affected by these heresies, which evoke wrong imaginations and impressions, and that he must correct this.

Meier is told that a prophet of current times must operate differently than in the past and not simply walk ahead of others, speaking mighty words of truth. For the present and future, there are many technical means available. Earth humans have mastered their written languages, which increases the ability to spread prophetic messages. Meier thanks Ptaah for the clear and extensive explanation. He understands and agrees completely. Semjase tells her father that whatever Meier says is what he truly believes. She says that he thinks fast and makes decisions quickly. When Ptaah says that he is astonished by this, Meier asks him to say no more about it and quickly changes the subject.

Later, during this contact, Meier meets Asket once again. (See section 6.4.4) Semjase tells him that he will be introduced to facts that are more than 470 years ahead of human development, but he is never allowed to share what he learns with anyone. Each form of life owns a certain span of life, which can be jumped over without much damage to evolution. Meier says that she must be mistaken He believes that the ability to leap ahead by 15 or 20 years in evolution would be very good help, but he expresses concern that a leap of 470 years would be an offense to the laws of creation.

Asket says that his modesty must know some limits. What he has said is unjustified self-humiliation that evokes feelings in her that are not delightful. She tells him that his modesty has degenerated into forms of self-humiliation which he should attempt to subdue. Not only must he agree that he denies his own spiritual development, but he must finally recognize that too much unpretentiousness and modesty results in an evil degeneration that will always demand a tribute. If he does not act quickly to correct these mistakes, he will not become suitable for his mission.

Asket says that they know he has many needs on Earth that are a result of his unpretentious and unselfish nature which can consume him. They know that he is being injured by his lack of basic needs. They are aware of the value of money on Earth, which is needed for survival. Other Earth humans expect wages for their work, but he works for free and even allows himself to be deceived. Each labor is worth its wages. Wages can consist of spiritual and material wealth. On Earth, material wealth is highly valued and provides for a high standard of living. Because of this, each amount of work must be rewarded in equal measure by material and spiritual values.

Meier is told that he must be able to nourish and provide for his family by this mission. By performing his mission, he is working just as others do. But, his work is greater and has the most worth. His labor deserves wages more than anyone else. He maintains contact with Semjase, writes down reports that are transmitted to him from her, Semjase and Arahat Athersata, and provides them to humanity as an offering of truth, knowledge, wisdom, and love. He works very many hours every day until near exhaustion without considering how to maintain himself and his family. His modesty and unselfishness were important traits that were needed for him to diffuse the transmitted knowledge and wisdom correctly without profit to his fellow human beings. He also has the necessary and sincere love of all forms of life, even though he wants to cover it with harsh words.

Asket says that too much modesty and unselfishness is his very dangerous enemy. He is not obligated to perform all labor just because he is the chosen one. Others may be initiated to assist with the reports. Each member of his group must trouble themselves to be helpful in order for their mission to be successful. It is impossible for him to fulfill his mission and work at another job in order to ensure his livelihood. Because of this, it is wrong for him to provide his services free of charge. He must assign a value to the reports and sell them for a profit. Only in this way will he be able to endure and also have a just reward for his mission.

Meier is told to work keenly to remove excessive modesty and unpretentiousness. They know that he has accommodated all financial concerns himself, which is worthy of much praise. But, if this is not his interest, then he should entrust the financial and materialistic concerns to a close friend to maintain for him. If Meier ignores this advice, then he will need to bring his mission to a halt, as occurred in India, within only a few months. That would be very detrimental to humanity as time is critical and world events demand the distribution of the truth. Meier is told to deliberate these words and behave accordingly.

Asket asks if the work by him and his group leads to an objective. She reminds Meier that many months have passed since his first contact with Semjase. This was useless time, during which, nothing of importance has been accomplished. A long time has passed for him and his group to prepare and appear before Earth's human beings. He cannot accomplish his mission with hollow discussions and disputes, for these bear no fruit. Their opinion that they should begin small is plain senseless and fruitless because it will never bring success.

The time has come for them to seize the initiative and appear in public. This is important along with the help of many further groups and communities. This publicity cannot be accomplished only by spoken words and letters to incite the meaning of their mission. They need a monthly newspaper that will explain many things to several people at one time.

In regards to Semjase's statement of Meier jumping over 470 years of evolutionary development, Asket says that he has already reached 500 years of spiritual evolution beyond Earth humans and he should recognize that fact. He is the only person on Earth that knows the truth and never strays from it or doubts it. Semjase agrees with Asket. Meier says that it is alright and he will correct his faults because he really wants to fulfill his mission. He also agrees to publish a monthly newspaper and sees the value in it. He says that he does not have the finances to do this, but he could print it himself if he had the necessary equipment. He also says that he is aware that all of his money will be gone within a few months if nothing else occurs. But, he does not know what else to do.

Semjase thinks that his idea of having a printing machine is very good. It would be extraordinarily helpful and accelerate the fulfillment of his mission. If his group members would help to procure it, then it would solve the problem. She says that they cannot tell him to buy the machine since they leave all such matters to his decision.

"We do not come to command you, but advise you" 07/17/75 31.327-337

They do not come to Meier to command him, but to teach him within certain matters and directions. They administer and cultivate matters, but leave it to him to accomplish himself. They cannot tell him the future, but tells him that, if he were to get the equipment, his life would be very hard and then slowly turn towards the better. With respect to helping him financially, they are only able to provide him with crystals and precious minerals that he can sell after offering them in his newspaper.

Asket suggests a newspaper and financing 07/17/75 31.A118-150

Meier says that this is clear to him, but he does not know if he can do anything. Asket tells him that, when he ends his great modesty and unselfish-ness in order to address life's problems, then he will be able to explain these things to his group. It is understood that this will not be easy because his group members are still dependent on materialism and do not understand why he alone can have contacts. This causes doubt in them that will be difficult to remove. Not even the photographic proof is sufficient for them and they all want to witness their ships. So, one last demonstration will be permitted. Anyone that is not satisfied with that should no longer be involved with the group.

It must be understood by all that they are highly developed forms of life that will no longer respond to the low level desires of Earth human beings. This is not pretentious of them, but a law of Creation. They may no longer move in consequence to those who are still very young, ignorant, and need self development. In obligation to Creational Laws, each world cooperates with the rest of the universe so that higher intelligences can come in touch with lower developed worlds in order to transfer certain facts. These highly developed forms of life call on Earth prophets, who are always persecuted and pursued.

Even today, the prophets on Earth are cursed and slandered as being deceitful, charlatans, and imaginative because people do not want to know the truth and prefer to live in false realities and materialism. Because of this, they can only communicate with an earthly human that will comply with their wishes and talk with them. Meier is the only one that satisfies their requirements. To insure that their messages are interpreted, accepted and evaluated properly, they originate from only one person. Because they will only communicate with him, they have no need or desire to have themselves become further realized.

Everything may be reported now 07/17/75 31.P383-386

Later, during this same contact, Ptaah tells Meier about other evil extraterrestrials that influence humanity on Earth. But, Meier says that Sfath and Asket told him about such things during his childhood with strong orders to remain silent about it. He asks if he must still keep silent about it and is told that he has permission from Asket to reveal everything now. This is permitted because the time is right for him to disclose what he knows and he is released from his obligation to remain silent.

Meier prepared a lecture on Plejarens 09/16/75 35.P1084-1131

Still later, during the 31st contact, Ptaah reminds Meier that Semjase has advised him several times to present his lessons to the public. He has prepared a lecture, but has not used it. They have provided him with the ability to take photographs of Semjase's ship and their travels together. But, he has not received any publicity with his lectures in fulfillment of his mission. Ptaah tells him that this is unacceptable and irresponsible of him. He is now in possession of a lot of photographic material which he must now use. Meier is told that it is his mission to organize everything and make it known to the interested public by giving lectures. This mission is of great importance. He undertook this mission as a prophet quite consciously and willingly and the time has come for him to fulfill his mission.

Meier tells Ptaah that this is easy for him to say. He explains that in regards to material issues, he is an absolute idiot and unsuited for arranging lessons himself. As a result, he has asked Hans Jakob to arrange the lessons for him, but this has not appealed to him. Hans always says that such lectures in public are not useful. Besides this, he is of the opinion that it would be harmful to their mission for him to speak negatively about other ufologists. He believes that pretty diplomatic expressions would be more effective than direct and open language. Although he is the right person to prepare everything, he will not do it.

Ptaah says that Hans will have to recognize that by himself. He is the best suited man to initiate the lectures and he should dedicate himself to this as this task has been allocated to him. Initially, the lectures could be arranged for increasingly wider publicity. If he will not do this work, than he must be excluded from the group and another person should be selected. It would be beneficial if other group members would perform lectures to smaller groups in order to increase the effectiveness of the whole group. If each member were to bring together a few friends, acquaintances, and family members for a small lecture, then progress would be achieved.

When Meier complains that he does not have the capital to cover the expenses for such undertakings, Ptaah suggests that an entrance fee be charged for the lectures. It is also recommended that donations be requested rather than a fixed amount. This form of exchange enables each person to give according to the value that the talk is determined to be. Meier thinks this is a good idea and agrees that this would enable him to avoid the temptation of drawing money away from the mission, which he feels is his greatest problem. Ptaah says that Meier must provide for himself and his family and suggests that he remembers how each work must be worth its earnings. Then, Meier is told that he must return to Earth now with Semjase. Ptaah says for him to live well and become just for his mission. They will meet again at another time. Meier is told to go in peace and love and remember that they will always be with him in their thoughts and otherwise as well.

Meier told to write down spiritual lessons 09/12/75 33.89-92

Semjase informs Meier that he is to write down many facts about the essential spiritual lessons after she transmits to him the remaining reports about their travels together. She says that the time has come for him to spread the spiritual lessons, which will mean a lot of work for him. Meier says that he has already accommodated himself to doing it.

Meier not lecturing 10/20/75 36.41-100

Meier asks what the term "telenotical" means and is told that it means telepathy. He calls himself stupid and Semjase says that he is not, but that he must always learn more as development demands this of him. He agrees and is told that there is something else that he must understand. Ptaah, Quetzal, and Semjase have all given him notice to give public lectures, but he has still not done so, which saddens them. This is very irresponsible of him after he had promised to do so. Semjase says that she does not understand why he does not keep his promise or even seem to care about it at all. She considers this to be an act of infamy. If he does not carry out his promise in the shortest possible time, she will have to interrupt contacts until he becomes conscious again of his task.

Semjase says that it has been decided that if he has not continued with his task by the end of next month, then all that has been done so far has been in vein. It appears that he has blocked his thoughts in order to deceive them. This still does not explain his lowly actions that Semjase would never have expected from him. She is very disappointed in him. Meier says that he regrets that very much and did not intend it to happen. Semjase says that this does not help them or his mission. So, he should deliberate very carefully and thoroughly. She says that he has until the end of next month and she will have no more contact with him until then so that he has time for reflection.

Meier says that her statements are justified. He has blocked his thoughts for privacy and does not know why he should make his thoughts known. He tells Semjase the she is nervous and disturbed because all is not clear to her. She asks why she should not be excited when there is danger of losing a good friend. He reminds her that he has said several times he is unable to organize a presentation. Someone else must arrange his lectures for him. He has already written the lectures, but has not done anything further because he does not know how to arrange them. This is simply not among his abilities.

Semjase suggests that he groom a member of his group to present the lectures as desired, but Meier says that the member in mind is not willing to present the facts in the harsh manner used by the Plejarens and wants to use more diplomatic language. Semjase insists on using strong language and consults Ptaah in the mother ship. Ptaah says that the truth, in its present form, cannot be spread to the great masses or to ignorant crowds of people. Only a few people are important to grow and develop in small circles. So, when the member speaks of us as not being objective, he only speaks for himself as not being objective.

By evaluating his arrogant words, it is obvious that he is not aware of our abilities to analyze people. It should be explained to him in great detail that they know him completely as being unable to make objective judgments. Because of this, he feels himself being attacked and hurt in many ways. Ptaah says that they feel love and warmth for all forms of life, but with him, they must be restrained and prepare him slowly for the love and warmth that he desires very much. To do that, he must first become conscious of the real love before he can expect it from others. If it is not given, he demands it without paying the necessary price for it.

Ptaah says that there are two facts which must be clearly transmitted. First, in no way must it be inferred that the belief in the church should be turned towards Meier, as he interprets it. He must become aware that such expressions have no basis in fact and that he should not say such things. In earlier times, good and duty-conscious human beings have been wrongly called saints, etc. He may be made aware that Meier only carries out the function of a new prophet to announce the truth.

Initially, the only factors which may be discussed are: the Creation, knowledge of the truth, the truth itself, universal love, wisdom and improvement towards the final goal and the spiritual lessons connected with it. Only Meier has that important role, being a mediator and transmitter, but never anything more. The second matter concerns making the man clearly understand that Meier has walked and endured his course of evolution with distinction and without suffering. He may also clearly understand that Meier has worked for his evolutionary jump for nearly 40 hard and troublesome years. Thus, it should be realized that the knowledge objected to by him was obtained by Meier through hard work and labor.

It is now up to him to decide whether to go his own way or dedicate himself to their concerns. They cannot and do not want to coerce him in any manner. He may still be aware that the warmth and love of which he has spoken, but unable to find, abundantly exists in all of them. They have voluntarily taken up this mission on Earth to transmit important information in warmth and love to Earth human beings in order to bring worthwhile lessons in knowledge and wisdom. They are obligated to doing this according to Creational Law.

Meier says that Ptaah's words will bring him pleasure. Ptaah says that he cannot praise the man when he has not merited it, even though he has expected it. He should realize that praise is not deserved. It must be explained that he needs to confront the matters of fact and not just hide his head in the sand. This may not be pleasant for him to hear, but this is all that Ptaah can do for him as he has other duties to attend to. He tells Meier to live in peace and that he was delighted to see him again. Meier says that it was his delight as well. Semjase tells him that she has been unjust to him and Meier says that he is not angry about it.

Semjase expresses her delight to Meier that he and his group are working so hard to prepare the lectures. The Plejarens will be as helpful as possible in these matters by giving impulses to certain people to get in contact with him. That will cause other groups to announce themselves and join his efforts. Some very important contacts should be found in this way as well.

Meier's mission 12/18/75 40.1-47

This was a thought transmission initiated by Semjase. She told Meier that she demanded to speak with him, even if it keeps him from his work. His situation for the last few days caused her to transmit her thought to him. They know that he bears a lot of feelings of sadness inside of himself and this pained her. Meier said that he enjoyed hearing her voice, which was soothing to him. He says that she is correct and that he had a big problem that he could not solve by himself. He had asked other people for their views and several women knew of his feelings. But unfortunately, their words were not able to change his feelings. She says that they are sincere human beings and very worthy of love.

Semjase confessed that she could not sleep with worries about him. She was able to penetrate his thoughts and feelings because he was no longer able to maintain his blockade while burdened by his problem. They wanted to help him, but were unable to do so. Meier's problem concerned his anti-materialistic nature of not being able to accept help and gifts from others while needing help in order to continue with his mission. Meier concludes that he is being silly and Semjase says that is not so. There are some important facts that he did not know and which could not be expressed in words. He says that this may be so, but asked that they no longer speak of it. He has really drawn his lecture from it. She says that she understands how this lesson has not been easy for him and that he has nearly broken from it. Meier says that what is past is past, but Semjase says that he is still not calm with his insides in an uproar. He says that everything will pass with time and he has already forgotten the misery. This pleases Semjase and delights Meier as well.

Meier announces that he has received new transmissions from out of the Petale sphere. Semjase says that she is aware that the spirit's lessons have been sent a bit earlier than was provided. He says that they are only basic lessons and that he should be able to write interpretations for them. She says that thorough explanations have been the work of every prophet. It is his mission as well to present the explanations in understandable language. Because of this, prophets are educated in great knowledge and wisdom. This mission is charged to him and the lessons are only transmitted to him to provide to Earth human beings. Meier realizes that this will require a lot of work and is told that this is why he has been prepared for existence without having to work for pay. The former event was necessary to occur as it had been foreseen.

Semjase says that the lost reports of his meeting with Jmmanuel contain lessons that Meier should interpret and explain. This is something that he has already begun with his "Genesis" book. This work will become less for him and unburden him so that he can undertake a new mission. Meier is pleased by this, but says that the others will be disappointed that the original reports will not be retransmitted. Semjase says that they are not of much importance. Only the lessons are important, which will be given to him by Petale. The reports from Asket would have lessons that would have been only partly stated.

The Mission - defined 01/27/76 43.98-121

Semjase says that the book that Meier is writing each month is judged by all to be very good. But, she asks what would happen if he were no longer able to write it. Evidently, no one else assists him or seems to care about it. It should be possible for it to be written without his help. She gets the impression that everyone takes his work for granted and no one else wants to contribute anything to it. Meier agrees with her and tells about someone that is too busy to help with corrections and says that Meier should do the work because he has the ideas for it. Semjase thinks that this is very silly and not very intelligent.

Semjase is also concerned that, although Mr. Jacob has done the corrections, he is not willing to spare any more time for this. Meier thinks that it is better for him to do the work himself than to trouble Mr. Jacob. She says that this opinion honors him, but he should not work all alone. His work is extremely important and everyone must do their best to not neglect any values. It is Meier's mission to preserve everything in proper script for all coming times while others undertake the mission of spreading it and helping in all other ways. Everyone can assemble like-minded people around them and form small groups to help. Meier agrees with her, but asks how he can change those who only want to take and not give. She says his friends can change if they intently occupy themselves with the values in the given lessons and find relief from wrong beliefs.

Meier's first lecture occurred on April 21, 1976 in Munich, Germany.

3.1.3 Plots against Meier

Meier is warned that he is being watched 07/15/75 29.28-32

Semjase says that evil entities work for strange powers to accuse Meier of espionage while others endeavor to deceive him in order to prevent him from disseminating the truth. These evil intending elements belong to religious circles, different secret organizations, the authorities, military, and individuals that want to suppress the truth and destroy it. These elements work against him because with the dissemination of the truth, people could become convinced of deceit. Meier responds by saying that she gives him fantastic hopes. He had assumed such things because of earlier experiences. But, he says that he does not become excited by such things.

Abduction attempts 09/12/75 33.5-30

Meier had seen a UFO on three different occasions. It was not a Plejaren beamship, but a small spacecraft that belonged to the rather unkind Gizeh Intelligences. They are very interested in taking control of the Earth for themselves. They endeavor to disrupt the Plejaren mission and even attempt to terminate it. They are a very great danger to Meier. For months, they have been interested in abducting him in order to prevent him from revealing the truth. They know his background and his mission as a prophet to bring back true spiritual lessons. This is a great menace to them as humans could break away from the wrongful religions and search for the truth. This could jeopardize their imperial plans.

To accomplish their aims, they use very dishonest means. They are one of the groups who operate with earthly religions to influence uninitiated people. Through their intrigues, they use influenced people to unconsciously pursue their aims of governing the Earth and mankind, slowly and step-by-step. They have been pursuing this goal for thousands of years. Their contactees often spread the religious-based heresies, which the deceitful and wicked-minded ones have given to them. They have been very successful in imprisoning humanity in unreal religious doctrine.

By secretly working with the wrongful religions, it is their only chance of reaching their objective and appearing as gods and angels. This is their only possibility because they know that if they were to start a world government by force, then people would realize the truth, oppose it, and defend themselves in every possible way. A war would be inevitable, which they could not afford because there are only a few thousand of them. Their technology is very antiquated and they fear earthly explosive weapons.

Their only chance rests in being able to push humanity into the last delusion of their religion, appear as gods and angels, and seize control over a world government. They already did this once before in ancient times, but they were expelled again. The possibility of open warfare still exists. It just depends upon whether humanity wants to be reasonable about religion, or not.

Semjase tells Meier that for a very long time, they have been endeavoring to end the advance of these intelligences. They are able to keep them in their proper place. But, for some months now, they have tried to kidnap him in order to hamper him from revealing the truth. They hoped that he would be seduced by their craft to go to a suited place where they could kidnap him. She warns him to be careful and not be misled. She says that they monitor these wicked beings, but they are equal to them in several ways and they have had their troubles with them. Meier is told to exercise extreme caution because they do not shrink from any intrigues.

Meier says that these are really nice expectations and assures her that he will be careful. She replies that he unburdens them in this way. He says that he always has his pistol with him and Semjase remarks that he is very good with it and it is good protection for him. Meier asks if these matters should not be written down and is told that problems arise if these things are not understood and discussed. Force will only be compensated by force. Force can never be stopped by simply offering peace. Negative matters can never be overcome by positive matters.

The laws of nature teach that life must be destroyed if it uses degenerative force to menace others. Chances may also be given to them to be placed in detention away from society and unable to propagate their kind in order to maintain order. The use of force should only be exercised with pure logic and the knowledge of nature's laws. These laws apply in Meier's case for his protection against the wicked intelligences. She assures him that they will be very attentive to the situation and will attempt to control events. But, it is demanded that he exercise extreme caution and be ready for any eventuality.

Semjase says that Meier will meet with unreasonable opposition everywhere because those who oppose the telling of the truth strongly endeavor to accuse him of lies, deceit, and everything infamous. The groups and communities that have fallen for the lies of religious and world-government proponents, seek to disturb Meier's work by influencing people to do whatever is ordered of them. They not only use mystically inclined and misled people, but also those with anarchical tendencies. Also involved are extraterrestrial intelligences that want to bring the world under their control.

Meier - first assassination attempt 01/07/76 42.5-26

On the previous evening of January 6, 1976, gunfire erupted from a small caliber pistol as the first assassination attempt on Meier's life occurred. But at the last moment, he was saved by a fortunate act. Samjase communicated with Meier telepathically on the next day and expressed sorrow for him. She was surprised to find him in good spirits without any understanding of why she had sorrow for him. When she mentioned yesterday's event, Meier stated that the matter was over for him, he no longer thinks about it, and does not think it worth discussing.

Semjase tells him that the matter is of considerable importance and by no means humorous. Quetzal has been watching over him for the last few days and noticed a danger menacing him. He was able to find out the time of the attack. The assassin was not identified because she was protected by some forces and an analysis of the event was not possible. The escape route was a short distance, but then all indications were lost.

Since they were aware of the event in advance, Meier asked if he had learned about it in a dream and was told that an intuitive form of dream was used to warn him. He also asked why they waited until the last minute to intervene in the attempt on his life and was told that if they had intervened sooner, the assassin would not have felt sufficiently guilty and remorseful over the deed and would have simply planed better for another attempt. But, Semjase warned him to be careful because, in the future, they will not always be able to keep the continuous series of coming events under control and he agrees to do so. They still have many other tasks to perform.

Meier asked why this fool tried to shoot an iron bee into his skull. Semjase says that further tries for information will be in vain because all contact was lost with this person. But, according to their analysis, the attack took place in defense of a religion. He says that the religious fools are the ones that he fears the least. She asks him to consider the possibility that they may pay others to do their dirty work. He says that they do not bother him either and he does not wish to publicize these foolish events. Semjase says that she wished she owned his nerves, but only an Earth human could have them. She could not understand how, only a fraction of a second after the attack, he was already on the hunt for the shooter. It seems that nature has equipped him with metal springs instead of nerves.

This morning, while communicating telepathically with Meier, they saw a man nearby, which caused Semjase to suddenly end their communications and depart the area. Later, when they resumed the contact, Meier asked why she just faded away. She said that they had previously agreed to escape when elements hamper or spy on them and resume their contact later. But, he remained and talked with his friends because he did not know if he would be ordered to go somewhere else. He said that he would have vanished if he knew that she wanted him to.

Semjase informed him that there were two men there that she lost contact with when she flew away. She assumed that he would quickly escape and no longer concerned herself about the matter. But, the man shot his small caliber pistol at Meier. The bullet hit his agenda book and ricocheted off of a metal plate that he wore under his clothes. He was prepared for this incident because he had dreamt of this event three times before. Then, the assailant quickly ran away. When he was in a good position, Meier shot the man's straw hat off of his head. But after searching the area, they were unable to find him anywhere. Semjase was calmed by his description and said this was typical of him. Meier said that his wife became angry when she heard of the incident. Semjase decided to pick a bundle of quaking grass for his wife and told Meier to pass it along with greetings, love, and a kiss.

When Meier searched for a way to go by car to see Menara's ship tracks, he saw three-part tracks deep in the grass of a remote location and asked Semjase if she or Pleija had been there. He was told that none of them had been there. Menara and Rala also noticed the traces, but were unable to obtain any results. There must have been a flying craft there that they are not familiar with. After a thorough reconnaissance of the area, they only know that a negative intelligence strolled through the area. Amata has sensed that they were trying to cause mischief for him. She recommends that Meier always brings his weapon with him to their contacts or walk elsewhere in the environment. There is something that is not as it should be. He should be extremely careful and really protect himself very well because they do not have the ability at the moment to devote themselves to this matter. Next week, they will be able to examine the area around his home.

Attack against Meier - wheel nuts loosened 10/23/76 65.45-51

Semjase tells Meier that they are not always able to detect and prevent all dangers to him. In one case, they were able to prevent an evil event at the last second from occurring when he drove with friends in their car. The car started to jump when the lug nuts twisted off of the wheels. This was not neglect by the workers at the repair station, as he had thought, but a deliberate attack against the lives of him and his friends. Semjase investigated this herself because it seemed peculiar that the nuts would be loose on all four wheels. She discovered that an unknown person loosened the nuts on the wheels the night before.

Semjase also investigated the Winkleriet woods at Wetzikon, near Meier's home, where there were traces of an unknown beamship that had been previously discovered by him. She found that it belonged to a private Brazilian group that was used to perform a reconnaissance of Meier's circumstances. There were 5 people that used it to examine everything thoroughly. The ship had been stolen years ago when a crew from a far galaxy landed in Brazil during an emergency. Although the ship's interstellar propulsion unit was destroyed, the planetary gravitation drive was still operational for planetary flights.

Weeks after seeing the ship's landing traces, Meier saw the craft at Winkeiriet while searching for it. It enticed him into an area where two men continuously watched him with the intention of killing him. Fortunately, he drove at night with the vehicle's lights off and was not clearly visible to the men. A shot from a gun missed him, but he drove further onwards to see if another attempt would be tried. When a primitive light missile was directed at him from the beamship, he was illuminated in bright light. Meier realized the danger he was in and threw himself into a cave. When the bright light faded, he drove away. He suffered from being over tired and was not conscious of the true connections of those events.

As a result, Semjase recommended to him that he keep himself secure to the best of his ability. He should trust his caring friends, who are trying to protect him, and agree to a wireless communications system for security. Meier called himself an idiot and said that it has been rather much for him. He knows that he was wrong and agrees to follow her advice and orders. Semjase says that he has been guided by his feelings to not deceive his friends and not endanger his mission. He weeps inside and she can feel it. He is warned to be watchful of the coming intrigues where others will attempt to penetrate into his group. They will threaten to destroy everything and Amata will be in great danger. His enemies work quickly and will not let two days pass without another attack.

Olga Walder - troubled for Meier's security 11/10/76 66.166-171

Semjase asks Meier to convey her thanks to all of his friends for their great help and understanding. She especially wants to thank Olga for she has troubled herself very much for his security. By her initiative, the steps were finally taken which have been necessary for a long time. Semjase saw the necessity of this during the previous week and especially last weekend.

Assassination attempts on Meier by Zionists 11/10/76 66.172-181

Semjase says that her father, Ptaah, has cleared up the circumstances around secret events of the previous months involving three attempts on Meier's life. The attacks trace back to two different groups with completely different interests. The first attempt was engineered by elements of the Israeli Command because of the disclosure of the Talmud of Jmmanuel. Rashid, the one who had found it and translated it, was killed by these same elements in Baghdad in March of 1976. This same danger exists in the future for Meier as the Israeli Command searches for him in order to fulfill a secret order. He is cautioned to be very attentive and extremely cautious.

2,000 years ago, they were successful in destroying the truth until now, when Meier has revealed it again. Their greed for world domination is endless and any means will be used to realize their goal. Meier is a threat to them because he is spreading the truth, in general, and especially the truth about them, but primarily, the truth from the Talmud which menaces their imperious plans. So, he is cautioned to pay attention to any rumors regarding Zionists.

2 Attacks by secret Neo-Nazi group in Brazil 11/10/76 66.182-198

The other two attempts on Meier's life were performed by a Nazi-like group, which established itself after the end of the war, in Brazil. They stole German and Canadian plans for the construction of flying disks. Now, they can fly anywhere within Earth's atmosphere. They also obtained possession of a spaceship from a human race of a distant star system. Its interstellar propulsion system was destroyed, but its anti-gravity drive could still be used for planetary flight. They used this ship to pursue Meier. This was the same ship that he had previously found traces of at Winkelriet near Wetzikon where it had landed two weeks before. The crew that used the craft to come to Earth all died when their breathing containers became empty. The canisters contained a poisonous gas that is still unknown on Earth. Because this ship could have been used by the Nazis for evil purposes on Earth, the Plejarens destroyed it while it was not being watched for a few moments.

Meier is told to beware of the Neo-Nazis because they also fear for their existence as a result of his disclosures. He is cautioned to be attentive of the fact that they are located in Germany and are associated with the circles there that work against him. Meier says that this is pretty news. He is told that, for 2,000 years, it was written that evil entities from around the world would be against him. Those hungry for power and possessions will attempt to damage the truth. They often use twilight and make allies of misled elements.

Meier and his group 02/25/75 7.157-165

Semjase says that they have found Meier to be the right human being to contact and she is very glad about it. He belongs to a group of people who occupy themselves with fringe and spiritual sciences. She has studied the interests of this group and found it to be unique. They work together in a practical and friendly way. She noticed how other groups unfortunately occupy themselves with matters that are untrue. They perform experiments that they do not understand and often search for wrong explanations. They function according to their superstitions and the heresies of religions. She congratulates his group for meeting any matter openly and practically, unlike the mystical way that others do. She encourages them to maintain this good behavior and Meier thanks her.

Meier to form a group that will inform others 02/25/75 7.261-276

Semjase tells Meier to form a group from his circle of friends who will dedicate themselves to a mission, which this group with undertake. These people, and others, will be of immense importance for the continuing existence of all living forms on the Earth. This group should be concerned with keeping scientists and governments from undertaking certain research, discoveries, and achievements that can bring death, damage, and destruction over all of humanity and the entire solar system.

Her message is: The Plejarens have controlled all spheres of the planet for many decades and have monitored continuous increases in worldly events along with their dangerous effects. For some years, they have noticed a steady increase of dangerous changes in the atmosphere which will have deadly consequences for all life on Earth. The ozone layer of the stratosphere is increasingly changing from the irresponsible achievements of mankind. Different gaseous chemicals, especially Bromine gas, reach the ozone stratum and slowly dissolve it. It has already been affected and destroyed by 6.38%. This has already started to become harmful to all forms of life and is able to cause mutative changes.

This change has occurred only within the last 60 years. Because of this change, the increased ultraviolet radiations from the sun, affects all creatures. The ozone layer has been hindered from providing its protection at various levels in different areas. Within a few decades, the danger will exist in three areas and cause complete destruction, if the release of these destructive factors is not limited. Everything in these areas will be exposed to painful destruction with no hope of rescue. The main destructive chemicals are set free by internal combustion engines and mater-destroying processes from atomic energy. In addition, every spray bottle releases bromine and other gases that slowly, but systematically, destroys the atmosphere.

Recently, researchers and scientists have sought to evaluate this affect in order to pursue their own irresponsible delusion for power and weapon technology. They have already invented basic ideas for building missiles with the destructive and deadly substance of bromine. When launched and exploded in the atmosphere, it would tear a huge hole in the ozone layer and cause all ultraviolet radiations from the sun to penetrate unhampered. Such a hole would require hundreds of years to close once again and to no longer be destructive. Another consideration is that a hole in the ozone layer would not be stationary and would wander, causing uncontrollable destruction in other regions. This has been hidden from the public.

Semjase tells Meier to form a group that is dedicated to the prevention of such madness. This group will reach government officials and scientists in order to make them aware of the error in their ways. It is in the interest of all life on Earth for an agreement to be reached among all nations to prohibit such madness. They should address these issues with Mr. McElroy at Harvard University in the United States because he is a decisive scientist in this field. Humanity should know that its ancestors once brought all of mankind near the brink of ruin and had to evacuate the planet in wild flight. They should be warned that barbarism and a thirst for power are deadly traits.

Meier again exhorted to form a group 04/15/75 11.3-20

Semjase says that she is pleased with Meier's work of spreading the truth, but is concerned that it is spread to too few people and bears too few results. She notices that everything is burdened by him and that he proceeds slowly. It is urgently demanded that a group be formed and be dedicated to accomplishing the work intensively. Meier states that, although he has advanced a lot of funds, this undertaking costs much money and he does not know where to get it. She says that she understands his financial problems and that they burden him very much. Because this concerns all of mankind, each co-worker must actively contribute their own share. Changes of this kind are not made by the great masses of mankind, but by the initiatives of individuals who lay the cornerstones for change. Their efforts provide the basis to build upon in the future. Meier is a laborer of spirit in all trades. Although he is very talented with his hands, he must now work at organizing his group. He is told to only supply the organizational leadership and leave the manual work to someone else that is suited for it.

Meier often exhausts himself from manual labors 04/15/75 11.21-42

Semjase tells Meier that he is so occupied with his spiritual development that he could also exhaust himself with manual labor. Because of that, he is not as strong as he assumes and physical exhaustion could affect his health. His immense spiritual force drives his physical body to exhaustion. They have observed him throughout his life and have studied him thoroughly. They have often influenced people to rescue him whenever he was in dangerous situations. He says that he never noticed this help.

Semjase suggests that Meier raise a center 04/29/75 14.51-61

Meier called for Semjase telepathically because he was in need of spiritual refreshment. There was no one else that he could relate to spiritually. All who are interested in this field live far away and perform their daily duties, so they are only able to meet every 2 or 3 weeks and indulge in spiritual themes. Semjase says that it is necessary for them to meet at least once a week. She also suggests that they raise a center and live together in close proximity so that they can exercise themselves spiritually every day. Meier says that he and his friend F.L. have thought of this already and considered a farmyard for this purpose. But, this is very expensive and requires at least 500,000 Swiss francs for it.

Semjase says that they will realize a plan for it when they work earnestly together. She is ready to help with crystals and precious stones which they could sell and obtain the necessary funds faster. Meier expresses concern that they cannot sell these things as being from other planets. She tells him to sell the items for their normal value with the designation that their origins could not be witnessed as being from Earth. If he simply identifies them by their Earthly names without a place of origin, then there is no deceit or violation of any laws.

Meier urged to keep things among the group 05/01/75 15.67-79

Semjase explains that the knowledge about the help that she provides should be kept confidential within the group. Many other groups represent unreal factors which indulge in unbelievable and illogical fantasies. Among them are many conscious and unconscious deceivers. Meier is urged to prevent his group from associating with any of them because they could be very dangerous. They have influence in certain circles and are not beneficial.

Although he can hand over contact reports and photographs to outsiders, he is urged to not provide photo-negatives or other proof. In addition, he is cautioned to only give crystals and minerals to other group members or trustworthy individuals and never to strangers. He can perform lectures, but he must be very careful of the lecture materials. There are certain circles that are willing to use evil intrigues in order to seize possession of his materials. He must be careful because the Plejarens cannot interfere if he encounters difficulties.

Meier told to have others in group help him 06/03/75 23.1-11

Semjase comments on the fact that Meier has taken a long time to contact her again, and is told about all of the things that he has been busy doing, including receiving information from Athersata, helping others, and preparing a lecture that has taken 257 hours to complete. She states that she is pleased that he has done so much and will soon be able to give his first lecture. Meier also tells her that he will be telling the group about its new organization.

This pleases Semjase as she was concerned that he has worked alone without any help from others and there are things that he cannot do by himself. She tells him to insist that they help him. The others must serve their mission intuitively and energetically and not just be satisfied with recognizing the contact reports. Meier agrees, but says that they have some doubts and fears. They fear public recognition that could cause them financial and professional setbacks and worry about their own existence when they spend their working time on their mission. Semjase agrees that some members have valid concerns, but others do not. Truth announcers have always had to deal with many troubles and they still served their mission well.

Meier asks Semjase what missions lay inside of each group member and is told that it is the same as with him. Each person will take missions for themselves because of their own decisions and feelings toward obligations and the fulfillment of duty. Because of the consciousness that they have reached and the perceptions that they have yet to acquire, they join into a duty of obligation and assist him by caring for all of the concerns that he is not able to handle. They have mastered the material concerns which existed in an earlier time. Because Meier is too modest, it threatens his mission if he will not allow these concerns to be given over to his assistants.

Often, Meier will not care enough for his own welfare because of his modesty, which results in the need for him to be mothered in this regard. His friends have recognized this and have devoted themselves to the necessary tasks. They do this in sincere love and joy with the assuredness of their recognition. They also do this because a consciousness about the truth has awakened inside of them and have found the way towards wisdom. They know that only with their common assistance is he able to fulfill his heavy and extremely important mission. So, they perform their duties and are helpful out of their own free will.

Semjase says that she has not influenced them to do anything for anyone because that would not have been helpful. She only helped some of them to understand the truth so that they could decide for themselves what to do. Meier assumes that there have been relationships in the distant past that have caused the group members to come together and this is confirmed. She says that she will prepare a contact report that explains everything, but it must only be kept within the group. The members of the innermost circle have become very knowledgeable and understand many more things then the others do. She expresses her dearest thanks and greetings to them.

Plejarens not allowed to determine members 09/22/76 63.72-81

When Meier asks if Carlo Disch should be helpful to them, Semjase says that she is not allowed to determine this. Every human being must decide for themselves, independent from them. This is why they make themselves visible to only a few people. Just as Meier must not reveal that he is a master of teaching, the Plejarens are not allowed to show themselves to humanity. This ensures that Earth human beings are self supporting, think for themselves, and determine for themselves the true knowledge.

If they were to appear in public and he were to appear as a great teacher, then Earth humans would again fall to their beliefs and remain retarded in evolution. Nothing would succeed and humanity would not be free and autonomous. Because of this, only basic information is provided, which must be elaborated by themselves toward truth and knowledge. Any delivery of evidence, other than what is given to Meier, would only cause humanity to have new beliefs. Knowledge, truth, and wisdom cannot be achieved through evidence, but by one's own labor of thinking and an inner determination of clarity.

Semjase says that every single member is working for their own evolution, both in this life and in their next rebirths as well. Many of Meier's group will incarnate in the center that they will build with help from the Plejarens. They will give instructions and assist with good advice. She says that she can tell who will have their next incarnations in the center and in what years it will occur. Some of the group will spend an extremely short time in the Other World region before meeting again with the group in the center in physical form. The first of them will incarnate again between the years 2012 and 2025. Others will incarnate between 2033 and 2036 and the remaining ones between 2045 and 2072.

This rapid sequence enables the work to continue without interruptions. In spite of all the coming confusion and wickedness, the group will slowly spread knowledge throughout the world and enable the immensely destructive beings of Earth to be led towards its true evolution. The missions of each person are very different there and often hardly recognizable by themselves. But, they are important and far reaching in the future as well as today. The first ones will incarnate again in female form. Their names will be different, but ones of special value. This will be true for others as well, who return in male form between 2033 and 2036. Between the years of 2045 and 2072, people close to Meier, as well as others not known to him, will reappear and still meet with him.

Group members will always recognize Billy 02/03/77 72.40-57

All of the group's descendants come again into the group. Part of them will come by the year 2017 because some of them will leave soon from this world. After a short absence, they will be born again in order to undertake special missions. Other group members will incarnate at different times starting in 1995. Those born outside of the center will reach the group in their later years after they have become self-supportive. Some will incarnate into a different sex and appear again after 2110. Others will be born thousands of kilometers away. One girl will be born after 2060 and a boy will be born after 2081 if he finds his final way to the group. The girl will not be far from the center, but her situation is not certain because she is not clear within herself about certain matters. She could stay away from the center and only appear from time to time.

Members are able to determine incarnations 02/07/77 73.10-14

Semjase says that some of the group members appear to have doubts. All of them should be aware that, for the first time since their primary origins, they can be 100% certain of the place of their rebirth and can provide for their next life. This is provided because they are associated with the great mission. The normal run of evolution until rebirth would take some 10,000 years. Those who prepare now for this will achieve an unprecedented advantage and a chance for faster evolution of up to 124 years of spiritual development. They become elite entities and able to provide spiritual guidance and education for humanity on Earth. They all create their own destinies and are able to be chosen for coming things because of their labors here.

3.2.1 Finances

Semjase agrees to bring stones & crystals 04/25/75 13.25-28

Semjase says that she will bring a piece of malachite stone for Meier's friend, F.L. This should not be expected as standard practice, but she will bring stones and crystals for Meier's personal collection and for selling to others. She will also make an exception for his three closest friends. But, they must be patient because it will take some weeks for her to have the possibility to provide such things.

Meier's financial concerns 05/27/75 21.1-17

Meier says that he is unable to find any calming time in his life. He explains that he works all day typing messages from Arahat Athersata and cannot understand how he can find the time to do all that is being asked of him. His contacts with her, the typing of the reports, the fulfillment of his missions, and the accomplishment of tasks demanded of him are all very time consuming.

He is unable to spend time earning a livelihood to support his family and the gifts he receives from people that he is able to help and cure are not enough to live off of. Since their first contacts, he has been living off of his savings in his bank account. He has bought the necessary supplies and now his account is exhausted. He does not know how he will be able to continue as life on Earth is dependent upon financial means.

Semjase says that she understands his problems, but his work is far too important to be imperiled by sorrows of this kind. He has very good friends that will assist him. Just as in ancient times, the spreading of truth has always demanded things which are connected with problems. She does not understand why he worries so much about material things since this is not in his character. Meier finds her statements comical since he must provide for his family and his expenses of house, telephone, electricity, and insurance are about 2,100 Francs each month. The photographic costs are very expensive and he has drained his bank account.

Semjase says that she now understands how he must be concerned about nourishment as well as many other matters that are important and inevitable. She had not taken this into account since such problems are strange to her. Because he had not spoken of this before, she assumed that his livelihood would cover his needs. Under the circumstances, she believes that it would be best to delay some parts of their mission for future years. Meier tells her that he grows older and will not always be around to do everything. She sees no other way than to limit different matters so that he can get a paying job to maintain his livelihood. She does not understand why he does not obtain financial help from his group since this is of interest to all members. But, Meier points out that they must all care for their own livelihoods as well.

Proposition to bring Meier crystals to sell 05/27/75 21.18-26

Semjase tells Meier that she has proposed, several times before, to bring crystals which he could sell. He was under the impression that he should keep them to himself, but she only meant that he maintains certain security precautions. Meier asks how he should offer these things to people and expresses concern that the materials might be detected as not being of Earthly origin. He is told that his friends will help him with sales and the best analysis could not detect any difference in the origins of the materials. Although all material things do absorb different rays, their technology allows them to remove other rays and insert Earthly rays so that no difference can be detected. If extraterrestrial rays were not removed than they could be detected and even dangerous to many forms of life.

Meier's financial problems 05/27/75 21.44-48

Regarding the delay of his mission, Meier asks what portions should be delayed and whether this is good and useful. Semjase says that delays would not be practical and so she will confer with others and consider the situation thoroughly. Meier apologizes for not being able to survive without further financial income. He is still able to sustain himself and his family for another 30 or 40 days by reducing everything to a minimum. He thinks that it is possible for him to sell the crystals with help from his friends. He wants to use the remaining time to determine if something can be done. This delights Semjase and says that this is something that does not just concern him, but all of mankind.

Semjase obtained precious stones from Mars 06/07/75 24.57-655

Semjase says that while she was on Mars, she found something beautiful and hands Meier a large piece of ruby in a Zoisit base. He expresses his delight with it and thanks her for it. She tells him to keep it for himself and says that she has another piece from her home world that was requested by his friend. He thanks her again and says that his friend will be glad to receive it. Meier asks if she could bring him a piece of malachite and a smaragd for his own personal collection. She says that she will, but not smaragds in its pure form or anything else of precious form because of the materialistic nature on Earth. He says that he understands and thanks her.

Meier - anti-materialist 12/03/75 39.291-306

Meier complains that life is very uncomfortable for him and that his finances are really looking a bit lousy. Semjase agrees with him, but says that he is out of touch with material values. She advises that he pay attention to the fact that he is to perform a very great mission which serves all of mankind on Earth. He should be rewarded by his fellow human beings and he should care about that. He says that it is impossible because he is a helpless anti-materialist and is not allowed to be paid for his knowledge. He has been taught that he must fulfill his mission because it simply must be done. He asks how he could ever let himself be paid for that.

Semjase says she knows that he was not only taught, but that he had to learn everything for himself often under dangerous situations and strenuous conditions. However, his mission is a most worthwhile one, for which he should be suitably rewarded and honored. His world is materialistic and he must reflect its nature, whether he wants to or not. She suggests that he put a governor above him in these concerns and suggests Mr. Jacob in Wetzikon to keep his financial interests for him. Meier says that her desire is honorable, but he is no baby. He will let Mr. Jacob do this if he wants to.

Group financial concerns - "impulses of truth" 02/03/77 72.11-15

Semjase shows Meier a secure area where he should build a center. Meier explains that there are many difficulties involved in doing this. First, a suitable site must be found and then the cost of up to 500,000 Swiss Francs must be provided. She assures him that the concept is so reasonable, that it will ease the way for him. In addition, they will send out impulses with the reasons for it to all those who could help with financial matters. The impulses will enable them to recognize the truth and necessity of the undertaking. No coercion will be done because they all must decide for themselves of their own free will.

FIGU - guidance advice given by the Plejaren 02/14/77 74.9-49

Two weeks later, Meier expresses concern over raising the necessary capital needed to purchase the land for the center. Semjase says that he should not trouble himself about this for these concerns are not his alone. Since he does not understand such things, he should allow the basic tasks to be performed by the group and allow them to regulate the concerns. They are likely to do the right thing. The decisions of each person must be left up to them. She is not allowed to interfere in a coercive manner with their decisions. Although the Plejarens cannot assist financially, their advice in all matters can be trusted, including the building of the center.

If they were to help him financially, then it would conjure up a great danger where everyone would no longer trouble themselves to accomplish anything. Their fighting spirit would become lame. Eventually, they would be burdened with the constant hope that they would surely assist in every misery. People must remain willing to confront problems themselves. As a result, the group must be willing to purchase the land, build the center, and fight for everything all by themselves. Only by having everyone committed and belonging to the undertaking, will they be successful.

If the purchase of the land should fail, then this would result in the collapse of all possibilities and destinations for the next century. This would cause Earth mankind to take the path of destruction and spiritual evolution would stagnate once more because too many fanatical groups would exercise sectarian control. A failure would also mean that the predetermined incarnations would have to fail, resulting in confusion among initiated ones. Because of this, he must strive to purchase the land in every way possible, to build according to their instructions, and accomplish everything else. He should allow nothing to discourage him because this is important for the lives of everyone in the group presently as well as later when the rebirths begin. Life will be very hard and troublesome for everyone during the next seven years. But, they must not allow themselves to become discouraged. In spite of the difficulties to acquire the necessary funds, Semjase assures him that they will achieve their goal when everyone decides affirmatively and treats everything properly. This will be to everyone's benefit.

Meier expresses concern that members may not arrive soon enough to the center and is assured that when all runs in unison as provided, then time will be sufficient. He is calmed by this. She says that they care for him and will give all necessary advice. They will also provide guidance for his community so that a peaceful social life will be possible for all. Step by step, they will have success in the future which will force away all negative concerns that will be constantly conjured against them. But for now, he must make certain that they succeed because this is of urgent importance for everyone and he should not allow himself to be influenced by any negative affairs. Everyone, with few exceptions, are conscious of the importance of their success. Meier is permitted to know who the exceptions are, but he must conceal their names because they could suffer from being discredited. Semjase asks Meier to convey her thanks and love to the group, for their efforts will bear good fruit.

7 important people to Meier's mission 02/03/75 2.67-68

Meier asks how he would be able to reveal the truth to people and is told to have no worries because he belongs to a circle of thinking human beings who will help him. Semjase tells him the names and addresses of seven people and says that he can never reveal them to anyone else. She assures him that these seven individuals will be sufficient.

3.2.2.1 Hans Jacob

Possibility of allowing "Mr. J." to be informed 04/29/75 14.68-106

Meier expresses concern about the strong beliefs of some of his acquaintances. Semjase tells him that she cannot prohibit contact with anyone, but she does recommend excluding people from important things until they have found their spiritual way, such as the chance of realizing her ship. Exceptions are, of course, not excluded when she recognizes an individual to be suited.

The possibility for such an exception exists for Meier's acquaintance, Mr. J., because he has experienced many changes which enhance his spiritual development. Unfortunately, this is not sufficient for a complete disclosure of matters that she must exclude from him. She does not know what his potency is for spiritual development or recognize his ability to change his spiritual standards. He works hard within himself, but he fights a very hard fight against himself and this will increase even more. Meier is delighted by her change of opinion of Mr. J. since their last contact.

She explains that Mr. J. has undergone a lot of changes within himself since then that others normally need years to accomplish. The reason why it has happened now so suddenly is because of religions that have torn him around for his entire life. He has been misled by heresies, recognized mistakes, and has developed a sound distrust which represents his way of searching for the truth. She says that this will become apparent to both of them tomorrow when Mr. J. will be pushed to develop his basic spiritual character. Because of this, she has looked into the future in order to consider some facts in his development.

Tomorrow will not be easy for Mr. J. because his feelings will go in many ways. The future told her that he would arrive tomorrow afternoon in order to review the 12th contact report, which Meier will give to him and they will discuss some things. She tells Meier that he is not allowed to tell Mr. J. what she has said for at least 14 hours after their talk so that he can digest the matters in the report. Mr. J. has occupied himself intensively with their matters. Some thoughts have vanished from him and his thought were unconsciously directed at her, which she realized.

This caused her to penetrate his thoughts and reached perceptions about him. She noticed that he needs a certain amount of time in order to elaborate on all things. She also noticed that he needed a longer time to elaborate on the sighting of her ship in the morning of April 20th, but he is still fighting his feelings about it. She tells Meier that they can grant him their full confidence because he is absolutely loyal and worthy of their confidence in him. But, it will be some time before they can disclose everything to him. This does not mean that she does not trust him because he is far higher spiritually developed than others in Meier's group.

Eavesdropping on Meier's talk with Mr. J. 05/03/75 16.33-38

Meier asks why Semjase has eavesdropped on his conversation with Mr. J. when she explained that Meier should make known to him about certain things in regards to her negative impressions of him. Meier says that these things were worthy of Mr. J. since he has learned from them. She says that, because of his attention at her, this caused her to investigate his thoughts and she was subsequently interested in their talk together. She was really amused and joyful about the expressions of Mr. J. even though there was a certain sting to his words which were truthful. She will not view his actions in the future as she does not wish to penetrate into his innermost matters. She asks Meier to convey her thanks because he understands that even her life form needs evolution and makes mistakes, which he excuses and does not repudiate her faulty actions. Meier thanks her and says that Mr. J. will surely enjoy her words very much.

Matters regarding H.J. and woman visiting Meier 06/07/75 24.19-31

As previously agreed, H.J. will arrive tomorrow at Meier's home with an earthly woman. Within certain points, she is far advanced in her development. Semjase says that she investigated and discovered some things about the woman in respect to her abilities and her perception of the truth. She walks on paths of truth that are, in many ways, unclear and connected to heresies. This has resulted in things that are strange to reality and not real. These things especially apply to religion and are connected to the heresy of deity and spiritual progress. She has fallen for unreal acceptances in regards to spirit, soul, and body.

Semjase recommends that Meier be careful with her and explain this to her. Although she will not be able to accept it at first, a certain amount will remain with her. The most-wicked heresy within her is of religious interpretations that causes her to go backwards in her search for the truth and is unable to see the real truth. Religion is deadly, enslaving of the spirit, and hampers humanity from finding the basic truth. He is asked to explain that she should not think religiously if she wants to find the truth.

In matters regarding H.J., Semjase has endeavored to learn of his personal perceptions and has found that he has a desire to be arbitrary and is inclined to advocate for old fashioned heresies. It is very difficult for him to consider the truth and doubts it for being right. Many old heresies are very powerful inside him, which hamper him from proceeding towards the truth.

Semjase asks Meier to advise him to trouble himself very much for the newly offered spiritual lessons and stay positive. He may turn himself over to their contact person for useful discussions for her knowledge is of truth and prophetic greatness. The instructions will not be easy, but of great value. He should endeavor to fight against being arbitrary and observe their issued orders. If he does not follow this, then they will have to dispense with his cooperation. But, if he deliberates within the proper forms of the truth, then he will embody a very worthy member for their mission.

Ilse Von Jacobi's manuscript about Meier 07/29/76 61.98-115

In response to the stated desire by Mrs. Von Jacobi for a personal contact, Semjase says that would be impossible. This is also impossible for any other Earth human except Meier. When she wants to discuss any matters with her, than she must do it through him and he will transfer her reply. Semjase says that there are other things in her letter which are not clear to her. In regards to the manuscript that she has written, Semjase acknowledges all of the work that has gone into it and recommends that it be printed. But, she has changed the words of many things and made them to suit her way of thinking and being. But, this is not disadvantageous. This will not be a book for the initiated ones, but for the broad public. The material presented and elaborated by her is analogous and of worth. For this, Ilsa should be given praise even though she often searches for mistakes in Semjase's explanations because she is unable to understand certain explanations since they are not apart of her field of knowledge. Meier says that this is good praise that she should surely enjoy.

3.2.2.3 Mr. K.

Mr. K. - reason for his depression & behavior 06/27/76 58.Q4-10

Meier asks Quetzal if he has found out anything concerning his colleague K. and he is told that his behavior can be traced back to his own negative psychic influence and is not in relation to any outstanding negative influences. It is based on a nearly pathological and unreasonable opinion about his professional activities. He should balance himself in this respect and arrange his time accordingly. The Plejarens must also perform their daily work. But, their time for performing their mission on Earth is much higher taxed than for others on their home world or for people on Earth. They normally spend 16 earthly hours each day with their work and often more then that.

3.2.2.4 Gloria Lee

Meier to produce a guide for Lee's book 06/03/75 23.144-148

Meier asks Semjase if she knows anything about a book that has been written by Gloria Lee. She says that she knows about a manuscript that has been written and has reached worldwide publication. In general, it involves a worthy scripture which he should read and study even though it will not offer anything new for him. But, it also includes things that are strange and not true, especially those points that concern godly spheres. However, its scripture is generally good and recommendable for humans that are searching for a way to the truth. For higher developed forms, it is worthless, but interesting. It was the sole product of the writer and was not inspired. Semjase says that a guide for the understanding of the text would be proper. Meier thanks her and says that a member of his group has copied the booklet because it was thought to be good. He asks if it should be spread carelessly. Semjase gives her approval under the condition that a guide for the understanding of it be provided. Meier agrees to discuss this with the others and compose a written guide.

Analysis of Gloria Lee's book 06/07/75 24.51-56

Meier says that Gloria Lee's book refers to creatures from Saturn, Uranus, and other planets. He asks Semjase if any forms of life are living there. She says that she has found only evil nonsense in her books, scriptures and works. They refer to living forms of nothing in reality and embody nothing more than degenerated fantasy creatures. There really are living forms that exist on other planets, but they are completely different and have never contacted people of Earth. The same is true for Mars and Venus.

Quetzal reiterates about Gloria Lee's book 06/27/75 28.3-19

Semjase tells Meier that Quetzal, who is the highest leader of all their stations in this system, wants to discuss with him an event within his group. Quetzal says that they have received different uncontrolled thoughts from members of his group, which he objects to. They concern transmissions by Semjase about the scriptures by Gloria Lee. She explained very clearly that the booklet was to be diffused with an appropriate introduction added to it. But, the script has started to be spread without the added introduction. This now throws a bad aspect onto the truth and gives people wrong impressions and new heresies.

Gloria Lee was never in contact with any other living forms and her whole writing represents her own thoughts and fantasies. By not obeying their demands, the truth becomes further endangered and new untruths diffused. The person that has diffused this script was H.J. The thoughts of this person are inclined towards arbitrary and unjustified doubts and are unable to accept certain offered lessons. Because of his steady doubting, arbitrary nature, and questioning of the most important lessons of the spirit, he is not to be associated with their mission. He tells Meier that they have their reasons for this determination and their wishes ought to be observed.

Gloria Lee's book should not be spread as is 07/07/75 29.143-14

Meier mentions how Quetzal engaged himself during their prior contact. He is told by Semjase that this one time was necessary because of an absurd thing that had risen in his group. In spite of the fact that she had previously stated that Gloria Lee's book should only be diffused with an introduction of detailed explanations, this was not complied with it. This good literature for uninformed people represents a danger without the necessary explanations.

Martin Sorge & Mara - friends of Meier 10/02/76 64.72-77

Semjase assures Meier that, in the beginning of next week, his wife will change for the better. There will arise two new friends for them of uncommon love and sincerity. When Meier asks who they will be, she says that he should allow himself to be surprised so that he will be even more delighted. She only tells him that there will be a man and woman with first names that begin with "M". They are very much worthy of loving and they complement each other well. He will discover who they are when they arrive Monday morning.

Martin Sorge & Mara - friends of Meier 10/23/76 65.P82-88

Ptaah cautions Meier to not be carried away by too much enjoyment because cosmic influences are very aggressive now and he will have a hard struggle with them until the middle of next year. His dear friends, Martin and Mara, will inform him about this in greater detail. This time will be very troublesome and full of danger. As a result, he should be very careful and deliberate everything thoroughly as he was advised by Semjase. Meier tells Ptaah that he relays very kind greetings from Martin and Mara, as well as from all of the others. For Semjase, he conveys a most hearty salute from his dear friends in Munich. Ptaah expresses delight in being able to receive these greetings in person. He asks Meier to convey to them his delight, love, and thanks. Semjase also asks him to express her feelings to them as well.

Martin Sorge previous incarnation connection 11/10/76 66.55-61

Semjase says that Martin is extraordinarily thorough in his profession, well informed, and pleasantly excels from the normal mass. She cautions Meier to not speak of his connection with Martin. She says that she knows about their connections, causes, and effects. They have been predetermined for a long time as with the future. Meier says that she is very secretive and asks why she has never told him about this. She says that he should not know certain facts in advance. If he were to know them, then his world of feelings would suffer from it because he would prepare himself for them as he usually does.

2-page letter from Martin Sorge & Mara 11/10/76 66.74-78

Meier says that he has received a two-page letter from Martin and Mara and asks if he could read it to Semjase. She agrees and he says the title is, "Thoughts About the Sentient Life of the Plejaren". After reading the letter aloud, he asks her about two questions that are presented. She already answered the question about the symbolic sign for Erra, but the second one concerns the control of gravitational forces. She says that she is happy to answer their questions to the best of her ability.

Meier asks Semjase to evaluate a man named F.O. 05/15/75 18.136-140

Meier says that he has a problem with a man named F.O. which he has spoken of before. He asks about which position of development that he can be counted on, which main and sub position that he can join, and requests more information about him. Semjase says that she will only explore his mental position and his mode of thinking, but nothing more. She says that he must have patience because this will require some time. She will comply with his request as soon as possible and transmit the results telepathically.

Spiritual characterization of the person F.O. 05/16/75 19.1-26

Semjase says that it was an easy thing for her to satisfy Meier's request in respect to the person F.O. because this person owns no detectable forces of defense in spite of the fact that he pretends to have them. But, it required her to spend many long hours in order for her to search as far as was necessary. F.O. has a tiny amount of hypnotic abilities. He likes to place himself in high esteem with these abilities, more than he actually possesses. He believes himself to be highly developed spiritually, but he consciously deceives himself. His half religious acceptances of belief hold him imprisoned in an extremely strong material form of thinking from which he is not able to free himself. His evolutionary position is average for Earth human beings. His spirit is easily confused. There is a lack of the smallest perception of spiritual intellectual thinking and he cannot even explain the forces of his small hypnotic talent. His exaggerated display of knowledge comes from untruthful books. When Meier says that she speaks harsh words, Semjase says that the truth always sounds harsh.

Publisher Karl Veit wants to visit Meier 05/28/75 22.1-11

Meier says that Mr. V. wanted to come for a visit on July 2nd with his wife and possibly other people. He asks Semjase what she thinks about it. She says she has unfortunately not followed the matter enough. But, she is aware that many people have changed their minds for the better and will be helpful for their mission. These things are not foreseeable because there are important things that are still decisive. The most decisive point is a strong religious influence, which certain persons must overcome for their own recognition of the truth. Semjase says that she is delighted to learn that these first steps are occurring. She is only able to tell the future about really important things. For these matters, they must allow a free course and let the future work. In this case, different people direct their thoughts onto the right trails and find themselves exploring concepts of the truth. They must neither use coercion nor reveal the facts of the future to influence this. That would cause the foretold future to be altered and then it would be of no use to them.

Contact with Karl & Anny Viet will occur soon 06/18/75 26.55-66

Semjase says that during the last few days, a lot of work has been prepared for Meier to undertake in a short while. He is to calmly educate a group of people and enlighten them. In a few days, he will receive correspondence for a contact from Wiesbaden, Germany. The Plejarens had to prevent the first chance for this contact because there was not enough time for their work. There is now ample time, but unexpected events could change the plans. Nevertheless, they are hopeful of success this time. Meier is told that he will have no easy task. Although they are very tolerant and open-minded, they are captured by certain matters. They will cause a lot of trouble for him because they are possessed by the most wicked charlatans and deceivers. He will have to use his best forces because these people are very important for the spreading of the real truth. Meier asks if she wants to make Hell hot for him. She says no, but he will find out soon enough about what she has been talking about.

Anny Veit's work deemed highly by Plejarens 07/07/75 29.14-27

Meier tells Semjase that Mr. and Mrs. Veit have asked him to find out how she and others judge their work. Semjase says that they have devoted very much work to this. They have suffered many offenses and intrigues and have proceeded with their endeavors very far and have accomplished good success. The Plejarens consider their work very highly and recommend it. They deserve very great approval. But regretfully, their beliefs in the falsities of religion have caused them to be misled by certain deceiving elements. She says they should endeavor for understanding and clear up these matters.

Meier says that the Veit family is convinced that the certain deceiving elements are not guilty of deceit and asks what she means by this. Semjase says that they have recorded his long talks with them and she is very well informed about everything. As she explained to him before, he will be in a very difficult position. This will continue as those he talks with are very understanding, generous, and compliant. But, they are influenced too much by certain misleading facts which have a negative influence on everything. For a long time, different groups have observed and controlled him while evil-minded elements endeavor to cause intrigues against him. Certain circles are working to accuse him of lies and deceit because the truth is starting to become damaging to them. So, he is cautioned to exercise caution in every respect.

Meier - told to look for a new home 12/03/75 39.277-290

When Meier states that he has no more money to pay his last accounts of December, Semjase tells him that she knows of his problems and that he should be patient as there are things in the running that will help him. But, she says that his situation will become even worse when, in the middle of next year, he must search for another place to live because someone wants to do evil things to him and another person fears him. Meier says that he does nothing to harm anyone and is told that certain people fear the truth and are unable to bear having been deceived. They fear that he could make public their silliness and they seek self protection. But, when he moves somewhere else, then they illogically think that he could no longer disclose their stupidity. He says that this had been foreseen, but Semjase tells him that this knowledge is only for him and his family. She reminded Meier that Asket had said in 1956, his family life would be calmer around the end of 1975. This event, along with another place to live, is only a part of that. She assures him that life will become better.

Meier to move from Hinwil to Hinterschmidruti 11/12/76 68.49-50

Meier asks what will happen in 1977 and is told that he will move to a new home at Hinterschmidruti on April 7, 1977. He is also told about his difficult and troublesome work in the following years. Meier is surprised and takes notice of this. He is admonished to keep silent about it.

Meier instructed to look for new home/location 02/03/77 72.3-12

Semjase tells Meier that he must slowly search for a suitable location where he can protect himself and the others. In 1975, she spoke to him about a center for which he must now look for. She shows him some areas to look in that are safe from earthquakes, volcanoes, and nuclear war and tells him to settle somewhere in three areas and build up a center.

Hinterschmidruti house & property up for sale 02/07/77 73.3-9

Meier excitedly tells Semjase that they had discussed about the center to be built last Saturday and now, like a flash out of nowhere, he received the thought about some land that would fit which he had forgotten about. He explained this to the others and they telephoned the owners who said that the house would be available in a week and that it was for sale. Semjase said that she wanted to assist him a bit. She located the house and realized that he should buy it, so she telepathically reminded him of it and urged him to pursue it. It is the most suited place for them to build the center, which they will teach them to build. Meier suspected her of this, but wonders how they are going to pay for everything. She tells him that when they are clear about the coming events, they will all want to provide for this life as well as their next lives and will know how to collect the necessary capital. Some of his group know enough already, that they will share decisively in this project and be able to buy the land and build the center.

Hinterschmidruti land - to be bought in spring 02/07/77 73.16-18

Semjase explained to Meier that the properties at Hinterschmidruti would be bought with help from the "Freie Interessengemeinschaft" in the spring of 1978 and would be built up for a center in spite of great difficulties, intrigues, and betrayals in the group. Meier says that he will explain this to the others.

Hinterschmidruti house; financial concerns 02/14/77 74.1-8

Meier expresses concern about being able to buy the property since he has no money left and getting money from a bank is impossible. He asks what to do and if she could help somehow. Semjase tells him that he thinks illogically. He should think about the work that he has performed so far in a gratis manner for all of mankind. This is much more then they have expected from him and which no one can match in value. As a result, he should not trouble himself because he is not able to contribute financially for the property. He has already given many times more than all of the others could ever give. He has received much help during the last few months from their common friends like Jacobus, Guido, Elsa, Engelbert, and others who have enabled them to develop to the present state. Without their help, all of their plans would have been ruined, especially those of the incarnation process. Meier is told to not worry about the raising of capital for these are not his concerns alone.

Chapter 4 PLEJARENS

4.1 Erra (Plejaren home planet)

254 stars in the Taurus Constellation 12.37-38

The home planet of the Plejaren race is located in the Taurus Constellation, which contains 254 stars and planets. There are other constellations with even larger numbers.

Tayget (Plejaren sun) in Pleja System 57.74-75

The Plejarens call the star of their solar system "Taget". The home planet of Erra has a similar diameter as that of Earth.

Erra, 1 of 9 planets in the Tayget system 54.41-44

The home planet of the Plejarens is called Erra and it belongs to the solar system of Tayget along with nine other planets. It is hardly possible to see the planet from Earth because there are too many factors that affect the light for earthy instruments. They are only worthy for viewing objects in this solar system, but are faulty when viewing outside the system.

Erra - 400 million humans, Tayget system - 9 planets 54.90-92

400 million human beings live on Erra. There are three other planets in the Tayget system, which are inhabited by humans. All of the other planets are either fading away or are initially forming themselves up. In the Sun's system, planets such as Saturn and Jupiter are developing themselves while Pluto, Uranus, and Neptune are already vanishing.

Erra - particular details about the planet 54.99-109

Semjase was born on the planet Erra in the solar system of Tayget. Erra is very similar to Earth in every respect. That is why their earliest ancestors chose Earth for their new home when they left the Tayget system. There are only a few differences. By earthy counting, Erra revolves around Tayget every 365 1/4 days and one day lasts 23 hours and 59.4 seconds. This results in nearly the same time for night and day. The other planets of the Tayget system have different daily and annual time periods as in other systems of the universe. The units of time are named differently, but correspond closely to earthly standards. Their "Odur" is only a few parts of a second different from our hour and a "Musal" is exactly one earthly day. They differentiate their year into 13 months, which they call "Asar", with a compensation of time every 23 years.

Erra - atmosphere gravity, density, axis, etc. 57.78-91

The troposphere on Erra has similar gases as on Earth, which are normally at 70 to 75% of nitrides, 25 to 29% of oxygen, and 1% of rare gases such as carbon dioxide and Argon. But, Erra maintains a greater content of oxygen with 32.4%. Also, traces of Argon and other gases on Erra are only at 0.3% and nitrides are at 67.3%. The surface gravity on Erra is 1.0003 times the amount on Earth. The density amounts to 5,521 with an inclination of the axis at 22.99 degrees. The equatorial diameter is 12,749 kilometers and the rotational speed is 11.19 kilometers per second.

Houses, family, buildings, and land use 42.80-94

The human beings of the Pleja System do not live in the same type of homes as people do on Earth. Their buildings are all round or flattened round with other buildings, such as for beamships, that are spherically round. They do not have buildings for mass dwelling as on Earth because every Plejaren claims the right to open freedom. Every family has their own home, which is municipally constructed and requires no compensation, otherwise known as rent. Such things belong to their distant past because they have not had to pay for anything for a very long time.

These homes are not built together with other houses. Each home stands alone on land that measures 100 meters square. This land is used for gardening, meadows, parks, etc., with many flowers, bushes and trees along with many other plants such as vegetables, etc. All inhabited planets of their system have completely fertilized all their worlds as much as possible. Every usable area is cultivated and fertilized. Only areas that could not be made fertile become occupied by large or several forms of buildings or dwellings. There are also buildings for factories and installations for supervision, beamship ports, etc.

Erra (Plejaren planet) - sickness (under control) 57.36-42

Many of the sicknesses on Erra were conquered by their scientists many centuries ago, but there still prevails today some evils of pathological character that have been transmitted from other stars and from earlier ages. However, they no longer cause death or destruction to the body. They are insignificant evils similar to colds on Earth that can result in pneumonia. Fortunately, they are normally able to bring them quickly under control before they can rage havoc on the body. The inhabitants of Erra are human beings just like those on Earth and are susceptible to things of pathological nature, but they can usually control or cure them. There are also other diseases that are unknown on Earth, which their scientists have mastered. Regarding cancer, this is something that becomes embedded by parasitical, wrongly controlled life, which they have been rid of for a very long time.

Pleiades - name, chronology, and planet names 70.183-194

The name for the Pleiades, which was named after an IHWH, has been preserved on Earth, but was lost in the confusion of languages that appeared on Earth. It changed to other forms, but the original name was found again in time. This name can be traced to ancient Greek mythologies.

The humans on Erra count the passage of time in years, just as on Earth, because this method of chronology was originally invented by a common ancestry. The Plejaren chronology started at the beginning of the peace in their system, which was 49,711 years ago. The planets in the Pleja System, which are much younger than Earth, were previously referred to only by numbers. But, when the High Council took over guidance there, they named the planets with well-sounding names like Erra. This occurred 1,951 years ago and the Plejarens also use this as the start of their chronology from when spiritual synchronization and harmony began.

4.2 Plejaren Human Beings

Plejaren - 3,500 years ahead of us in development 39.P39-40

The Plejarens are 3,500 years further developed than Earth humans. There are other forms of life in the universe, but there are none that are better or as well proportioned. There are also entities that Earth humans would consider to be ugly.

Plejarens are the highest developed creatures here 29.33-43

At this point in time, the Plejarens are the highest developed forms of extraterrestrial life that are stationed on the Earth. The second highest developed form of life here is 1,340 years behind the Plejarens in evolution. The Plejarens provide information that corresponds to the highest concepts of knowledge for the truth and it should be considered over any explanations or interpretations from other lower developed forms of life. The information provided by the Plejarens should also be accepted over the pretended tales from deceivers and charlatans who declare that they have had contact with beings from Venus. In a few years, it will be shown by scientists that Venus is not inhabited by humans, either physically or spiritually, as has been described by the deceivers.

Plejaren characteristics 3.10-17

Although earthly humans would believe that the Plejarens are perfect beings, they are still very far from this level and must continuously develop themselves. They are not super human beings, as Earth humans like to think of them in their ignorance and imaginations. Neither are they teachers, missionaries, or prophets. They just have an obligation and duty of preserving the development of life in the universe. This means that they endeavor to maintain order and control over certain life. They initiate contact with individuals of other worlds that are ready for it and provide explanations to them. They slowly prepare them for the thought that they are not the only thinking creatures in the universe. They also provide telepathic help so that the concepts of essential time-critical inventions can be learned.

Plejarens - humans like us 9.1-14

For decades, Earth humans, as well as whole groups, have been placing the Plejarens into categories that they do not fit into and which they do not feel comfortable with. Often, for the sake of appearances and pure profit, they are held higher then they actually are. They are only human beings like those on Earth. They have advanced technology and great spiritual progress, but this does not mean that they dominant as many on Earth would ascribe to them. They are neither guardians of humanity, god-sent angels, or anything similar. Many selfish people lead others astray by pretending that the Plejarens watch over the Earth and are responsible for the fates of humanity. This is not the case as they only perform a self-imposed mission, which has nothing to do with oversight and the regulation of fates on Earth. Thus, it is wrong to believe this is true. If this were the case, then they would regulate everything openly. Although the Plejarens are nearly 3,000 years ahead of mankind on Earth, both spiritually and technically, they are not god-like as people would believe who are captured by religions. These people degrade themselves and their fellow human beings as though they were under developed. Faulty or deliberately inverted contact reports cause false impressions that humans only perform mistakes and can do nothing right. This is not the truth since everyone goes its own way of evolution.

Plejaren are not perfect and make mistakes 15.17-45

Although from different planets with different spiritual perspectives, the human beings of both worlds are fundamentally equal and must go their own way of evolution. This does not exclude mistakes being committed by either party. The pseudo-conntactees who say that extraterrestrials are perfect creatures for religious benefit, are either deceiving, fantasizing, or want to suppress humanity. If the Plejarens make a mistake, they admit it and take responsibility for it as it makes no sense to hide from it or contest it. Only by being very objective without feelings will the truth be found. As a result of doing this, Semjase has decided to remain outside of Meier's concerns because he may be better able to decide important issues for himself. However, she also wants to help in certain matters when they concern interests that she can render information that can assist him.

Plejaren ability to read other's thoughts 2.21-25

The Plejarens will only investigate the thoughts of someone else when it is proper to do so. It is not their desire or policy to penetrate into the thoughts of another when it is really not important. They have no right to investigate the personal secrets of others. When they penetrate into the thoughts of others, there is always the possibility of learning more than what was actually provided. If they were to do this, then they would know every last thought and secret of Meier and they would not always be astonished and surprised by him.

Laws of Jmmanuel are still valid today 23.12-34

Semjase told Meier that the laws of Jmmanuel, regarding matrimony and intercourse, are as valid today as they were in his time for the whole universe. It is not true when charlatans say the extraterrestrials are super humans and no longer need laws and restrictions to live by. Only when creational order has become accepted, then laws and restrictions fall away. This is the case in very high spiritual spheres, where all connections to material needs belong to the past. Entities, with physical bodies, are afflicted with too many faults to do away with laws that provide order for their level of development.

Plejarens have more spiritual laws for criminals 23.35-38

When certain crimes are committed, the Plejaren have a uniform penalty of lifelong exile, which is considered to be rather primitive. But, their laws correspond to their spiritual level which is much more humane then those on Earth. They no longer punish criminals by eliminations and a hurting of the body, but rather by lifelong banishment to other worlds that exclusively serve for this purpose. Such worlds only have same sexed forms of life exiled there in order to prevent over-population and the creation of descendants. They must care for themselves without any mechanical means. Periodically, controls are enforced to eliminate any secretly created products and all contact with other creatures is stopped. On some of their worlds, criminals are banished to great islands in large oceans when the crime is not severe. This form of punishment guarantees that the criminals will obey orders and not cause a burden to the public in a humane manner that allows those banished to fulfill their evolution.

Plejarens are monogamous and procreate 23.43-50

Creation has equipped every single kind of living form with the means to reproduce themselves in very natural ways. The law of unity is the same throughout the universe where two individuals unite, as with the law of reproduction for every material form of life. Higher spiritual forms have freed themselves of their physical bodies and no longer need to procreate. They are unable to create new spirits for only the Creation is able to do this. The act of procreation embodies a uniform character throughout the universe of males and females joining together for the propagation of descendants. This was initiated in this manner by Creation and there is no other possibility.

Women may become impregnated without a man 23.66-74

It is possible for a woman to become pregnant without a man to generate the necessary procreation. This does not concern spiritual forces, but rather incorrect regulations and the improper use of hormonal factors in female bodies. Another factor, which can lead to undesired and uncontrolled cohabitations, is the fact that male semen of several different forms of life is able to remain alive for up to 3 days after leaving the male body. 12 hours are quite normal, but 2 days are more rare. If it falls where it can work it's way toward the right places, then it can result in an impregnation.

Laws of Plejaren marriage & procreation 23.75-87

The Plejaren laws concerning matrimony and procreation have been preserved in Earth's literature ever since they were passed-down by our common ancient ancestors. They only enter into matrimony in a monogamous relationship after there is a clarification of all facts in respect to belonging together. The number of children is decided by the High Council in order to preserve the race and avoid over-crowding. In matrimony, a man and woman remain together for the rest of their lives in this alliance. Divorce, as it is known on Earth, is not permitted and is only allowed when there are extreme offenses against the laws and restrictions of matrimony and the culprits are exiled. But, these cases are extremely rare. The laws of matrimony and intercourse are explained in the Talmud of Jmmanuel. These laws have remained the same for thousands of years and the penalty in these matters continues to be lifelong banishment.

Plejarens procreate the same as Earth humans 41.21-25

The Plejarens procreate their descendents by the same natural way as Earth humans do and every other physical form of life in the universes. This means that males and females together, undergo the act of procreation. Throughout the universes, this form of procreation is a completely natural process where a man cohabitates with a woman, takes her for his mate, and causes her to become pregnant. This is normally accomplished by a couple snuggling together, uniting with one another in love, having the man guide his sexual member into the opening of the woman, and the woman taking his sperm into herself in order to develop new life.

Mental procreation and Artificial impregnation 41.26-31

An exception to the normal form of procreation is mental procreation, which is a very seldom occurrence. Artificial impregnation is mostly only performed in extreme cases for upgrading the species. But on the whole, procreation is directed toward the normal act of cohabitation as this accords to nature and the Creational laws and guidance. Only this manner provides for the consistency of spiritual and physical evolution. There are dangers associated with mental and artificial insemination procedures, which can cause unrecognizable mutations, which gradually affect a whole race of creatures and produce physical and spiritual monstrosities. They become degenerated mutants, have damaged immune systems, and loose their normal manner of thinking.

Plejaren procreation when the husband is infertile 41.32-46

The Plejarens, as well as many other races in the universe, have two possibilities for having descendents when the marriage partner is not able to procreate. The first possibility exists by making the man or woman fertile. But, when a man cannot be made fertile, there exists the possibility of having the woman become pregnant by another man. The man is also required to be married, so there is no jealousy or guilt associated with the breaking of any of Creation's laws because there is complete and mutual agreement for an act of simple creational meaning. The man chosen for this act must also have reached the limited number of descendents and have attained a certain high position of spiritual evolution. There no longer exists any degenerate sexual tendencies and such an act is considered to be a very honorable and good mission.

Plejaren - sexual stimulation 41.47-62

For the Plejarens, sexual pleasures are simply physical sensations. When men and women cohabitate, their thoughts become fanciful, causing physical and mental charms to fill the body with desire. These charms are very pleasing. They fill the head with many wishes, release inhibitions, and loosen behavior. Every form of life behaves like this.

Plejaren - birth process the same as Earth humans 41.72-80

After procreation, a Plejaren child develops itself for nine months in the woman's body. The birth takes place in the same manner as it occurs on Earth. The woman suffers pain during labor and delivery as all humans, but they do not receive pain medication as women on Earth do. The pain is a natural part of the birthing process, which influences the mother to bring forth the child and causes the child to respond accordingly. This is a natural process that provides great welfare for the mother and child. Physical maturity for procreation in Plejarens is 12 years of age. However, continence is normally exercised until the age of 70 in order to become aware of spiritual concerns and to educate oneself.

Plejaren - matrimony, love, and family values 41.81-101

70 years of age is also the minimal age where matrimony is considered. This is merely 10.5 years after full body maturity and growth. Although spiritual maturity is also reached at 70 years of age, it does not mean that the spiritual evolution has stopped. Unlike with Earth humans, further education for the Plejarens lasts their whole lifetime. Love is a sensation of feelings that exist in many forms. However, love between men and women, is an exceptional sensation. Contrary to the love between Earth humans, the Plejarens feel love that is very pure, deep, extremely strong, and durable. They experience open and sincere love, which is only limited when the situation demands it. The education of Plejaren children is an obligation of the parents. However, the High Council righteously settles regulations, teachings, order, etc. The High Council also contracts marriages, which is why the Plejarens do not know of divorce. When two people live together as a unit, then differences of opinion naturally arise. But, this does not need to degenerate into fights, as on Earth. All creatures are different in their evolution and differently oriented couples must come together if evolution is to progress. This is an irrevocable law of evolution, which all entities in the universe are subjected to.

Plejaren birth control measures 57.143-150

Plejaren birth control - 1 method is pulling out 57.154

Plejaren birth control - Harmony of mates 57.155

Plejaren birth control - natural plant preparations 58.3-11

The Plejaren have no need for such things as the birth control pill. They observe the natural order of periodic regulations. Their sexual demands appear outside of the normal times of infidelity for women. So, they use many types of natural means in order to prevent pregnancy. One of their methods is for the man to pull out before reaching a climax. However, undesired pregnancies do happen. Every Plejaren woman possesses the technical means for detecting pregnancy after only three days. When an undesired pregnancy occurs, natural preparations are taken that cause early menstruation so that the fertilized ovum is expelled before it can develop. This is not abortion because there is no destruction of a life with a spirit. All of their means for preventing pregnancy must be in harmony with the man and woman. If the maximum limit of children is reached in a family on a planet that is menaced by overpopulation, natural plant substances can be added to their food in order to prevent further pregnancies. This, or some other method, is necessary when a planet is no longer able to sustain a certain number of humans without artificial interference. It is related to spiritual evolution. A command only prevails for birth control when it is initially introduced.

Plejaren - disposition of cadavers: burial, etc. 42.46-52

The most common manner in which the Plejarens dispose of dead bodies is by burying them underground in special institutions for disposal that are set apart from inhabited regions. From ancient times, they also have cremation for the very rare cases when it is wanted. The elimination of a lifeless body is also common. These are matters of individual desires.

Plejaren - factory work performed by robots 42.95-98

Work is performed in the factories by robots and androids under the guidance and control of a few men and women who only perform technical obligations of supervision and control. Every individual has its tasks to do on the planet as well as in the universe.

Plejaren - household and mother-in-laws 42.99-104

There are never any more than five people of two parents and a maximum of three children in each dwelling. They do not suffer from overpopulation as on Earth because they have a maximum of three children in each family. They experience no problems of a mother-in-law, which they call Geranisa, which interferes in the affairs of their married children.

ET & Plejaren - music, literature, arts & schools 42.105-109

The Plejarens also know of music, literature, and arts with schools for these things, which is common for all human beings in the universe. But, their schools for these things are limited to only those who are really interested, have a great amount of talent, and who will later work for the betterment of all. This is unlike the schools on Earth that interpret for the public who generates tones that are painful to the ear. Semjase often finds it horrible to listen to Earth music. She enjoys the good and harmonic earthly music.

Plejaren - not allowed to bring any things to Earth 42.113-116

The Plejarens observe security orders that prevent them from bringing anything to Earth that would not remain in their possession. They are willing to let Meier see and touch things from their world, but not give him anything that he could show to others. The only exceptions are crystals and minerals that could be of benefit to Meier.

Plejaren - how they obtain Earth money to buy 42.118-119

In order for the Plejarens to purchase things on Earth when they walk among humanity, they use their technology to locate precious stones and metals, which they then sell to traders for currency. They are not allowed to take money from people or institutions such as banks or stores.

Mining - only done on Erra in extreme emergency 45.56-58

Ore and mineral mining is only done by the Plejarens in extreme emergencies because this process is equal to the destruction of the planet. A planet or other star is never exploited as is done on Earth. What human beings do on Earth is equal to the destruction of the planet.

Plejaren - do not smoke or drink alcohol 50.

Plejaren do not smoke and do not drink alcohol, but they do have drinks that are similar to alcoholic beverages.

Plejaren - eye colors vary, makeup/cosmetics 54.23-27

Plejaren eye colors are as different as those for humans on Earth and are not all colored blue. Plejaren women like to use make-up to add color to their eyes.

Plejaren - have domestic pets 61.162-164

The Plejarens keep domestic animals, including dogs and cats, which were brought there from Earth in earlier times. But, they are not allowed to appropriate earthly animals because of certain sicknesses that live within them. They can also receive sicknesses from humans as well. So, this is a regulation for the sake of security.

Animals from other worlds only allowed if necessary 61.165-166

The Plejarens have the technology to completely disinfect animals, but their nations determine if they need any animals from other worlds. Such decisions are made only when it is determined that the animals are needed on one of their worlds.

Plejaren shoes & clothing similar to ours 61.172-174

Plejarens wear shoes that are similar to those on Earth, but they are not made from animal skins. They are made from materials that are artificially manufactured. This is also true for their clothing and they will be similar to the clothing worn by humans on Earth in about 70 years. They will be more purposeful, but would look strange to the people of today.

Plejarens do not have things like teddy bears 66.23

Erra (Plejaren planet) - envy no longer known 66.112-115

The desire for possessions is a low-level spiritual trait that is found throughout the universe and not just on Earth. But, these low levels of the spirit no longer exist on Erra and envy is no longer a part of the character of the human beings there as it was in earlier ages. They also had to overcome these matters. The less materialistic thinking that is done by humans, the less the desire is for possessions. So the standard, relating to the evolutionary level of each spiritual entity is measured by its liberation from thoughts for possessions. Fully anti-materialistic thinking human beings are no longer able to generate feelings of envy because their thinking is all encompassing and they consider all possessions to be unworthy. With love and delight, they consider everything to be general goods belonging to everyone within the laws that are respected by all.

Plejaren - no possession of mate in matrimony 66.122-129

When the Plejarens join together in matrimony, it is not a taking of possession of a partner, but a connection in harmony. There are no rights of possession, but only love, understanding, and delight about enjoying each other. Each partner remains completely free within the matrimonial laws, such as the mutual agreement of all matters. The Plejarens are human beings like earthly humans with feelings and sensations of love, friendship, sympathy, antipathy, etc. But these are much finer, more sensitive, and deep-seated with the Plejarens.

Plejarens - have not incarnated on Earth 57.76

It is not possible for Plejarens to incarnate on Earth.

Plejarens - how little we know in spite of all 69.124-125

In regards to the Creation, the Plejarens only know the causes and effects, its existence, laws, and restrictions, but nothing more. In spite of their enormous knowledge, this makes evident how little they really know.

(Back to Contents)

4.2.1 Communicating with Earth Humans

Knowledge of all Earth languages ever spoken 4.9-24

Semjase was able to speak the German language perfectly. It is much easier for the Plejarens to learn a new language than it is for Earth humans. They have access to every earthly language ever spoken as well every dialect and manners. Language training courses exist with language scientists and computers. Their computers have the means to transfer the information into humans during a hypnotic state where the language terms and senses are implanted in their memories. This process takes 21 days and an additional ten days to be able to speak the language fluently. Their scientists and apparatuses provide training for the correct pronunciation. This requires a total of 30 to 31 days. The language institutions on Earth use tape recorders, which is the initial way in which to construct machines like they use. Different places are already researching on how to use computers for this purpose.

Conditions for questions being asked & answered 8.25-43

Meier was told that the Plejarens are not allowed to solve secrets for humanity, as this would not be advantageous for the spiritual development of Earth humans. So, he is requested to not ask questions of a scientific nature, as they will not be answered. Such questions would lead too far and bring more understandings then are good for them. Their spiritual development is just too limited in these respects. Meier can be told much more information, but he must keep the information to himself. His friends and acquaintances are not as developed as he is. Some of them can qualify according to the scheme 3/2, 3/1, and 3/3. Only one of his friends falls in the position of 3/7. But, they are all inclined to learn more than is spiritually advantageous for them. They will ask questions that surpass the limit for elaboration. They will also want to make contact with the Plejarens, but this will not be possible. They must recognize this information to be the truth and acknowledge it before they can proceed. However, they are still doubtful and do not want to let the truth work in them.

Plejarens not interested in responding to doubters 9.100-114

When Meier tells Semjase that her words sounded harsh, he is told that the truth always sounds harsh. She asks him to not ask any more questions in the future that do not basically come from him. She says that she has no need to answer questions that he already knows the answers to or answer illogical questions. She has no desire to answer questions for friends that neither of them are interested in. Meier is asked to tell his friends to be satisfied with this arrangement. The way that his friends are being unreasonable and not using their brains with their unjustified distrust and criticisms is harmful to their mission. When they want to serve the mission, they must have confidence and learn to use their reasoning logic. If they are unwilling to do this, then they are without worth to them.

Conditions for Plejarens to contact an Earth human 24.1-18

In response to a demand from H.J. for Semjase to make herself and her beamship visible to him and others, she states again that this would be impossible for the following reasons: 1) Before contact with any Earth human, there must first be a decade-long study in all aspects, 2) all individuals contacted must be spiritually developed, 3) any contactee must be sufficiently developed to be able to recognize and elaborate essential truths by themselves without considerations from others or scriptures in order to draw conclusions, 4) all temporary contacts result in having the memory of the event eliminated, 5) all contacts are made as a result of higher orders, 6) restricted contacts enable security from forces that would confiscate everyone and everything, 7) restricted contacts prevent those who only seek sensations and selfish desires from gaining access which could result in panic and very dangerous consequences. After decades of exploration, the Plejarens could find no one on Earth, except Meier, that was developed enough for contact.

Contact reports should be censored of personal data 29.147-152

The contact reports should be distributed in internal circles, as they currently exist. For external circles, the reports should be altered with all personal concerns removed. If the external circles want to have the unedited reports, then they should be provided in their complete form. The revised form of the reports, are only intended for the general public.

Communication/Understanding 31.162-168

The Plejarens use a small apparatus attached to their belt to speak and understand foreign languages. It is a language translator that can quickly convert a spoken language into another one for others to understand. However, they prefer to speak in foreign languages when they are able to do so. When Meier writes down conversations spoken in another language for the contact reports, he receives the meanings of what was said without needing to do any conversions.

The Plejarens use a small apparatus attached to their belt to speak and understand foreign languages. When Meier writes down conversations spoken in another language for the contact reports, he receives the meanings of what was said without needing to do any conversions.

Impulse contact information sent to authors, etc. 39.S350-353

Certain Earth humans, like authors, receive information from outside their world so that they can describe, paint, or create models of things and possibilities for the future. In this way, the people of Earth are slowly prepared for coming events and scientists are able to receive concepts and formations that give them incentive to develop new things.

2 women in telepathic contact with Plejarens 61.129-134

Reading human thoughts 64.28-31

Because the Plejarens are prohibited from analyzing the innermost thoughts of others, they were unable to realize and recognize how complicated and illogical the thoughts are of Earth humans which enable them to write and publish untrue and distorted values other than what they, themselves believe. The Plejarens first discovered this when they came into personal contact with Meier and discovered his readiness to help them understand the thinking of Earth humans. After that, they were able to work with this matter in the proper way. They realized that they had deluded themselves for decades about the double character of earthly humans because such duplicity was completely unknown to them. They had never experienced this before.

The meaning of words & their exact values 66.2-9

When Meier attempted to give Semjase a present from Herbert, she stated that she was not permitted to accept goods. Meier explained that goods equate to a payment while a present equals the feelings of wanting to give love and delight to someone else. Semjase says that this was not the feelings of Earth humans, that she was aware of and asked if his definitions only applied to himself and a few others. He replied that this was possible because people generally give presents when they feel obligated to do so and usually during mutual exchange. He has had to explain a lot to people regarding the different meanings of words. He separates the meanings of words according to their special and exact values in order to avoid misunderstandings in communication. People are not accustomed to thinking within a word's true meaning and context. Although misunderstandings still exist, people come to learn the true values. But, long explanations are always necessary.

A hard language is demanded for telling the facts 66.100-101

The impression that people may have from reading Semjase's words may often seem to be deceiving, but a harsh language is demanded for telling the facts. Only by harsh language, can Earth humans be tempted to think for themselves.

4.2.2 Government

Plejaren government - High Council 61.169-171

The Plejaren government does not keep an administration. They only have a High Council that provides high advice and never a command or order.

Plejarens are connected to an alliance of planets 23.104-108

The Plejarens are allied in a confederation that reaches far into the cosmos. Within this alliance, there are about 127 million solar systems inhabited by human forms of life. There are also innumerable other intelligent races that are not human species which are unknown to the Plejarens or those that they simply do not stay in contact with. Unfortunately, the Plejarens are not permitted to reveal, the number of human and non-human forms of life that inhabit this solar system. Nor can they disclose the planets that they inhabit.

Plejaren planets - each planet has only 1 nation 35.P754-759

The Plejaren worlds are not separated into different states or nations as they as is the case on Earth. Each world has one single world government, which functions as an executive institution. They are all subordinate to the High Council. The High Council is the essential government of all of their worlds and is the center of government. The council is not on their home world, but on a very special planet within the solar system of the central star for their races.

High Council - the essential government over all 35.P760-790

The High Council consists of half-spiritual and half-physical beings that are cross-dimensional. They are human forms of life with enormous wisdom and knowledge that are in a state of transition. In their evolution, they have progressed so far that they release themselves from their material bodies and are semi-spiritual entities. They are the only human forms of life that are able to communicate with higher pure-spiritual forms. The oscillations of the spiritual spheres are much higher than physical humans can generate. Human beings are only able to make contact with creatures with the same level of oscillations and initiate communications. This means that Earth humans can only come into contact with those of about the same position in evolution. It is a safety measure in Creational law in which no form of life is able to tap into more knowledge than is allowed according to their state of evolution. The Plejaren worlds are all subordinate to the central government, which is formed by the semi-spiritual High Council. The planetary governments are only executive organs operating on the advice of the High Council. The government of the High Council is based upon natural Creational law. All events and all regulation is only based on natural law, which every single form of life is regulated. Every decision of the High Council accords to the form of life affected. They are based on the premise that every single creature has a position in evolution and their differences cannot be excluded. Their teachers in spiritual evolution, endeavor to study the spiritual development of every single creature.

Petale, Arahat Athersata & High Council 39.P19-2

The essential spiritual lessons will not be transmitted to Meier from the Plejarens, but from a very high spiritual sphere, which can only be communicated with through the High Council or by Arahat Athersata. This is the sphere of Petale, which transmitted the Twelve Commandments to Meier.

High Council duties 41.93-94

The education of Plejaren children is an obligation of the parents, but there is also control by the High Council, which also settles regulations, teachings, order, etc., and determines their righteousness. The High Council also contracts all marriages, which is why they do not know of divorce.

4.2.3 History

Plejaren ancient home was the Ring Nebula of Lyra 30.19-29

In the original home worlds of human races, there was a powerful destruction of a very great star. This occurred a very long time ago by a power-hungry barbarian. This IHWH perished along with everything else in the damage. The destruction developed into the form of a gigantic eye that should serve as a memorial to the other creatures of the universe of what an evil delusion and thirst for power can do. This formation is designated IHWHMATA or eye of god. On Earth, it can be found in the Lyra Constellation and it known as the Ring Nebula, or M57. A very powerful telescope is needed in order to see it from Earth.

Plejaren first spaceship 57.92-93

The Plejarens constructed their first flying machine that was capable of traveling into space, 21 million years ago. This happened millions of years after a great catastrophe occurred when a Destroyer planet broke through the Vega Constellation.

Plejaren ancestors flew in airplanes 57.191-192

The Plejaren's earliest forefathers moved through the air in very primitive flying machines with internal combustion engines, which now appear to them as being very adventurous, barbarous, and monstrous.

4.2.4 Language

Origins of Plejaren writing 31.230-238

The Plejaren alphabet consists of 26 letters, of different shapes and names then English letters, plus two more letters for the sounds of (ch) and (sch) Meier copied them along with the pronunciations from Semjase's explanations. There are no umlauts or other pronunciation keys. This alphabet is 11,000 years old. It is taken from the ancestors of Plejaren scientists on Earth, who based the patterns on star formations as seen from Earth. The script is composed of circles (representing stars) and lines. Their older letters were much more complex and is no longer used on Earth. But, it was in use centuries ago and often changed. Some current Earth scripts are altered forms of this Plejaren alphabet. The ancient scripts on Earth were brought by "the heavenly sons & daughters" who were responsible for the re-emergence of Earth humanity from savagery.

Sarat language and Kosan language 61.215-219

The name of the language that is spoken in the Pleja System is called Sarat. There is also a common inter-galactic language that is known as Kosan.

telenotical - word defined 36.38-40

Arimo - word defined, hold on 39.83-95

Tir Nan Og - Green Lands, Land of Youth 39.P192-195

Plejaren - mother-in-laws (Geranisa) 42.100-104

Spharmiddon - word, meaning the end of the Earth 45.64-68

Adonis - ancient Greek word, beautiful humans 39.P41-42

SENAN (name of our universe in Askets language) 54.11

The following are words that are spoken in the native language of the Plejarens and their meanings: Telenotical is a type of telepathic influence that uses hypnosis and high frequency oscillations as inaudible signals into human ears, Arimo means to hold onto something, Tir Nan Og refers to green lands or a land of youth, Geranisa is the title for a mother-in-law, and Spharmiddon means the end of the Earth. In addition, Adonis is an ancient Greek word that means physically beautiful humans and Senan which is the name of our universe in Askets native language in the Dal Universe.

4.2.5 Mission on Earth

Plejaren - bases and stations 7.215-223, 54.47

The Plejarens have bases on Earth as well as many other planets, where they live. One base on Earth is high in the mountains of Switzerland. Their other bases that are located around the Earth are well built so that it is impossible for other people to find them unless they know their exact location. The Plejarens established a station in Switzerland more than 300 years ago.

Mission of the Plejarens - to help Earth humans 25.56-70

The Plejarens are on Earth to help earthly humans in their development. This is a voluntary, self-imposed obligation. However, humanity must also contribute its own share in these endeavors and take up a certain voluntary duty in order to contribute to the workload. People must learn that their selfishness and limitless egotism is completely out of place and is not justified. The help that is required from mankind includes all necessary capital and labor. Humanity is wrong when it believes that they can just take and not give anything back. When people join together and help, they become greater than their individual efforts. The giving and taking must be equal. When the Plejarens provide spiritual knowledge and goods, etc., then people should elaborate the goods and knowledge and contribute to making it available to everyone. When humanity believes that it is more blessed to take than to give, then they will not free themselves from their evil egotism.

114 Plejarens stationed on Earth 57.73

Plejarens stationed on Earth - fluctuates monthly 57.111-113

There are 114 humans from the Pleja System that are currently stationed on the Earth. This number changes from month to month. There are often times when there is less than 50 Plejarens here and other times, there are more than 300. This is dependent upon their missions here as well as the availability of transports for their supplies.

4.2.6 Philosophy, controlling feelings

If a person disregards a law, it harms others too 28.40-46

The Plejarens do not care about not being appreciated for their loyal endeavors, but they do care about those who would menace their mission. If they issue special orders, then they ought to be followed. Otherwise, those who disregard the orders, become useless in regards to the mission. A harmonious community that is not degenerated, is needed for the performance of the mission. If a single human being disregards a law or order, then he not only causes damage for himself, but he also affects others by this. This is a law of the spiritual force, which applies to all forms of life. By consciously committing a fault, waves are radiated outwards and hit others who have not faulted. This is a law of nature where the whole is affected by each part.

ETs - made the mistake of controlling their feelings 66.130-158

During the last few millenniums, the Plejarens began to control their feelings too much by learning to isolate and seclude them. They assumed this was necessary in order to protect themselves against inferior-developed beings. Thus, in their desire for higher levels of evolution, all feelings became finer and more detailed, which required intensive control. This increased the harmony in their world. They developed parallel mater, which comprises every venerable matter. Their love and desire to be with others of similar development became more expressive and irresistible. These sensations were not a substitute for knowledge, brain activity, and reasoning, but a result of them. Those feelings can only be generated by knowledge and activity of the mind.

As a result, certain missions do not cause a change in feelings because they are highly developed and controlled for higher evolution. Unlike on Earth, they are not influenced by their tasks, such as a guard becoming more aggressive. Because the Plejarens made the mistake of controlling their feelings too much, they only analyzed things by using pure values of probability. But, soon after their contacts with Meier, the Plejarens discovered that he often let himself be guided by his feelings and they came to realize that they were wrong to have kept their feelings under such severe control. As a result, they corrected this mistake within the last year. But, the blocking of feelings had already caused harm. They found out about it in sufficient time and removed that misery within a few months. However, other civilizations have affected their evolution by blocking their feelings.

The people from Erra are higher developed than other races of the alliance and are more advanced in these concerns. The people from Erra are higher developed than other races of the alliance and are more advanced in these concerns. A far-reaching decision by the High Council has prevented this misery and care will be taken so that the lesser developed nations and races in the alliance do not undergo the same fault. Passions are established within spiritual development, as they are special characteristics for a certain type of development. Enormous differences exist among the Plejarens, as they do on Earth. But, the Erranians are basically different because passions fade away with the dissolution of the physical body and grow finer, corresponding to the higher spiritual development. Passions remain only as long as the physical body still exists. So, the passions experienced by the Plejarens are no longer expressed in the deep and wild manner that they are by humans on Earth. Their passions are more balanced within their range of feelings and finely rationalized. But, they are human beings just like those on Earth.

Why they don't reveal themselves publicly 3.18-26

The reason why the Plejarens do not contact the governments of Earth directly is because, without exception, all Earth governments are led by people that are hungry for power and seek profit. They would only want to gain access to their beamships so that they could exercise absolute control over the Earth. Then, they would try to capture the cosmos because their greed knows no limits. They cannot even create peace and friendship on Earth between nations or even within their own country. Imagine what they would be like with the power of a beamship and all of its technology. The Plejarens have no interest in revealing themselves publicly. The spirit of Earth humans is very limited and narrowly developed in religious slavery. They would worship extraterrestrials as gods, as they have in earlier times, or greedily attempt to take possession of the beamships. In addition, there are millions of people that would become hysterical and be lost in spirit. Because of this, it is better for them to make contact with individuals and slowly prepare them for open contact.

Security 4.4-8

There are questions that the Plejarens cannot answer fully. They trust Meier completely to keep certain information confidential, but there are other people with the power to elicit every secret from him in spite of his attempts to protect himself. Because of this, the Plejarens must be very careful with everything they say.

Meier forbidden to photograph inside craft & Semjase 7.5-12

When Meier is taken for rides aboard the Plejaren beamships, he is not permitted to take any photographs of inside the craft. At a later time, he will be permitted to take a photograph of Semjase. But, when that will be permitted, is not discussed for important reasons. Meier is allowed to know, but he is not permitted to disclose it.

Witnesses not allowed 7.94-99

Meier is not permitted to bring anyone else with him during his contacts, as explained previously. If this were permitted, then all of mankind would demand official contact and that is not acceptable.

Meier asks if he can tape record Semjase's voice 9.55-69

When Meier asks if he could tape record Semjase's voice, she states that the photographs of her ship are all that is permitted. She says that when people do not believe his words and accuse the pictures of being deceitful, then the same should be expected with a tape recording. They would say that the recording is of an earthly woman and could not be considered as convincing evidence. She asks Meier to explain to his friends that, in the future, if they accept the truth of these contacts, then they should do so confidently and no longer seek proof because doubts, criticisms, and distrust are not helpful to their mission.

Meier states that these are harsh words and is told that this is necessary as only the truth is helpful. When he expresses the concerns of his friends that the intrigues of others could cause harm to him, he is told that they will have everything that he has provided to them. If they have confidence in him, then this will suffice for them and they will not need anything more. Their arguments regarding intrigues reveal selfish thoughts and much distrust. This is only another way for them to be able to also make contact.

Meier asks for photos of other planets - denied 13.36-39

When Meier asks Semjase for photographs of her home world or some other world, she says that this is not possible because she is prohibited from bringing anything other than crystals and stones from other planets.

Plejarens eliminated memories in this respect 17.12-18

Because of the Swiss military's investigations regarding Semjase's beamship, emergency measures were taken to isolate the individuals, who have obtained dangerous knowledge about the Plejaren presence, and eliminate their memories in this regard. This was a serious incident that has resulted in the necessity to refuse further photographs of their craft for a long time. But instead, Meier will have an opportunity to photograph other things.

Discovering people's true thoughts 64.37-57

In order for the Plejarens to discover the true thoughts of people on Earth before 1977, they ordered Meier to produce lectures and articles for the world's mass public. Through these things, they were able to examine mankind's actual responses to them. This was necessary because they were not allowed to analyze the innermost thoughts of human beings. After several articles in newspapers and magazines as well as broadcasts over radio and TV, the Plejarens were successful in learning the truth. They discovered that governments were very interested and issued special orders in different countries, the broad public confronted this information earnestly, and ufology groups did not take the information seriously. It was the ufology groups that were the most important to the Plejarens and this was very depressing to them.

They determined that Earth humans are unable to dedicate themselves to the concerns regarding the existence of extraterrestrial beings and their craft. The so-called ufologists, who are supposed to be spreading the truth and preparing humanity for the coming extraterrestrial contacts, have humiliated themselves as primitive, semi-scientific sects that spread their nonsense of self-constructed theories which lead mankind away from the truth instead of guiding them towards the truth. This shows that Earth humans are still not sufficiently prepared for real knowledge that could help them with the coming of extraterrestrial intelligences. They realized that the development they assumed humanity had in regards to real enlightenment was just an illusion. This resulted in a new calculation of probability which stated that humanity will not be ready to realize the existence of extraterrestrial life for another 200 to 300 years.

This will happen when Earth humans begin to travel outside of this solar system and extraterrestrial beings are then able to appear on Earth in official capacity. This also means that the official landing predicted to occur before 2000 is impossible and the Plejarens will recommend that it does not take place. It is because of the actions of people like Jacob, Bertossi, Arends, and many others that humanity must continue to live in spiritual darkness apart from the truth. Meier, and his group, will still work with sincere and knowledgeable groups who are searching and spreading the truth. To the inner core of Meier's group, the High Council and all of their nations convey their dearest and sincere gratitude for their love and confidence in the truth as well as the love and assistance that they provide. Semjase also offers her thanks for everyone that occupies themselves with their endeavors and who become involved with Meier's group.

4.2.8 Ships, Great Spacer, Immigration

Beamship - protection-beam-belt 4.61-79

The shape of the Plejaren beamships has no importance in space, but their disc-shape form is aerodynamic in the atmosphere and offers the least resistance to air and water. This shape also provides the largest surface area, which makes the driving forces on them most effective. The beamships are also surrounded by a beam-protection-grid, which causes every breeze to glide away without pushing on the craft. While in the cosmos, it functions the same way with swarms of particles in space. So, this grid protects the ship from all strange influences and resistances. Anything hitting the grid either becomes destroyed or is forced away. Anything attempting to penetrate the craft or cause resistance to it, is simply diverted without suppressing its effect. Any suppression would cause resistance that would prevent unlimited speed.

Another important function provided by the grid for the passengers inside the craft, is that it neutralizes the gravitational force of a planet. The craft generates its own gravitational forces and becomes an autonomous miniature planet. It can fly through any atmosphere at nearly light-speed without risk. Since the gravity of a planet has no influence on a beamship, the passengers inside feel normal and unburdened as if they were on the planet. Inside the ship, the gravity is absolutely controlled and adjusted for the passenger's comfort. When at other strange and hostile planets, the Plejarens wear suits with small, portable instruments that generate the same protective grid for the individual as portable instruments that generate the same protective grid for the individual as for the beamships. The Plejarens are not allowed to reveal the technical aspects of the beam-protection grid, but scientists on Earth are already working on it and the time is not far away when they will create it.

Semjase's new beamship 7.2-4

Semjase informed Meier that she would soon be getting a new beamship, which he would be allowed to photograph at close range. Her current ship has automatic radiators built in which destroys film within 90 meters of the craft. However, the radiation is not harmful to living creatures.

UFOs (beamships) - distorter screen 9.38-54

Regarding people not being able to see beamships except Meier, he is told that the talent for observation is very bad for earthly humans. They often see beamships, but assume that they are airplanes and do not give them a second look. They are simply not accustomed to providing a very scrutinized observation. However, the Plejarens usually protect their beamships against being seen by people. A distortion screen is used to render the beamships, and everything else within a diameter of 500 meters, invisible. They can also be partly visible on one side, from above or below. When Meier is permitted to photograph a ship, then it is protected on all other sides from observation by the distortion screen and no one else can see it.

The "Greatspacer" mother ship is a huge metallic sphere that reflects a small amount of light from the Sun. It has a large hatch in the side of it about a third of the way up from the bottom. Inside the hatch, there is a very large hanger with many beamships parked there and only one hundred square meters of space available to fly in. The interior is illuminated from the walls in a bluish colored light. It is the greatest ship in its class with all of the latest technology known to the Plejarens. It is its own perfect world, which can fly anywhere in the universe. It houses 143,00 inhabitants. Everything needed for living can be produced inside the ship and it is totally independent from everything else.

Although there are others of its class, this great spaceship represents the Plejaren's newest construction, which has only been in service for four years. It is used for expeditions and for keeping inter-galactic order. It is able to move through all time and space. It can even move through universal barriers and link numerable forms of life together in different universes. The size of this ship is 17,182 meters in diameter. About 11,000 meters above the hanger deck, there is a large open area of about 100 by 200 meters with green plants, trees, and flowers. It is like a Garden of Eden inside the giant ship. The essential city is located in the ship's center. (Also see section 4.4.2)

Semjase's new beamship is able to break through dimensions in two different directions.

Immigration ships 57.Q5-9

There are great Immigration ships with an average size of 120 kilometers in diameter, which seats about a million human forms of life. These giant ships are only used for purposes of immigration when a world is menaced with destruction. These ships were used in ancient times when the Plejaren forefathers immigrated from the Lyra and Vega systems to Earth and at later times when they colonized the Pleja System. The exterior of the ships have been maintained since then and they are equipped with the newest technology.

Effects on plants of craft landings 61.142-149

The touchdown supports of Semjase's beamship caused the grass and plants under them to be pressed down in a clockwise spiral form from the outside to the inside center. This occurs because the round touchdown supports vibrate, along with the whole ship, in a spiral-shaped, anti-gravity oscillation in a counter-clockwise direction from the outer sides to the center. The bottom of the ship has four of these centers, with one in each of the three supports and one in the center of the craft. The oscillations cause the plants to continue to grow horizontally because they have caused a shift of gravity to occur inside the plants. This causes them to hold themselves down in a counter-gravity and work against the normal gravity of the Earth. They continue growing in their spiral form without being harmed or broken off. The plants press themselves down from above and repulse themselves from the gravitational force above them. The Earth's gravitational force also plays a decisive part by making their attraction force effective.

Menara's beamship - only has a planetary drive 63.7-12

Menara's beamship has a drive for planetary flights only and this makes it difficult for it to leave traces. When it comes near the ground, her ship generates gas, which catches fire and burns the ground, as well as any plants within several meters of it. As a result, she does not normally land her ship, but leaves it suspended in the air.

Cows disturbed by Semjase's beamship 63.48

Cows in the area of Semjase's beamship are disturbed because the oscillations of the security instruments influence them.

(Back to Contents)

4.2.9 Technology

Position indicator (apparatus) to see into the future 36.111-144

The Plejarens have an apparatus that they refer to as an "Area Analyzer". It enables the operator to view any person on Earth and analyze their brain waves to determine their conscious thoughts currently experienced or subconscious thoughts of events into the future, which the individual is not yet conscious of. This device can record the visual images of these events so that they can be viewed later. This allows the Plejarens to obtain important information that enables them to watch over and control everything that is important to them. They could know about everything on Earth if they used the device all of the time. But, because they need to know about certain things, it is essentially used for control and supervision purposes only. They gather all other necessary information by mentally sensing the thoughts of others, which are in accordance with the normal course of evolution. But, because this way is mentally demanding, mistakes can be made in recognizing thoughts, which result in wrong decisions, actions, and judgments, just like Earth humans do. The operator of this device simply uses a panel that causes a globe to turn until a desired location appears under a pointer. Then, the operator's thoughts are used to view any person in the area and obtain a visual image of their thoughts.

Radio-photography - apparatus 37.29

Radio-photography is an apparatus that is similar to film cameras. It is a process whereby the physical-chemical reactions to images are recorded as radio frequency radiations. The radiations can then be converted through a photographic filter directly into a photograph.

Guided real vision contacts - defined 38.95-128

Real-vision is a certain type of guided, controlled vision that is mastered by many extraterrestrial intelligences. The Plejarens use it to evoke controlled visions that influence many forms of life in order to offer them certain impressions, which ought to be instructive to them. When they share them with others, it can cause their environment to be influenced in a suitable manner. These visions are so completely realistic that the influenced people become convinced that they have actually experienced the vision. It is called "real-vision" because it seems real.

Each real-vision lasts as long as the vision would take in reality. This could take days, weeks, or longer. The real-visions and reality become a connected and continuous series of events, which cannot be differentiated from each other. In a state of real-vision, influenced people become masters of many spiritual forces, which lie sleeping in their subconscious. They use them unconsciously to compensate for feelings of hunger and thirst by condensing matter into eatable and drinkable things, which they experience in their real-visions to provide nourishment.

This is similar to the event demonstrated by Jmmanuel when he fed 5,000 people with bread that he multiplied in this way. The difference is that real-vision influenced people exercise these abilities unconsciously, while Jmmanuel was consciously able to do it. When influenced people become sleepy, they are able to sleep anywhere in the available environment. Usually, this is arranged and the influenced person is guided to trustworthy individuals. Normally, these individuals are influenced as well in ways that enable them to care for others.

Meier has the ability to block real-visions and realize reality in a way that other Earth humans are unable to do. In a fraction of a second, they can fall under the influence and accept any matter as a given truth. This is not deceitful when the event serves for the expanded awareness of truth. Earth humans are influenced only for the purpose of experiencing a visionary event that would not be possible in reality.

Scanning instrument for photographing 39.13-15, 274

Because of the fields inside the Plejaren beamships, photographs from inside the craft usually turned out poorly. However, based upon Asket's specifications, a scanning instrument was manufactured that enabled Meier to take clear pictures. A light cable is also used with the scanner in order to provide more light for a better exposure.

Beamship - radiation shield 39.37-43

The dimension portal in the Bermuda Triangle cannot be seen by the naked eye, but it is possible to make the radiations visible with the help of the radiation shield around Semjase's beamship. Two huge trails of radiation is seen by Meier along with spheres and other things around the Earth. They are energy bales of different sorts and strengths. They circle the Earth at different distances and intervals. They are very important for the maintenance of life on Earth.

Space-analyzers - apparatus 39.P14-17

An overdue beamship of a form of life known to the Plejarens from their dimension penetrated here and has no possibility of returning on its own. So, the Plejarens sent out several space-analyzers to look for it. Within 2 or 3 hours, they expected to find out the results of the search.

Plejarens - able to regenerate body parts 42.73-78

The Plejarens have the ability to completely regenerate a new limb or organ, when needed. In cases where this is not possible, then they substitute the organs with artificial ones. These new organs will probably survive the life of the body. This possibility also exists for severed limbs as well.

Chair apparatus - cured Meier's cold & overexertion 43.130-143

While Meier was in Semjase's beamship, she was saddened to see how he was suffering from a cold and overexertion and said that she could no longer watch how much he exerted himself. She ordered him to sit in a chair, close his eyes, and rest his head. Instantly, his head was clear and his headache was gone. She assured him that he would feel much better by noon. The chair apparatus improved his natural body forces by dissolving a tiny unit of original cosmic energy in his body. But, Meier was in urgent need of rest as well.

Beamship metal - obtained from converted lead 45.39-55

Beamship metal - from lead, 7 processes 46.

Cold fusion welding for beamship construction 46.

The Plejaren beamships are constructed with a process of conversion from lead. The lead is extracted from many things such as the atmosphere of stars, water, different planets, as well as from the decay of different ores from stars in destruction. Then, they convert the lead substances by mechanical and chemical processes into a hard metal form, which is much harder then the metal steel on Earth. Next, it is polarized by a further process of conversion into a special beamship-suited alloy. Although there are the same metals on Earth as well as on other planets, Earth does not contain all of the metal ores that exist in the universe. The metals within this alloy consist of copper, nickel, silver, and gold. The alloy could be produced on Earth and used on earthly spaceships. But first, humanity would have to be capable of space flight. It could not be used on the primitive rocket capsules and humanity will not be traveling into space for a long time. A piece of the alloy will be provided to Meier. There is a total of seven processes involved in fabricating the metal. There is a cold fusion apparatus that is used to weld the metal together in the construction on beamships.

Display of atmospheric electrical energy elimination 48.

Meier witnesses a display of the atmospheric electrical energy being eliminated through a burning process by a beamship. This must be done above 2,500 meters in elevation.

Plejarens - conversion of trash into useable soil 50.

The Plejarens are able to convert trash and rubbish into useable soil. This process is accomplished with robots.

Beamship anti-gravity shaft - Meier descends thru it 52.

Meier is able to descend from Semjase's beamship through an anti-gravity shaft to the ground.

Communication by hyperspace "radio" transmissions 54.59-62

The Plejarens use a form of communications similar to radio transmissions without any signal retardation through hyper space. Their signals are converted into tachyon particles that travel billions of times faster than light-speed. Within less than a second, they can travel over the whole hyperspace and be reformed back into signals at the receiver. The conversion process is a form of universal enlargement of the signals in relation to the speed of the tachyon particles.

Beamship, propulsion and Anti-gravity drive 55.140-146

Semjase's current beamship = 1.5 tons in weight 55.150-151

The tachyon drive system of the Plejaren beamships does not correspond to a direct beam propulsion system. The Plejarens stopped using beam propulsion 400 years ago, but they continue to refer to their craft as beamships. Semjase's ship partly uses radiated energy for propulsion composed of highly concentrated bundles of light. Her previous ship used an anti-gravitation drive that was based on the principle of discharging gravity. This was only used for planetary flight while its tachyon drive was used for space flight. Her current ship is equipped with an anti-matter drive for cosmic space flight. The ability to use anti-matter was only discovered by Plejaren scientists within the last year. Semjase's current ship weighs about 700 kilograms more than her previous ship for a total weight of 1.5 tons.

Cancer - eradicated by Plejarens long ago 57.42-54

Cancer, which is a parasitic wrongly controlled life, has been eradicated in humans of the Pleja System for a very long time. This was first possible when they avoided certain negative opinions and behavior and started to think and act in different ways. Earth humans must develop this necessary knowledge by themselves in order to evolve and learn the correct way of dealing with things. If the Plejarens were to reveal this knowledge to humanity without them coming to this understanding on their own, then it would be evaluated in destructive ways. The knowledge about conquering this disease would reveal too many powerful forces to be helpful at this time. Through evolutionary development, earthly humans will become prepared for this knowledge, its force and power. Humanity will come to understand how to use it according to Creational laws without evaluating it in a negative way. The Plejarens do not feel that they have the right to influence human evolution that accords to all creational and natural laws. Strangely, the Plejarens also suffer from the common cold, but they are able to attack it and confine it.

Extraterrestrials can eliminate lost items on Earth 62.93-97

Sometimes when Earth humans or insincere entities find objects that belong to extraterrestrials, they are able to eliminate the objects or burn them to ashes. This happens by a far-reaching transmitter that affects a self-destruct mechanism that is built into each object. The self-destruct mechanisms are usually built into objects and instruments that are taken to strange and lowly developed worlds for security purposes so that there is no danger of them falling into the wrong hands. These things are normally produced from synthetic materials.

Selective warning device - small white object 62.98-100

Semjase carries a small white object that is known as a selective warning instrument. It produces a fine signal tone that warns her when someone comes near to her with brain wave patterns that are not registered in the instrument. She always carries a second one on her belt in case the other one is lost.

Instrument that incinerates items 62.101-109

If an instrument is lost, then another instrument on Semjase's belt will cause the lost item to burn and change into a viscous brown and black synthetic mass by pressing two buttons. It will turn to ashes and nothing will remain if allowed to burn long enough. The burnt item must not be touched for one and a half hours so that the radiations from the combustion can dissolve. The remains become a synthetic material that does not enable recognition of the original compounds and is similar to other things on Earth.

Beamship apparatus - teletransmitter 73.33-36

When Meier expressed a desire to instantly appear before his friend, Jacobus, from inside a beamship, he was suspended through a mechanical teleporter. It is able to de-materialize a field and then re-materialize it somewhere else. Meier climbed into a pit and was instantly transmitted, as though growing straight up from the ground, in front of the car of his friend.

Semjase 1.

At Meier's first contact experience with a Plejaren entity, a UFO landed in a meadow near him. Finding it impossible to get close to the craft, he just sat down on the ground and waited. In less than a minute later, a figure appeared from behind the object. It was obviously a human being, wearing a peculiar gray colored coverall suit that was very pliant and light. The suit was close fitting to the body, extremely durable, and the material resembled the skin of an elephant. Around the neck, there was a ring, which evidently served for the mounting of a helmet.

This entity was a normal female human being with nothing that indicated super abilities, pretentiousness, or spirituality, although she was devilishly attractive. She also walked quite normally for a woman, yet somewhat stronger, more confident, and graceful without being particularly dainty or trying to make any special impression. Slowly, she came near to Meier, seized him by his arm and pulled him up. Her grip was strong and sure, but also very pleasant and secure. With slow steps, they walked toward Meier's vehicle and sat down in the dry grass together. This extraterrestrial woman then began to speak in perfect German with a strange accent. She stated that her name was Semjase (pronounced Sem-ya-seh) and that she originated from the region of the Pleiades. (This was the beginning of several contacts that have occurred over many years. See Chapter 2 for a full description of this contact.)

Semjase's age - 330 years 3.37-44

Meier guessed that Semjase appeared to be 32 or 33 years old. But, the human beings of the Pleja System live to about 1,000 years of age and by this standard, Semjase is very young at only 330 years old. This corresponds to 33 years of age by earthly standards.

Semjase leaving for some time, will use telepathy 17.104-116

Semjase informed Meier that, within a few weeks, she would be leaving Earth for some time and that they will only have telepathic contacts while she is gone. Meier asks if she was leaving to marry a man and was told that she feels better without a man for now. Later, she will make plans for this.

Semjase is tasked to the moon and other planets 26.1-8

Semjase informed Meier that they could not talk long and would not be in contact very often in the future because she has been ordered to undertake a special mission. However, she would be able to provide a demonstration of her beamship. She is being tasked to go to some planets in this solar system and the moon in connection with some events that have occurred recently. Earthly scientists are endeavoring to explore space and some worlds, which requires attention. The United States and Russia are cooperating to work together in a space station. This demands extreme attention and much control from the Plejarens in order to prevent earthly scientists and power-hungry people from reaching concepts that they are unable to bear. There is a danger of them reaching perceptions that would bring heavy consequences for Earth humans when certain nations are able to strengthen their powers. As a result, the Plejarens must monitor everything and intervene as necessary in order to prevent the complete destruction of all mankind and their world. This would also affect other neighboring systems and evoke a small cosmic catastrophe.

Meier asks Semjase to write letter for Meier's group 31.206-211

Meier observes in Semjase certain female traits 31.215-228

Meier asked Semjase to write a letter to his group because they would enjoy reading something very personal from her that they could hold in their hands. When she asks if that is really important, he assures her that it is. She then asks what she should say and says that she doesn't have the necessary equipment and she is not clear about how to do it. Meier says he will help her with any wording and hands her paper and a pen. Semjase says that she doesn't know what to write and Meier tells her to write anything and something will come to her mind. He tells her to not make this so complicated and just write some kind words that come from herself.

Semjase asks how she should begin and Meier responds by saying that she is a typical woman. She asked what he meant by that and he says that sometimes, women are very helpless creatures when asked to do something strange for them. She is no different then the women on Earth. This does not trouble Meier, but it shows him that she is just a human female with some purely womanly characteristics. He wonders if all women in the universe are the same. Semjase's father, Ptaah, agrees with Meier. Semjase says that she does not want to contradict them and then her face turns bright red.

Meier is delighted to see her loosing control and being influenced by her feelings. Semjase reads his thoughts and asks him to stop. He explains that he means no evil. On the contrary, he now holds her in higher esteem as a human being. Semjase says that it is not always a good thing to know the feelings of someone else. Meier agrees with her and asks if she thought she could hide her feelings from him. She admitted to it, but now knows that she did not succeed. She asks if he wouldn't delude himself because she is a woman and he says that is nonsense because such feelings are not dependant on sex. Ptaah agrees and Semjase asks them to speak no more about this. She takes the paper and pen and begins writing without hesitation.

Meier remarks on Semjase's beauty, wife was jealous 34.232-237

Meier remarks that it is fantastic being able to discuss things with Semjase and that she is simply very attractive. He expresses a desire to take a bite out of her, but would never do such a thing. So, he escapes to other thoughts. Semjase thinks that he is funny and asks if his wife wouldn't be jealous to hear him say such things. Meier admits that he has had problems with his wife being jealous of her, but says that she has calmed down in the last few months. He now goes to the contacts without his wife knowing about them. He believes that this is the best thing to do.

Semjase - reason & logic 39.101-117

Semjase states that she will never understand Meier's behavior and thinks that Earth humans are all somewhat peculiar in their passions for adventure. This is completely strange to her. Meier explains that some humans are, in spite of everything else, just old brave soldiers. The unknown simply entices them. The harder life is to them, the more they enjoy it. He promises to teach her this behavior. She hopes reason will prevail over him. Meier admits that he can be deceived some times and things can go wrong.

Semjase is surprised that he can say this so easily, but she cannot deny the logic in taking chances. She says that perhaps she lets herself be guided too much by reason in certain things without considering logical concerns in their proper measure. Meier states that Sfath taught this to him when he was a child. Semjase admits that he is further developed in this regard them she is. Because of their high technologies, they have become poorly developed in these concerns. She assures him that she will discuss this with her people because she believes this can be of use to them.

Meier cuts a tuft of Semjase's hair as a remembrance 39.307-309

Meier brought a pair of scissors with him when he met with Semjase and showed them to her. She asked what he wanted to do with them and he said that he wanted to cut off a big tuft of her hair as a remembrance of her. He plans to display it in a showcase as something personal from her. He assures her that they do not want to make a cult out of it. Semjase agrees, if it will bring joy to his group. After cutting some of her hair, she asked if it would be enough and is assured that everyone would be delighted by it.

Semjase's husband 41.63-71

A little more than 200 years ago, Semjase was married. They had no children together because they had planned to wait for children until after her husband had returned from an expedition to a newly discovered galaxy. He went on the expedition with seven crew-members in two small spaceships. But, only one of the craft returned after eleven years. The ship carrying her husband suffered control failures and fell into a star. So, Semjase lost her husband after only being married for seven short years. The Plejarens consider a married person to no long be married when a partner departs from life and no children have been conceived between them.

Semjase - opinion of Earth music (pop & harmonic) 42.110-112

Semjase considers some of Earth's music to be painful to her ears. She often finds it horrible to listen to Earth music. She enjoys really good and harmonic earthly music, which has nothing in common with the hits that are, in many ways, bad and unmusical. There is no way for her to describe the music in her world because it would sound very strange to those on Earth. Their instruments would also be considered to be strange by Earth humans.

Semjase's mother 44.95-102

Semjase's mother lives with her father on his spaceship. She considers her mother to be a very wonderful woman. Her mother already knows Meier much better than he knows. Semjase is not her only daughter.

Flowers picked by Semjase for Kalliope Meier 53.193-200

After an assassination attempt on Meier's life, Semjase expressed concern that his wife must be rather excited about it. In an attempt to provide her with some pleasure, Semjase decides to collect a bundle of quaking-grass for her. She asks Meier to pass it along to his wife with her kind regards and love. She also instructs him to give her a kiss. He also decides to collect a big bunch of marigolds, pink flowers, ferns, leaves, and forget-me-not flowers. Semjase says that his wife has well deserved this.

Semjase - obligations on earth since 1903 54.45-46

Semjase has been entrusted with obligations on Earth for the last 72 years. Her commitment here expires in four more years. Their station in Switzerland was established a little more than 300 years ago.

Semjase's birthday - February 7th 54.110-113

When the Plejaren 13 month calendar is converted into Earth's 12-month chronology per year, then Semjase's birthday would fall on the 7th of February. Her birth is under the astrology sign of Aquarius. These star signs have been known since ancient times on Earth by our common forefathers and the same signs were transferred to the Pleja System. But from their perspective, the positions are greatly shifted and result in another arrangement.

Semjase's written greeting to the children at FIGU 55.17-23

Semjase is delighted when she discovers that a child in Meier's group has asked if she has any brothers or sisters. She likes children very much and agrees to write a greeting to the child. Semjase has a brother by the name of Yukata and a sister named Pleja.

Semjase's knowledge connected to her mission 57.161-164, 61.231

Semjase has learned many professions, but her current tasks require her to be educated in spiritual lessons, coordination, technology, archeology, time-travel, earthly religions, politics, economy, the history of Earth, and different other subjects that she is thoroughly knowledgeable in. The Plejarens normally master between 12 and 30 or more different fields of study. Semjase was required to undergo 4 years of intensive study before she could answer any questions for Meier.

Semjase postpones her vacation from Earth 62.1-24

Due to some letters and articles about Meier and his contacts, which are considered damaging to their mission, Semjase has decided not to take her vacation now, but to postpone it to a later time. Meier regrets that she is not able to take her vacation, but is pleased that she will not be going away. She is comforted by his feelings for her. She thanks him and says that he is very dear.

Teddy bear - gift from Herbert Runkel for Semjase 66.12-23

Meier brought a present for Semjase to open from a friend, Herbert Runkel. She is surprised to find a soft Teddy bear doll inside and does not know what it is. She finds it to be soft, fine, and warm. She expresses her gratitude for it and says that she is delighted by it. She decides to keep it in her ship as a reminiscence of relationships, security, and good friends on Earth that are worthy of love. They do not have things like this on her home world.

Your dreams are a medicine for you. --Semjase 66.62-73

Semjase tells Meier that there are some things that he should not know in advance. If he were to know of things that are to happen in the future, then he would not have the same feelings when they occur. Meier agrees and Semjase is pleased. She tells him that his dreams are a medicine for him. Semjase admits to eavesdropping on him since he does not block his thoughts to her. She says that his dreams are wonderful and she feels deep delight from him. He caused a stirring of happy and delightful sensations inside of her.

Semjase - no more presents to be accepted 66.159-166

Semjase tells Meier that he should not bring any more presents because she will have to refuse them. The Teddy bear will be the only exception.

Semjase was on vacation on Erra for 3 weeks 69.1-2

Semjase's name - female form meaning semi-IHWH 69.87-97

Semjase's name is a female form of a semi-ishwish. In the Plejaren language, the term meaning semi is elo and the female form of ishwish is ishrish. So, the proper title for Semjase is an Elo-Ishrish. However, de-generation can occur if a wrong name is given to a human being.

4.3.2 Quetzal

Meier meets the Plejaren station leader Quetzal 28.Q1-2

Quetzal (pronounced Kuet-zahl) is the name of the highest leader over all Plejaren stations in this solar system. He is making telepathic contact with Meier in order to discuss some matters concerning his group. He greets Meier with honor as a dear friend. But, Quetzal is a serious, no nonsense type of individual with a lot of responsibilities that include monitoring and interacting with the most evil of entities in this region of space.

Quetzal says that special orders are to be followed 28.Q20-33

Quetzal informs Meier that when they issue orders, they are based on absolute logic and just cause. The orders they issue are a result of exact information and they know what purpose they serve. If their orders are disputed, then they become meaningless and worthless because the path to truth cannot be walked through neglect. It is not permitted for their orders to always be questioned and neglected. Meier's group members should not disregard their orders and act from their own judgment in these matters. The orders they issue are commands that ought to be observed. When everyone makes their own decisions, then they are treated according to their own decisions. But, Earth humans must observe the natural and creational laws.

The Plejarens are the leading and advising factors before humanity on Earth and it is not permitted for people to rely on their own illogical thoughts and disregard orders. If they cannot realize the wisdom of the Plejaren logic, this does not give them license to do whatever they want to do. The Plejarens can only offer spiritual lessons and useful information for humanity on Earth when their advice is respected. Illogical arbitrary actions greatly injure their mission here. Humanity should understand that the Plejarens are 3,000 years in advance of Earth humans in evolution. Anyone on Earth that believes that they know better than the Plejarens are suffering from a selfish megalomania.

Plejarens insist reports be published word-for-word 28.Q55-69

Regarding the contact reports, Quetzal says that it is the judgment of some of Meier's group, that only parts of the reports should be disclosed and that all personal matters should be removed. This is not acceptable to the Plejarens. They insist that the reports must be disclosed word-for-word just as they were spoken. This includes all personal remarks. The reports are only valid and worthy if they are reproduced in complete form. This order is based upon scrutinized deliberations of all factors for logic. Anything that is not intended to be revealed in the reports, is withheld from Meier from the beginning. So, everything in the contact reports should be offered and explained to mankind on Earth. Any facts, words, explanations, corrections, or anything else that is omitted is not acceptable. The truth must be revealed and taught accurately, even if certain matters are found to be undesirable to certain individuals. This order also applies to the Plejarens who often make inadvertent mistakes that are to be revealed. It is expected that any prior violation of this order will now be corrected.

Things explained once should not need repetition 28.Q70-75

Meier is told by Quetzal that it is not pleasant for the Plejarens to repeatedly be expected to occupy themselves with the same issues. Once they give an explanation about an order that has been issued, it should suffice. It should not be expected that the same things should be repeatedly discussed several times. In the future, Semjase has been ordered to omit such repetitions of things that have been thoroughly explained. Whatever is explained once, does not need to be explained any more. This is not only time consuming, but illogical and unnecessary.

By no means do we exercise dictatorial measures 28.Q76-80

Quetzal tells Meier that, in no way, are they trying to exercise dictatorial measures to force the will and knowledge of the Plejarens onto Earth humans. They have only undertaken missions voluntarily to diffuse advice about the spirit and some other things. Whoever wants to accept these lessons and acknowledge them, may do so and those who want to refuse them are also free to do so. But, the ones who acknowledge them, must be conscious that only certain individuals can obtain an order that will result in special destinations when advice is observed and assistance is provided. Only in this way, will the laws and missions be fulfilled.

4.3.3 Ptaah

Semjase tells Meier not to call Ptaah Dear God 31.141-148

Semjase takes Meier to meet her father, Ptaah (pronounced Ptah), onboard his Greatspacer mother ship. Meier is not impressed with the title that Ptaah has of IHWH and talks of throwing flowers at a megalomaniac. This causes great laughter from Semjase and Ptaah. Semjase explains that they found his comment funny because he assumed pure earthly forms in their world when they have come to know a completely different form for many hundreds of years. Semjase tells Meier not to refer to Ptaah as a god because that brings back sad memories of earlier times in their evolution. The designation of IHWH now has a new meaning for them. Although there are very fine differences in humans at all levels of evolution, everyone is valued equally, even though spiritual development takes a very long time.

Ptaah - Semjase's father, speaks to Meier in German 31.156-161

Semjase takes Meier into the command center of Ptaah's Greatspacer mother ship. The command center has equipment that is arranged like a horseshoe. A single man is seen standing in this horseshoe as Semjase and Meier arrive. This man is dressed similar to Semjase and exudes great love and friendliness. He appears to be about 70 Earth years old. Semjase and the man hug and kiss each other and then talk in a strange language to one another. The man looks at Meier attentively and has a roguish smile in the features of an old man. Semjase introduces Meier to her father and the two of them shake hands. Her father says that it is a great pleasure for him to see Meier there. Semjase has reported very much about him. He welcomes Meier and Meier thanks him.

Semjase's father embraces Meier, who is unable to speak. The man tells Meier to call him Ptaah, for that is his name. He says that an ancestor of his lived in earlier times on Earth with a former human race. He was an IHWH and was also named Ptaah. His wife was named Basth and there are still many age-old traditions, tales, and legends of them on Earth. Meier says that he was not aware of this, but will research it when he returns to Earth. Semjase says that he will discover about this in the South American tales about gods. Meier expresses surprise that she referred to Ptaah as a god when she had told him not to call him that. Meier asks how he should address her father and is told that, because everyone is considered equal, he can call him by his name. Ptaah asks Meier if he speaks any other languages and he says that he speaks Greek. This pleases Ptaah because he also speaks Greek.

Meier & Ptaah then speak in modern Greek 31.162-168

Semjase explains that her father has been speaking to Meier in his native language because he does not speak German. A small apparatus on Ptaah's belt is a translation device that has been translating any language spoken and making the conversions understandable for everyone. But since Ptaah and Meier both speak Greek, it is preferred to speak without the device. Later, when Meier receives the transmissions of this conversation, everything will be presented in his native language for easy transcription. This is a big relief to Meier.

Ptaah's age - 759 years (as of June 14, 1976) 55.36-37

A child in Meier's group wanted to know how old Semjase's father was and Semjase says that he is 759 years old by the chronology on Earth.

Ptaah intervenes in assassination attempt 65.1-16

Ptaah personally came to Earth to meet with Meier, who welcomed him with friendship and respect. Ptaah expresses his delight to be with his dear friend. Then, he informs Meier that he was called by Semjase to investigate miserable pieces of work that threaten Meier's life. This is in regards to a missile attack from a ship at Winkelriet near Wetzikon. (See section 3.1.3 for more information) Ptaah says that he ordered the introduction of telepathic impulses towards Meier and his group regarding the menacing dangers present and provided a warning for him not to undertake any long journeys in the near future. In particular, he was warned not to give any lectures about the Plejaren presence. But, Meier stubbornly refused to heed these warnings or listen to his group member's advice, even though the Plejarens endeavored so much to prevent such an impending occurrence. Ptaah tells Meier that he should act accordingly and not work against his own feelings. They know exactly what they are doing and why they are doing it. They did not become involved without sufficient cause to believe that his life was extraordinarily threatened when he decided to undertake his planned travels.

Do not constrain your assumptive feelings -Ptaah 65.P43-45

Ptaah tells Meier that, in the future, he should not constrain his assumptive feelings, but live according to them. When he goes against them, he consciously generates evil and he troubles his Plejaren friends with unnecessary labor. The danger exists that the Plejarens are not always able to survey and control all matters, which could cause him harm.

Meier feels like an idiot 65.P80-S10

Meier tells Ptaah and Semjase that this has been rather much for him to bear and calls himself an idiot. Ptaah tells him that he should not lower himself in this manner. His anger with himself is not justified. Meier consents to this and says that he knows he has made a heavy mistake. He tells them that, in the future, he will act accordingly to what he is ordered or he will simply not say anything. He admits that he deserved the preaching he has received as he feels that he has been very silly. But, Semjase says that she does not agree. It is evident to her that he has allowed himself to be guided by his feelings because he did not want to deceive his dear friends in Munich. He was also conscious of the need to perform his mission without endangering it. She can feel how he is weeping inside and feels very sorry for him. But nevertheless, this must be as her father has said. The fulfillment of his mission is much more important than the anger of some unreasonable persons who seek to abuse him and his friends.

Ptaah cautions Meier not to be guided by his feelings because, at the moment, the cosmic influences are very aggressive and he has a hard struggle ahead until the middle of next year. His dear friends around him will inform him in greater detail about this matter. This time will be very troublesome and full of dangers. So, Meier is cautioned to be careful and deliberate everything thoroughly, as previously advised by Semjase.

4.3.4 Pleija

Kalliope dream about Pleija 55.24-35

Meier asks Semjase if her sister, Pleija (pronounced Play-ya), has black hair and Semjase wants to know how he is aware of that fact. He explains that his wife, Kalliope, told him of a dream that she had, about 3 weeks ago, regarding a very pretty, dark-haired girl that was about Meier's height. In her dream, he called the girl, Pleija. Semjase says that Pleija told her about very strong streams of thoughts that she could not analyze or localize. Those thoughts must have been from his wife. Semjase has noticed that she has become interested in their mission and other concerns for the last two months. She has extraordinarily strong spiritual abilities that would be worthwhile for her to evaluate. Meier says that he is aware of her abilities, but wonders how to make her aware of it. He has often tried, but always in vain. Semjase says that she will assist her in this because she has reached a step in development where someone needs to help her. Meier says that he will also assist her. Semjase says that his intensive help would be beneficial, but it will take much of his time. Meier says that the time does not matter since it will be useful and he cares so much for her. She tells him that he will need a lot of patience. Meier says that he would wait years for this.

Pleija (Semjase's sister) 55.229-230

Meier asks Semjase to give her sister, Pleija, his best greetings. Semjase says that this will please her very much. She says that they are together now at the station and Meier is delighted to know this.

Pleija (Semjase's sister) - coming next contact 58.20-23

Semjase tells Meier that, at the beginning of next week, she will bring her sister with her on their next contact. She wants to get to know him and to look at his barbarous traveling machine. He says that this is fine and that he will teach her to drive his dangerous motor-scooter. He asks her what she has to say about that and she responds with, "Don't!" She says that Pleija will be delighted by it for she is very interested in those objects, but they appear rather barbarous to her. Meier says that earthly humans are barbarians and he is quite content with that. Semjase says that she is aware of that and it is even partly okay with her.

Pleija – "as pretty as Semjase" 59.P1-20

Semjase tells Meier that her sister wishes to greet him. She shows him where Pleija is standing among some trees. While he walks into the woods where Pleija is waiting, he notices that she is as pretty as Semjase. He says hello to her and expresses his delight at seeing her. She is just as he imagined from his wife's description of her in her dream. He says that she is so beautiful that great delight at being welcomed in such a loving and uncomplicated manner. Meier admits to being uncomplicated and boorish in such matters. He does not like complicated ceremonies and hides his insecurity by his behavior. She says that he is very sincere and clear, which pleases her very much. She notices that his thoughts and conduct are according to his words. They all know him very well. From knowing his past and seeing his pictures, she wanted to see him personally and talk with him. She refers to pictures of him in much earlier times than his youth. This is unpleasant for him, but she insists that he should concern himself with the past. He says that he is conscious about these things, but they are very dangerous and not important yet for his mission. Pleija agrees, but says that it will gain importance at a later time. Meier agrees to take her advice when the time comes. But now, he wants to show her his motor scooter and teach her how to drive it. This pleases her as she is interested in the barbarous machine. For about 20 minutes, he teaches her to drive the bike. When Meier asks her what she thinks of it, she says that it is a very interesting barbarous adventure and asks if she could drive the bike for some time alone. Meier agrees, but warns her not to become too barbarous as the bike provides a constant stimulation for adventure. She says that she already enjoys the adventure, which is something that she has never experienced before. Meier says the barbarian lifestyle has its own attractiveness and Pleija agrees with him.

4.3.5 Menara

Menara - a girl from Vega system to take over contact 61.177-190

Semjase tells Meier that in a few minutes, another of their ships will land which will appear unfamiliar to him. It belongs to one of their other races and will be commanded by Menara (pronounced Men-ah-ra). She is a girl from the planet Deron in the Vega System. Menara will be taking over the contacts with him, starting next time until the end of the year so that she and Quetzal can return to their home world for a vacation. Semjase plans to leave the Earth on the 15th of August. They will meet once more before then and she may visit some time again. She notices that Meier is feeling very sad and says that she regrets it as she feels the same way. He tells her not to weep and she says that such feelings are difficult to control. She tells him that Menara is very pretty, very dark-skinned, and flashing with a delight for life. They will understand one another very well.

Menara - 10 centimeters shorter than Semjase 61.M1-8

While Meier and Semjase are talking, Menara comes down the anti-gravity tube. Meier notices how very pretty she is. Her skin is extremely dark colored with a shade of brown. She is about 10 centimeters shorter than Semjase and has Negroid features. Semjase and Menara talk for some time while Meier gets an impression of her. Semjase introduces Menara to Meier. Menara says that he has been studying her very intently and asks if he has sensed her love and greeting. He responds by saying that she talks like a saint. He says that he enjoys meeting her and he welcomes her to the world of the lowly beings. Menara is totally perplexed and does not understand what he means. Then, Semjase explains his type of humorous remark and they start to laugh. Menara tells Meier that he is very funny and she admits that she has very much to learn here. But, she says that she will do her best. Semjase tells her that she will instruct her about his manner of expression so that she will understand him. She will just have to learn to speak his kind of expressions for it is often very unconventional. She agrees to try.

Menara's race - early Earth ancestors 61.M9-12

Meier says that they will surely understand one another and have wonderful fun. He comments on her pretty black eyes, which complements her dark skin and relates similar traits to a human race from Africa with European influences. He asks Menara about the mixtures of Negroid and white races on Earth. She says that her race originated on Earth because her forefathers mingled with earthly inhabitants and generated the tribes of the Huns. In later epochs of time, they came together with the races from Africa and generated new races. Some of those races have now connected themselves again to her later forefathers and created their presently existing races. Their language is called Jenan.

Menara - on Earth for the first time 61.227-230

Menara comments on the fact that she has very much to learn in order to understand Meier. But for now, she wants to leave and perhaps prepare a delight for him. She says good-bye and Meier expresses a desire to see her again very soon. Her coming has pleased him very much. She says that she feels the same way and thanks him. Then, she walks away into the anti-gravity tube, which carries her gently upwards to her ship. After a few seconds of silence, Semjase says that he seems to have already closed Menara into his heart and that he acted properly. But, she pleads with him to not put her in a predicament with so many unusual questions. She has little knowledge in respect to earthly affairs, which will take some time for her to work herself into them. Besides this, she is on Earth for the first time and must find her way around here. Meier is surprised by this and says that if he had known, he would not have asked her about the races here. Semjase says that she was informed about that and he has not put her in a predicament.

Menara's race - 3,150 years ahead of Earth 62.46-51

Menara's race is 3,150 in advance of earthly human evolution. This means that they are only 350 less than the Plejarens. When Menara's people left the Earth, they kept the same position in evolution, just as the Plejarens did. But, the Plejarens advanced by 350 years while other nations are still in a rapid state of education. This opportunity was given to them some years later.

Race & racism (racial prejudice) 76.1-9

It has been 3 months since Meier has seen Semjase. He received a short telepathic greeting from her and two short greetings from Menara as she flew past near him. But today, she has come in person and is a most welcome sight for him. He tells her that his world has turned topsy-turvy with many unpleasant things happening along with an accident. It seemed like many things have conspired against them. But now, he says that she looks like an angel to him. Her dark beauty shines toward like a splendid rose, whose fragrance lovingly dispels all sorrows. Menara says that he is very kind. She thanks him because his words reveal to her that he does not distinguish between different human beings.

Menara knows that neither the race nor the color of skin plays a part to him as he treats everyone equally. But, she is aware of how a great number of people on Earth have racial prejudices and she wanted to explore his thoughts about this. She expresses great delight to know that he is so accepting. Meier says that he is glad for her and compliments her on her beauty. She thanks him and informs him that he will see her more often in the future. Meier is pleasantly surprised and asks if she would be returning to her home planet soon. She says that she enjoys it here very much and has undertaken a special task so that she will not be leaving.

Sfath (Semjase's grandfather) - died 63.82-86

Semjase informed Meier that Sfath (pronounced Sfaht) was her grandfather. Meier mentioned that the last time he had heard anything from Sfath was in 1953. He had always assumed that he had died. Semjase says that his assumption was correct. Meier expressed feelings that Sfath was an old man that was very worthy of loving and that he always seemed to him like a venerable old patriarch. He asked Semjase if Sfath's pear-shaped ship was one of their common models and is told that it was a present from a nation on one of the two colonized planets in the Sirius System.

4.4 Demonstrations

Semjase wants to show her craft for the group 18.146-163

Semjase says that before she goes away for a long time, she wants to show Meier's group her ship once more. She has chosen an evening for this demonstration because it provides the best visibility. She wants to demonstrate how practical different energies are and, in the darkness, they will appear as visible images. Some types of energies can only be emitted very high in the atmosphere or else they would cause deadly effects to earthly forms of life.

But, Meier's group will have an unforgettable demonstration for she will not use any protective measures to screen the view. However, it is mandatory that no person except Meier approach nearer to her beamship than 910 meters for there could be deadly consequences that could injure their health and spirit. Only Meier will be screened so that he will not be hurt. It would also be important for Meier to invite some uninformed observers with influence for publications and government officials to also view this demonstration.

Meier is cautioned to be careful about selecting people who would be appropriate and not be degenerative as traitors. He is not to provide any details about the demonstration, but only explain that this is a very interesting matter, which they should witness. He is also instructed to insist that the people sign a written agreement, as this will be important. This will be a unique demonstration that will not be repeated. This demonstration has become necessary to underpin Meier's whole material and his coming work. The Plejarens do not only want to give him and his group reports, instructions, and orders, but also provide assistance that will be of help when it is needed, suited, and responsible for them. However, such things will be exceptions and not become common. This pleases Meier very much.

No demonstrations of beamship 25.1-10

Semjase reports that she will not provide the demonstration in the way that she had previously considered. It has become quite clear that members of Meier's group are not mature enough to be able to conceive of these things and understand them. The demonstration cannot occur now or in the future. It is the decision of the High Council that she is only able to provide a demonstration in smaller forms of some things, but in very constricted ways. Because of the objectionable and doubting behavior of Hans Jacob, no outsiders will be allowed to be with his group and see the demonstration, as was previously permitted. Meier is very unhappy with this news. He asks for an exception and complains that it is not fair to do this only because of the doubts of one person. Semjase says she regrets this, but this is a decree by the High Council and she must obey it. Meier says that he will have to explain this thoroughly to the others and tell them that further arguments will be of no use. Semjase says that he is quite intelligent.

Meier given notice of last public beamship sighting 31.A118-139

Meier is told by Asket that his group members are, more or less, still dependent upon materialism and do not want to understand that only he is elected for contacts. This is a doubt in them that, only with much trouble, will they be able to remove it. But, questions are always loudly asked why this cannot be otherwise. Semjase's explanations have made no sense to them and have found no notice. This is not only silly and illogical, but it shows a desire for ignorance and a striving to be in first place. Semjase has already enabled four group members to see her ship, but all of his group want at least sight contact. This sighting has remained fruitless and further sightings are desired.

Semjase has agreed to provide a demonstration, but even this will not be sufficient and additional contacts will not be possible. For those who are not satisfied with this, it would be better if they no longer occupy themselves with the mission. It is meaningless to have those in the group who are only satisfied in sensational desires. The members should occupy themselves with the facts, seek true knowledge and wisdom, and remove themselves from all material thinking. Everything else is meaningless and injures the mission. They should realize that the extraterrestrials are very far developed forms of life that cannot move in such low levels. This is a law of Creation which applies to Earth humans as well.

4.4.1 Photographs of craft

Photographs of craft 1.17-18

Meier is able to take four clear photographs of a beamship before it lands and contact is made with Semjase for the first time on January 28, 1975 in Switzerland. (Please see Chapter 2 for a complete description of this event.)

Meier will be allowed to take pictures 7.241-257

Semjase allows Meier to select the time and place for another opportunity for him to take more photographs of her beamship. They agree to meet at 4 PM on the 27th of February. She explains that she will be arriving in a ship of an older model that is some hundred years old. It is built on a principle of waving for stability. Their newer ships no longer use this type. Her new ship will be brought from her home planet on the 3rd of March by one of their pilots. It will be accompanied by a second, smaller ship of the explorer class. Semjase tells him that he will also be able to photograph them as well. A secondary part of his mission is to obtain photographic proof of their presence here.

Semjase wants copies of Meier's photos & film 10.277-283

Semjase tells Meier that the photo-negatives of the pictures he took of their beamships are very important to them. They will remain his property, but she requests that he allow her to borrow them because it would be very useful for them. Meier says that he is happy to provide them for her, but asks why she needs them. She says that their scientists have noticed something on his photographs that was previously unknown to them. It relates to the antenna guide beam, which attract energies to it. This is a completely new phenomenon that alters the atmosphere and causes hitherto invisible energies to become visible.

Meier given permission to take more photos 11.43-44

Meier tells Semjase that, although she has prohibited him from taking any more photographs of her beamship, it would be very useful for his lectures if he could show the positives and further films would be of great benefit. She agrees to allow him to take more photographs and motion picture film.

Plejaren scientists have analyzed the photos & film 11.45-53

Semjase says that the photo-negatives that she borrowed from him have become unusable during their analysis of it and Meier says that is a pity. The affect that was captured on film was of atmospheric turbulence, which will dissolve itself within a few months. This was induced by Saturn, which presently influences the Earth's atmosphere. These stray influences became visible on the guiding beam antenna, the energy collection beam, and the regeneration beam of her ship. There is a fine energy line above the beamship between the guiding beam antenna and the energy collection beam while regeneration beam is visible below the ship with different tones of color. Energy is utilized for the beam drive and then regenerated again. It is transformed and not consumed. Their whole technology has been developed for natural rectification and not for destruction. They use implosion and regeneration instead of explosion and destruction.

Photos taken of Semjase's beamship must be destroyed 12.1-15

Semjase says that, 30 minutes ago, she allowed Meier and some of his friends to take further pictures of her beamship, as she had promised. But, she did not mean for people to be photographed along with her ship and she does not approve of it. When asked why, she says that she objects to certain people being photographed with her craft when such evidence is not valid proof for them and whose thoughts are filled with doubt, criticism, and other harmful things. Three of the photographed people will be caught doubting it. A fourth person is very disturbing and forms a dangerous element that could cause others to question their efforts. This person is far too captured by worldly affairs to conform to real spiritual lessons. She will even doubt what she sees with her own eyes and lacks all spiritual abilities.

Semjase sent her thoughts about people in photos 12.41-108

Semjase expresses her displeasure that Meier has produced further photographs of people with her beamship against her orders. She now considers whether she should destroy the film. She has nothing against the pictures with three of his closest friends and his children, but she objects to the ones with 3 dangerous elements. These pictures are very dangerous to their mission and she is seriously considering destroying the film.

In order to prove to Meier that certain people live completely outside of spiritual oscillations and doubt what they can see with their own eyes, Semjase allowed her ship to become visible and then disappear again. She even flew over his friends and, as expected, there was doubt about what could clearly be seen. So, she asks Meier to not be disappointed if she destroys the film. Later, she will allow him to take pictures with people that are suitable for their mission. Those not suited, should not be members of his group. Even though Meier knows that such doubting people do not serve the mission, he has not excluded them from the group. So, Semjase orders that the concerned people will no longer be allowed to be informed about the matters and events of the contacts. If Meier refuses, then she will have to interrupt their contacts and search for another contact person. She says that this would grieve her very much for she has found him to be a noteworthy individual, whom she has felt very connected.

When Meier tried to interrupt, she says that she must speak and can neither agree to questions nor objections. She allows him 6 days to decide and Meier says that he has decided to abide by her order. Semjase notices that his feelings are shaken. He asks if that is so damned important. He is aware of having acted incorrectly and feels like an idiot for having wrong hopes for people. She says that she is very aware of his mode of thinking in these matters, but pleads with him not to call himself an idiot as this is not true and it pains her for him to humiliate and abuse himself. She says that she has been too harsh with him and he has been to harsh with himself. He says that he will soon weep and she says that she feels the same way. She also asks him to not curse any more in the future and he agrees.

Semjase decides to destroy the film from April 20 13.7-20

Because of the unsuitable character of some people photographed with Semjase's ship at 10 AM on April 20th, she has decided to destroy the part of the film where the disturbing factors are exposed. Tomorrow, she will give Meier another chance to take further pictures in the afternoon. But, he will not be permitted to photograph any disturbing factors along with her ship. Meier says that he will observe her decision, though he regrets the loss of the pictures, and is pleased to have another chance to take pictures. She says that he honors her when he simply accepts her decision.

Plejarens want to limit the number of pictures 13.29-35

The Plejarens have deliberated and decided to permit Meier to take some dozens of pictures of her ship for display during his lectures. However, they want to limit the number of photographs to 100, as that should be sufficient. There is a further restriction that no people are to be photographed along with her ship. Meier is delightfully surprised by this and very grateful.

No photos of craft permitted 14.107-110

Semjase says that the members of his group should not be disappointed or offended when she has explained that there will be no more photographs with people and her ship together. There is sufficient evidence to show the justification for this decision and nothing else is needed. Meier says that this is once more evident.

Meier tells Semjase she destroyed the wrong pictures 14.111-121

Meier informs Semjase that she has made a mistake with the destruction of the film of April 20th. She admits that she makes mistakes, but is surprised by this and asks about the mistake so that she can correct it. Meier says he will keep silent because he does not want her to destroy further things of his. Semjase agrees to not destroy any more pictures because she does not want to make any more mistakes. He then tells her that she destroyed the wrong half of the film of pictures. There are still 10 good pictures. Semjase is amazed by this, but says that this is no longer important. Meier is relieved to hear this.

Notice of having to eliminate the weather-fir tree 16.1-25

Semjase interrupts Meier to explain that because he carelessly moved while filming and photographing her ship, during the last few weeks, some other people became aware of certain things that they should not have knowledge of. In addition, she was so busy during the filming, that she did not pay close enough attention to the environment. As a result, neither one of them noticed that there were three people watching his activities. Later, they followed him and made inquiries about him. Then, they took steps to reveal his activities at two places that have been important for his filming of her ship.

This could result in earthly scientists discovering things from investigations that would not be beneficial to mankind at the present time. These things could be found in the evergreen fur trees that she used for comparison purposes and objects for her flights. They received radiations from her ship, which are harmless to life, but their traces can remain for months. If analyzed by earthly scientists, it could cause a rapid increase in their research and understanding. Because they do not fully understand these things, they would commit huge catastrophes, which the Plejarens could not permit because they are responsible through their inattention. Because the Plejaren technology is not able to remove the traces from the trees, they must now eliminate all traces of the trees. In addition, all written documents, pictures, and film will also be eliminated. There will be no trace of the event and they must be more careful in the future.

Meier is cautioned to be aware of danger spots everywhere with negative entities establishing themselves there. This is why they do not touch down on the Earth with their ships and leave traces that can be analyzed. As a result, his group must keep all landing sites secret. Meier asks about the film that he has had developed, diagrams that he has drawn, and his own memory of the event. He asks if exceptions can be made so that not everything is seized. Semjase agrees to an exception if there is no revelation of where the two places are located. Meier agrees completely, but worries about others that know the locations and he is told that they will forget this.

Due to films, forms of life had to be eliminated 17.1-9

Because of the difficulties associated with their carelessness during Meier's previous filming, Semjase has ordered him to not take any photos or films on their next contact. Meier regrets this and says that she has over-dramatized the matter. But, she assures him that it was much more earnest than he assumes. The affected trees have been eliminated. Such actions depend upon certain laws of her race, which permit such eliminations only in an emergency and an emergency lays ahead. The military unit that he noticed the next day, on April 21st, was a direct result of her beamship.

Photographic evidence to be sent to Meier 74.50-52

Semjase asks Meier to tell everyone in his group that she is very grateful to all of them. She assures them that their help with him will bear good fruit. Because of their gratitude, she says that they will see, within 14 days, photographic evidence that will be delivered to them to show that the Plejarens work for them.

4.4.2 Space rides

Semjase informs Meier that she has a surprise for him. She tells him that they will take him on a flight, if he desires it, since they are now ready to provide it. Meier says this is fantastic and says he can go at any time. She says that if it is alright with him, they will start at once and he says, "Let's go, girl" and asks where they will travel to. She informs him that they will start with the planet Saturn. This trip will take about two and a half hours. Meier asks if he can take some photographs and is given permission for this. There are a total of three beamships and they will all fly together. He will see the others after they have started. They are now only a few meters above them and have screened themselves.

Semjase explains that he is allowed to take pictures from her ship. Some pictures are allowed of the other craft while starting and landing. Then, he is allowed to take 1 or 2 pictures from her sight-control-instrument. He can photograph the Earth, its moon, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. But, he is not allowed to take any other pictures and he agrees. They walk together to the beamship, where invisible forces lift them into the ship and they stand in the cockpit. The hatch closes automatically without a sound. Inside the cockpit, there is a greenish-yellow light from the windows, which are colored orange from the outside. The outside is specially coated to color itself according to the atmosphere. Wholesome atmospheres cause the yellow-green light inside. If the outside colors itself otherwise, then the inner light also changes. This indicates whether protective clothing is needed, or not. The hatch will not open unless the pilots are wearing the proper clothing. Where there is no atmosphere, then the windows become clear like glass.

The coating on the windows, protect against all radiation and only admits neutralized light. They also have control instruments that enable a much more scrutinized observation than the windows. The windows do not permit clear photographs to be taken through them while the outside is colored. Although Semjase prohibited Meier from disclosing any more details of the craft or the flight, Meier reports that the flight took 2 hours and 34 minutes. They traveled along the planets of Mars, Jupiter and Saturn at a considerable distance. They surrounded Saturn and returned to Earth again after passing the asteroid belt. They traveled 2.7 million kilometers. After touching down, Semjase asked Meier how he felt and he said that he felt fantastic and the impressions were great. She also tells him that they have decided to take him with them, sometime later, on a much greater journey to the Pleiades, which is nearly 500 light years away.

Notice of Meier's upcoming "great journey" in space 29.153-157

Meier is told that he will be prepared for a great journey, which will take him further than any human beings in the last 2,000 years. He was told that he would be taken to the Pleiades, but this will be a very small part of the great journey. He will travel many thousands of light years from Earth. Meier is excited by this and states that he would like to take more photographs. Unfortunately, nearly all of his prior pictures from the travels to Saturn failed. But, he will try again and will be content if only a few pictures are successful.

Meier told to prepare for his great journey 30.1-19

Semjase tells Meier to prepare himself for the early morning hours of July 17th, which is 2 days away. At a given time, she will call him to meet at a certain place. He is to equip himself with sufficient film because this will be important. He will be the first human being to photograph an event, which is of extreme importance to his race. The event will be the connection maneuver of the American and Russian space capsules, which is something that he should capture on film. The Plejarens have constructed a special apparatus that will enable him to take better pictures. These will be the first photographs to show such a maneuver independent of earthly space capsules.

Meier is to prepare himself to be absent for longer hours because after this event, he will undergo a very long flight, which is still impossible for many space-traveling forms of life. There are only a few kinds of life in the whole universe that are able to traverse such huge distances. This is only possible by breaking and utilizing hyperspace. When this technology has been achieved, the universe holds no more limits. Space and time are breached, there are no more barriers between different universes, and time travel is possible.

They will not be able to travel these distances in her small beamship because it is not suited for that. After the photo event, they will travel into a ship that is equipped for great distances in space. Meier is asked to allow for 30 hours to be away because this ship will travel very far outside of all known star constellations and galaxies through distances of several million light years. He will be able to take pictures of other star systems and galaxies as well as the original home worlds of the human races.

They will travel to a barrier of this Universe 30.34-39

Semjase tells Meier that a hyper-leap over uncounted trillions, and even higher denominations, of light years lasts only a part of a second. Meier asks if this would be a short journey to the end of the universe or travel into eternity and is told that this is wrong. He cannot reach an end of the universe, for that does not exist. They will meanly travel to a barrier of this universe in order to fulfill a mission that is in connection with it.

Meier's Great Journey with the Plejarens 31.1-12

Semjase tells Meier that today is his great day and Meier is very excited. He is told to keep silent about certain things until she gives permission for him to write down all that he experiences. She says that they will begin the journey by traveling through the solar system. They go to her ship and allow the transporting beam to lift them into the craft. A few seconds later, the ship floats high into the air and Meier takes some pictures of their starting point from about 50 meters high, through the still open hatch, while they slowly climb higher. Then, the hatch closes and the ship quickly ascends without Meier feeling any movement. Looking through the windows, Meier notices that they make several rapid course changes. Semjase says that they are now leaving the gravitational pull of the Earth and will first travel to Venus where he will be able to take pictures. Meier is shown how to use a new apparatus that enables him to take clear photographs of the exterior.

They visit the planets of the solar system 31.30-42

While in route to Venus, Meier looks around the cockpit of the craft. He sees many different kinds of apparatus around the room, built into a round table and the walls. There is strange looking equipment for the control of the ship as well as localizer instruments, distance meters, radiation control instruments, and many other things. The viewing and display screens are different from anything known on Earth with forms, signs, and figures on the screens in beautiful colors. These screens actually display things in three-dimensional view as if they existed materially.

As they approach Venus, Semjase tells Meier that he can take pictures of the atmosphere and then she will show him the surface of the planet. Because of the high temperatures there, she must close the apparatus used for photographing, but they can still see everything through the windows and viewing screens. She explains that this planet is in its initial phase of development and only contains the lowest forms of life. However, there are other things there, which he must keep secret. (See section 10.2.15 for a detailed description of Venus.) Meier notices something near a small crater and Semjase explained that it was an exploration craft from Earth.

They quickly circle the planet several times so that he can see all of it. Next, they travel to Mercury and then fly to the larger planets. Semjase only allows pictures to be taken from long distances. During this whole time, she talks about different, very important things including the possibility of further forms of life on the planets in this solar system. She takes Meier to Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Mars and their moons so that he can see, from only a few kilometers from the surface, that there are no signs of intelligent life there. The existing forms of life there are of another kind and have no interest in humanity. However, there are stations there with extraterrestrial intelligences of humanoid shapes. But, these planets are not their home worlds and they are only stationed there for certain missions.

Semjase and Meier return to orbit the Earth and Meier is able to see different objects in space, including two earthly satellites, five spaceships of extraterrestrial origin and only one of those is from the Pleja system. They are here to observe the Apollo-Soyuz coupling in space. They cannot be seen from the windows, but only on a special zero-sight-picture screen. This screen is a sighting instrument that is able to seize and reproduce that which cannot be seen or detected by radar.

Meier also sees another object high above the Earth that appears on the horizon. While invisible, they approach the object and fly close beside it. It is the Russian Soyuz space capsule with large letters, "CCCP" painted on the rear. Meier thinks it is crazy for there to be two human beings in that small gondola which provides no space for living. With the technology onboard Semjase's ship, she is able to use radiations to turn all materials invisible to their eyes. Meier is amazed to see the side of the capsule disappear so that they can see the two men inside. He is told to not worry because the capsule appears to the men, the same as before. It is only transparent for them.

Meier is disturbed to see the men in such a confined space with primitive equipment. Semjase assures him that the men are fine and will return safely to Earth. Earth humans are only beginning to fly in space and the Plejaren technology is 3,000 years in advance of that. Meier is upset at seeing the men in what he considers to be a flying metal coffin and Semjase explains that this is because of an experience that he has had in a past life.

They watch the American space capsule, with three people inside, approach and make their final maneuvers. It is much larger than the Soyuz capsule with the docking collar for the men to pass between ships. Later, it will be jettisoned. Meier takes photographs as the capsules connect with each other. Meier sees that there is not much more room for the men inside the Apollo capsule, but it has much more instrumentation. He laughs when he sees an American hit his head due to being inexperienced in weightlessness. Afterwards, he is able to take pictures of different satellites of earthly and extraterrestrial origins.

Then, they fly away to dock with a Greatspacer mother ship in this system, which will take them to other systems, galaxies, and the universe barrier. He watches as the Earth shrinks to become a great blue star in space. He sees millions of different glistening stars with light that is thousands of times clearer and more distinct then can be seen on Earth. It is a fantastic picture that he will never forget. He can see clouds of stars, spiral fogs, and the whole Milky Way galaxy. He is unable to describe the infinite width, magnitude, splendor, and beauty of the universe before him. He does not understand why, but he feels free, well, and at home with no earthly concerns, sorrows, or problems.

They approach the great-spacer spaceship 31.71-81, 110

Semjase interrupts Meier from his thoughts of space in order for him to see the Greatspacer. This mother ship is a huge metallic sphere that reflects a small amount of light from the Sun. Slowly, the speed of their ship lowers. Semjase sits very attentive before her instruments and skillfully guides her ship towards the huge sphere. It has a large hatch in the side of it about a third of the way up from the bottom. They slowly fly into it. Inside the hatch, there is a very large hanger with many ships parked there and only 100 square meters of space available to fly in. The interior is illuminated from the walls in a bluish colored light. It is the greatest ship in its class with all of the latest technology known to the Plejarens. It is its own perfect world, which can fly anywhere in the universe. (See section 4.2.8 for more information about the Greatspacer.)

Semjase & Meier move thru the spaceship 31.111-114, 133

After Semjase parks her beamship and the atmosphere has been restored in the hanger, she and Meier exit her craft through the transport beam and stand on the metal floor of the hanger. Beyond the hanger, there are numerous small beamships behind transparent walls with many humans and robots scurrying between them. Beyond these smaller craft, there are larger ships of another type. Semjase operates a small device in her hand that causes a door to open where there is a small vehicle, about the size of a VW, with comfortable seats. It floats about 20 centimeters above the floor.

They sit down in the vehicle. It moves forward and slowly lifts them higher and higher. Semjase's ship has been moved by robots into a large hanger hall that takes up the lower third part of the Greatspacer and is about 800 meters deep. The ceiling and walls emit a slightly blue light. The center of the ceiling is transparent. For minutes, they raise with increasing velocity until they reach a side pit and the vehicle stops.

They are in a spacious area of about 200 meters in diameter with green plots of trees, shrubbery, and flowers everywhere. They passed the ship's center and are now about

Great-spacer, cupola's cockpit control center 31.149-161

Semjase and Meier walk on small paths through the beautiful parks until they reach a transport beam that takes them to another floating vehicle. It lifts them higher with increasing velocity until they are able to see the whole universe in every direction through the transparent dome on top. In the command center of the Greatspacer, there is equipment that is arranged like a horseshoe, which is operated by mechanical human beings, androids.. A single man is seen standing in the middle of the horseshoe. Semjase lands the vehicle in an encircled area in front of the command center. The man is dressed similar to Semjase and exudes great love and friendliness.

Semjase climbs out of the vehicle and hurries over to the man. They embrace and kiss each other. They talk in a strange language as Meier walks over to them. The man has a roguish smile as he looks at Meier attentively. Semjase introduces the man as her father. Meier is surprised by this and they shake hands. Her father says that it is a great pleasure for him to see Meier there. Semjase has reported very much about him. He welcomes Meier and Meier thanks him. Semjase's father embraces Meier, who is unable to speak. The man tells Meier to call him Ptaah, for that is his name. (See section 4.3.3 for more information about Ptaah.)

Ptaah tells Meier that they have already begun their flight to a transit position. Meier looks outside of the dome and notices the star constellations slowly changing. The three of them sit in comfortable chairs within the horseshoe-shaped cockpit. The viewing screens show stars, planets, nebulas, and many other things. Outside the dome, the constellations are now hurrying past them and Meier asks how fast they are traveling. He is shown an instrument with indicators that indicate velocity and he is able to determine their speed as 289,000 kilometers per hour. Meier sees a very large object through the dome and is told that it is a comet, which will soon be discovered on Earth. They travel for another 30 minutes and then travel through time to another far away system. They will use hyper-space, which paralyzes space and time. Meier tells Ptaah that he was under the impression that he would be meeting an IHWH and asks when he will meet him. Semjase and Ptaah both start laughing and then Meier is told that he has already greeted him. He comes to realize that Ptaah is the commander of the Greatspacer, an IHWH, and a good god, in person. Ptaah assures him that he is not the mighty tyrant of ancient times on Earth.

Ptaah interrupts their discussions because they have reached the point for transmission. He and Samjase turn towards an apparatus and screens suddenly start to come alive with little bodies of light glowing and dimming. Meier hears a tone that sounds like a very silent and calming singing of metal. He looks through the transparent dome and sees stars rapidly passing by and then suddenly blend into a milky white turbulence. This lasts only a fraction of a second before the stars are seen again rapidly passing by at a decreasing speed. During this time, Meier felt a very deep calm inside of himself. Semjase says something, but Ptaah calls for silence. Meier asks about what has happened, if anything has gone wrong or if any damage has occurred. Semjase tells him to look through the dome and tell her what he sees. Meier is astonished to see completely different star constellations, which are all new to him. She says that they have completed the first hyper-leap. He asks where they are now and is told that they are about 500 light years from Earth. Semjase points out a cloud of stars and says that it is her home world in the Pleiades. They are 211 million kilometers from the nearest star. They cannot come any closer because they need a secure distance of 153 million kilometers to transfer once more. Meier says that he is overwhelmed.

Photo screen brought to control center by an android 31.191-194

An android appears with the photography apparatus from Semjase's ship. It places the device into a rack and points it. Then, it talks to Meier in a language that he does not understand. Semjase says that it wishes him good success. Meier cannot believe that it is able to think and respond on its own, but success. Meier cannot believe that it is able to think and respond on its own, but he is assured that it is so. Semjase says that its body is half organic with a chemical brain. Ptaah assures him that he will soon understand and think of everything as normal. Meier takes photographs through the apparatus and hopes they come out clearly.

Hyper-leap to Orion Nebula, 1,800 light years away 31.195

Ptaah tells Meier to look carefully at the stars because in exactly 9 seconds, they will make their next leap. Meier looks up and experiences everything the same as the first time. For a fraction of a second, he feels a deep tranquility once again and everything becomes more familiar to him. Ptaah announces that they have arrived at their destination. He points out a fog-like formation that is known as the Orion Nebula. They are now 1,800 light years from Earth. Meier takes more photographs.

Hyper-leap to Crab Nebula, 3,150 light years away 31.196

Their next destination is to a destroyed sun, which took place about 1,000 years ago when it changed into a super-nova. It only exists now as a giant nebula. Its distance from Earth is 3,150 light years away. It is known as the Crab Nebula. Once more, preparations for the hyper-leap are performed. But this time, Meier watches Semjase and Ptaah as they turn into a milky, glistening mass along with everything else for a fraction of a second. Then, everything returns to normal again. The deep feeling of tranquility this time is much stronger than before.

Meier believes that this peace is the timelessness of eternity itself, where the outer influences of restlessness, insecurity, sorrows, and problems no longer burden the spirit. For that fraction of a second, he recognizes himself as consisting only of the finest kind of matter that is completely free of everything that influences him in material form. It took Semjase three attempts before she was able to get his attention. Ptaah has read his thoughts and is astonished to find that he has reached new important concepts. He states that it takes a longer time in fine-material existence for many Plejarens to reach these concepts.

But now, Ptaah directs Meier's attention to their destination in the Crab Nebula. Still deep in thoughts, Meier takes more photographs. His thoughts remain in the eternity and he is able to see it as being greater and more powerful than words can describe. He decides to watch himself during the next leap to see if he will also grow hazy into a milky mass and determine if anything will happen to him or in him. Ptaah assures him that he will be able to find what he is looking for.

Hyper-leap to Horsehead Nebula, 1,810 light years 31.197-199

A few seconds later, Meier watches himself and is no longer able to see his body. This only lasts for another fraction of a second, which Meier can tell by his watch. Ptaah announces that they have arrived at their next destination, known as the Horsehead Nebula, which is 1,810 light years from Earth. Semjase explains that distances are no longer a difficulty for them. Because they are able to leap through space, they do not need to steer a course around objects in space. Meier only partly pays attention to her words and is absent-minded as he takes some more photographs.

Soon, Meier experiences the touching of eternity, but he is unable to reach deeper into it. All is suddenly blocked to him because of the short actual time. He decides that the fraction of a second is not enough time to experience it completely. Ptaah has read his thoughts again and informs him that, if he desires it, they can retard the re-materialization effect for several minutes during their great leap to the barrier of the universe.

To do this, they will travel into the future and the lost time cannot be rescinded. In this form, time will not become paralyzed. They must live during that time, submit to it and let it pass by. Five seconds of normal time will pass for every second that they are in eternity. This is possible because they can regulate the time between dematerialization and rematerialization by the effect of speed. But, there are limits. A single second of timelessness amounts to many million years in normal space. If they were to penetrate timelessness at an insufficient speed, then they would never see their home worlds again. If they were to remain in timelessness for only a few seconds at a lower speed, millions of years would pass and Earth would disintegrate into dust while they would be only a few seconds older.

Ptaah tells Meier that although this may seem unintelligible and fantastic to him, it is true. Even the Plejarens only know a few of the vast secrets involved with this and continuously search for further understandings. They are only at the beginning stage of developing this technology. However, they are able to allow Meier to step into eternity with the Greatspacer. For him to have the desired experience, they will need a time of seven minutes for the leap, which will increase in normal space by fivefold. This means that while they will only spend a millionth of a second in timelessness, 35 minutes will pass in normal space. Everyone in the ship will grow older by exactly 28 minutes in addition to the seven minutes of the delayed timelessness.

Meier feels like he is slowly becoming mad and does not understand all that has been explained to him. Yet, he tells Ptaah that he would like to witness this experiment. Ptaah says that it will happen. But first, they will navigate to some special places. Once Meier has taken his photographs, they prepare for another hyper-leap to the IHWHMATA, which is 5,600 light years away. During this leap, Meier looks into space through the dome and sees gigantic gaps through the black of the cosmos that is surrounded by numerous stars. Then, he sees a monstrous eye far off in space and realizes that this must be the Ring Nebula known as IHWHMATA, or the eye of God. Semjase says that it is unmistakable. Meier agrees and says that it is huge. She reminds him that she has already explained the origin and cause of the formation. (See section 6.1 for a complete description of Aryan history.) Semjase says that for the Plejarens, this is a symbol of a wicked thirst for power and ambition that resulted in hate, delusion, and destruction. This was the original home of the human race and it only serves now as an image of great importance. Meier takes more photographs.

Preparations are made for several further leaps. Meier will only have 20 seconds to take pictures between each leap. He is told to notice the sequence of the leaps for labeling his pictures. Ptaah directs his attention to the Rosette Nebula, or M57. He says that their next destinations will be to M17, or the Omega Nebula, M16, M27 known as the Dumb-bell Nebula, NGC 6781, NGC 7293, and NGC 7089. The last two can be seen from Earth in the Aquarius Constellation. The last one is 47,000 light years from Earth.

The last leap will be to the Andromeda System, which is about 2.2 million light years in distance. From there, they will conduct the great leap to the universal barrier, where Meier will have the seven minute experience of timelessness. Ptaah and Semjase turn to the equipment and prepare for the leaps. Again, Meier experiences the alternating hyper-leaps with changing constellations and other things. Between leaps, he is occupied with taking pictures. After photographing the Andromeda system, Meier learns that they are at the starting location for the great leap.

Preparation for the Great leap into the eternity 31.240-261

Semjase tells Meier that within a few minutes, they will leap for seven minutes into eternity. The sentiments are quite different there than in normal material life. It will not be possible for them to receive his thoughts and emotions because they too are still on the way of evolution towards the spiritual. As a result, they will not be able to retransmit his thoughts later so that he can write them down. But, he is informed that there is still a chance for this by technical means and he agrees to it. He is shown small cabins beside the screens that are equipped with all necessary instruments for recording his feelings and thoughts. The helmet inside the cabin detects his brain's impulses and stores them into a computer where his words will be reported to him later. All that is needed is for him to sit in the chair and place the helmet on his head, which will adapt itself automatically. Meier does this as the journey begins in 23 seconds.

Hyper-leap, Meier's ecstatic experience 31.261-271

At first, all that Meier can see is a milky-white mass. All the stars have merged into glowing whiteness everywhere, just like he has seen before on previous hyper leaps when the Plejarens took him on journeys throughout the galaxy. But now as the experience continues, the milky whiteness disappears and all is utter blackness. This time, he is being allowed to stay in a hyperspace state for seven minutes. Then everywhere, there is golden light, a brilliant glowing light that is like all the suns of the universe shining together and this wondrous light does not hurt the eyes. This is the glistening light of eternity.

Meier describes his experience in this way: How utterly magnificent! Wonder of wonders! Only this eternity exists. There is no other than eternity. There is no time. Only this glorious magnificence exists. And what is this? It is love, Love, LOVE! Only love exists. All is love. Oh, what peace, what Love! I exist, and yet I do not exist. This is all so incredible. I am so full of love, so deep and so profound. Eternity is I, and I am also in eternity. I am a human being, a visitor in the eternity.... What now? Only light. I can see nothing but light. But I don't see anything with my eyes yet I see, and I don't hear with my ears-and yet I hear. Now I know I am eternity, I am infinite love! I am not a human being! I am being-ness. I can feel that I am alive. Even though I do not have my senses, I still exist. And I exist as such peace, such love, and such infiniteness.

I am being called. Who calls for me? The light! The light is calling me. This is so wonderful that I want to remain here forever. I don't want to be a human being. I don't ever want to leave this deep love. This is true existence. Now I understand who I really am. I am pure existence. This is where I belong. My old life as a human being seems so distant, like a dream. Now I feel like I am eternity itself. Material life is just a dream. Here is reality. And death? Death does not exist. Spirit never dies. Now I am I. No more do I care about material life. This glorious light of love, this wondrous eternity is my home. And this home is oneness. No more do I perceive the many. Now, only the great unity exists. And I am that.

I don't fully understand all this. How can I be thinking of me as ever having been separate from this great wholeness? That way of thinking must have come from my life as a material being. Now I dissolve into pure existence, into eternity, and all that I can feel is wholeness. I am simply consciousness. I am absolute being. I am infinite love. All is calm. All is peace. Why do not people on Earth understand this? Why do they search for love in foolishness, in falseness? Why am I even thinking of that, when I am experiencing such blissful oneness? I understand. Eternity cares for itself. It observes humans and wants them to know the truth of eternalness. But humans are so ignorant of the truth and are so misled by the cult-like religions of Earth. There is no deity figure. There is only love eternal. Religions are delusions that lead man away from the Truth and lead to terrible destruction. Oh, why doesn't man want to grow spiritually and become who he really is: the eternity?

And even this level of consciousness that I am now experiencing is not the highest. This is the last step of all spirit levels before the final merging with Creation. And that level of spiritual being is infinitely greater and more magnificent than the level I am now experiencing. This is the level of the last stage of perfection before union with the Creation. This is the step of awareness of self as truly existing in the great all-oneness. And in this stage of spiritual evolvement one overcomes all separateness, all feelings of me and mine, so that one merges at last with the Source of one's being. One's consciousness is eternity calling one home. It is the call of Truth, of all fulfilling love. The Creation alone exists, and nothing besides the Creation exists. The Creation is the truth in the universe. The Creation is evolving love and existence. This formless Creation is spiritual consciousness, spiritual love, and perfected spiritual being.

How ignorant is man to conceive of gods and elevate them to the level of Creation! If only man would recognize the truth and the ever-present love of Creation, then he too could experience this bliss of eternity. Man needs to advise himself of the truth and use the power of his spirit to evolve into this state of blissful oneness. He must recognize the falseness of all cultic heresies and deities, and he must recognize the way of truth and all fulfilling love that alone leads to union with the magnificence of Creation. Only the truth that is the real truth leads to the kingdom of eternity. The word of Truth is everlasting because it is of the great a11-oneness. Heaven and earth will pass away but the words of truth will never die.

Oh no! The glistening light is going away. The light is vanishing. I don't want to return to being a human again! I belong in the light. The light is now golden. And now it is silver I don't want to be here. I want to return to that place of all love and being-ness. Now I am back to being me; full of problems, burdens, sorrows, and needs. Oh, this miserable life, why have I returned? I could just cry. If only I could leave this material realm and return to that realm of light and love!

Meier howls in misery and asks what is interrupting his thoughts. Then he realizes that it is Semjase and he wonders what she is doing there. He wants to know why she is shaking him so much and asks her what happened. She asks him if he still does not understand. Meier finally comes to his senses and feels such sadness. He asks why she has brought him back. She thinks he is joking and says that they are not allowed to stay in the timelessness because they must pass through evolution in steps. She tells him that she understands his sadness because they have all experienced the same thing. They have accommodated themselves to the material realm until they have reached that level of consciousness. She regrets his misery, but assures him that he will overcome it.

Meier starts to fad from consciousness and Semjase shouts at him to recover. Ptaah tells Semjase to quickly hold him. Semjase presses herself against him and embraces him for several minutes. Meier feels her warmth and enlivening spirit. Slowly, he feels his vital spirits returning and becomes strong enough to stand on his own two feet. He thanks her and she smiles at him. Ptaah reads Meier's thoughts about Semjase and says that his thoughts are very dignified. Then he laughs in a kind way.

Meier asks where they are now and is told that they are nearly at one end of the universe. The barrier is only a few million kilometers away. Next, he asks why he had so many thoughts while in timelessness. Semjase assures hum that he had no more thoughts than in normal time. It just seemed like there were many more in only 7 minutes of time. Although he still felt sentiments while in timelessness, he was no longer himself. He became a tiny part of eternity and the sensations there penetrated into him.

Meier says that at first, he was able to identify himself as an individual, but that soon dissolved in the mass of eternity. Semjase and Ptaah are surprised to discover this. Ptaah tells him that he must be a very deep thinker in order for him to recognize this. Even for many of their race, it takes several stays in timelessness to be able to recognize this truth. Ptaah expresses concern that he has come to realize things that should not be revealed to earthly humans, which they cannot bear. Because of this, Ptaah tells him that he is only allowed to reveal the things that will be transmitted to him later. Meier objects to being muzzled again and expresses concern about them eliminating his memories of this experience. Ptaah says that because he knows Meier will keep their secrets, he sees no need to eliminate his memories. Meier says that Ptaah's opinion of him honors him and is told that he is worthy of this honor. Meier tells him to stop throwing flowers at him.

Meier asks why they are here and Semjase tells him to allow himself to be surprised. Within 10 minutes, he will understand everything and will surely be delighted by it. He notices that they are rapidly moving through space, but there are no stars here except for one star and five small blue points behind it. Ptaah informs him that it is the last great star in that part of the universe and it is called Galtos. It is twice as large as the Earth and emits a very intensive light force. Around it, there are 11 self-illuminated blue stars, but only 5 are visible to the naked eye. The blue stars are not any larger than Earth, but they are as inhospitable and hostile as the large planets of Jupiter and Saturn. Their huge gravity seldom permits life on those stars and there is no spiritual life there. In the few cases where life exists on such stars, the life is no more than 70 cm in size. Also, the atmosphere is different on each star or planet and not all forms of life breeth oxygen. Ptaah explains that stars are defined as world-bodies that generate light and other radiations while planets do not. Life can be found on stars as well as planets when conditions permit it. Meier takes some photographs of the stars.

Semjase announces that they have reached their destination. Meier looks through the dome and sees an extensive ray-shaped formation with all iridescent colors. He asks what it is. Semjase says the formation is created by a spaceship, which can be seen in the distance in front of a ring-shaped center. This is where our universe ends and the formation represents a doorway into another universe, which is called the DAL Universe. There are human beings in that universe that are very similar to Earth humans. The formation appears as a long tunnel that measures 77 kilometers wide and 1.3 million kilometers long.

When Meier asks why they have come here, Semjase informs him that they will go through the tunnel to the other universe. At the other end of the tunnel, innumerable stars can once again be seen along with the spaceship. Everything seems strangely familiar to Meier. Then, he remembers that Asket once said that she was from the DAL Universe and asks if Asket was here. Semjase tells him that he should allow himself to be surprised. The Greatspacer moves close to the spaceship and Ptaah tells Meier that he is now to be taken to the other craft by Semjase in her beamship.

Semjase takes Meier by the hand to a metal box with a hole in the bottom of it that is about 1 meter in diameter. There is a gleaming blue light coming from the hole, which appears to have an endless depth. Semjase tells him to simply step into the pit and allow himself to be glided down. Meier is very apprehensive as he jumps into the hole. He discovers that he is suspended in the air before being lowered downwards. He drops faster and faster. He looks upward to also see Semjase following him. Suddenly, they find themselves standing in the hanger with many beamships. They walk over to Semjase's beamship and are lifted up inside of it by its transport beam.

Meier is excited by the thought of seeing Asket once again so far from Earth in a strange universe. He is also sad to think that he must return to Earth and would prefer to stay away, but he knows that he must fulfill his mission. Semjase says that if his fellow humans on Earth were to have the same dedication, then everything would be very easy with peace and love governing mankind. But, if he would like to stay with the Plejarens, this would be accepted and he would be offered that chance. Meier thanks her, but says that he must return to Earth because he cannot deny his obligations to his family and mankind. Semjase expected this answer.

The hanger doors open and the beamship floats over to the other spaceship, which is only a few hundred meters away. They enter a hatch in the side of the ship, which is much smaller then the Greatspacer. Once inside, the hatch instantly closes behind them. They land on the floor of a small hall and exit the beamship. There are only light-emitting walls inside with no other ships there. They enter a nice room with comfortable chairs and a desk where Asket stands and smiles. Meier is overjoyed to see her again as she walks over to him and hugs him. Asket welcomes him with love, joy, and honor to greet him there. She kisses him and reads his thoughts of amazement. Meier comments on how beautiful she is and how she has not changed in ten years. He expresses his delight in being able to see and talk with her again since he thought he would never see her again. (See section 6.4.2 for more details about this meeting.)

Semjase returns a recording device back to the DALs 31.N26-34

At one point during this meeting, Semjase and Asket leave Meier alone with an assistant to Asket by the name of Nera. She tells Meier that Semjase has brought a time projectile back for Asket. For 9 years, they have been using a new technology to explore time-travels over immense distances and other dimensions through other universes without the need to open a barrier. To do this, they have used little spiral-shaped time-missiles that travel between universes. Because Semjase understands this technology and works together with them, they have directed their missiles to the earth. Three years ago, they were unable to find the last missile sent there because of a mistake in their accounting of time. Because of this, the missile landed some thousand kilometers more in the East. But, this mistake was discovered some months ago and they determined where the missile had actually landed. Semjase found it and has brought it back for them. (See section 6.4.5 for information on Nera.)

Meier's next journey into another dimension 31.354-363

Asket offers to provide Meier with another apparatus that will enable him to take even better photographs in space. When Meier asks when he will be able to use this new instrument, Semjase says that it will be available for his next travels. He asks when that will be and is told that this has not been determined yet. It may be a very long time until then. She says that before then, she will abduct him into another dimension. She explains that every world body has several parallel worlds. This is also true for Earth. These parallel worlds exist on different levels of dimensions. Each parallel world is at nearly the same timeline. Only small differences in time exist. Semjase says that she wants to take him into one of these parallel worlds. Meier is excited by this and asks when they will go. He is told that this has not been determined yet. He also asks if he will be able to take photographs there. Semjase approves of this, but says that the people and environment will appear normal.

Semjase says that, unfortunately they must hurry back to the Greatspacer because they have exceeded their allotted time there. Asket reminds her that this can be corrected by a short time-leap and she agrees. Meier asks if that would cause him to become younger or older. Asket says that he would be a few seconds younger and bids him farewell. She tells him to think of her and that this was joyful for her to see him again. Meier notices that she has started to weep and she says that she will be okay and that they will meet again. Meier feels bad for her sadness and Semjase cautions him to be careful of his thoughts or Asket will weep once more.

Meier leaves the room quickly before he begins to weep as well. Semjase is surprised by his expression of feelings because he normally has a huge amount of self-control. She says that she hopes he expresses all of his feelings when he is alone. He admits that she knows him very well. She says that he allows himself to be guided by his feelings even though he is able to control the expression of those feelings to the point of self-destruction. They return to her beamship and Semjase lets Meier steer the ship out of the hanger. A few minutes later, they are back inside the Greatspacer and return to the command center where Ptaah is waiting.

Universal Barrier - return to the DERN Universe 31.P243-245

After Semjase and Meier return to the command center, Ptaah reports that they are now moving back into their own universe. Once they have returned, they will remain there for another 50 minutes until the barrier has closed once again. It must be closed systematically. This requires time and great care. There are only very few places where passage is possible between barriers. If they become strained or over-charged, the structure can be destroyed, which would lead to a cosmic catastrophe. Everything must be performed very exactly. In the meantime, they have time to talk together.

Hyper-leap - we will show you very different things 31.P387-390

Once the time has passed for the closing of the universal barrier, they prepare for the first hyper-leap. Because of their technology, distances have become unimportant and the order of destinations in inconsequential. Ptaah says that they will now show him some very important and interesting things.

ETs brought Christianity to NESAR, then hostilities 34.P391-437

Meier asks what the huge formation is that is seen through the dome. It appears like a gigantic wall in the middle of the cosmos. Ptaah explains that this is the Nesar Galaxy. It is a dead galaxy, destroyed by the unreasonable attitudes of its former inhabitants. What Meier had described as a wall is actually numerous stars and planets that have fallen into one another and generated the unique formation. Within the mass of the dead worlds, there are still some little sources of light. They are destroyed stars that still have a small amount of light energy, which they are slowly loosing. This galaxy is 173 billion light years from Earth, but the reason for all of this destruction is found on Earth.

The inhabitants of the Nesar galaxy were a highly developed technical and spiritual race. They were a united humanoid race. 17,000 years ago, they lived together in peace along with races from other galaxies. Their spiritual evolution was very highly developed, but they had no way of knowing about the Creation. Their whole spiritual concepts were based upon observing nature's laws. Although they lived properly, they were not able to fully evolve. Because of this, they were exposed to the danger of being misled into confusion by invalid beliefs. This danger grew as they explored other galaxies and came in contact with different intelligences with strange forms of thinking.

Then, three expedition ships of Nesarians lost their way by a wrong leap in hyperspace and found themselves in the Sun's solar system where they discovered humans on Earth. This occurred 967 years ago. Since they appeared similar to earthly humans, they lived unrecognized among them for about 50 years and were very interested in earthly things of all kinds. They were especially interested in the religions on Earth. They collected all information about religions and were very influenced by them. Soon, they became as misguided by the religions as the humans on Earth. The believed that the earthly religions were of unusually great meaning and importance. Then, they searched for their home galaxy again and succeeded after four long years of going astray.

The earthly religions were diffused among all of their inhabited planets and a small armada of spaceships was sent to Earth to collect further information. After 5 years of secretly collecting information about Earth's religions, they returned home and stated that houses of God had been built on Earth and humans there had become content. For the next 50 years, their whole galaxy became influenced by the different earthly religions. They could no longer understand one another and accused each other of believing in untrue lessons. Soon, this led to accusations, quarrels, and then to hate. Families became divided by religious beliefs and soon the first blood was spilled.

Eventually, everyone stood against everyone else. Civil war raged for 7 years. Their High Councilors realized the delusion of the religions and prohibited them, but it was too late. The conflicts erupted into world wars and whole worlds became destroyed. Collapsing into themselves, they seized all power systems for themselves. A gigantic mass rose up, which withdrew all life that still existed. Eventually, planets and stars were destroyed in whole heaps and became the huge mass that Meier was seeing with his own eyes.

After the next hyper-leap, Ptaah says that they are much further from Earth than before. The distance to Earth is now 960 decillion light years. This is the Asap Galaxy and the planet before them is known as Desmon. It is inhabited by human beings that live in a lifestyle that is equivalent to the Middle Ages on Earth. They live in "greater villages" like those in Earth's oriental regions. A second nomadic race also lives there in huts made from plants and bushes. There is a giant sun in their solar system, which will die after some millenniums. They have a moon that is 4 times the size of Earth's moon, which will rush into the giant sun in about 3,200 years because the 3 cosmic bodies work slowly towards one another. The humans on Desmon should develop technologies by then which will enable them to escape the planet. But, if this does not happen, then help from outside will be brought in. This is an obligation to cosmic law. Extraterrestrial visitors to that world are not able to talk with those humans and must hide behind protective screens. They can only be seen when the concerns for normal evolution permit it. Semjase takes Meier near the surface of the planet in her beamship so that he can take photographs of the environment. The journey lasts only a few minutes before they return to the Greatspacer and Ptaah initiates the next leap.

Hyper-leap to Lesa system in the Nepon Galaxy 34.P450-451

Ptaah says that they are 700 sextillion light-years away from Earth in the galaxy of Nepon and the star system of Lesa. He points out three big formations. There are two sister planets of immense size which are seen close to each other along with a giant moon of the sister worlds. The moon is nearly 520 times greater than the Earth. The Lesa system is very extensive and must be crossed in hyper-leaps.

Hyper-leap, to a primitive planet in the Lesa system 34.P456-467

One of the two planets is inhabited by human life. It is similar in size to the Earth with an oxygen atmosphere. In many respects, it is similar to the planet Venus. It has quite primitive plant and animal life. In earlier times, it was more populated, but a cosmic event destroyed everything and reduced it to stone for millions of years.

For some millenniums, conditions have changed and new life is developing itself. It gives off different colors from its wastelands, water, and forest regions. It has desert-like landscapes that consist partly of massive rock, mountains, and very fried and brittle stones that slowly erode to sand again. Over the course of time, it will change into soil. The mountains are no taller than 2,000 meters and look similar to the mountains on Venus. Semjase takes him near the surface in her beamship and Meier is able to take photographs through the open hatch because the atmosphere is well suited for them.

Hyper-leap to the Taro system of the Mara Galaxy 34.P612-615

After another hyper-leap, Meier sees an enclave of stars 30 trillion light-years from Earth in the Mara Galaxy of the Taro system. Most worlds of this system appear blue in color and are actively volcanic. Ptaah says that, after millions of years from now, the first signs of life will develop there.

Over a volcanic world, Meier spots a flight machine 34.S389-397

Some time later, when Semjase has taken Meier close to one of the volcanic worlds in her beamship, Meier notices another spaceship there. It is not familiar to Semjase, so she attempts to communicate with it over an instrument. She speaks a foreign language of signs or symbolic pictures. However, there is no response. Semjase says that the entities in the craft do not maintain intergalactic communications.

Hyper-leap to Exes system in Deron Galaxy 34.P616-621,S398

Next, they leap to the Galaxy of Deron in the system of Exes, 480 quadrillion light-years from Earth. It has a star cluster that consists of only volcanic worlds, which radiate their own light power. However, it is still rather dark on these worlds. The light only penetrates to the outside, but is not able to illuminate the world's surfaces. Semjase takes him near the surface so that he can again photograph some volcanoes.

Hyper-leap to a star cluster & giant ice-world planet 34.P622-625

After another leap, Ptaah points out a giant planet that belongs to a group of stars. They are three billion kilometers from the center of the star cluster. The planet is a world of ice, which is eleven times greater than the planet Saturn.

After the journey Meier will be a half hour younger 34.P648-S428

Meier notices that his wristwatch indicates that he has been away from the Earth for two days. He says that he was under the impression that he would only be away for about 30 hours. He also expresses his surprise at the fact that he is not hungry, thirsty, or tired. He had eaten some fruits and vegetables some time ago. Semjase explains that their food is much more nourishing and thirst-quenching than the food on Earth and can satisfy hunger and thirst for up to 90 hours. When Meier asks why he is not tired, he is told that he breathes air that is adjusted to conditions on the Plejaren home worlds. It is much more healthy and invigorating than the air on Earth. The oxygen content is higher and the compounds are somewhat different. This keeps them awake longer because they need less sleep than on Earth.

Meier is told that his watch indicates the accurate date on Earth. They have used more time than was provided for. Meier expresses alarm that his wife has become upset by his long absence and has reported him missing to the police. Semjase says that, although they will be traveling for another day, they will use their time-travel capabilities to return him to Earth in the past. Even though he will actually be away for more than three days, it will appear on Earth that he will only be gone for about 24 hours. Meier expresses amazement about this and doubts that the people of Earth will be able to understand it. Semjase says that he should not attempt to convince anyone on Earth about this if they are not able to understand it.

Hyper-leap to the planet Kartag 35.P773-S483

After another hyper-leap, they arrive at the world of Kartag. This planet is inhabited by human beings that are similar to the humans on Earth in nearly the same level of development. Kartag lies in the solar system of Neb within the Aratom Galaxy. Semjase takes Meier near the surface of the planet in her cloaked beamship. He is informed that the humans there, war against each other with atomic weapons. Meier does not see any airplanes and asks how they are able to deliver their atomic bombs. He is told that the humans there have flight machines that are more like beamships and they shoot their deadly weapons by rockets with a different propulsion system.

Hyper-leap to Neber in the Kras system of Beberas 35.484-527

Their next destination is to the planet of Neber, within the Kras solar system, in the Beberas Galaxy. Semjase says that many space-traveling races have desired to come to this planet because it contains extraordinarily large and dangerous dinosaurs. On ancient worlds with such creatures, human beings do not yet exist in normal evolution. But, there are human beings there now that were displaced there from another world. This interests Meier very much, who expresses the desire to touch the tail of a dinosaur. Semjase says that his fearlessness frightens her. Meier assures her that he can protect himself with his .44 magnum revolver. Semjase tells him that it is not possible for them to land on the surface and must remain cloaked. (See section 6.3.10 for more information about this planet.)

Final hyper-leap back to near the SOL system 35.P740-753

Ptaah informs Meier that Neber is the last planet that they will visit. In a few minutes, they will return to the space near the Sun's solar system. After the leap, Meier is pleased to see his home system again, even though it often appears strange to him. Ptaah says that every form of life is moved by feelings for its home.

Meier returns to Earth 35.P1127-

Ptaah tells Meier that time presses and that he must now return to the Earth. He says that Semjase will take him in her beamship and Ptaah will remain onboard his spaceship outside of the solar system. He tells Meier to live well and become just for his mission. They will meet again another time. He tells Meier to go in peace and love and remember that they are always with him in their thoughts and otherwise as well.

Meier pilots the beamship around the Earth 39.80-97

Nearly five months after Meier's great journey, he was again with Semjase in her beamship. While Semjase was busy drawing a picture for Meier, he asked if he could look more thoroughly at her ship. He says that he has wanted to see if he could pilot the ship himself for a long time now. He has carefully watched her and now knows how to start the power, control, and navigate the craft. He asks if he could play with it. Semjase assumes that he is joking and does not believe that he is capable of doing this. So, he takes the controls and guides the craft around the Earth. Then he adds more power and Semjase shouts, "Arimo, arimo!" Meier asks her what she means and is told to stop the ship. He stops the ship and asks her what the problem is. She says that she had spoken in her native language and was saying to hold on.

Semjase explains that she has no objection to him flying her ship, but she asks if he had given sufficient regard to their speed. Meier stated that he kept the speed at 290,000 kilometers per hour. He knew that it was dangerous to orbit the Earth beyond this speed. She expressed surprise that he knew this and says that she had become excited unnecessarily. She gives him permission to pilot the craft as he wishes. But, she cautions him to be careful and shows him what to do if he looses control so that the ship will automatically recover. Meier tells her to have no worries. She says that she will never understand the passion that earthly humans have for adventure. This is completely strange to her. Meier says that they are old brave soldiers and that the unknown entices them. The harder life is, the more they enjoy it. He assures her that he will teach her to be like this, perhaps when they shake hands with a dinosaur. She expresses the hope that reason will preserve him.

Bermuda Triangle - dimension passage 39.311-325

Later, during this contact, Semjase pilots her ship to the Bermuda Islands. She flies low in order to demonstrate for him the dimensional passages that earthly aircraft and ships have been lost in. She explains that this passage is not something that normally exists. It is a passage into Earth's past, present and future. Sometimes, inhabitants from the future penetrate into the present time. They fly into the middle of an invisible whirl. Behind them, Meier is able to see his own world and before him, he sees something strange, wild, and native. They are at the separation point of the whirl so that both dimensions can be seen at the same time. They enter the dimension of ancient Earth. Meier thinks this is fantastic and is surprised to see Ptaah's Greatspacer above this ancient world. Semjase talks to her father over a communication device and then she and Meier explore the ancient Earth in her beamship for about two hours so that Meier can take pictures of dinosaurs and the landscape.

Semjase, Ptaah & Meier explore ancient Earth 39.P1-18

Semjase and Meier then enter the Greatspacer and meet Ptaah there. He says that it is a joy for him to see Meier again. Meier expresses his pleasure as well. Ptaah says that they will be able to stroll around on the ancient Earth because the have produced a protective suit for him that will enable him to take photographs as well. Meier says that he would like to have a photograph of himself and Ptaah in their protective suits. Semjase agrees to take the picture, but Meier is told that he cannot let anyone else see it because Ptaah must not be recognized on the Earth in his time. Meier agrees.

They all move through the transportation chute to the hanger where they get into their protective suits. Then, they take Semjase's ship to the ancient Earth and fly alone for some time. At different places, they stop and leave the ship so that Meier can photograph some dinosaurs after they have been paralyzed. Semjase takes a picture of Meier and Ptaah together. After many hours, they return to Ptaah's ship. Meier says that was fantastic and is told that no other Earth human has had the chance to do what he has done.

Ptaah says that later, they will show him Earth's future dimension and also her moon. The Earth there is 470 years beyond his time. They have developed accordingly with advanced technology and spaceships, which they often use to come into Earth's current time. They have also settled on the moon and built many stations there. They will not visit the middle world because it is not of importance. Many forms of life exist there and the oxygen content is high, but he has already seen such worlds.

Now, they search for an overdue beamship with forms of life on it that are known to the Plejarens. Some days ago, they penetrated here and have no possibility to return on their own. They have sent out several space analyzers to look for it and, within 3 hours, they will know the results. Meier says that it will certainly not be dull there and expresses a desire to ask many more questions. He says that he is just interested in everything.

Earth moon of the 3rd earth - space stations 39.P210-212

An android comes and tells Ptaah something in a language that Meier does not understand. Ptaah then announces that the missed beamship has been found and they can continue their travels. Their next goal will be to the Earth's moon of the future. Meier is told that he will be able to visit it with Semjase and photograph it. Then, she will take him to the future Earth.

Semjase shows Meier future Earth humans 39.S342-354

Ptaah's Greatspacer glides out into the cosmos while Meier and Semjase leaves his ship in her beamship and rush towards the future moon of Earth. Once there, Meier notices that humans of the future have already built their stations and live there. The flight all across the moon takes several hours. Then, Semjase heads her ship into deep space once again. They arrive at the Earth of the future with the protection screen on to prevent detection. They are strangers to this world where the humans of this dimension and time have become much more powerful than the humans in present time. They are still barbarous, rather belligerent, and would force them to land if they knew they were there.

Semjase points out one of Earth's beamships, which have been developed because these humans are 500 years in advance of the humans in Meier's time. Meier comments on the fact that the craft looks similar to the ships of a TV movie named "Orion". Semjase says that certain people, like authors, receive information from outside of their worlds and are able to describe things of the future. In this way, they are slowly prepared for coming events and provided insights in new developments. A few minutes later, they arrive on the future Earth. Semjase shows Meier many very interesting things. After seven hours on this Earth, they fly again out into the cosmos where they meet Ptaah's spaceship and fly inside of it. Ptaah guides his ship back into Meier's time and dimension.

4.5 Predictions

Plejarens have 2 ways to know the future 17.66-73

It is often dangerous to reveal the future because people cannot bear what is foretold. The Plejarens have two possibilities for predicting the future. One way is for them to travel either physically or spiritually into the future and experience the events of a certain time and register what occurs. This is called direct future viewing. The second possibility involves calculating combinations of trends to determine probabilities. This is known as keen seeing. It is possible, with this type of prediction, for mistakes to be made and it does not preclude the possibility for erroneous results and analysis.

These are some common facts that relate to Switzerland. 1) Raging waters and snow masses will be the cause of many deaths in Switzerland during 1975. They will also cause damages in the millions of Swiss Francs due to bad investments. 2) Because of mounting street traffic, there will be a lot of deaths in the coming years, mainly in the cities. This will result in stiff fines and punishment. The traffic in the larger cities will become forbidden. Only the means for public traffic will have permission to drive in city centers. 3) Because of the megalomania and autocratic unreasonable attitudes of the country's civilians, Switzerland will become isolated, which will result in different crisis. The reputation of the land will be injured in great measure and the civilians of the land will become outlawed. Very exciting times will affect the land, which will result in great confusion. Crime will especially increase and demand its tribute. 4) New cries for litigation and the death penalty will come up. The punishment for several laws will become more severe to the point of becoming illogical and primitive. Robbery, murdering, and crimes of commerce will play decisive roles. 5) The commercial situation in Switzerland will change for the worse and cause honorable citizens to go astray and perform transgressions against the law. 6) Because of this situation, there will be many suicides. Very rapidly, in this year, many people will be exposed to psychological strains that they will not be able to bear. Many of these people will look to suicide to solve their problems and this will plentifully increase. 7) The political situation will generate difficult problems and confusion. The present government will remain in office, but they will start to brew unpleasant mischief. 8) The Swiss currency will fall and, because of this, important influences abroad will loose everything. In the first part of 1976, an alternating government may correct this misfortune. 9) Switzerland will become the transfer point for drugs in Europe. Stronger laws against this will be illogical and incomplete to stop the distribution of drugs. 10) Switzerland will loose its esteem as a paradise for tourism. The increasing level of prices until 1976 will be a decisive role in addition to the autocratic behavior of the country's citizens. 11) Religious delusion of all kinds will increase for numerous Swiss citizens. The administration will also perpetuate the religious delusion because they fear deserting and uncontrollable crowds that may rise against their slavery. These predictions may be altered or contain faults. They are not the result of a direct physical or spiritual viewing, but a result of calculating combinations of historical trends. Clairvoyants also foretell this. The greater masses of mankind are not able to know and bear a direct physical or spiritual viewing of the future.

Knowing the future is useless 22.8-14

The Plejarens predict only the very important events of the future. However, they must allow the future to have a free course and play itself out. Because of this, it is useless for them to look into the future. The unaffected future enables people to direct their thoughts in the right way and find, on their own, concepts of truth. The Plejarens must neither use coercion nor reveal the facts in order to influence the future. Knowledge of the future is of no use to them because they are not allowed to use what they discover. The future should only be experienced if the recognition of it is a useful and successful exercise. The fore-living of personal matters and developing facts of any form of life should not be experienced because each life has to go their own way of normal development. People are not allowed to be influenced by the future in any way. It could cause a leap over developmental stages without having experienced the necessary wisdom of that stage.

Predictions - Only tell after they have happened. 31.A203-206

Asket reveals information to Meier that is only destined for him. He is told that it is very important that he remain silent about it because the information must not influence the course of humanity on Earth. He is only allowed to reveal information about events that have already occurred. Meier assures Asket that she can trust him.

Predictions - process involved 38.49-58

Each prediction provided by the Plejarens is developed from analysis, experiments, etc. These often agree with statements made by people at about the same time they have been revealed. This is dependant upon time for the self-development of a world. However, different people are also constantly directed in their research to reach certain concepts on their own. These influences come from outside and fulfill their destined aims. When a single person or even a whole group comes far enough to earn certain concepts, then they make them public. But, this only occurs when the knowledge can be disseminated without harm. There is control that is partly exercised over these people. The Plejarens are able to control these matters so that they can give information to people before it is publicly known by humanity. This time will vary only a little, so the Plejarens are only able to tell certain things a few days, weeks, or months before the announcements are made.

Atomic War - 99.8% probability not occurring 39.248-253

The Plejarens have concluded from analysis that there is a 99.8% probability that the danger of an atomic war may be excluded. Only an outbreak of delusion or the inattentiveness of an individual could start an atomic war. Their probability calculations reveal this by the highest values, which humanity can rely upon.

Earthquakes and other predictions 70.196-209

Meier states that the official information about an earthquake in China is unclear and deceptive. This conflicts with the prophesies by Petale that refer to about one million people dead. Semjase tells him that 893,000 people actually died in the earthquakes, 208,000 people were severely injured and an additional 811,000 people sustained less severe injuries. The number of missing people covered beneath the ruined fields is around 70,000. Semjase says that the earth will not find tranquility because much worse earthquakes will occur. Not all of these quakes may be expected this year, but they will be of such horrible power that countries and islands will sink. An extraordinary heavy dry spell will attack the world, which will be followed by great floods. Air and sea currents will be heavily affected. Violence and criminal acts will greatly increase everywhere and forceful causes of death will prevail for all races. It will be much worse than ever before. This is all based upon calculations of probability.

Predictions for 1977 - based on insight & probability 71.1-59

Quetzal has given permission for Semjase to reveal predictions about the coming year of 1977. This information is partly based on prophetic sight and partly by probability calculations. These predictions are of regrettable harshness and worse than all of the years before.

1) The worst earthquakes in 900 years will shake the Earth and change the surface of the planet. The death count will be higher than in 1976. Undersea volcanoes will create new islands. The first such island will appear near Japan. Existing islands, and parts of continents, will sink below the sea and the shifting of landmasses will be felt. Earthquakes will menace all of the countries that were shaken by earthquakes in 1976, in 1977. Different earthquakes will afflict the great underwater trench between San Francisco and Alaska, as well as the regions of Austria, Switzerland, and Germany. In addition, Russia, Africa, and the island regions of Oceania will be shaken by quakes.

2) Several volcanoes around the globe will then suddenly and unexpectedly erupt, causing destruction to many thousands of people. These events will begin during the next few days when several thousand people are killed by a heavy volcanic eruption in the African country of Zaire.

3) Snowfall will increase dramatically in the beginning of 1977 and cause the death of many victims. Great regions, which have not had snowfall in other times, will be covered by great masses of snow in freezing temperatures that will cause very many deaths. Beginning tomorrow, large snowfalls will hit many countries all over the globe and cause many victims. Cities and villages will become isolated and airline flights of whole nations will be grounded for some time. The end of the snowfalls will bring more catastrophes because of avalanches. Besides many animal and human victims, the avalanches will damage several streets, railway lines, and buildings.

4) After the snowfalls, there will be a long summer with great dryness that will spoil harvests.

5) With the coming drought, large areas of land and forests will be damaged by conflagrations.

6) Many countries will be flooded while others suffer droughts that cause great damage and human lives. There will also be storms that rage over oceans and crash into islands and continents.

7) Shipping will be halted and many people will be lost. A series of ship catastrophes will appear and cost billions of dollars. The shipping and transportation of oil will be threatened. The Earth rebels against being exploited by damaging the oceans and regions, which are most important to the existence of human beings. The forces of nature defend itself by hitting humanity hardest where the pulse of life is beating. If this is damaged, then no human will be safe to exist in the world. Due to the catastrophes in shipping, great quantities of oil will be released on the water, killing creatures and causing destruction to the ocean floor and shores. The forces of nature defend itself with the aim or destroying humanity because when man is gone, the Earth is able to regenerate itself. For this not to happen, mankind would need to stop all earthly exploitation as soon as possible. In addition to halting exploitation, worldwide birth-control measures must be strictly exercised to stop all births for seven years. Humanity has no more than 4 or 5 years to rescue themselves and conform to the laws of nature.

8) There will be much misery from war activities in 1977. The mischief of terrorists will grow, causing humans to die a miserable death. The guilt for this terrorism is the nation of Israel and the states supporting it. All who cooperate with Israel carries the guilt for all of the coming senseless bloodshed. The idea of a worldwide war is stirred up by the machinations of Israel. The idea for a destructive worldwide war is not far from breaking out. This can only be averted if the nations of the world agree to dissolve the state of Israel and form a world government. Only this will bring peace with a non-political government that is guided spiritually.

9) There will be murder on a vast scale. No land on Earth will be spared from this. Wicked massacres will occur in many places. This will also affect Switzerland to a lesser degree. Murders and other killings from hate, despair, revenge, and criminal activities will increase rapidly. Whole families will fall victim especially in the first half of the year. Legal court bailiffs will be overburdened by the coming events and, in their unreasonable simplicity, they will confess to several mitigating causes for the murderous elements, which will sponsor further killings.

10) There will be many new discoveries that, if used properly, could bring much progress for humanity. But, according to traditional patterns, they will be used for negative purposes that will bring death and destruction on humanity. Un-assumed discoveries will be made in medicine, astronomy, chemistry, physics, and technology.

11) The scientists of one state will develop an extremely dangerous and deadly weapon, which will provide this state with great power.

12) Menacing dangers will also come from cosmic space.

13) Different new, previously unknown sicknesses will appear.

14) Air travel will suffer from an unusually high amount of damage with lots of victims.

These are the most important predictions for the year of 1977. These are partly the result of probability calculations and a small part on prophetic announcements.

Chapter 5 SPIRITUALITY

Sense and function of the spiritual teachings 10.93-116

Human beings become enlightened and completely free when their thoughts remain constantly in the infinite Creational spiritual reality. Spiritual intelligence is improved by adhering to lawful spiritual principles that are arranged toward the character and force of Creation. This is different from the intelligence of humans on Earth, which generally only occupy themselves with objects of the material world. This has the consequence of keeping peoples thoughts narrowed and hampered in every regard. It is even the cause of weakness, slavery, and every unfortunate event so that humanity will be caught up, pressed down, and plagued by troubles.

So, a detailed self-analysis of humanity is essential for finding the truth and going the way of spiritual evolution. Human beings should continuously check their thoughts and determine what kind they really are. They must always allow creational-philosophical principles of natural laws to lead, guide, and be their destiny. People should constantly be conscious of the fact that they belong to the Creation, which is the essential spiritual being. Spirituality should be evident to them with the knowledge that their essential spiritual existence is inseparable with Creation so that they can conquer their consciousness with the material outer world.

Creational-philosophical truth should always be considered when thinking, feeling, and acting. Only by uniting with the spirit, can human beings recognize their destiny and perform good things because they hold the possibility of Creation itself. Nothing in the infinite universe can touch or enslave Creation. But in addition to the creational-philosophical consciousness, there is also the practical, dynamic, and creational trait of mystical consciousness, which is the perception that it is the only reality in all matters. Human beings on Earth have a practical philosophy that is mystical and recognizes truths that are changeable and perishable.

What is a human being? It is only a body and a name. When you take away the body and name, what remains? The fundamental essence remains, which is the spirit. Every individual that overlooks this is blown by the smallest touch of wind without a solid place to stand. This persists until the person searches and finds the fundamental truth. Millions of people look up at the stars in the heavens without any conceptions of what they are looking at. Yet, astronomers discover new worlds and write books about them. They are able to realize and recognize what others are unable to grasp, even if they could see. The same thing applies to normal and spiritual human beings. The ones, who truly live according to spiritual creational laws, realize and recognize that each form of life and all objects are a part of Creation. The normal, non-spiritual, and injured human beings are never able to recognize or realize one bit of the truth.

Spiritual Teachings 11.57-138

The ones that really grow spiritually, are noble artists with a precious spirit, soft character, and are full of love, knowledge, and wisdom. These beings are quite sensible for truth, poise, beauty, and spiritual progress. Their lives are ruled and clarified with perspectives that are very extensive. They are generous and full of spiritual dignity. Beauty expresses itself in their unpretentious lifestyle. Their inner calm hides a beauty that no artist is able to paint. Their spiritual tranquility exercises a force of attractiveness that no music can express. Their assurance is unequaled and there is no limit to what can be accomplished. Their wisdom is an ever-present light that lights the darkness. It is not the light of day or the light of a great thinker. They are always presented with the incense of eternity, which never fades away and has the fragrance of a beautiful rose. Their measure of worth is not the body, but the spirit.

Human beings are multi-faceted and their many disguises hide their actual personality from others. They may identify themselves with their physical bodies and satisfy its demands or they may consciously feel their spirit to be their real selves, which is eternal, indestructible, and the observer of both physical and spiritual existences. All vital aspects of the human body are not, in the long run, able to suppress the spirit without bringing the original personality into full confusion. The material intellect, with all of its limited understanding, seizes the highest place and causes an extensive slow development of the spirit. The spiritual intellect must be developed very consciously because it is not able to move into the higher forms on its own.

The material intellect is only able to move in virtual circles of possibilities. It always remains stuck at the surface of an object and is not able to penetrate and unite with it. Without a complete identity of the object, it is impossible to understand it. When people want to know their fellow creatures, they must identify themselves with them and when they want to know a matter, they must identify themselves with it. The material intellect accepts only what is detected with the physical senses and their deduced conclusions refuse to accept the deeper subjective impulses.

An understanding based upon a deep searching, discloses something more within people than what their common consciousness offers them. This is the origin of all thoughts, sensations, and feelings. It is a finer spiritual presence, which lets them be unsatisfied with pure material achievements. The common material state of human beings is not the real and final position in life. They own a deeper and piercing life within physical life. This is their true self, an immortal spirit, and a light that can never be extinguished by anything. They have been the spiritual thinkers of all universes over all great-times.

All great spiritual thinkers of all universes always rise to the single demand of recognizing the essential self. While body organs alternate constantly and humanly thoughts also come and go in waves, the essential being never gets lost. It is the fundamental origin of all feeling of identity. It takes in all things into itself and always remains unchangeable in an eternal proportion of its own size. The limited human personality is only conscious at certain times with large gaps of consciousness. Even when the body dies, the spirit can never die because it is a part of Creation, which is eternal and nothing can touch the spirit.

Although the spirit cannot be observed materially because it is of pure spiritual form and nature, there is no need for proof of it by reasoning entities when the spirit is its own evidence. Only people that live in spiritual poverty demand evidence for the existence of the spirit because they are unable to recognize its existence from the spiritual facts and events. It is the fundamental part in the process of each realization and it enlivens every organ with the urge to develop and maintain life.

But the spirit, as a consequence of living in physical form, is affected by mental impurities. When human beings break through the veils surrounding the spirit and take away the wraps of mental urges, they reach the essence of their existence. This is their inner spiritual being, which is infinitely easier and uncomplicated. It forms a unity of transcendental reality with understanding, knowledge, wisdom, love, and liberty. Human beings are not simply a biological phenomenon. Inside of them, is a psychic organism of spiritual form with latent possibilities that are charged with the might of all creational forces. A philosophical insight into the psychic being of humanity corrupts all understanding about the reality of the cosmic consciousness. Human beings must not only conceive of themselves at the biological and mental level, but also from the psychic and spiritual levels.

Everything learned and experienced through millions of existences lays hidden in the subconscious. Why does humanity not master the techniques of concentration in order to access the subconscious and make full use of all their knowledge and abilities? The longing for all of their knowledge, abilities experiences, and wisdom lays hidden deep within them. They only need to recognize and accept this truth to make use of it. To do this, humanity must fight against their own foolishness and acknowledge that the material intellect does not express what mankind is if there is no cooperation with the spiritual intellect as well. When this happens and the spirit is recognized, everything collected from previous lifetime will return and be of great benefit. Knowledge, power, force, wisdom, liberty, and love are the creational inheritance of the absolute. They are the birth rights of every human being. This enables the human to be a center of thoughts, power, force, and influence over everyone and everything.

The body is only an instrument, a servant of the spirit, and a dwelling, but not a prison. The body is a temple for the spirit, the creational self. The way to know the spirit is by meditation, inner contemplation, and submerging into the deepest and most silent part of the spiritual self to directly see the inner life. The spirit cannot be known through religious prayers, for that is only a release of false desires of imagination. Real meditation in spiritual form needs an increase of understanding towards self-discovery. The innermost essence of every human being is a manifestation of the Creation, which enables everyone to become united with the infinite. Deliberation about these truths regarding the essential existence of the Creation generates positive knowledge. Useless objections are replaced when the truth is examined. When the truth is realized, everything becomes clear and understood.

There is no complete satisfaction for humans on Earth. Real satisfaction is opposite material pleasures. Material life only serves as a ladder for reaching the spiritual life. Material life only provides the environment to act in and offers conditions for humans to connect with the spirit and Creation. It is completely wrong to confine the field of view only to physical objects and only measure things by their objective worth. The true height of a form of life depends upon the size of its innermost life and not physical stature. Relationships among humans are only justified when they do not differ from the eternal laws of spiritual nature. Neither social welfare nor national assistance can help the essential substance when it clings to the shadows and is negated.

No single human being possesses the core of truth because the truth is formed by a sense of everything that exists. It only exists for one that is a part of, and identifies with, everything. This is the culmination of all aspirations and ideals of life. This integrated spiritual concept of life is based upon ethics of social and domestic relations. Society consists of individuals that are destined to penetrate the veils and realize their immortal existence in Creation. When human beings exist only for living the physical life, the spiritual being that exists deep within the background of all creatures, cannot be found. The love for the spirit becomes more and more lost and the human is inclined to turn more and more towards their material intellect. Altruistic love is the expression of visible harmony with the unlimited life, which exists throughout the universe.

When families, societies, or nations separate themselves from others, then they can never achieve success. There must be at least some small connection with Creation, which does not separate any part of itself. This truth must be always realized if humanity is to ever be free from selfishness and be in harmony with the universe. Life is a lesson of the spirit for the spirit. The correct behavior of families, societies, and nations is to represent a part of the whole universe, based on strict unbiased laws. Human beings live because Creation exists and life must become perfect just as Creation is perfect. Humanity lives in creational existence and floats in it. The missing of spiritual values for a practical life philosophy is the cause for the crisis in the lives of people and their concerns.

The nature & qualities of a spiritual person 18.25-100

Spiritual humans always generate inside of themselves, the strong feeling that the creational being is much more real than the physical body. This feeling rules the spiritual being without rest. The Creation seizes possession of its consciousness while its senses are full of peace, strength, delight, knowledge, wisdom, and hope. Everything that normal people do with their material-intellectual thinking to reach peace, fortune, and strength, only result in delusions while the spiritual person is pulsed through by the dynamic force of the Creation.

Spiritual humans are very dynamic within all things. They endeavor to reach their destiny as soon as possible. As long as they live, they use this time to turn towards their creational abilities by all of their force. They will never let go or lose this drive. They may run into obstacles and have a desire for material objects, but they never loose their inclination for Creation because they know that the Creation embodies the true being. These humans earn huge spiritual rewards when they strongly fight for their spiritual goods and development in order to gain knowledge, truth, logic, wisdom, and love, which do not just fall into their bosom.

It is first necessary to learn the spiritual-intellectual mode of thinking, which is the way of creational thinking, and recognize its absolute correctness and objective. This is necessary before any successes may be reached. By recognizing these facts, the knowing, truth, logic, wisdom, and love become self-evident. But, this recognition must be elaborated upon very thoroughly. Then, further searching, exploring, developing, and recognition leads into the limitless continuities of time. Regardless of whatever may happen, the human beings of spirit do not let their thoughts be diverted from their objective.

Their future already exists in the present for what matters is that, here and now, everything is done to reach the highest spiritual state of consciousness. They do not fear the future, as the future only exists in the material-intellectual mode of thinking. In the spiritual-intellectual mode of thinking, the future is the present. Because of this, humans of the spirit are able to solve the problems of the future here and now and direct them as desired.

Advantage is gained by each form of life that thinks spiritually. So, humanity should be intensively searching and exploring in spiritual thinking and into the knowledge about Creational truth and wisdom. This will generate a stirring feeling that there is something existing, which gives great force, sets them free of false beliefs, and provides the truth about Creation. They will create in themselves the strong recognition that they are in a sea of creational light with its wisdom, knowledge, logic, and love that enables them to be alive.

Human beings that turn toward Creation offer their reverence towards the creational and Creation. They are delighted to accept the almighty will of the creational laws and find them to have value. They reveal their devotion to the laws by learning and exercising all spiritual factors, but never by beliefs, acceptances, servitude, or devotion.

The way to learn is by endeavoring to reach higher spiritual concepts and by using the developed abilities. Patience and persistence is needed for the development of higher understanding, cognition, and the ability to use cosmic and universal love. The deepening of spiritual knowledge and abilities, as well as the elimination of material-intellectual ways of thinking like egotism, materialism, pride, avidity, greed, envy, etc., are very important because this vouches for the recognition and observance of creational laws.

Spiritual human beings are always occupied with bringing Creation from out of themselves and making it visible in them in order to make the impossible possible for common humans and succeeding. Spiritual humans constantly call for the creational for knowledge, wisdom, love, logic, truth, and power until it becomes more real than the feeling of the physical body. They view the creational while also relating to other humans. They realize the creational in others for they always keep the creational in first place. Among all matters, the creational is the greatest to them and they are no longer inclined toward material objects. They are no longer exposed to material temptations and the spiritual knowledge and abilities that they bear inside are their partner and guide.

This way of living represents an existence in truth and that existence is incomparable and much more delightful than the most beautiful appearance in the universe. Nothing is able to tempt such spiritually developed human beings, not the greatest riches or threats of death. Their inner wealth of Creation is inexhaustible and imperishable with infinite power. Nothing is able to mislead them because they live in creational awareness of infinite truth. Nothing can lead them astray because their spiritual-intellectual thinking is unlimited light. And nothing is able to change their sense of existence or make them feel unfortunate as they live in the existence of the Creation with unlimited delight.

Humans with an evil or negative mind against themselves or Creation will never succeed because their thoughts and feelings influence their environment. All achievements will be negative. For spiritual humans, everything will always be the right circumstance for inner growth and be an opportunity to pay tribute to Creation. The truth will be great for humans who constantly keep high and lofty thoughts of the spirit. These humans can only be called creational when they constantly live in consciousness of Creation inside of themselves.

This also means that great material-intellectual humans can be plain non-creational with lowly spirits such as religious saints, care-givers, and wartime medical people. In most cases, such people are so inclined for adventure, pity for others and themselves, and other wrongful material thoughts without the least recognition of the Creation within them. They are often led astray by false religions that preach wrong love of fellow creatures as well as false godly lessons and formulas of devotion. The difference between such forms of life and spiritual humans is that the common forms let themselves be led by material-intellectual movements and aggression. If they ever have good feelings, then they soon disappear to make way for low thoughts again whereas spiritual humans never allow their creational movements to decrease, but seize them.

Low movements try to anchor themselves while spiritual humans always try to remain in creational movement. If spiritual humans run into dangerous influences, then they call upon the Creation for protection in the highest frequency forces from the negative. Material-intellectual humans bear many sorrows, grief, problems, hopes, and fears while spiritual humans carry the creational. They always carry in themselves the knowledge and abilities of creational laws. The more that their old-fashioned nature wants to have them in the material-intellectual way of thinking, the more intensively they work to make the creational firmly established within them always. Even negative thoughts that seek to destroy their spiritual-intellectual thinking are altered into creational force and wisdom. Everything is turned into the creational and is carried inside as a walking temple of Creation.

The intelligence of humans living for Creation becomes more spiritual and penetrates deeper into spiritual consciousness. They use their abilities of recognition to penetrate deeper into all matters and they conceive the warmth of the creational presence within them everywhere. What remains unrealized by normal perception is realized with spiritual consciousness by the humans living in Creation. They realize the creational presence in all things and forms of life and the exercise of creational laws. They own a spiritual image of the force of Creation and they devote all of their precious energies for creational knowledge, its truth, force, and wisdom. They are also devoted to the Creation within them, their spirit and its force.

Material life on Earth is like a perishable game. Behind this game is the eternal and timeless truth of the spirit, the creational presence, and the reality of Creation. This creational reality carries in it all abilities for wisdom. This is timeless, constant, and never ending. This is no game, but eternal and timeless truth and wisdom, knowing, freedom, love, logic, abilities, improvement, and an absolute destination. Many people fear to live according to Creation and only remain in fear of death with a religious god that promises them heaven if they believe in false devotional lies, which causes them to fall into slavery and become spiritually imprisoned. The constant repeating of the heresy of religion causes the believers to suffer a wicked delusion, which obstructs spiritual reason and hampers their spiritual-intellectual thinking. They become suppressed and enslaved. Very few humans do not fear to live according to Creation, which alone vouches for life.

5.1 Consciousness

Evaluating the position of consciousness of Ebner 54.76-85

It will take 6 to 7 hours for Meier to learn the labor of valuation, which enables a determination of the spiritual level of development for any human being. Meier asks for a valuation of a person by the name of Ebner and is informed that Quetzal will do this with an area-analyzer, which will take about 20 minutes to complete.

Evaluating the position of consciousness - details 54.132-157

The valuation for the level of consciousness of a form of life is based upon a total grade of 700 single values. These values are divided into seven periods of 100 single values for each one. The highest value of 700 represents a spiritual-formed grade of valuation of absolute perfection. This is equal to being united with the Creation. These values have been changed into the earth human form of mathematical understanding for a rough criterion.

With 700 as an absolute value, it is divided by 7 for a result of 7 x 100. Out of a value of 100 in each period, a value of 49 is obtained by multiplying 7 x 7. This number represents an exact value of consciousness, respective of its level. The remaining 51 values represent the values of the spiritual power, which is also calculable. Thus, the first calculation leads to a maximum of 357 values and the second to 343 values. Both values are added in order to express the present absolute level of the consciousness in digits.

A retrograde application is not possible because, when a creature has reached one sphere of consciousness, it is never lost as a spiritual-intellectual level of consciousness unlike a material level of consciousness. The result of the analysis concerning Ebner is that this person has maneuvered himself towards an over-bearing illusion of himself as being above all other humans. Unfortunately, there are many others like him. Because of this illusion, he puts himself very high above all others even though he has no knowledge regarding the valuation of the planes of consciousness. His abilities in these concerns are only pretended and are generated by an over-bearing illusion.

The value of his level of consciousness is very sharp at 186, while everyone in Meier's group surpasses this value by many grades. The lowest value for any member of his group is 188. Ebner is not just a joker, but a selfish and self-elevated person, who feels himself over all others and chooses himself for higher values. This is an egotistical, self-elevated, and wrongly-led form of life. Meier asks if he should inform this person of these facts and is told that this would be wrong, for this person has elevated himself so much in his delusion that he would not understand them and this would cause him to work against Meier.

Description of the Creation E2.A1-2

The Creation is the essential and fundamental part of life and existence. The force of the Creation is not only cosmic, but the force of all life and existence in all universes.

Creation and universes 1.40-59

During Semjase's first contact with Meier, she says that one of their missions is aimed at Earth's religions and the associated underdevelopment of the human spirit. Above everything, there remains only one that possesses the power of life and death over each creature. This is the Creation, which has laid its laws over all. These laws are irrefutable and of eternal validity. Human beings can recognize them in nature when he troubles himself to do so. They expose for him the way of life and the way of spiritual greatness, embodying the goal of life. While the human indulges in his religions and by this a heresy, he passes more and more away until he finally reaches a bottomless abyss. Humanity should realize that a God can never take over the part of the Creation or destine the fate of a human being. A God is only a Governor and moreover, a human being who exercises a powerful reign of tyranny over his fellow creatures. God is not the Creation, but is only a creature of it like all Creation-dependent creatures.

Creation - is neutral and creates life 8.162-166

Over every creature and above all is the Creation, which is neutral to every creation and event in the universe. The Creation is the creation of all that is. Over seven great-times, Creation creates life in numerous forms over and over again, incessantly. Once life is created, then it is left to itself with life's mission to develop itself.

Creation 10.44-56

There is an existence that creates everything in the universe with forces that follow certain creational laws. These forces observe and enliven truth, knowledge and wisdom, which are eternal from a given unitary principal. This forceful existence is the Creation. There is only one existence that governs everywhere in the universe, only one Creation, one truth, one knowledge, and one wisdom that is equally directed for all of eternity. The eternal truth suffers no staggering or any changes and its laws have never been corrected or adapted to conform to a new time.

The spiritual force is vital and dynamic as it embodies wisdom within it. It is a sign of weakness when religions and their heresies become exposed as an instrument of Creation. It is not true. When this happens, humanity will search elsewhere for force, liberty, delight, and light where they really are. Wisdom is a marking character of the Creation and part of it lives as the spirit in human beings. So, humanity should enlarge their wisdom and they will recognize the Creation. They may increase their search for truth and discover the force of wisdom. Recognition of the truth brings liberation from all limitations. Wisdom is a mighty means to recognize the laws of Creation.

Spiritual Teachings - nature & term of The Creation 18.1-24

Spiritual advice is the most important matter here on Earth. The word "Creation" ought to cause a change in the mind of human beings to think of something very beautiful and good. When this does not occur, then they have not yet recognized the Creation for what it is. How is it possible for humanity to comprehend such an important meaning, which should cause their whole psychological behavior to rise in emotional recognition and have their whole feelings react to the word, if they do not constantly deliberate about the characteristics of Creation? They should try to make connections with certain designations in respect to the character of the Creation, such as "Ever-present", "almighty", and "all-knowing".

People who consider themselves to be atheists, egoists, materialists, or agnostics find the word "Creation" to be uninteresting. Many human beings feel this way because they have no concept of what Creation essentially is. Millions of religiously guided people do not understand the word "Creation". Those who are religiously influenced wrongly believe that "God" is the Creation. But, this is a wicked heresy. It is very important for humanity to know as much as possible about the character of Creation and understand why the word has such importance. This understanding reveals that the Creation is infinite beauty, a beauty above all beauty, limitless good fortune without end as well as intensive wisdom, knowledge, abilities, truth with an absolute destination.

Humanity can trace the origins for all of their delights instantly to the infinite creational delight. Wherever they realize anything beautiful, whether it is a flower, an animal, person, or anything else, they instantly connect to the unlimited beauty of the Creation. Whenever people reach cognition of anything, its origin is in the endless cognition, which is the Creation. Behind every life that exists, including the smallest microbe, there is the infinite, the eternal, and the Creation. Once this is realized, humanity will try to deepen and enlarge their understanding and feeling by deliberating about the Creation and its unavoidable presence while experiencing their daily lives.

Within every human being, there is a part of the Creation. When this concept penetrates deeply within people and is consciously experienced, then every fear and doubt within them vanishes. When it is realized that the Creation is all-knowing and all-mighty, then there is an inner peace and sureness which is able to defend against silly thoughts and strange feelings. Repeated deliberation about the all-present, truth, wisdom, power, and knowledge of the Creation causes something very important within people to occur that affects their feelings and ways of thinking. The more forceful that people pursue this direction in their lives, the more forceful their personality becomes and the more blessed their whole life is.

The Creation corresponds to a universal consciousness, which leads and governs as a double spiral-shaped oval formation. It forms the universe at an increasing extent. The double-spiral arms pulse as spiritual energy and rotate towards each other. The Plejarens do not know anything more about the Creation. They only know the causes and effects, as well as the laws and restrictions, but nothing more.

5.3 Development, 7 Stages

7 main stages/periods of development 6.6-45

The purpose of life, the after-life, and reincarnation is a field that even Plejaren science is not able to determine all of its secrets. So, only that which is known to them, or assumed by them, can be explained. In general, there are five very important points, which are not certain and those things refer to the secrets of Creation. Nevertheless, the Plejarens will not withhold their assumptions.

All life, from its beginning until its completion, is divided into seven main steps or main periods. Each one is divided into seven sub-periods and all of them affect the whole. Each sub-period refers to a quite certain form of development and a very certain goal of development. The sub-periods can be compared to school subjects and not to years. There are seven subjects that are to be accomplished during each semester-life. One main period is accomplished when all seven sub-periods are completed, which can take hundreds of thousands of years.

The spiritual form of life is completely sexless because a sex is only a characteristic of organic life for the propagation of the species. The rebirth in organic life is used for spiritual development in both sexes. Although the periodic sequence of seasons is decisive for organic creatures, spiritual creatures, like human beings, are not regulated by periods and are often rated differently. They do not fall into a destined rhythm like plants, etc.

The rebirth of a spirit-conditioned human being can occur in a fraction of a second, decades, millenniums, or hundreds of thousands of years after bodily death. When a spirit-conditioned life is destroyed prematurely, it is at a disadvantage because it has not completed the sub-period. The life must be repeated in order to achieve its final goal of completing the period. The next life will be shorter because it must only accomplish what was previously missed in order to finish the period's objective.

This can be considered hell because hell only means a self-caused punishment that must be suffered. In other words, this is a self-caused fault that must be made good again. The terms of hell and sin in religious context, are pure nonsense. No one is guilty when mistakes in life are made. Mistakes can be made good again when the entity committing the fault recognizes it, agrees not to make the mistake again, and takes the knowledge of this for wisdom. This is taught in the Talmud Jmmanuel. Regarding the nameless nothing, this is a secret that the Plejarens have not yet solved.

7 main periods and each of their 7 sub-periods

STEP ONE: Primitive Life

1. Primary development of the intellect and the spirit.

2. Primary thinking of intellect and spirit.

3. Primary thinking of reason.

4. Primary exercise of intellect and spiritual force.

5. Primary reasonable actions.

6. Primary will-caused thinking and treating of others.

7. Reason-conditioned leading of the life.

STEP TWO: Reasoned Life

1. Primary development of reason.

2. Effective development of reason and its use.

3. Primary acknowledgment and cognition of higher influences.

4. Belief in higher influences without spiritual knowledge.

5. Belief in higher forces of superstition, fear of evil, veneration of good, religions, etc.

6. Primary recognition of the true reality: Research; development of real knowing; first spiritual cognitions and their use for spiritual healing, telepathy, etc. (Present position of the average human being on Earth)

7. Primary development of knowledge and wisdom.

STEP THREE: Intellectual Life

1. Higher development of the intellect. High technology, second utilization of spiritual forces, and the Primary creation of living forms.

2. Realization and exercise of knowledge, truth, and wisdom. Slow break-up of acceptances of beliefs. (The present position of highly educated human beings on Earth.)

3. First utilization of knowledge and wisdom.

4. Acknowledgment and utilization of nature's laws. Generation of hyper-technology with advances in genetics and cloning.

5. Natural exercise of wisdom and knowledge in cognition of spiritual forces.

6. Life in knowing about wisdom, truth, and logic.

7. Primary cognition of reality as being absolute. (The position of a few boarder and spiritual scientists.)

STEP FOUR: Real Life

1. Clear knowledge about the reality as being truly absolute.

2. Cognition of spiritual knowledge and spiritual wisdom.

3. Utilization of the spiritual knowledge and spiritual wisdom.

4. Cognition of the reality of Creation and its laws.

5. Living from the Creational laws. Purification of the spirit and the intellect, cognition of the true obligation and force of the spirit, and the complete abandonment of dogmatic belief systems. (This is Meier's current position.)

6. Directed and controlled utilization of spiritual forces.

7. Creation of first live creations.

STEP FIVE: Creational Life

1. Creating and controlling of living forms.

2. Construction of androids (machine/organic forms).

3. Spiritual development of forces for control of material and organic forms of life.

4. Will-conditioned mastering of life and all its forms.

5. Position of recognitions, reminiscences of earlier lives, etc.

6. Kingdom of wisdom called IHWH. This is before the last highest power and knowledge.

7. Cognition of spiritual peace, universal love and Creational harmony.

STEP SIX: Spiritual Life

1. Acknowledgment and realization of spiritual peace, universal love, and Creational harmony.

2. Living in pure spiritual forms.

3. Spiritual creations.

4. Disembodiment of the spirit from organic matter.

5. First spiritual existence.

6. Final spiritual existence.

7. Unification with the Creation.

STEP SEVEN: Creational Life

1. Twilight sleep over seven periods (eternities).

2. Awakening and beginning of creating in the Creation, as the Creation, during seven periods/eternities.

3. Creating of living forms.

4. Creating of new spirit forms in improvement of the Creation.

5. Creating of spiritual greatness in the Creation.

6. Improvement of the Creation in the Creation.

7. Last reaching of highest improvement in the seventh period/eternity.

Life's lessons require patience 38.1-5

When Meier complained of being sick, he mentioned that he was not able to control such things because they are not within his abilities. Semjase says that this is known to her and that everything must first be learned. He can understand different things and comprehend them, but certain things are still not his line of work. Everything learned, requires great lengths of time and very much patience.

Creatures are subject to constant change of an evolutionary view. Because the Earth is a creature as well, it must also abide by the same law of evolution in addition to all of its other forms of life. The natural way of evolution of all forms of life is universally the same. Every creature on Earth, as well as the Earth itself, has periods of being awake and asleep. The entire mass of Earth cannot slumber at the same time or this would damage all forms of life on it. Because of that, it only lays down regions of itself for slumber. The Earth evokes changes of temperature and climate in great regions that are covered by dense masses of ice. With the freezing of great regions, all creatures there must adapt themselves to the new conditions. This results in them slowly changing their other outward appearances.

Animals, plants, and human beings run through a process of alteration, which causes them to evolve to higher levels. Evolution never causes change to retrograde forms, but always evolves forward. Alterations always take place towards something higher. As the Earth evolves forward and higher, the accompanying forms of life also develop higher in all of their different characters. Such a global evolution thus changes the plants, animals, and human beings toward new and higher forms. This means that a beautiful flower will change into a more beautiful flower and become cultivated by the evolutionary influences of the Earth. This happens at the epoch of the glacial periods.

5.4 Laws of Creation

Evolution, negative & positive forces for balance 38.Q5-10

Each form of life is subject to change in the progress of evolution in order to collect knowledge and truth. Negative and positive forces are changed towards balance and with that, towards the force and durability of life. The way of evolution is very long and troublesome. It is also determined by many outside influences. This is especially true with respect to influences of similar creatures exercising forces toward a single form of life. This can only be mastered by living through great lengths of time and experiencing lessons that result in understanding and recognition. This way of evolution is the same for the highest forms of life as well as the lowest forms of life. This is a Creational law of evolution, which is valid for all time and is never subject to change.

The natural cosmic laws order a unitary & harmony 66.79-80

The natural cosmic laws establish a uniform and harmonic development that encompasses all concerns at all levels that are able to evolve. This means that the spiritual as well as the material development constantly proceeds in harmony with one another and always complete in unison with each other in consequence with all matters.

5.5 Levitation and Mediums

Levitation - control of gravitational forces 66.81-93

The primary requirement for the ability to master gravitational forces by technical means is determined by the laws regulating gravity and the most decisive factor is spiritual evolution. At first, there is the exercising of spiritual forces to paralyze the forces of gravity and enable a person to be weightless. This is known as "Levitation". Initially, this situation is evoked in a form that is unknown to humans and then, step by step, they learn to master it and control it properly. Once people have learned to control these forces spiritually, the way is then cleared for them to build the technical means for levitation.

Earth humans represent an exception for spiritual control, even if the exceptions cannot be easily recognized. Except for a few, earthly humans are not able to master levitation. Nevertheless, they are already able to see a great amount in the field of gravity research. This exception consists of a very rare development, which basically has shifted the potential of the spiritual and material. The material has become over-weighted and demonstrates the spiritual. This means that Earth humans have become governed and evolve according to the material side while the spiritual side falls behind. Humanity's technologies are more developed than their spiritual evolution.

Ability to communicate with spirits - Mediums 7.186-200

It is possible for Earth humans to make contact with spirits of the fine-material world, but it is not advisable. The spirits there are not any further in their knowledge, than they were in their course-material lives. False beliefs, lies, and conscious falsehoods are also still a part of their character. Because of this, material living entities should not communicate with them since this can be misleading in great ways. It is better for living beings to increase their knowledge with their own spiritual labors instead of just receiving information in this manner and possibly being led astray. Of course, there also exist spiritual forms, which answer in sincere ways. But, there are very few of these and they live in higher spheres because they are further developed, spiritually.

There are only a few human beings that are able to make contact with those who have passed on. Although there are great spiritualistic circles on Earth, they are often deceitful. Many mediums are only good actors, who desire to indulge in their acting inclinations. Regretfully, many people discover this the hard way. There are also mediums, which pride themselves on accomplishing huge things while in a hypnotized state to deceitfully emulate great things to perfection. Their force of imagination often goes so far, that they can really reveal things from the past or future of other human beings and can even imitate their voices to perfection. These mediums are also utilized by spiritual creatures of other dimensions for the sake of jokes or evil-minded purposes. There are very few genuine mediums and they usually remain unknown to the public.

Communication with the dead, mediums, & seances 25.71-98

Humans on Earth have exercised much spirituality, but it is very amateurish and without callable knowledge or successes. More than 95% of all spiritualistic meetings consist of deception, self-deception, and quackery. Wrong things are quite consciously pretended and presented with magic tricks, etc. In very many cases, there is self-deception by spiritualistic people that are in the wrong acceptance for creatures from other worlds or people that have died, to answer them. A medium of this kind is very susceptible to telepathic oscillations of the unconscious of other human beings and can experience things of the future or people that have passed on. They are very convincing to those not aware of what is happening and are astonished to be told things that they had long ago forgotten.

This form of pretended spirituality causes mediums to be badly self-delusional and all reality is lost. Such individuals are unfortunately widely known and cannot be constricted any time soon. Ignorant and illogical people should not be exercising spiritual abilities. These are very dangerous to the exercising person because they can be deceived or tricked by the dead. Someone that has died only has knowledge that they collected in the material world and can only relay what they knew when in the material world. Those who were influenced by religious dogma while alive on Earth, will always relay these beliefs and badly lead astray those still living. Many who have died, do not approve of being called upon and will badly deceive those who are calling them. Many make evil jokes and make prophesies about wrong things.

There are only four Earth humans exercise true spirituality and are able to call upon higher forms that have died and even creatures from other spheres. Because these people are often highly developed spiritually, they have set aside many heresies and have become wise. The higher forms and other beings are the only ones that provide truthful answers to all questions and never exercise fraud or jokes. Spirituality exercised of the low kind is not desired by the dead and offers no benefit to the living, only bad things. Humans should never attempt to call upon the dead. Much misery could be removed from the Earth, if this wicked and wrong-leading form of spirituality were omitted. Only the higher form of spirituality is of worth when calling upon higher spiritual spheres or higher creatures and there are only four individuals on Earth that are capable of doing this. There is no one in all of Europe able to do this and the Plejarens do not have the right to contact them.

5.6 Love and Hate

Love and wisdom 10.57-76

A human being that is filled with love is also rich in wisdom and a human that is rich in wisdom is also full of love. Human beings on Earth deceive themselves, for they do not know of love. They interpret possessive and greedy feelings for love while real love remains strange and inconceivable for them. Love comes to humans when they recognize truth, knowledge, and wisdom, even if they do not use the word, "Creation". Wisdom is love in its best form. Human beings always find that enlightenment, cognition, and knowledge are also wisdom and love. Where love is, so is wisdom. Love and wisdom belong together because the Creation, and its laws, is love and wisdom. Where there is wisdom and knowledge, there is also love and cognition.

Humans learn to recognize the Creation when they grow in love and wisdom. When they learn the truth, they reach liberty and peace with a peace that will never perish and be a force without end. Wisdom and love are the enlivening wings of the Creation. With wisdom and love, humanity is the master of all Creation. Wisdom and love increases their addiction for creational-natural laws because the spirit and Creation are one in the same. Earth humans talk of love, which they do not know. They believe that their movements are love and they deceive themselves by that.

Love cannot be clothed in words because it is a state, like being blissful, and is nothing material. Love is never-ending and nothing is able to change it into something else. The path to spiritual force runs through the understanding of truth, knowledge, wisdom, and love. The purpose of spiritual lessons is to spread truth, knowledge, wisdom, and love. If the lessons fail at this, then they are of no more help and they become an evil cult, which enslaves the spirit with heresies. They generate ignorance, as is the case with religions. When lessons exercise an enlargement of the spirit, then they are mighty instruments of creational order.

Meier asks Semjase what would happen if a human being of her race were to fall in love with a human of another under-developed race. Semjase laughs and says that the humans love one another with all of their feelings, just as she loves him. Meier is surprised by this and she tells him that she has fallen in love with him. He says that she is crazy. She could be seven times his grandmother. Semjase tells him to stop. She knows his attitude towards love very exactly and is aware of his deep feelings for her. She says that she knows that he loves her and he has no need to disguise his words about this. He should also not attempt to hide his happy feelings for her. She tells him that he should express his feelings freely. Their feelings about each other are pure, deep, and friendly and they should not be ashamed or worried about them. If this were the way for all Earth humans, they would already live in paradise.

Meier expresses his surprise at her knowledge about his feelings and Semjase says that she feels happiness about this within her. He says that she is aware of his opinion that there are many kinds of love. He believes there are only small differences in the love between friends and those who are married as well as the true love for fellow creatures in general. She agrees and says his explanation is admirable. But, she expresses concern that his words may be misunderstood and that he may be persecuted with hostility from his fellow humans. Meier says that she is probably correct about this, but he is very glad about her true love. Her friendship is immense and of great value to him.

Yet, Meier still wants to know what would happen regarding a marriage between a member of her race and a human of a lesser-developed race. Semjase says that if a human from her race were to fall in love with one of another worldly race that is spiritually below them and they want to join together, then this is possible according to their laws. If the necessary prerequisites of all sorts are fulfilled, the matrimony can become closed. It really does not matter whether the other worldly form of life lives below their own spiritual level because that life form becomes higher developed with the help of their scientists. However, this is a very rare occurrence.

Step by step, Earth humans developed material thinking with a greed for possessions and this became united into a feeling-thought complex in the brain. This caused feelings of love and hate, which are generated by thinking and appear as sensations from within. These are impregnated by material values, which manifest themselves in a thirst for possession in both forms. This is greed to possess for love and greed to possess for hate. Within both kinds, an ego-driven thirst for possession is developed.

This unavoidably leads to a third kind, which is the greediness for possessions of hate-love. In all cases, a demand for possessions is caused by material thinking. The generation of thinking for possessions is exclusively dependent upon the level of spiritual development, which is universal and not only experienced on Earth.

5.7 Reincarnation

When the spirit leaves the body, it either enlivens another body or it goes into one of numerous fine-material worlds, or spirit-form worlds. The spirit lives there until it returns again into a newly created guest body. Each spirit owns a dwelling (body) that is especially tuned for it, in order to live out its life in material form. Looking over a whole main period, the appearance of the face on the guest bodies are nearly always the same, which very slowly changes until a high spiritual level is obtained. At very low or very high spiritual positions, the faces of all guest bodies are similar to one another.

When a guest body dies, the spirit vanishes and normally goes over into a fine-material world. There, it also must live through certain periods, until it can claim a new guest body for itself. When a body is destroyed by force, under any circumstances, then the spirit can quickly search for another guest body to inhabit. It also often penetrates into bodies, which are already inhabited, in certain circumstances. In this situation, there is great confusion when two spirits occupy a single guest body. The standard process is for the spirit to walk into the fine-material world and learn while it remains there during this period.

You cannot avoid natural development 22.13

Every form of life should not try to fore-live personal matters and development of the future, as it has to go their natural way of development. It is not allowed to become influenced by knowledge of future events which could overlap stages of development without having experienced the necessary wisdom of each stage.

Reincarnated guilt 23.14-22

When a form of life consciously brings guilt upon itself, then it must give atonement as the law of justice declares. If the guilt is too much to adequately atone for it, then the guilty party is unworthy of life and losses the justification for existence. When the atonement is valid and the entity is reborn, the life is limited to fulfilling the rest of the formerly eliminated life. But, this is only valid for living forms of barbarous nature so that they can reach a level of higher spiritual development. Not only times change, but also the form of life changes. It reaches a level of higher spiritual development and the exercise of laws also change.

In an old language on Earth, the original term of "Relegeon" has been given a bad connotation with "Religion" and should be called the same as in the old language. Relegeon was the original term, but it was never intended to be considered as religious. These terms must now be taken together in order to lead humanity into the future. The past exercise of Relegeon referred to the path of evolution that must be walked. But, it has two meanings. Humanity on Earth only knows of one meaning, which is that evolution is a development and unfolding. It refers to something that already exists, but remains hidden, which should be developed and unfolded. This means that the spirit has to rise from the unconscious to the conscious.

The second meaning of this designation has been lost to humanity for a long time. It refers to something that does not yet exist and which will be explored, developed, and unfolded. Because this second meaning has been lost, mankind has lived according to a false understanding that everything involved with evolution already exists inside of human beings and that it only needs to be unfolded and developed. The spirit, living in human beings, stores everything that has been learned in the course of its existence in material bodies. People think this is a lot, but it is very little.

During numerous lifetimes, the spirit has to inquire, search, and find out more in order to collect further knowledge, cognition, and experiences, which then establish themselves as abilities within it. Because the spirit lives on past physical death of the body, it elaborates upon the results gained in the previous life while between lives. This is established firmly within itself and affects the unconscious. When the spirit enters a human form again, all of the gained knowledge and abilities are anchored in the unconscious and must be evolved slowly in the material form of life by new lessons and understandings until they become conscious abilities.

Reincarnation on other worlds 55.199-203

Regardless of how much an entity has developed, it can only incarnate on the planet which it has died or departed. Just as with humans on Earth, extraterrestrial beings can only incarnate on the planet or world that they have lived until their death. However, there have been rare occasions when an extraterrestrial creature will incarnate on Earth because they arrived on Earth and lived here until their death. Then, when they reincarnate, they return to the Earth. It never happens, that a creature will die on another world and incarnate on Earth. The spiritual and body-bound forms are bound to a planet. It is not even possible for a creature to die on a neighboring planet and incarnate on the Earth. This is according to the laws of seven periods and cosmic order.

Self-knowledge of previous incarnations not good 61.122-123

It is not good for Earth humans to be informed of the concerns relating to their former lives. If the knowledge about these matters is desired, then people can experience it from their own recollections.

5.8 Spirit

Soul and spirit are the same 8.167

The Soul and Spirit are simply two names for the same single factor of the spirit.

Spirit within humans 10.1-19

Human beings are carriers of their spirit, which never dies. In their deepest sleep, it never sleeps. It records all thoughts and movements. It tells humans when their thoughts are right or wrong, if they have learned to take notice of this. The spirit in every human being is a carrier of the creational domain. Human beings are not simply content to refer to the kingdom of heaven within them as being only Creation, truth, knowledge, wisdom, spirit, and existence. They long for the delight of imperishable life, enduring peace, and spiritual richness that is eternal. Heaven and Earth will disappear, but truth, knowledge, wisdom, and spirit will never change or perish.

The spirit's whole outlook is for perfection, harmony, peace, cognition, recognition, knowledge, wisdom, truth, beauty, love, and things that are real and last forever. All together, they form the spiritual kingdom in the Creation. They are all there in the existence as genius in all geniality, as melody of all melodies, as ability of all abilities, as marvel over all marvels, and as the highest creational principle. Human beings may create marvelous worlds in a dream just as just as Creation creates worlds consciously. This ability grows from out of the consciousness of human beings, which is in them in the existence, as all marvels exist there.

Humanity is the heavenly kingdom and the domain of the Creation. The old earthly philosophers spoke about the human being as a microcosm in a macrocosm because everything that exists in the universe also exists in the human being. The dimensions within the human being are endless. Humanity is a copy of the Creation and the spirit within them is dimension-less. Humans contain all dimensions within them and, at the same time, transcend all dimensions. The spirit is the wonder of all wonders, in which all force resides. Another wonder is the ability to exercise the spiritual force to perfection. Humans consider a wonder as being something for which all possibilities of a logical explanation are lacking for them.

When human beings are happy, their good fortune comes from inside. Their luck is a self-created state and is never a place or thing. Delight comes from inside human beings and is created from spiritual poise. Consequently, everything comes from within. The people and things that seemingly form the cause of good fortune are only the outer cause of it. Good fortune comes to humans when they have worked themselves up spiritually in order to have it. Luck is something that belongs to the inner being and it is an inseparable mark of the existence of the spirit. Infinite bliss and force are contained in this existence.

Human beings may be old on the outside, but this is only a passing state. Only the body can grow old and decrepit. The spirit remains forever young and is never subjected to the appearance of age. Age, like every other outer condition and experience of the world, will pass. What remains is the existence of the spirit along with truth, knowledge, wisdom, and reality. It is important to realize this because only this will free humanity. When humans conceive of the existence of the spirit, age can never afflict them any more. No sorrows, grief, problems, changes, or vicissitudes of life, the environment, or the world are able to make them mourn.

Wisdom is an original, huge force. Wisdom is light and wherever there is light, darkness and ignorance disappears. Ignorance is the essential darkness, which is overcome by the light of wisdom. Wisdom is an indication of the existence of the spirit with the qualities of luck, truth, knowledge, poise, beauty, harmony, and peace. Wisdom is also a mark of a human being, who has recognized the existence of the spirit and works with the spirit according to creational law. Wisdom is the use of spiritual force. Wisdom and spirit are two factors, which are one, like sunlight and the sun are two factors. The sunlight is caused by the warmth of the sun, which creates the light.

The lessons of the spirit are concerned with the spreading of cognition, truth, knowledge, wisdom and love. The spirit is eternal, never ending, and overcomes death. It embodies the poise of wisdom and love along with peace that exceeds all understanding. Every human believes to know what is meant by peace, based on personal experience. But to understand the wise peace of the infinite existence of the spirit, surpasses all human understanding. Because human beings are imprisoned in religious heresies and material concerns, they are unable to understand from an inner experience. Experience, forms the true key for real recognition and wisdom.

Wonders are hidden in the kingdom of the spirit. The visible universe, with which humans occupy themselves, is only a small part in the marvelous, unlimited, spiritual existence of the Creation. What is not visible to the eyes is unimaginable, inconceivable, and unthinkable for the spirited human intelligence. The universe that humanity realizes is only one of many spaces. There are universes within universes, universes opposite to universes, universes about universes, universes below universes, and universes outside of universes in the original, powerful, mighty, and all-creating spiritual intelligence of existence in the Creation. With this huge spirit and original force of Creation, the spiritual intelligence is connected to human beings because a part of this spiritual intelligence of Creation lives as the spirit in human beings and enlivens them.

The spirit's forces as well as its delight, peace, liberty, wisdom, knowledge, and abilities are unimaginable to those who are spiritually ignorant, stubborn, critical, religiously dependent, degenerate, and otherwise wrongly guided. Only those who know this truth and are able to create from it knowledge, wisdom, and love, are blessed human beings. They know the answer to every question of science, philosophy, and of every human being. To become such a blessed human being, it is necessary to search for the truth, find it, and generate from it, knowledge, wisdom, and love. Only then, is humanity able to grow in truth, knowledge, wisdom, and love spiritually. They become free from all human weaknesses.

Awareness of oneself, the spiritual consciousness 10.213-265

Spiritual humans are aware of the fact that they cannot move their hand in space without it touching the Creation because it is ever present in all times and spaces. Spiritual humans are completely filled with delight when they know the truth about the infinite, everlasting, and mighty Creation that surrounds them wherever they go. The Creation is full of endless peace, cognition, and improved perfection. It is a marvel of the highest spiritual consciousness existing everywhere - inside and outside. Its bliss is endless. Spiritual humans develop rapidly when they see the Creation in everything. As soon as they realize anything, they realize the Creation.

Wherever spiritual humans are, they always find the best place to collect understanding and experiences. Their spirit form is always inside of them and never any other place. They form their spirit by their own thinking and actions. With this realization, their attitude becomes a sanctuary where all matters become holy as well as the Earth below their feet. Spiritual humans do not look to future times, but experience the presence of the Creation in their living spirit. For them, time is always in the immediate presence. For them, it is not necessary to realize anything physically to recognize its truth. They begin to search within themselves and the truth becomes more and more real because their spirit, for them, is an all-realizing presence. No words are spoken nor heard by them.

For faster processing, spiritual humans listen to each tone and hear the tone of truth. Each tone penetrates into their spiritual consciousness and establishes itself there. Everything reminds them of the Creation and the immediate truth. Every circumstance for them is a creational circumstance and every possibility is a creational possibility. Spiritual Humans live, work, and walk forward inside themselves. Whatever is large is small for them in their innermost presence. Their recognition of the truth includes the unlimited in the limited. Every human being owns a place in the infinite, which very few people are able to recognize.

Reasonable logic and freedom from unreal lessons is demanded when calling awake the infinite. The ability to call awake the infinite and let it be effective is the goal of life and spiritual improvement. Those rich in spirit become an instrument for Creation to express the spiritual kingdom. This choice for Creation enables heaven to rise up. The rich ones in spirit are free from all limitations, restrictions, and material ego-consciousness. They have a steady touch with the Creation itself.

Humans have over-weighed the heaviness of matter. Earthly science will soon discover this principle of matter. The Creation is included with everything created, which unfolds and develops. Only the unlimited spirit and the Creation itself means true liberty, perfection, cognition, might, love, knowledge, truth, and wisdom. They are all absolutely apart of the Creation. In order to achieve anything exquisite in life, humans must hold themselves to the spiritual and be unlimited.

Everything that is confined and limited brings along with it that which is unreal and causes problems. Finite things of all sorts are unnatural in their innermost being. Humans cannot recognize finite things and truly love them without causing the heaviest of miseries for themselves. They are always afflicted by any mistakes, because everything finite brings problems and difficulties. When humans love or possess something confined, they also own a fault that is perishable, even though they may love and mourn it when its time has come and it fades away.

The confined, also contains faults. If it does not perish immediately, it is at least subject to change. When a human is filled with love one moment, it can be pushed or filled with hate the next moment. Whether it is an object that changes itself or dies away, or a human being who changes its view of their fellow creatures, the end result is always sorrow and grief. The unlimited never changes or suffers alteration because it has unlimited faith with stable values. When wisdom and truth dims inside of humans and their spiritual knowledge increases with universal love, then the cognition of truth ripens within them. They become conscious of the creational part within them in their spirit. Under spiritual love and wisdom, the Creation is present.

When a person strives for spiritual light and love, the door towards Creation opens itself. When humans love the truth, then they love what is perfect, wonderful, and what embodies the spiritual empire itself with wisdom. When humans become conscious of the creational presence, they let the spiritual intelligence flash from everything. They realize that the eyes of the Creation are directed at them. By the eyes that preserve all, they realize the true existence of the Creation. They are always conscious of being under the eyes of the Creation, the spiritual, and the unlimited force. Then, they can never be without force again. The truth has become very rare on Earth because of the heresies of religions. But, the spiritual evolution of humans on Earth proceeds irresistibly.

Unlimited memory is attained in pure spirit forms 34.202-205

The Plejaren brains are much more advanced than earthly human brains, but they are not unlimited either. Because of that, an apparatus is needed to transfer conversations stored in Semjase's brain for Meier to transcribe. No material creature has an unlimited force of memory. This only occurs in pure spiritual forms that have laid aside their material bodies.

Value of the spirit 39.P83-89

If earthly humans want to think correctly and according to the Creation, then they must neither think in the negative nor positive because both are degenerative and create bad consequences. As a result, they are both against the Creation. Proper thinking is a balanced and natural manner of thinking in which the way of life becomes procreated and maintained. This may be difficult for humans on Earth to understand, but they do not trouble themselves enough to be able to understand any knowledge completely.

Although humanity is burdened by their daily sorrows, this does not justify their neglect of the spirit. Life everywhere in the universe must work for their own existence, but they nevertheless dedicate themselves to worthy lessons of the spirit. Labor and sorrows are never an excuse for disobedience of the laws of nature. This effort is missing on Earth because the material world does not consider this to be important.

Animal spirit forms - evolve to assist nature 54.55-58

Animal spirits evolve spiritually, but their kind is limited into a certain order of pure evolution of nature. Unlike human spirits, which serve the improvement of the spirit, the spiritual evolution of animal spirits, are only for the development of nature within its settled order.

Values of colors 55.125-139

These are the values of colors, arranged by the level of consciousness. The values are also valid for the radiation of color of each creature so that each one can be positioned exactly according to the value of their level of consciousness. This is a further method for the definition of spheres of consciousness. However, the values of the colors also refer to non-calculable forms of life with an enlargement of recognition.

A spirit world 7.168-173

Regarding the spirit world, there are many things that earthly humans are not allowed to know until they have developed the necessary spiritual knowledge and wisdom. As a result, there are many things that the Plejarens are not allowed to reveal. But, they state that a world for spirits does not exist. There are only the fine-material worlds in this respect. These are worlds that exist in other dimensions with spiritual forms without bodies.

Voices heard on tape recordings 7.201-210

Regarding voices captured on audio tape recorders, there are many factors that play into one another. In most cases, amateur radio operators play jokes on people by using radio frequencies to record their voices. There are also many recordings that are caused by cosmic travelers. Also, the thoughts of human beings play an important roll, not only on recording devices, by also voices that can be directly heard. There are also times when a questioner will unconsciously imitate a pleasing voice by thoughts, which is transferred to a tape recorder with an answer that is desired. Each sender is also a receiver and they can receive the highest thought oscillations and provide them to a receiver. However, just as there are real mediums that exist, there are also real recorded voices that come from spiritual beings of different fine-material worlds. But, these are as rare as real mediums. Unfortunately, this field has much deceit and quackery by boastful individuals.

Ghost music - music compositions transmitted 7.224-232

Regarding music compositions that are transmitted to people from the other world, commonly referred to as "Ghost Music", this is an evil deceit. Spiritual beings do not transmit music to the living. The so-called power-development and magic does not exist in the manner that is normally accepted and advocated. Magic is based on spiritual positive and negative or good and evil powers.

Astral travel claims are deceit, lies or delusions 15.80-99

Numerous humans have affirmed to have experienced so-called "astral-travels" by their own release of power or the use of other powers. It is recommended to take such affirmations with extreme caution because only 2 or 3 out of 1,000 are found to be true. A very high percentage of such penetrations consist of intentional deceit and lies. A higher percentage consists of unconscious lies. Such lies are constructed on fantasy, self-deceit, etc., resulting from self-suggestions. Thus, all sense of reality is lost and the concerned person believes that they have had an astral travel experience and lies unconsciously. This also occurs with other fields, spiritual scientists and mediums.

Astral travels are possible in truth, but there are many factors that can cause false senses due to self-suggestions. People can picture other worlds, but in truth, they are only fantasies. Very often they experience other worlds and planets in the past or future, which in truth are also only fantasy formations. Very often, the process of a spiritual-intuitive view can also unconsciously be released to others and designated as astral travels.

Also, pictorial visions become exposed for astral travels and many further things over that. This is a process that is very well known, whereby a human projects their picture spiritually to any place and then they pretend to have done the astral travel. At the projected place, this image can indeed be seen, but not by astral form. It appears more like a transparent mirage that is recognizable. Such pictures can be attracted from the past or be projected into the present or future. This process is very easy when the process is known.

Aura forces in a cadaver can linger for centuries 42.58-62

There are certain fluid forces that remain in a dead body for some time. These forces vanish in a cremation or elimination. Otherwise, the forces can remain for hundreds of years or until the skeleton is destroyed. These forces can be of importance to the descendants and others still alive for posterity. The burial process should be preferred because this is the normal custom on Earth. Humans are not conscious of the destruction of forces in a cremation. But, the disposition of the body should be decided individually and carried out according to their wishes.

Chapter 6 EXTRATERRESTRIALS

Other life forms in other star systems 1.27-38

During Meier's very first contact with Semjase, she told him that other planets in this solar system have long since been devoid of life or are in the first stages of development. However, other solar systems have many kinds of life that are not only human. The animal and human forms of life are varied. Also, many animal forms and even plant forms of life have developed higher states of consciousness. So, there exists life forms that have acquired much knowledge and have freed themselves from their home worlds. They have traveled through the universe and have also come to Earth. Many of them are rather nasty contemporaries and live in a certain barbarism that exists on Earth. Mankind ought to be on its guard because these entities often attack and destroy anything that gets in their way. They have destroyed whole planets or beaten their inhabitants into barbarous bondage. One of the Pleiadian missions is to warn Earth humans of these creatures. Meier is told to let this be known to humanity because more and more time approaches when a conflict with these entities will become unavoidable.

The whole Universe has innumerable forms of life 35.P791-805

There are innumerable forms of space-traveling life in this universe, humanoid as well as non-human races. Like-minded races with similar intentions usually join in close alliances together. These alliances are of mutual benefit and are respectful of all evolutionary concerns. There is wonderful cooperation in all concerns of life, even with those which belong to other universes, such as the DAL universe. Alliances that exist among different species, are usually instituted to watch over locally inhabited regions of space. Regulating services are maintained by large space stations known as "Greatspacers". They are equipped with every conceivable technical means to repel enemies, if necessary.

However, this does not exclude conflicts. Many different kinds of creatures inhabit this universe, as well as many other universes. As a result, conflicts are unavoidable and become a way of life because, in some cases, there are those who seek to initiate conflicts. There are certain non-human forms who, according to their natural character, seek to exercise their power. The Pleiadians must always protect themselves from them. Here and there, this leads to warfare with destruction of materials and entities. But, wherever possible, this does not happen because every creature needs its evolution, which is fundamental in many ways.

Extraterrestrials statistics 39.240-244

There are very many extraterrestrial intelligences that are coming towards the Earth from all over the universe. But, only the fewest numbers of them try to attempt communications with Earth human beings or even come in close contact. Most of those are only interested in showing humanity new, better, and futuristic concepts. They are mainly intelligent races of distant descent from humanity's forefathers. Only in rare cases, are there other creatures. Most of these are of human form. Only 5.7% of all extraterrestrial visitors to Earth are in contact with Earth people.

7 other extraterrestrial races located on Earth 54.52-54

There are seven other extraterrestrial races on Earth in addition to the Pleiadians. They all own stations on Earth and communicate with each other as well as cooperate with one another. This does not include the Gizeh Intelligences.

6.1 Extraterrestrial History

Earth History 51.75-83

Earth is 646 billion years old from its gaseous state and then formed into a solid body 46 billion years ago. The Human species originated on Earth 6 billion years ago and the early Earth humans encountered space-traveling humans.

HISTORY OF THE ARYANS - home worlds were Lyra 70.19-91

The ancient home worlds of the Aryan race were planets within the Lyra Constellation near the Vega Constellation. A few of the planets there are still inhabited today by different races, which all belong to the Pleiadian Federation. Their early ancestors mastered space flight more than 22 million years ago and conducted expeditions far into the cosmos. They also explored the Earth for the first time. But at that time, the Earth was still in its early development and was considered for later development. However, the Earth was often visited and used as a penal colony to punish the elements that were evil on their home worlds. But, this only lasted a few millenniums when the inhabitants left the Earth by an unknown means. The Earth was then left alone for many millions of years. The Earth developed life of all kinds in natural order.

The ancient Aryan races developed themselves spiritually, spread out over the cosmos, and gained great power. But, this power was not controlled and was used for wicked and mischievous purposes on many worlds. Meanwhile, a catastrophe occurred when a "Destroyer" planet passed close to the ancient home worlds. It caused great damage and killed two thirds of mankind there. But, by persevering through lots of deprivation, they soon found a new beginning. They built a new civilization and culture in less than nine centuries. Through common work and research, they created a very high technology which enabled them to reach further than they had ever gone before. They also developed their spirit, whose forceS they were not able to master.

They constructed flight machines which could carry them even faster throughout space. They were saucer shaped and had beam drive which enabled them to travel to the widths of the universe. They explored and colonized planets in other solar systems, either by peaceful means or through murderous wars. With their evil powers, they often attained new possibilities for living with greater space, which was needed for their increasing number of human beings in their nations. Their scientists explored more and more worlds in their ships, which made them absolutely powerful masters. Their weapons were of great power and fighting efficiency. Their battles against whole nations of strange worlds were short and one-sided for these conquerors.

The scientists recognized the unlimited possibilities of spiritual forces and developed their forces with a collection of immense knowledge. They soon became absolute masters over their nations and were called IHWH (pronounced "Ish-wish"), meaning "God" or "King of Wisdom". The IHWHs subjected all forms of life below them under their rule and governed them by dictatorial force. For 864 years, in earthly time, the nations secretly revolted. The IHWHs tried to stifle it by violent means, but were not completely successful. For four long centuries, secret preparations progressed for breaking out with a sudden blow in a far reaching war for liberation. The war spread over many worlds of the Lyra and Vega Constellations. More than 60% of all culture was completely destroyed. Three worlds of the Lyra system were eliminated and dissolved into energy by a new process. In Earth chronology, the war for liberation in the Lyra and Vega systems was around 230,000 years ago.

The high commander of the terrorizing armies was an IHWH by the name of Asael. When he saw the hopelessness of his fight, he made a fast withdrawal to escape from the victorious and vengeful nations. With his fleet of 183 mother ships, 253 reconnaissance craft, and a crew of 360,000 people, they fled their home system and went astray in the cosmos for many restless years until they found a great star system that offered the necessary space. This new system was comprised of 254 young blue-white stars with a few inhabitable planets. This whole star system was called the Asael system after their leader. But, after occupying this system, different planets were made inhabitable within 300 years by the titan-sized deserters. A new race of beings was generated and they soon began exploring through space for new room to live in. 17 years later, they took possession of the star system of Hesperides with planets inhabited by human forms of life which were quickly conquered. Over a few centuries, a new culture was generated in the Hesperides worlds that were inhabited by the emigrants from the Asael system.

Seventy years later, Asael died and was succeeded by his daughter, Pleja, who was an IHWH. Their home system was then changed from Asael to the Pleja system. Under the command of their new leader, Pleja, the titan-sized human beings began expeditions to an outlying solar system. They did not know that millions of years ago, their great, great ancestors had flown to this remote system and placed their prisoners on the planet Earth. Upon their arrival to this solar system, they brought three planets under their power, Earth, Mars, and Malona. After a few years, the expedition fleet left these worlds again because they were still very desolate and life-threatening. But, a few of them remained behind and slowly grew savage as they mingled with the animal-like and uncultivated descendants of the Lyran outcast humans. This lasted for many ten-thousand years until the leader Pleja died.

New expeditions to Earth discovered that the inhabitants had developed new intelligence. They constructed a new culture on Earth and on the fourth planet, called Malona. But soon, the inhabitants, which were still very barbarous, fought for government again with the new colonizers. This led to an order for the colonists on Earth to be evacuated by force to their home worlds. However, Malona remained colonized because the people there remained peaceful. This lasted for forty years before a thirst for power rose between the two different nations. Before this could be settled by orders from the home systems, the Malonians destroyed one another and their whole planet. Scattering into thousands of small pieces by an immense explosion, the remnants of that beautiful planet now revolve around the Sun between Mars and Jupiter. Since then, expeditions have been sent out from the home worlds to constantly watch the developments on Earth.

For more than 80,000 years, there were repeated attempts to colonize the Earth. But, this always failed miserably. Several kinds of creatures have been deported to Earth, including violent prisoners, and were simply left to their own fate. Deprived of all technology, they degenerated, became savage, and mixed with earlier elements to become bestial. Then, in several hundred mother ships and smaller ships, the Earth was again approached and occupied. A great culture was erected, which remained for 6,000 years. But, the thirst for power increased again, which led to a horrible war that destroyed everything to the last piece. All forms of life soon grew savage. The Earth remained completely ignored for 4,000 years.

Then, war broke out in the home worlds of the Pleja Systems between the high-minded scientists and the people, who had been subjected to terrible weapons and other things. While the wicked destruction raged, a great group of otherwise-thinking scientists bound themselves together under the leadership of a scientist by the name of Pelegon. Pelegon was regarded as a king of wisdom and called IHWH or God. So, 50,000 years ago, these 70,000 human beings fled from the Pleja System in spacecraft that they had forcefully taken possession of and settled on Earth. Pelegon had 200 sub-leaders composed of scientists who were competent in each special field of knowledge.

HISTORY OF THE ARYANS - Recent Plejan history 70.92-100

On the home planets in the Pleja System, the wicked war was fought until the bitter end and the scientists capitulated. Their type of government was removed and placed in the hands of spiritual leaders who announced the long-forgotten spiritual lessons and educated the nations. The people recognized the value of the lessons and have lived accordingly since that time. They finally found peace and have lived ever since then under the law and order of absolute determination. These conditions are still preserved today and will never change. For the next 8,000 years, the Pleja nations developed themselves to a very high spiritual level and unanimously lived for evolution. They developed great alliances with every other nation possible within far-reaching systems.

They also performed new expeditions and in 1951, by Earth chronology, they discovered a world in the Andromeda Star System. It was inhabited by an extremely high developed form of life which existed semi-materially and semi-spiritually as well. It was agreed among this form of life in Andromeda, that they should guide and govern the Pleja nations and their alliances with their gigantic knowledge and wisdom. This plan was welcomed joyfully by all nations. It was decided by agreement of the spiritual leaders that all fates should be guided by their new best friends. The manner of guidance was determined to be through a council of the higher spiritual levels, called the "High Council". Since then, all nations of all races allied with them remain under the guidance of the "High Council", which never orders any commands, but only offers "High Advice". The observance of this is at the disposal of each single form of life, which is normally observed without exception.

HISTORY OF THE ARYANS - on Earth 70.101-171

The refugees to the Earth knew nothing about the end of the wars in the Pleja System. Delighted by their new found liberty, they gladly subjected themselves to the straight regime of Pelegon. For millenniums, they constructed large cities, inhabited all continents of Earth, and developed a very high culture. They lived in peace for 10,000 years. But then, a new IHWH by the name of Jesas arose, who murdered the follower of Pelegon and took command over all the united nations and races. 20 years later, the people rose up against Jesas and a horrible war was raged over the Earth. Everything was destroyed and only a few thousand humans were able to survive while others fled into the cosmos and settled on Beta Centaurus.

For 7,000 years, no more extraterrestrials landed on Earth and the inhabitants became completely wild and degenerated. Then, the descendants of those who had fled, returned to the Earth 33,000 Earth years ago. They were guided by another IHWH by the name of Atlant and built a huge city on the continent of Atlantis. His wife, an IHWH named Karyatide, built a smaller Atlantis. At the same time, her father Muras built the gigantic city of Mu on a different continent. For 18,000 years, they flourished and lived in total friendship and peace until some scientists were again overcome by the thirst for power and tried to seize the government. But, having become tired of the continuous wars, the nations rose against them. So, the scientists took possession of spacecraft and fled into the cosmos of space about 15,000 years ago.

For two millenniums, they and their descendants lived in the regions of Beta Centaurus. They became very evil and, only under the strongest command, could a certain amount of order be maintained. Through mutations and science, they were able to reach a very high life span of thousands of years. Possessed with a thirst for power, they returned to Earth about 13,000 years ago. Their leader was a scientist by the name of Arus, who was also known as “The Barbarian”. Just as with the IHWH Pelegon, 40,000 years earlier, Arus also had 200 sub-leaders who were each competent in a special field of science. They settled in the high North and in the region later to be known as Florida. From there, they continuously attacked Atlantis and Mu. After a few millenniums of their occupation of Earth, they succeeded in completely destroying Mu and Atlantis. A few survivors were kept in servitude while some of the greater scientists were able to flee and return to their original home world in the Pleja System.

For centuries, the invaders boasted supremacy on Earth as IHWH Arus led a severe and bloody regiment. His sub-leaders also assumed for themselves many things and made themselves more and more independent. They insured that their own race remained pure. But, they secretly captured the wild and mutated beings of Earth who were distant descendants of their former human beings. The wild and beautiful females were tamed and were copulated with by the leaders, who called themselves Heavenly Sons. They created new forms of life that were dwarfs, giants, and like animals. The highest leader of all sub-leaders was called Semjase. She ordered a beautiful female being that was the most human-like, named Eva, to be copulated with by a Heavenly Son. The descendant was a male that Semjase named Adam, which meant earthly human being. A similar breeding resulted in a female being that Semjase ordered to be mated with Adam. There were also many other similar beings that were created, that caused great riots in groups and tribes. From these, present humanity developed and divided into the different races on different continents.

IHWH Arus became very angry about this and wanted to kill or exile all of his sub-leaders that were responsible for this. But then he realized his new power and that he could reign over the newly created beings. So, he changed his mind. With new guard-angels and sub-leaders, he ruled over three human races. They were the inhabitants of India, the Black Sea area, and South of the Mediterranean Ocean. The later group, were gypsies that became known as the Hebrons or Hebrews. As the uppermost governor over them, IHWH Arus let himself be venerated and adored by them. In his megalomania, he let himself be worshipped as their creator and his sub-leaders as his creational assistants. He established hard and severe laws that always demanded the blood of any violator.

7,000 years ago, his third son, Jehovan, took over as IHWH and demanded only blood and death from the three enslaved human races. 3,400 years ago, Jehovan was maliciously murdered by his only son, Jehav, who then snatched up the government for himself. He ruled wickedly, always crying for blood and revenge. He was a megalomaniac like his father and let himself be called God, the creator. 3,320 years ago, Jehav had three sons named Arussem, Ptaah, and Salam. Arussem constantly sought to seize power from his father. So, he murdered his father and sought to snatch up the power. But this failed because his brothers opposed him and expelled him into exile with 72,000 of his followers. They were tired of the constant wars, struggles for power, and bloodshed. So, Ptaah and Salam worked for many decades to provide humane forms of living for the people.

But, Arussem secretly returned to the Earth with his army and took up residence in the old cubical buildings of Egypt. Deep below the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, they set up a center for their wicked aims for world control, but without remarkable success. Their way of reaching their goal was through lying, deceit, and intrigues by leading people astray with religious lectures of delusion, cults, and many other miserable machinations. But because they were expelled, they were cut off from technical and scientific advancement. As a result, these Gizeh Intelligences are slowly dying out and today, are only 2,100 in population. Arussem governed until 3,200 years ago when a mutineer by the name of Henn, who was called Jehova by the Hebrons, prepared a powerful forced departure.

Henn was also given the surname of "The Cruel One". But, 2,080 years ago, he grew old and weak and was displaced by his nephew, Kamagol I, who seized command of the evil Gizeh Intelligences. Like no tyrant before, he coerced all earthly religions under his control and demanded horrible human sacrifices and cults which still continue today. But his son, Kamagol II, overthrew him, seized his power, and let his father die miserably in a deep dungeon. Kamagol II was more evil-minded than his father and began immense mass murders of humanity. He reached an old age and recently died of natural causes. All of the Gizeh Intelligences will no longer exist by 2006.

Together with the Heaven's Sons, the Hyperboreans, and the emigrants from the Pleja System, the sons of the murdered Jehav, Ptaah and Salam, led their government by common agreement. They governed well, maintained peace, and rarely interfered in the concerns of the Earth human beings. Ptaah was stricken by an unknown disease in his 93rd year in office and died a few days later. His brother Salam, continued to govern alone until he weakened by old age and handed over his command to his son, Plejos, 2,040 years ago. Communications were established with the home worlds and their government was subordinated to the spiritual teachers and government of the Pleja System.

Plejos, like his father, was a very wise and merciful governor. So, when the home worlds subjected themselves to the guidance of the "High Council" 1,950 years ago, Plejos and his nation on Earth arranged themselves accordingly. Then, they decided to leave the Earth humans to develop naturally on their own. So, they left the Earth 1,943 years ago and returned to their original homeland in the Pleja System after Jmmanuel was born and educated for his mission as a prophet. Upon their return, they found that the Plejarans had developed very highly. They lived together, as they do today, united and as an allied population in peace and liberty.

Other giant ET races - colonized all continents 69.57-58

Cyclops, titans, dwarves - settled and left or died 69.59-60

Giant-sized races, Cyclops, Titans, and Dwarfs colonized all of the continents of Earth. But, they either left again or perished by unknown causes. The gods and semi-gods of Greek mythology were a splinter group of descendants of the Hyperboreans who also colonized the Earth. Hercules was about 3 meters tall. (See section 7.1.6)

6.2 Malevolent Aliens

Barbaric/dangerous extraterrestrials 2.38-51

Often, strange creatures have come to the Earth and have performed their expeditions. They collected different things, which could be of use to their investigations. And, it will always happen for such creatures to come here and perform their studies. They come from different worlds and systems. They are often still new in the field of space travel and so they perform their expeditions for the enlargement of their knowledge and perceptions. It has also happened, that undesired entities have taken earth human beings, never to be seen again.

They are not hungry for power, but come secretly in order to finally have calm and order on their own worlds. It may also happen, here and there, that they will take possession of some earth human beings, bring them into their spaceships, and examine them very thoroughly with their instruments in order to obtain a most detailed anatomy. But then they let these humans go, without exception, as they do not want to do evil with them. They often are more humane beings than earth humans.

Unfortunately, there are also quite barbarous creatures that travel through the cosmos and, here and there, come to the earth. Many among them are wicked and thirsty for power. It is possible that they will abduct earth human beings (as well as other planetary beings from other systems) and bring them to their home planet. There, these poor creatures then lead a life of exhibition and as objects for experimentation. Earth human beings, and all other inhabitants of other worlds, must be careful of these creatures, as they often use the strongest power available.

Other extraterrestrial intelligences 4.84-99

In space, there are dangers of many kinds and inhabitants of other worlds are not helpless to the attack from another race. There could be deadly defeats for the mankind of Earth, resulting in complete slavery and a return to primitive times. It could also happen, that the planet Earth will become completely destroyed, because the technical abilities of many humane and inhumane races in the cosmos have reached the last perfection. When Earth human beings want to carry out their barbarous thirst for power and greediness into the cosmos, then they must count on their complete destruction and no other races from other planets will hurry to assist them.

Humanity must also prepare themselves for a fight against evil intruders. This can only be accomplished with the complete union of all nations on Earth. The dangers from the universe are large, and they lunge at all angels in the galaxies. These are mainly inhumane, might-thirsty creatures, who own no feelings. Others know very well of the need to defend themselves and they have necessarily done so quite thoroughly. If a large war were to shake the universe, then the whole universe would be destroyed. There are already wars of whole solar systems, which could have the possibility for their own destruction. Although they care for peace, they could be destroyed by a force for power.

This is something that the Earth human beings should take into consideration when, in near future, they travel into cosmic space. Cosmic races will not let themselves fight senseless battles against forces in order to prevent servitude and exploitation as is normal for the nations of Earth. They will defend themselves with power that is far superior to all technical means on Earth. Where this is not the case, they often stay under the protection of further and higher-developed intelligences, whose technical abilities reach the last perfection. This is the only way to preserve peace and not bring death and destruction over the universe. This must be told to Earth's humanity because they are still very spiritually weak.

Pleiadians not allowed to interfere with others here 26.33-52

Although not all extraterrestrials have good intentions on Earth, the Pleiadians must respect the fact that every living form is justified in their existence here and is free to have their own judgments. They are not allowed to exercise any powerful influences if there is no threat to life. Otherwise, they can only offer advice. In addition to other extraterrestrial races, there are splinter groups of the early Pleiadian race who have remained on Earth as well as on other worlds. They continuously try to influence people to believe as they desire. They have even appeared as deities or messengers of a god to influence people here.

They seek to keep humanity dependent upon stoic beliefs of religious heresies and other things in order to beat them into submission for their own control. The more religious humanity is, or becomes, the better chance they have to accomplish their objectives of world domination. If they become successful, then mankind would fall once more into religious confusion and cause governments to begin new bloody religious conquests. Truths are kept hidden by religious delusion. In addition to using charlatans and deceivers, they also make contact with certain individuals and deceive them with hallucinations and projected illusions of appearances of many kinds.

Other ETs on Earth are of different evolution levels 31.A151-154

There are other extraterrestrials in earthly space that are of low levels in evolution and are only a few hundred or even 1,243 years in advance of Earth humans. They are able to meet and communicate with average human beings and come to an understanding with them. They often behave like governors and even influence people to be led astray by earthly religions. This causes much higher developed entities in the universe to interfere in order to prevent evil consequences. For, wherever religions are instituted, chaos, slavery, exploitation, and spiritual degeneration soon follow.

Many leaders of Earth are unconsciously led astray 31.A162-171

Every cosmic world has very few highly developed entities while the average form stands at a lower level of evolution, as on Earth. The highly developed beings of such worlds, the prophets, only appear at given times when it is necessary. On Earth, this has only occurred again now after nearly 2,000 years. But, there are other entities of low intelligence who are hungry for power and want to hold certain people above humanity for religious heresies in order to strip mankind of their spiritual abilities. There are many menaces and dangers behind contacts with these beings, which unfortunately, Earth humans are only able to recognize when evil wars and catastrophes have occurred. Many powerful leaders on Earth are wickedly influenced unconsciously by such entities to initiate the desired death, damage, ignorance, condemnation, hate, and destruction.

People are influenced religiously by evil ETs 31.A172-179

This has occurred in political, as well as religious fields in order to commit mass murder and cause catastrophes. The individuals that are influenced by these evil entities belong to any religion, which forms the essential nourishing ground for influences. Delusions of God, Jesus Christ, Satan, or some other figure are transmitted with orders for them to murder or commit some other hideous act. They present themselves as "sent by God", "keepers of peace", "guardians of the universe", "angels", "follower of Jesus Christ", and as "praise and heel announcers". But, when mankind releases themselves from these deathly religions, then the wicked extraterrestrial beings will loose their power. Truth, logic, and observance of Creational laws will govern humanity and the evil will no longer exist.

Some evil-minded ETs lost here, are not important 31.P375-376

There are bad-minded intelligent races that come from the universe to hunt the Earth or they loose their way here. There are not many of these and they are of little importance.

Pleiadians are reluctant to be seen by Earth humans 35.P810-886

Pleiadians are reluctant to be seen by Earth humans because there are other beings of extraterrestrial origin who make contact with Earth humans. This happened much more frequently millenniums ago because many people then knew about the existence of the "Heavenly Sons". They were in regular communications with people and even traded with them. But, due to the interference by evil-inclined elements of earthly and extraterrestrial origin, these contacts decreased and the knowledge of extraterrestrial intelligences were lost. Secretly, less beneficial races built stations on the Earth, as well as on neighboring planets, and fostered cults.

There were also less evil-minded intelligences that endeavored to assist in the proper evolution of humanity because they were descended from them. They could not appear publicly because knowledge of their existence had become lost to the Earth humans. A sudden re-appearance of them could be catastrophic. But still, prophets were chosen and prepared to work for this intention. When this solar system moved into the Age of Pisces, the way was cleared for an opportunity to enter Earth space without being noticed. At that time, humanity had degenerated so far that an official appearance by extraterrestrials would have been attacked. So, considering these factors, landings of spacecraft are done secretly and contacts with Earth humans are done quietly and alone.

When epochs change, so do the minds of planetary inhabitants, which is occurring now on Earth. The Age of Pisces was characterized by religious fanaticism. Then, the birth pains of the Age of Aquarius began and humanity started to listen inside of itself. They started to think, explore, and suddenly recognized the logic only of truth. In a short time, they developed their thinking abilities. This is one of the main reasons why certain human beings are being contacted by extraterrestrial forms of life again. The present Age of Aquarius demands thinking and spiritual evolution of the humans on Earth. This cannot be achieved by seeing and listening with only the physical organs, but only by reasoned thought. If extraterrestrials were to appear officially in their spacecraft, the ability for deliberation and thought would suffer. Humanity's interest would be short lived and they would no longer care. Their interest is only aroused by secrets for which they can hunt and find solutions.

Neither the Pleiadians, nor any other form of life can do without weapons. Every single race in the universe have weapons of some kind, as on Earth. There is not always peace in the universe because there are innumerable worlds that are inhabited by different creatures of human and non-human form. Many of them have not reached a level of balance and use their weapons for attacks on other creatures. They cannot be allowed to simply eradicate and slaughter life. So, it is necessary for every entity to defend itself. That is a law of Creation, which is expressed in nature quite adequately.

6.3 Races

The following sub-sections describe various extraterrestrial races which include: Acart, Agharta, DALs, Desmon, Dwarfs, Exes, Giants, Kartag, Lesa, Lyrians, Neber, Nesar, Taro, Time Travelers, and Zeta Reticulans.

(Back to Contents)

6.3.1 Acart (or Akart)

Akart - planet in the next inhabited star system 35.P997-1018

The nearest inhabited system to this solar system is around five light-years from Earth. It has different planets that are inhabited by human forms of life that differ only slightly from humans on Earth. They are some years in advance of Earth humans spiritually, as well as technologically. They have already achieved space flight in primitive form and often visit Earth. Because their cosmic flight capabilities are very limited, they must rely on space stations which they have constructed midway between their world and Earth. However, they experience severe body pain with their space travels, so they must narcotize themselves for longer journeys into the cosmos.

They come to Earth because their home world, which is no larger than Earth, suffers from overcrowding and requires huge quantities of food. For that reason, beings from the planet Akart come to Earth often to collect plants, vegetables, fruits, and grains to nourish their population of 23 billion. They are usually satisfied with taking seeds and plant stocks which they can grow on Akart. They also collect nourishment from other, less-populated worlds which they often visit. They are of rather peaceful character and have had to suffer much in previous centuries.

Today, they live under a dictatorship and have relatively better living conditions. Their great problem is overcrowding, which they could relieve by emigration, but their technology does not enable them to solve space transportation on a sufficient scale to be of any help. Other races rarely travel there. The reason that no one assists their overcrowded race is because they have not progressed far enough in their development to offer them greater technical or spiritual help. They are too caught up in material and worldly things and are not allowed access to greater power.

6.3.2 Agharta (underground city)

Agharta - subterranean, part of Mu, built by Lyrans 55.187

After the great continent of Atlantis was damaged by war and sank into the sea, the city of Mu became the Gobi desert in China and only remains now as the subterranean town of Agharta.

Agharta Alpha and Beta 57.114-128

Agharta is built in two parts, called Alpha and Beta. Agharta Alpha, which is located several hundred meters below the Gobi desert, is about a sixth the size of Zurich and Agharta Beta is about a quarter smaller. The satellite town of Agharta Beta is located below the Himalayas. In addition to the actual town, Agharta Beta comprises an immense area of cave systems which were previously inhabited, but not now. Agharta Beta was the government center which had governed both Aghartas.

Both towns were connected by a tunnel that measured 200 feet wide and 130 feet high. But, this tunnel was nearly completely destroyed by the great catastrophe of Gobi and was never repaired. Today, there still exists a small connecting tunnel which enables a small amount of traffic to pass. The regent of Agharta would never show himself to the world's public for there is neither any reason nor interest to do so. If he were to do so, it would cause too many dangers for the Aghartas and their inhabitants.

At the end of the universe 31.P164-165

Galtos - last star in the space they were in 31.P178-192

Through a tunnel into the DAL universe 31.286-293

Near one end of the universe, the space is nearly vacant of all stars. The last great star in that part of the universe is called Galtos. It is twice as large as the Earth and emits a very intensive light force. Around it, there are 11 blue planets, but only 5 are visible to the naked eye. There is no life in this solar system. At the end of our universe, there is a doorway to another universe known as the DAL Universe with a long tunnel that measures 77 kilometers wide and 1.3 million kilometers long. At the other end of the tunnel, innumerable stars can once again be seen. There are human beings in this universe that are very similar to Earth humans. Please refer to sections 6.4.4 and 6.4.8 for information about two females from Timor in the DAL Universe by the names of Asket and Nera.

DALs - don't differentiate between the sexes 31.N17-20

There is no difference in the worth between males and females in the DAL race, as there is on Earth. Both sexes are acknowledged as having the same value. Because of this, their spacecraft are commanded by males and females and both sexes alternatively fill the different posts onboard their ships.

Personal feelings not outwardly shown 31.N35-S313

The beings from the DAL Universe are plain human creatures with feelings that move them. But, they do not always show their feelings. They believe that it is not always good to reveal their feelings.

Humans lived like in our Middle Ages 34.P440-S378

960 light-years from our solar system, there is the Galaxy of ASAP. There, the planet Desmon, is inhabited by human beings that live a lifestyle that is equivalent to the Middle Ages on Earth. They live in "greater villages" like those in Earth's oriental regions. A second nomadic race also lives there in huts made from plants and bushes. There is a giant sun in their solar system which will die after some millenniums. They have a moon that is 4 times the size of Earth's moon, which will rush into the giant sun in about 3,200 years because the 3 cosmic bodies work slowly towards one another. The humans on Desmon should develop technologies by then which will enable them to escape the planet. But, if this does not happen, then help from outside will be brought in. This is an obligation to cosmic law. Extraterrestrial visitors to that world are not able to talk with those humans and must hide behind protective screens. They are only allowed to be seen where the concerns for normal evolution allow it.

December 7, 1976, a dwarf race visited the Earth 69.164-180

On December 7, 1976, Meier discovered traces of a spacecraft that had landed in a clearing in a forest. The craft left traces with a circumference of about 3.5 meters and there were small foot prints. These traces were from extraterrestrial visitors that were very small human beings. They measured only 110 centimeters in size. They live on a small planet from an unknown solar system. They came to Earth because of an involuntary shift in time due to a faulty manipulation of their insufficient space drive technology. Their craft was an expedition ship that was commanded by two scientists that took plants, ice, and water for analysis while a third one watched the environment from a floating device. They were assisted by the Pleiadians with a leap in time back to their home world.

Dwarf ET group - 4 ETs visited; 115 cm tall 75.3-17

Four small extraterrestrial human beings from a smaller neighboring planet to the Pleiadian's home world of Erra visited the Earth. They measure only 115 centimeters tall. They belong to a group that is connected to an alliance with the Pleiadians and are cooperating with them. They analyze traces of radiation and subterranean shifts in the Earth which are caused by different inner world factors. During their excursions, they must wear space drive suits because they do not breathe oxygen. They purified Meier's building, especially the cellar, from radiation and fluids that settled there. They remain invisible in order to prevent dangerous situations.

6.3.6 Exes System in Deron Galaxy

Galaxy of "Deron", the system of "Exes" 34.P616-621

480 quadrillion light-years from Earth, in the Galaxy "Deron", the system "Exes", has a star cluster that consists of only volcanic worlds which radiate their own light power. It is still rather dark on these worlds. The light only penetrates to the outside, but is not able to illuminate the world's surfaces.

6.3.7 Giants

Giants & titans once lived on Earth 7.143-151

The Pleiadian Forefathers were mixed races of different colors and sizes. The smallest were just 50 centimeters tall, while the largest and most-wicked ones, reached 12 meters high. Their appearance was also different with some of them only remotely resembling human forms. The ones that were too evil minded, eventually died out or killed one another. They often crept far away and outlived the others by thousands of years when the average life span was 15,000 years. But, they also eventually died or became victims of human beings. Today, there are only seven of these giants still alive on Earth. They keep themselves so well hidden, that they will never be found and will eventually die of natural causes. More frequently than these giants on Earth, are the Titans and Cyclopes. They have often served important and power-hungry kings. They were known as Goliaths and were used especially for war purposes.

Giants 52.24-38

There were tall, red-haired extraterrestrial beings in Peru, who the Chanka or Chanca Indians of Peru were descended from. Their average height was 7 feet tall. They retreated to a subterranean village 500 years ago, but they also live in huts above ground. Their lineage also traces to the Incas, who kidnapped white women.

Giants of Easter Island 69.10-30

The events of the past at Easter Island and the country of Tiahuanaco are connected. These two places are more than 5,000 kilometers apart, but have a direct connection between them. These areas were colonized by immigrating hoards of deserters from the Lyran System 13,000 years ago until only 2,548 years ago. They had a gigantic body structure that measured nearly 11 meters tall. They were led by a semi-ishwish by the name of Viracocoha. He was very old and greedy for government. With his position and cruel leadership, he conquered the high lands of Tiahuanaco and Easter Island.

After this victory, he settled with a small bodyguard of cherubim on a small island before Easter Island, which is known today as Motunui or similar. The cherubim were part animal and part human that appeared bird-like. Mot means bird in their ancient language, so the island was called Mot Isle or the island of bird humans. The inhabitants of Tiahuanaco and Easter Island were procreations of immigrated extraterrestrial entities of earlier epochs of time. The giant race educated the humans with great knowledge and taught them to operate their machines. They were even taught about stone masonry and the giants were celebrated as gods.

With the help of the giants and their machinery, the ancient inhabitants created the tall head formations from lava stones and erected them all over the island. They also created egg-shaped stones because the spacecraft of the giants had this form. Similar events happened in Pisco, Nazca, and Sacsayhuman because the giants had settled there as well. After several millennium, the giants were suddenly stricken by an epidemic, which took the lives of many of them. They suddenly departed the Earth in their spaceships and vanished into the cosmos without a trace.

Other races of the giant extraterrestrials colonized all continents on Earth as well as did the titans, Cyclops, and dwarf-sized entities. They settled and left again or perished. The Greek gods and semi-gods were a splinter group of descendants of the Hyperboreans. Hercules was about three meters tall, Noah was 3.1 meters, and Adam was less than four meters tall. The ancient king and semi-god Gilgamesh was 7.5 meters tall.

Petrified 90cm footprints of adolescent giants 69.131-134

In different places around the Earth, there are petrified foot prints of human beings that measure 90 centimeters in length. The giants that made those foot prints were between 6 to 6.5 meters tall. But, the ones who made the foot prints were not fully grown and were a bit smaller than an adult.

6.3.8 Kartag Planet of the Neb System in the Aratom Galaxy

Kartag similar in evolution to Earth humans 35.P656-672

Among many worlds that are similar to Earth with humans in nearly the same level of development, is the planet called Kartag in the solar system of Neb within the Aratom Galaxy. The humans there war against each other with the use of atomic weapons. They are under the control of a highly developed form of life that endeavors to prevent a catastrophe there. Kartagian life is at an important point in their evolution near the end of their atomic age. They still destroy one another with atomic bombs, but this will not last long because they will agree with the controlling entities. Even though they will become reasonable, they still had to endure their natural evolution and interference from outside is only possible in very few cases. Even if thousands of humans die, interference is only possible if a catastrophe of extra-planetary extension is recognized. This means that the inhabitants of a whole world can be completely destroyed if the greater system is not menaced. Each creature must take its own path of evolution, even if it includes self destruction.

Kartagians don't have airplanes but beamships 35.447-459

The Kartagians have flight machines that are unlike airplanes on Earth. They are more like beamships and they are used to drop their deadly weapons out of them. They also shoot rockets and guide them down onto their enemy. The rockets are similar to those used on Earth for launching satellites except that their technology and methods for propulsion are different. Their atomic missiles are very dangerous and stronger than those used on Earth.

Galaxy of Nepon, the system of Lesa 34.P450-467

700 sextillion light-years away from Earth is the galaxy of Nepon and the star system of Lesa with two sister planets of immense size and a giant moon of the sister worlds. The moon is nearly 520 times greater than the Earth. One of the two planets is inhabited by human life. It is similar in size to the Earth with an oxygen atmosphere. In many respects, it is similar to the planet Venus. It has quite primitive plant and animal life. In earlier times, it was more populated, but a cosmic event destroyed everything and reduced it to stone for millions of years. For some millenniums, conditions have changed and new life is developing on its own. It gives off different colors from its waste lands, water, and forest regions. It has desert-like landscapes that consist partly of massive rock, mountains, and very fried and brittle stones that slowly erode to sand again. Over the course of time, it will change into soil. The mountains are no taller than 2,000 meters and look similar to the mountains on Venus.

6.3.10 Neber Planet of the Kras System in the Beberas Galaxy

Hyper-leap to Neber in the Kras system of Beberas 35.484-527

In the Beberas Galaxy within the Kras solar system, lies the planet of Neber. In earlier times, many space-traveling races have desired to come to this planet because it contains extraordinarily large animals. Although many ancient worlds have various kinds of animals, this one has large and dangerous dinosaurs. On ancient worlds with such creatures, human beings do not yet exist in normal evolution. But, there are human beings there now that were displaced there from another world. These humans are not like normally developed species of humans because they have become wild and degenerate. Over the course of many millenniums, they have developed wild attitudes, as was once the case on Earth.

On Neber, there were two different human races that constructed research stations in different locations on the planet and explored the world for many years. As on Earth, they constructed pyramids with strong walls that protected them from the wild and hostile environment. But, a cosmic catastrophe damaged the home world of one of the races living on Neber and they were unable to return there. In addition, the other race suffered from a mysterious and deadly epidemic that also prevented them from returning to their home world. In time, their entire technology deteriorated and was lost in the wet, tropical climate. They could only watch the decay of their technology and hope for a rescue, which did not occur in time. Their descendants became primitive and adapted themselves to the wild and barbarous world.

ETs brought Christianity to NESAR, then hostilities 34.P391-437

A group of extraterrestrials from a planet in the NESAR system lived on Earth 1,067 years ago. They mixed with Earth humans and lived on Earth for about 50 years, studying the Christian religion. They took those teachings to their home planet and many "temples to God" were built on NESAR planets. Within only five years, hostilities broke out between families over these religious ideas. The violence increased and spread to other planets causing war which lasted seven years and destroyed many stars and planets. It even created a black hole in the NESAR galaxy. Prior to this, this region of space had lived in peace for 17,000 years. Other extraterrestrials finally intervened to stop the wars and they forbid the NESAR people from ever returning to Earth.

6.3.12 Taro System in Mara Galaxy

Galaxy of Mara, the system of Taro 34.P612-615

30 trillion light-years from Earth, there is an enclave of stars in the Mara Galaxy of the Taro system. Most worlds there appear blue in color and are actively volcanic. Millions of years from now, the first signs of life will develop there.

6.3.13 Time travelers

Time travelers - occasionally appear from the past 8.120-129

It always happens that time-travelers appear from the past and often bring with them great problems. They are often unable to find their home worlds or they find them completely destroyed. Here and there, strange looking creatures appear and have come to the Earth in the past and will come again in the future. Some time-travelers have crashed on Earth in earlier ages and were never able to leave. As time passed, many of these beings eventually died, became degenerated, or mixed in with Earth humans. Many time-travelers never find their home worlds again and just settle wherever they can. They also loose their way in the vastness of space and die. They are able to travel for millenniums or even millions of years while, for them, they experience only a few minutes or years of time.

Future Earth world - sometimes come into our time 39.317

The inhabitants of Earth's future sometimes penetrate into the current epoch of time on Earth.

6.3.14 Zeta Reticuli

Zeta Reticuli Intelligences 37.8-18

The Zeta Reticuli are a peaceful extraterrestrial race that have come to the Earth from a planet in the Zeta Reticuli star system, 37 light-years from Earth. They are humanoid in appearance with a small body size of between 126 and 163 centimeters tall. Their spacecraft is similar to the Pleiadian ships and are extremely well equipped for space travel. The atmosphere of their home world is similar to Earth's atmosphere and the entities are able to breeth here without much difficulty. They wear close-fitting, filter-dress suits, which offer protection for them in some ways.

Reticuli Intelligences 37.36-58

The Pleiadians first discovered their presence here when they abducted two Earth humans for the sake of study on September 19, 1961. A married couple by the names of Betty and Barney Hill were taken at night while driving in the mountains of New Hampshire, USA. (See section 6.5.1) The Pleiadians examined this event and have determined that Earth humans have nothing to fear from the Zeta Reticuli entities here because they only perform explorations.

6.4 Entities

This section provides information about certain extraterrestrial entities including: Arahat Athersata, Asket, Ashtar Sheran, Kamagol I & II, Nera, and Petale.

Meier's contact with Arahat Athersata 20.1-24

The Pleiadian High Council considered Meier to be spiritually mature enough to have contact with a pure spiritual being. So, on May 16, 1975, only a few hours after his 19th contact with Semjase, Meier came into contact with a very high form of spirit, which had previously prepared Meier for his incarnation on Earth. This is an extreme exception that has not occurred in 2,000 years. This represents an extreme concentration and ability for perception to enable him to fulfill his mission. Meier is told that the contacts would be very time-consuming and very difficult for him and his family. But, he is also told that they will be very worthwhile. This will enable him to help humanity to know the truth.

Arahat Athersata - He is of pure spiritual form 34.252-264

For 4 months, Meier has been hearing a telepathic voice that has been dictating long messages for him to write down. This has taken much of Meier's time and energy. Meier asked Semjase for more information about this and was told that the voice was from a pure spiritual form that she was not even able to communicate with. Only high councilors can do this, who are other-worldly life forms of half spiritual forms that still exist in material bodies. The name of this spirit form is Arahat Athersata.

Arahat Athersata 36.12-15

It has been five months since the Initial contact with Arahat Athersata and Meier expresses concern that this is becoming too much for him. Semjase tells him that the contacts will not last much longer. Only the values of the Ten Commandments and a few other important factors have yet to be explained. Meier is assured that it will not be difficult for him to write them down and elaborate on the messages from Arahat Athersata. Care is being taken to insure that he is not being over burdened. Because of this, Arahat Athersata will only transmit a small quantity of further messages.

Arahat Athersata and Petale 39.17-18

Seven month since his initial contacts with Arahat Athersata, Meier remarks that he has not had contact recently and is told that he is being allowed to recover his strength. Meier laughs at this and says that he can bear a lot. Semjase says that she does not doubt that, but that he should not exhaust his last reserves as he has done in the past.

6.4.2 Asket

Asket known by Semjase (Also see section 1) 30.15

Meier questions Semjase on how she knows Asket 31.82-90

Semjase told Meier that Asket (pronounced Ahs-ket) was well known to her. Meier asks what she knew of Asket, her race, and her connection with him. Semjase says that Asket has explained everything to her about her contacts with him and their time-travels together where Meier became healed from religious heresies. He tells Semjase that this frightens him because Asket had strictly forbidden him to discuss this until she said that it was permitted. Semjase tells him that he now has permission to talk about Asket, but must remain silent about what was learned regarding time-travel. She also says that he is now allowed to disclose the reports that he wrote in 1964 about his contacts with Asket. Meier says that he has kept them well hidden and has only waited for permission to reveal them.

Pleiadians obtained higher technology for hyperspace 31.91-98

After Asket's contacts with Meier in 1964 in India (see section 1), she began communications with the Pleiadian High Council and quickly succeeded in establishing relations with them and her race in the DAL Universe. With their assistance, the Pleiadians obtained great knowledge of the highest technical capabilities and learned how to construct huge mother ships known as Greatspacers, which they have had since 1971. They are exactly 17,182 meters in diameter. This knowledge had been known to Asket's people because they have had these ships for more than 700 years. Asket's race is technically more advanced than the Pleiadians by 350 years. Once a race has reached a certain level of development in all fields, then this small difference no longer plays a decisive role. So, the Pleiadians were assisted with very important concepts and acquisitions.

Meier goes to meet Asket, she notes his missing arm 31.A1-18

Semjase has taken Meier to meet Asket once again onboard a ship in the DAL Universe. They enter a nice room with comfortable chairs and a desk where Asket stands and smiles. Meier is overjoyed to see her again as she walks over to him and hugs him. Asket welcomes him with love, joy, and honor to greet him there. She kisses him and reads his thoughts of amazement. Meier comments on how beautiful she is and how she has not changed in ten years. He expresses his delight in being able to see and talk with her again since he thought he would never see her again.

Asket notices that Meier's arm is gone. He tells her that he has accommodated himself to it and can no longer imagine life with two arms. She offers to provide him with a half-organic substitute arm. Meier thanks her, but says that he has learned much from life without the arm and such a device would cause many problems on Earth. Asket understands, but says that she was just being moved out of sympathy for him. When Semjase says that Meier actually thinks and acts more precisely than they, he tells her to stop throwing flowers at him. Asket says that he has not changed and is still very modest.

Asket will not come to Earth again for a long time 31.A33-53

Asket agrees to have her picture taken by Meier. But, Semjase cannot be photographed because her security on Earth would be jeopardized. Asket expresses concern that the photograph of her would be blurred because of harmless energy rays there that often distort the picture and alter its colors. She says that they will endeavor to construct an apparatus that may provide better pictures later. Meier is given the opportunity to take a group picture of Asket, Nera, and Semjase under the condition that he does not reveal it to anyone else. At a later time, He will be permitted to take pictures of Semjase when she can no longer be menaced on Earth. This is no problem for Asket and Nera because they will not return to Earth. But, throughout the universe, there may be others that will have a striking resemblance to them.

Asket - earlobes, anatomical difference only 54.12-22

Meier noticed that Asket's ears had much longer lobes and that they were further forward grown tight. He was told that this was simply due to anatomical differences. When he asked if it indicated a higher intelligence, he was told that was ridiculous because, if this were true, then animals like the ass, horses and elephants would have more intelligence.

6.4.3 Ashtar Sheran or Aruseak

Thule Society - secret society in Germany 34.67-102

The Pleiadians attempted to locate the entity, Ashtar Sheran, but were unsuccessful in finding him. They searched through numerous systems in this time as well as numerous dimensions, but could not find his point of origin. Everything is very secretive, but all indications lead back to Earth and especially to Germany. All trails concentrate at a center of a very powerful secret organization known as the Thule Society. The indicators reveal great knowledge and many powers. They are in possession of telepathic forces and knowledge about extraterrestrial technology and extraterrestrial intelligences, etc. They use their telepathic abilities to influence many people on Earth. Their aim is the preservation and multiplication of the white race on Earth for posterity of the Aryan race.

They screen their efforts with spiritual forces, which are very difficult to break through. Telepathic impulses are sent out and received by different human groups and are written down. Their transmissions contain explanations that are astonishingly close to the truth. They reveal much knowledge about worthy and good facts that are rather unknown on Earth. But, these truths are intermixed with very strange and untrue facts that appear like an evil foreign body. The whole consequence has no meaning, as very many truths are outnumbered by unusually large falsities. There is no fault with those writing the information down as they are very loving of the truth. But, the truth is being destroyed by untruths and is causing it to be questioned.

Ashtar Sheran / Aruseak 36.34-40

With great difficulty, the Pleiadians were able to determine that Ashtar Sheran really exists. He deceptively hides himself in this name when his real name is Aruseak. He is a cousin of the highest in command of the Gizeh Intelligence group and the German Thule Society. He has introduced two strong telenotical elements to influence many Thule Society members and different groups such as those who have received messages from Ashtar Sheran. This type of telenotical influence is a form of hypnosis that transmits high frequency oscillations as inaudible signals into human ears.

Ashtar Sheran / Aruseak 36.105-107

The appearances at Fatima trace back to the Gizeh Intelligences along with many other similar events. They were carried out either by Ashtar Sheran himself or by his order. This became known to the Pleiadians only recently when they investigated him.

Ashtar and Kamagol 38.Q15-17

Aruseak, alias Ashtar Sheran, is the commander of a several thousand entity group of intelligences who, until 15 years ago, stood below the direct command of a being known as Kamagol, who seeks a one world government under him. Aruseak and Kamagol are cousins by blood relation. (Also see section 6.4.4)

Ashtar forms a splinter group 38.Q38-59

Kamagol II has now chose one of his cousins for command of a many thousand headed group to have performed a certain mission. This mission consisted of leading different groups of humans with Aryan descent telenotically in a certain direction, especially in Germany, America, Argentina, and Brazil, to unconsciously assist the plans of Kamagol. Initially, Ashtar unconditionally observed these orders and Kamagol achieved greater power. But, in the course of time, Ashtar realized many things and changed his mind. He influenced his first line of commanders, which he needed. Step by step, he obtained their confidence and they acknowledged him as their actual leader. He gradually recognized the truth and shared his knowledge with his commanders. They separated from the command of Kamagol and formed a new splinter group.

Since then, Ashtar has been transmitting his messages to different people on Earth. But, because he is still not fully conscious of the truth, contradictions arise, which must be taken into account. However, his messages contain very true meaning and give enjoyment. For security reasons, he gives unclear information that is not entirely true, which is excusable. Although the information he gives for his location is false, this does not diminish his love for the truth. He is simply avoiding conflicts with Kamagol. They are evidently using advanced knowledge to prevent detection because the Pleiadians are unable to locate him. But, such things happen often when groups separate themselves from tyranny and search for the truth. So, Ashtar may stay with his people in a distant star system or even in another dimension where they are safe from Kamagol's reach. Nevertheless, they are still able to influence others because their spiritual and technical abilities can overcome all distances and time.

Ashtar Sheran 44.83-92

The activities of Ashtar Sheran have finally come to an end and he is not in this region of space. Ashtar had influenced a journalist with real visions when he was still in doubt and has written pure fantasy. Unfortunately, Ashtar omitted different things, such as his refusal of any connection with the Gizeh Intelligences. The journalist mixed his vague recollections with pure fantasy and spread it as the truth. A small part of the Pleiadian mission has been the clearing up of these things.

(Back to Contents)

6.4.4 Kamagol I & II

Kamagol I & II, Ashtar, Arussem and Jehova 38.Q17-37

Kamagol is the commander and leader of a many thousand headed splinter group of descendants from human beings that separated from the forces in ancient times that had maintained control over the Earth and whose leader was an IHWH. Unfortunately, it is human nature for those who are governed to fight for power. One of the most hungry for power at that time, was Arussem. Together with a group of many thousand humans, Arussem separated from a peaceful group known as Heaven's Sons, and endeavored to take control over the Earth and all of its creatures.

His method for reaching his goal was that of lying, deceit, and misleading humans toward cult heresies with religious lessons that he wanted humanity to know. Through messengers and fallen angels, he introduced these lessons and found many followers. Mainly, they were the gypsies of the Nile, around the Mediterranean, and the Red Seas, who became fanatical followers and spread the lessons to others. But, the Hebrews later freed themselves from his command when Arussem was forced to relinquish his government to his follower, Jehova.

The Hebrews grew in number, became mighty, and presented themselves as the elected people. They assumed the right to be suited for the world's government, despite only being a gathering of gypsies of many colors and races. They believed themselves to be pre-selected to bring the Earth under their control and servitude. The Hebrews selected Kamagol I to lead them as the chosen ones. He was the follower and successor of Jehova and took for himself the title of IHWH. As no governor before, Kamagol I coerced all Earth religions to become bloody sacrificial cults, which continues today. Despite their good intentions, the Heavenly Sons could not stop the evil machinations. Possessing many technical and spiritual means, Kamagol's followers were able to bring all of Earth's humanity under their control and keep them in cultic religious confusion.

After Kamagol I had constructed a center and command station for himself under the great pyramid of Gizeh, he was displaced by his own son, Kamagol II and deprived of power. In many ways, he was worse than his father because he caused the mass murdering of people and many bloody events by the cultic religions. Kamagol II, and his followers, became known in initiated circles as the Gizeh Intelligences because they maintain their central control and guide all events from under the Great Pyramid of Gizeh. Many attempts have been made to put an end to this center and the activities of these wicked beings, but this has always failed because they are very well secured. Effective changes can only be achieved by an evil power with access there.

Nera - female, Asket's deputy (Second Coordinator) 31.A19-21

When Meier visited Asket onboard a ship in the DAL Universe, a female human entity entered the room and Asket introduced her as Nera (pronounced Neh-ra), her deputy. Meier shook her hand and noticed a very pleasant hand pressure. He felt stupid after saying that he was glad to meet her. Nera sensed his feelings and said that he should not think of himself as stupid. She says that she is delighted to welcome him there. When Meier asks if she intruded upon his thoughts, she says that his thoughts are extremely strong and are easily noticed. Nera says that she is the second coordinator for locating points in space. Asket is the first coordinator.

Nera - on Earth at various times long ago 31.N6-16

When Meier thinks of Nera as being a very nice and lovely girl, she laughs and asks him if that is so. He realizes that she has read his thoughts and admits to it being true. She says that he responds to his feeling and that his feelings are very sincere. Several years ago, she had been on Earth frequently and had never noticed this from other Earth humans. She says that they will not return to the Earth again in his lifetime. She notices that Meier has overcome any horrors in regards to his eventual death. She and Asket will return to Earth a very long time after his death in connection with the evolution of Earth humans.

Nera to Meier - Perhaps we will meet another time. 31.N30-39

Meier is told that the reason why a time-missile was returned to Asket by Semjase in person was so that he could meet with Asket, he is amazed that they would go to the trouble of bringing him to another universe for him. Asket says that she wanted to see him again. Meier becomes overjoyed and is told by Asket that they are only plain human beings with feelings that move inside of them. Meier comments that it is unfortunate that they do not always show their feelings.

Petale - defined 36.1-11

On October 14, 1975, Meier received telepathic communications with a highly developed life form that has told him some very interesting things. It is a purely spiritual entity of sexless form that is called Petale, which means, "Wheel of time". This form, in its entirety, is a unit of many spiritual creatures. When it refers to itself as "Me", it is actually speaking as a combined "We". This being is near perfection and is positioned several levels above Arahat Athersata. At that level, Petale was informed about Meier. The message given to him from that high level serves to explain important facts. The information given from such an elevated and sublime level consists of the latest wisdom which serves Earth's humanity.

Petale 43.75-80

Meier is informed that the lost reports of Meier's contact with Emmanuel will not be re-transmitted. This is because they are being overshadowed by the spiritual lessons being transmitted to him from the Petale sphere. The lost reports contained lessons given to him by Emmanuel which he should interpret and explain in his Genesis book. The original reports are not important because the lessons there were only partially stated. The lessons given to him by Petale will have the complete lessons in their full worth.

6.5 Interactions

Other extraterrestrials visit Earth 2.26-28

There are extraterrestrial races that only communicate telepathically. Their means of communication has either been telepathic since their early origins or they have dropped their spoken language. As far as the Pleiadians know, Earth has not been visited by beings whose means of communication is purely telepathic.

Extraterrestrials have influenced technology 8.153-157

Many good writers of fiction on Earth come very close to concepts of reality and truth because what they is often inspired. Their books then prepare humanity for the future. In this same way, scientists become aware of certain fields and possibilities that enable then to research and obtain success. It is now time for this to become known. Many people have received insightful help, even if they only assume these relations. The major advances in science and technology in the previous 100 years have been made possible because of the contributions from the Pleiadians and many other entities, which is in accordance with the Age of Aquarius.

Authorities & military feel threatened by UFOs 13.40-50

The authorities and military feel threatened whenever they are informed about sightings or landings of spacecraft. However, the Pleiadians are not interested in menacing their primitive forces since their mission is concerned with only the Earth human beings. Although the authorities and military deny any interest in extraterrestrial craft, they are very interested and perform extensive research and examinations. The military's investigations are so secret that they hide what they are doing and lie about their purposes. They will contest every observation, photograph, and evidence and could become dangerous to Meier.

Military personnel investigated landing sites 17.9-11

On April 21, 1975, Meier had noticed the Swiss military in his area and assumed that they were covertly investigating for traces of Semjase's beamship. This was confirmed by Semjase, who stated that his fears and assumptions in this regard were correct.

No ETs cooperating with Earth governments 31.P340-350

When Meier asked Ptaah if there were governments on Earth that have extraterrestrials working for them or employed by them, he is told that such stories are fairy tales. If such reports were true, then governments would have told mankind the truth and they would have been communing in tranquility for a long time. Because extraterrestrials have no authority to interfere by force in terrestrial concerns, they are limited to finding humans that are willing to transmit their knowledge to others. If they were permitted to interfere with governments, then they would reveal themselves publicly and would not need to worry about governments, militaries, or others harming them. Meier says there are reports of extraterrestrials secretly cooperating with government institutions and is told that this does not happen. If this were the case, then no authority, government, or military force would continue to search for their ships because they would have the ability to stifle their attempts. These reports are lies that can be traced back to religious efforts, sectarian elements, or unscrupulous fantasies.

No dead alien bodies (120 centimeters tall) 57.68-71

When Meier asked Semjase if the American Pentagon was in possession of 10 to 16 small dead extraterrestrial bodies of approximately 120 centimeters tall and stored in glass coffins, she said that this was unknown to the Pleiadians. If this were true, then they would have to know about it. She said that such a report is likely untrue. This would mean that there was a crash of a beamship of unknown origin and the Pleiadians have no knowledge of this occurring.

Interference only permitted if catastrophe 35.P669-730

Interference from outside of a world is only possible in very few cases. Even if thousands of humans die, interference is only possible if a catastrophe of extra-planetary extension is recognized. This means that the inhabitants of a whole world can be completely destroyed if the greater system is not menaced. Each creature must take its own path of evolution, even if it includes self destruction. What degenerates negatively is then destroyed so that it cannot menace other better forms of life. Only by observance of this can life proceed. Earth humans must also learn this, sooner than they expect.

Peaceful ET race to officially visit Earth 35.P1067-1083

Nearly all Pleiadians will retire from the Earth if an unknown human race starts to visit the Earth from the cosmos. The Pleiadians have determined that this will probably occur before 2000 if unanticipated factors before then do not put this enterprise in question. If these negative factors do not develop, humanity on Earth will first officially meet human beings from other worlds around 2000. The first public appearance of these strange visitors will cause horror and panic because of false information concerning extraterrestrials and unreasonable people. But, there will be no danger from these human-like forms because they will be peaceful and harmless. Their culture and spiritual state will be superior to Earth humans.

They will first announce themselves by radio and television in order to prepare people for their arrival and then they will land in one of their egg-shaped ships. It will be manned by 8 to 12 entities. They will land in America because they have the best communications technology. The people of that country are more resilient in connection with clearing up information about extraterrestrials and they may be more prepared to overcome a large panic at the first official meetings. If the landing occurs successfully, it will be of revolutionary importance. This is not forecast from a view into the future, but from probability calculations. These extraterrestrials will be connected to the development of humans on Earth.

Many observations of UFOs are deceptions 31.P377-382

Most observations of UFOs and abductions are of earthly origin. When Earth humans see a UFO, many people assume these objects to be of extraterrestrial origin. This belief is often used by them when they make themselves known to others as having seen an extraterrestrial craft. Conscious of religious power, observers will pretend that the UFOs are here for angels or that they are sent by God and are rescuers of mankind. These observers often designate themselves to be their contact persons on mysterious missions for the benefit of mankind. But in truth, they seek profit and advantage for the state in espionage. These deceiving elements state that the earthly UFOs are from Venus, Mars, Saturn, and Uranus. They also state that the neighboring systems of this solar system have to be in for it.

Meier & group spot a 700 meter spherical ship 33.1-7

Meier and his group observed a very large orange-red-colored object Southwest over Hinwil on 9/10/75 at 8:45 PM. As seen from Meier's house, the spherical object appeared to be about 1.3 meters in diameter although it had to actually be at least 600 meters in diameter and no further than 20 kilometers away. After a few minutes, it disappeared in a black artificial-appearing cloud. The object was observed again at 9:15 PM in the Southeast. The light from the object was quite bright and the sky was colored in peculiar violet, red, and blue colors. It jumped around like a jack-o-lantern and then suddenly sank very low where it hovered near Bachtelberg. Next, it shot like a projectile towards the East near its starting point and started pulsing in very intense light. The peculiar color of the sky vanished and the object began jumping around again like crazy. The next night, he saw the object again at 9 PM in the Southwest from his home hanging in the air near Rigi Mountain. Meier asked Semjase about this and was told that this object was the same one that he had seen on April 20th. It was a small spacer that belonged to a rather unkind intelligence that endeavors to disrupt the Pleiadian mission on Earth.

Numerous UFOs over Hinwil, Switzerland on May 8, 1976 52.

There were numerous beamships sighted over Hinwil, Switzerland on May 8, 1976. The Pleiadians checked for remnant ground radiation from their landings because of a Swiss army unit that searched the area.

Strange UFOs sighted in Robenhausen & Fehraltorf 55.78-88

On Sunday night, June 13, 1976, Meier and his group witnessed different sightings of lights in the region of Robenhausen and at the private airport of Fehraltorf. They were at Bachtelberg patiently waiting for observations of a beamship. The lights appeared to be from many beamships. When Meier asked Semjase if they were Pleiadian craft, he was told that none of there craft had been there. After investigating, it was determined to be a ship of unknown origin. The ship had a combustion propulsion system of electrical energy. It apparently experienced difficulties that needed to be repaired. Traces of radiation and burnt plant life, indicated that there were four futile attempts to depart, but the fifth attempt was successful. This explained the intense light that Meier had seen.

The Pleiadians also discovered traces in the grass of the airfield where four other ships of the same type had landed. No traces of combustion were found, but the remains of electrical radiated energies were discovered. The ships appeared to have a diameter of less than four meters. Their landing gear must have slipped out of control because there was no trace of them. These craft were surely surrounded with protective screens. They are no longer in the earthly area, but this does not mean that they will not return.

Gizeh Intelligences - triangular delta-shaped craft 69.138-143

In November of 1976, a delta-shaped craft hovered directly over Meier's house for about 20 minutes. It had gaudy beams of light in the front and the rear had a colorless beam of light. People inside the house became dizzy and had to run away. The delta shaped craft could only have been with the Gizeh Intelligences. They took advantage of the Pleiadian's absence to become active again. They still have enough remaining forces to cause great intrigues to be plotted. So, Meier is cautioned to be very careful and keep his personal protection with him at all times.

6.5.2 Contactees

Charlatans & frauds - false contactees 1.1-11

There have also been many boastful people who pretend to have contact with extraterrestrials and have even claimed to have flown in their ships. They are nothing more than deceivers who sun themselves in dubious glory and profit. Earth humans have whole organizations that endeavor to explain away UFOs. But, above all of this, there were a few sightings that were really authentic. However, there are many photographs that expose nothing more than some lights or appearances of natural origins as well as deliberate falsifications. Very few of these photographs really show extraterrestrial craft. Most photographs are deceitful creations manufactured by deceivers and charlatans whose names become known worldwide by this. Their books and manuscripts are also deceptive for purposes of elevating their reputations and obtaining self glory.

Others dare to connect Pleiadian beamships with human religions, which the Pleiadians do not want to be associated with in any way or at any time. Human so-called sects do not shrink from this step and deceive their fellow human beings by such beliefs. These infamous and primitive machinations should stop before the whole world is overcome by them. If these deceivers were really in contact with extraterrestrials, and remained so, then they would have offered them the chance to get clear photographic proof of their ships. But since they are not sincere humans, they have not had this opportunity. For evidence of the truthfulness regarding contacts, the Pleiadians have provided Meier with the opportunity to take distinct pictures of one of their beamships. Later, they will offer him the chance to obtain still better and clearer photographic evidence.

Contactees 2.29-37

Those Earth humans that have declared themselves to be extraterrestrial contactees have surely never stood before a human being or other creature from the cosmos. They are simply deceivers and charlatans. It can be seen that in every case, the want-to-be contactees, say that they have a mission from god or for the Christian religion. These are evil lies that deprive others of the truth.

Although there are many deceivers and charlatans, there are also many who really have had contact with extraterrestrials or still do. Many of them have never had anything more than sightings of extraterrestrial craft from afar and have often photographed them. There are very few who have actually had personal contact. Most of the ones who have, keep silent about their contacts because they fear their fellow human beings.

True and False contactees 2.53-63

Kenneth Arnold is no deceiver. He really has seen Pleiadian beamships. Many other pilots have also encountered Pleiadian and other extraterrestrial craft. The greatest deceivers were Karl Michalek and George Adamski, who became famous around the world. Their co-workers and friends also fall in this same group. This includes those who pretended to have contact with the Pleiadians. There are other people who are lesser known, but have some importance, that are also cheaters. Meier is told to not attempt to provide evidence about these people because it is very difficult to convince earthly humans of the truth. Their spiritual reasoning is too little for that.

Claims by people of having flown in UFOs are false 23.110-118

The claims of people who say that they have flown in UFOs to other planets, have seen and talked with human beings there, and have astral walks on other planets are all nonsense and quackery. Many books, writings, and reports refer to planets that are inhabited when they have actually created only very minimal life. Claims of beamships and astral walks are either quackery or very strong self-delusions which result from fantastic desires or wrongful acceptances. The only intelligent life that exists on other planets in this solar system is in bases for races from other worlds.

Claims of contacts with spiritual beings also false 23.119-130

Many people pretend to be called upon by high spiritual forms. But, these are based only on self-delusion or conscious lies. They are inspired only by heresies that they do not understand. No higher spiritual forms, in the last 2,000 years, have come in contact with earthly humans, nor have they received any transmitted information of any kind. For 2,000 years, Meier is the only Earth human who has been addressed by a high spiritual form. Some people seek praise for having written nice words for humanity, but have only fallen for self-delusions. Although these people are delusional about spiritual suggestions, their work is worthy when they make humanity aware of the creational path and change their attitudes so that they do not fall for religious heresies. It would be proper for them to explain that their work comes from their own thought processes and have no other spiritual source.

Deceivers and Charlatans 31.A155-161

Some Earth humans have taken possession of reports about real contacts with extraterrestrial entities and have formed new tales of fantasy out of them. They have appeared in public and lied about contacts that they have had with strange creatures.

Other people have either pretended or have actually received telepathic messages from low level creatures and have given false accounts of them to the public. There are also wicked fantasies of pure spiritual creatures that communicate with humans and would continue to do so in the future. But this is not so because pure spiritual forms of life only contact extremely high developed beings who are able to receive their emissions and have the necessary ability to understand them. The humans that either consciously or unconsciously deceive, pretend, or fantasize about these things do not convey the truth. There has never been a time when highly developed entities or even pure spiritual forms have touched an Earth human and caused them to attain the same high levels of development.

Among the many occurrences observed by the Pleiadians on Earth, the initials U.G. are known to them. This person has certain mental forces that he is not able to control. Each undertaking by him required certain spiritual forces from his fellow humans. This means that he unconsciously activates the spiritual forces of many other people who then unconsciously help him with his attempts. His own spiritual talents would not suffice for an enterprise.

Uri Geller is also a deceiver because he pretends to have been in a UFO when he has never come near to one. He had heard of UFOs in Israel and not in America as claimed. Many people are already aware of his deceit and have said so. By revealing his name, this allows people to see that his published contact reports are untrue. It is already enough that deceivers such as George Adamski and Karl Michalek have pushed many human beings into delusion and misery.

George Adamski - fraudulent contactee 17.49-65

As a result of Meier presenting photographs and reports that name George Adamski as a deceiver, a major effort has been initiated to publicly show him as a hero and as the essential father figure of UFO contacts. His friends are being used as witnesses to swear statements of having seen and experienced different things with Adamski. These witnesses have unconsciously fallen for lies and pretended events that are not true. Very few people are aware that Adamski has high suggestive forces that he does not disclose to others. Those who are aware of it, keep silent about it because they fear him.

Meier is requested to let humanity know about this because it is important. Earth is entering a new era and humanity will witness this change. Many humans will try to use this for religious and materialistic purposes. Meier is cautioned to beware of deceivers and charlatans like Adamski who shrink from no means to profit from this. They praise extraterrestrials as creatures of perfection, which they are not. They are evolving entities that are just as fallible as earthly human beings.

Karl Michalek & George Adamski, fraudulent 29.124-142

George Adamski, besides Karl Michalek, has put forward the most monstrous of assertions. Through the use of highly manufactured trick photography and other techniques, he is becoming the most popular, open-minded person of the year. He found approval in certain circles when his photographs were accepted without any hard examination. He then asserted even larger allegations of having flown in spaceships and had photographed extraterrestrial forms from ship to ship.

On page 161 of Adamski's book, “Inside a Spaceship”, there is a photograph which is pretended to be of Adamski with an extraterrestrial human being at a sighting hatch on a Venusian explorer ship. This picture provides truth-loving and inquisitive people the best chance of determining if Adamski's assertions are pure fantasy, or not. He has committed a mistake that convicts him of deceit. First, the size of the hatch (where Adamski has fixed a picture of his head) can be converted to a life-size measurement, which results in a size of 25 centimeters. Next, ascertain the life-size measurements for the height, length, and width of the ship, which can be ascertained from the picture, and it converts to a height of 1.71 meters and a length of 8.97 meters.

Adamski created the photographs with manufactured models that were about 30 cm in actual size. He used a picture taken through a telescope to show the moon in the background as being nearby. He would arrange pictures, drawings, and phosphorescent colors on several panes of glass and photograph everything together. Adamski was able to use these deceitful pieces of work to gain access to worldwide circles. His extreme suggestive ability was decisive and enabled him to evoke hallucinations of different forms in well-known people. Over many years, he was able to influence quite realistic-thinking people. Over many years, he was able to influence quite realistic-thinking people to believe that he actually maintained contact with extraterrestrial entities. There are also several other similar types of charlatans and deceivers. Several of them play a very decisive role in furthering untruths.

George Adamski - false contactee 39.P34-36

George Adamski hated humanity while appearing to be righteous. It was a natural consequence of his deceptions, that others would publicly affirm his work. He hates mankind because of his limited abilities in all respects for achieving positions of power and because his own appearance depresses him as he believes himself to not be in proper proportions.

George Adamski - all his pictures are frauds 57.98-101

George Adamski has never seen a beamship, spaceship, explorer craft, or telemeter disc. He only used information from a woman that did see a beamship in order to construct 30 cm tall models to produce false photographs. Before his death, Adamski wrote a confession about being a charlatan, which was signed by him and witnessed. It is currently in the possession of a person who will make it accessible within one year.

Salvador Villanueva Medina - deceptive contactee 39.P31-33

Salvador Villanueva Medina, who wrote a book about contacts with extraterrestrials and flights to other planets, invented everything and is a deceiver, even though he wants to serve in this way for a good purpose. As with many who report extraterrestrial contacts, he was strongly influenced by Adamski and believed his dreams.

Contactees - about 17,422 real Earth contactees 35.P934-940

The number of real contactees on Earth is about 17,422 individuals. They are scattered all over the world. Out of that number, only a few percent ever go public with their experiences. Out of those people, there are only a few hundred cases that are known outside of their local circles.

Genuine contactees 37.69-71

The Pleiadians hope to lead certain genuine extraterrestrial contactees to Meier's group. These people will be in contact with creatures in the current plane of time and dimension. They are still not able to change dimensions. They do not belong to the Pleiadian level.

List of contactees 38.59-91

3 other world-recognized contactees - not named 38.92-94

This list contains names that Semjase is allowed to initially disclose. But, she is not allowed to reveal information about three other world-recognized, publicly known contactees. The three names will be revealed at the proper time.

Contact statistics 39.132-198

21 Earth humans that have had extraterrestrial contacts of great importance have previously been named. Three other important contactees may still not be revealed. Beside these, Meier is the most important because of his mission to offer spiritual lessons to humanity. There are still more than 17,000 Earth humans who are consciously or unconsciously in contact with extraterrestrials. Out of these, there are some thousand contactees that are only known in smaller or greater circles and groups. Hundreds of people could also be named as those who have become publicly known to the world for their contacts with extraterrestrial beings and who maintain these contacts. Besides the named individuals, there are a few hundred people living in Germany, Austria, Poland, Russia, China, Australia, New Zealand, America, South America, Spain, France, Italy, and Switzerland. But, there are also other contactees all over the world. Of the few hundred publicly known people, there are only 173 who have reached some greater meaning. Apart from all of these, are the people in contact with the Gizeh Intelligences.

Semjase agrees to indicate which names on a list are real contactees. Since Meier's conversation with Ptaah, the number of contactees has increased. At that time, there were 17,422 while now there are 17,718 contactees. This is an increase of 296. There is no record of the number of people that have seen a UFO because this is unimportant and because the number of observers may have reached a billion. Only a small number of these actually accept the reality of their observed objects. There are 17,718 with conscious or unconscious contact. There are 3,902 involuntary or accidental contacts since 1900. 31 of the 3,902 accidental contacts are of some importance. There are 173 of the 17,718 with half-important meanings. A small number of the 173 are known publicly. 24 of the 17,718 are of greater importance. Of the 24, only a few are known publicly or are dead. 1 of the 17,718 is important for the fulfilling of a prophecy. There are 723 contactees with the Gizeh Intelligences. 27 of the 723 Gizeh contactees have come to public attention. There are 36 deceptive contactees who have never had contact. 7 of the 36 deceivers have come to worldwide attention. The remaining 29 of the 36 deceivers are known on a lesser scale.

There are very many people who are in contact with lower or same spirited beings from other worlds. The number of people in contact with very high spiritual beings, are only 16 worldwide. This number is greatly influenced by emissions and changing feelings. Contactees with medium-level spiritual forms from other worlds and entities from other dimensions are 268, but this number fluctuates daily. They are a bit higher in evolution than Earth humans and can transmit knowledge that is somewhat higher. "Medium level spiritual forms" are between 70 and 90 years in advance of Earth humans. The data is not tracked for the number of contactees with lower spiritual forms and may be many millions. Contacts with "Other World" spiritual forms are dangerous because they are of low levels of evolution and low intelligence. These are the levels that are found in certain religious heresies. Many of these relations are self-deceptive or even consciously deceptive and nonexistent.

Contactees List - true, false & "unknown" contactees 43.1-12

The following is a partial list of people along with a true, false, or unknown classification regarding their status as being genuine contactees with extraterrestrials: Truman Bethurum - false, Narciso Genovese - false, Karl Michalek - false, George Adamski - false, Dr. George Hunt Williamson - true, Hans Klotzbach - unknown, Howard Menger - false, Bob Renaud - false, Salvador Villanueva Medina - false, Francisco Castillo - false, Fernando Sesma Manzano - unknown, Ing. Reeve - unknown, Cedric Allingham - false, D. Marachi - true, Lawrence W. Vinther - true, Captain Thomas Mantell - true, Lieutenant George Gorman - true, Stefan Denaerde - unknown, Jeff Greenhaw - unknown, Antonio Villas-Boas - unknown, Eugenio Siragusa - false, Orfeo Angelucci - true, Orfeo Angelucci - false, Emanuel Cihlar - false, Dick Miller - unknown, Richard T. Miller - false, Buck Nelson - false, Alberto Sanmartin - true, Henrique Castillo - unknown, Herbert Nielson - unknown, Carl A. Anderson - true, Carl A. Anderson - false, Igo Etrich - true, P. Leopold - unknown, Frank E. Stranges - false, Reinhold O. Schmidt - false, Haruhiro Tsukamoto (Harushi Tsukamoto) - false, K. Gosta Rehn - unknown, and Joachim Pahl - unknown.

Unknown contactees - defined 43.49-55

Semjase stated that the reason why there are so many people on the list of contactees that are unknown to her is because they either have no contacts with extraterrestrials or the names on the list are not their correct names. It is also possible that they could have had contact previously which she is not aware of. But, those contacts cannot be of importance because she would be informed about them. Another possibility is that their contacts were with entities that are unknown to her, who somehow came through their controls without detection. But this is very unlikely. They could also have contacts with the Gizeh Intelligences, whose dark machinations the Pleiadians are not always able to control.

Gizeh Intelligences - unknown contacts 43.55-56

It is possible that contacts could take place with extraterrestrials that are unknown to the Pleiadians and that alien races have managed to slip through undetected. But, this is highly unlikely. There could also be contacts with the Gizeh Intelligences, whose dark machinations are not always controllable. As a result, it is possible that there could be many contacts that go undetected by the Pleiadians.

Gizeh Intelligences were undetected 44.70-82

It is impossible for the Pleiadians to have missed any extraterrestrial contacts with people that have been identified not to be contactees. This includes any contacts through any dimensional doorway because the possibilities for penetration are very tightly controlled and monitored. These controls show no indications of contacts with negative persons. However, for a little more than a year, the monitoring was interrupted. During that time, it was possible for unrecognized penetrations to occur, and they did. Since then, the controls have been raised to full force. But, negative people may have been in contact with the Gizeh Intelligences since the Pleiadians have no control over that. In addition, there are no controls over contracts from earthly intelligences that announce themselves as extraterrestrials to Earth humans, especially those who have stolen German spaceships.

Gizeh Intelligences - Heaven's Gate Cult 35.P961-963

In order to fulfill the aims of the Gizeh Intelligences, they have contacted different Earth humans, taken them on flights into the cosmos, and have done many other things to them. They have also influenced an Earth couple, Bonnie Lou Trousdale and Marshall Herff Applewhite, to misguide masses of people to their deaths by announcing a gathering on September 14, 1975 at Waldport, Oregon for the Heaven's Gate cult.

Carl J. Disch - fraudulent contactee, 1960, Eloa 63.17-20

Meier told Semjase about meeting a kind man by the name of Carl Disch from the Tessine. He is very concerned about Meier's group. He wrote a report of a contact that he had in 1960 with an entity named Eloa from the stars of Cassiopeia. He was ordered then to wait 15 years and then he would be called for a task of helping to spread the truth. He is unemployed and now feels the need to fulfill his mission with Meier's group. Meier asks Semjase what he should do about him. Semjase says that there are only a few stars of Cassiopeia that have human beings and she knows a few friends there. The name of Eloa is unknown to her on those stars, but there is someone with a similar name of Eloha and this could be a misunderstanding. His experience is unknown to her, but this could be cleared up.

Carl J. Disch - fraudulent contactee, 1960, Eloa 65.S24-38

Semjase told Meier that she contacted a station at Proximal Centaurs and discovered that Elhoa never contacted an Earth human by the name of Carl Disch. So, she investigated further and discovered that his accounts of a contact have risen from his own fantasies and that he has never seen a beamship or been in contact with an extraterrestrial. Everything he said was a lie for self-elevation and a desire to be esteemed. His offer to work for Meier is insincere because he only seeks self-esteem and financial advantage over everything and everyone. He would lie to his best friends, if he had any. Semjase asks Meier to pass along her words to Disch, but she expresses doubt that he will learn from this. Meier expresses regret about the man and says that he will tell him what she said.

Carl J. Disch - Elhoa (ET from Cassiopeia) no contact 67.1-11

Semjase told Meier that nothing Carl Disch has said contains any truth. He never knew Elhoa. The name he gave of Eloa was derived from the old name Elohim. He intended to penetrate Meier's group in order to dominate it. He has low desires without any sense of sincerity. He is only concerned about himself and in playing a dominant role in the publicity ahead. Meier is asked to tell him that he should seek his knowledge in a sincere manner in order to satisfy his own evolution.

ET spaceships come to Earth for contact with humans 70.214-217

Semjase cautioned Meier that an extraterrestrial spaceship would be coming to Earth in order to find someone to contact. The Pleiadians have tried many ways to contact it, but all attempts were in vain, and whenever they appeared, the alien craft would disappear. There are several ships with shining white or green colors that often have behind them, a strange orange colored tail. The tail contains strange and unknown elements that are being analyzed. Semjase states that their probability analysis has resulted in some surprises that are still not definable.

6.5.3 Abductions

Rare abductions by Gizeh types & time travelers 34.183-185

There are rare occurrences where people are abducted by extraterrestrials in the Bermuda Triangle and other places on Earth. Most of the abductions are done by the Gizeh Intelligences, but also by time travelers and entities from this universe.

Other ETs abduct Earth humans, seldom returned 35.P964-968

There are other extraterrestrials that abduct people, but these cases are relatively rare. Those who are abducted are not normally returned to the Earth. There are exceptions, but those are rare. There are also inhuman races, for which the Earth is a welcomed hunting expedition from where to abduct human beings.

Abductions - Pleiadians cannot interfere 35.P969-978

Abductions by extraterrestrial beings are not matters that the Pleiadians are allowed to interfere with by forceful means. Whenever possible, they try to contact the abductors in order to prevent their actions. When they do not accept advice on or near the Earth, the Pleiadians will often pursue them far out into space. Unfortunately, they have been only partly successful and people have been abducted. Although the Pleiadians have the ability to forcefully prevent abductions, they must maintain order because every entity must walk its own path for development. They are not allowed to interfere unless one of there own is being abducted. But, the exercise of power could lead to an undesired conflict and possibly war. They are not allowed to provoke an incident. Their weapons are only intended for defensive purposes and are not designed for attack.

Betty Hill & Barney Hill 37.19-34

A small group of entities from Zeta Reticuli arrived on Earth in a spacecraft and abducted two Earth humans for the sake of study on September 19, 1961. A married couple by the names of Betty and Barney Hill were taken at night while driving in the mountains of New Hampshire, USA. (See section 6.3.14) With oscillation paralyzers, they caused their vehicle to stop and paralyzed their consciousness. They took the two people into their spacecraft and subjected them to physical and chemical analysis. This analysis involves different methods by which mixtures and compositions can be separated so that the structure and combination of identifiable chemical compositions can be determined. These are finely studied techniques for the analysis of living creatures without injuring them. The techniques are unknown on Earth, but are often used by certain space-traveling races. They use these methods only in connection with telepathic hypnosis so that the subjects have no conscious recollection of the event.

This resulted in missing time from the memories of the subjects involved. Their memories of the event are buried very deep in the subconscious and can only be recovered by strong hypnotic counter block-breaking techniques. The two people were taken for a total of 127 minutes while different samples of blood, male sperm, hair, saliva, finger nails, and skin were taken. In addition, samples from shoes, clothing, and other things were also taken. Everything was carefully examined and recorded radio-photographically. When finished, the humans were returned to their vehicle, which was released from the paralyzing radiation and they were set free. The hypnosis was dissolved and they drove on with no memory of the incident. Only years later, were they able to solve the riddle of this event through hypnosis. The purpose of this abduction was only intended for exploring the Earth human form of life and the entities had no ill intentions.

Increase in ET ships, abductions, experiment, testing 66.224-226

During this time, another extraterrestrial race is increasingly sending manned, robot, and android ships to Earth in order to perform experiments. This has been going on for many years, but now the activity is being greatly increased. People are being abducted as experimental test subjects. Meier is cautioned to be on his guard because they could bring harm to him if he should unexpectedly fall into their hands.

Chapter 7 EARTH

7.1 Geography

This chapter contains all references in the contact reports which refer to the Earth, its geography, current status, and esoteric history.

Age of Earth - 646 billion years 45.75-100

Age of the Earth - from gaseous state 51.

Age of the Earth - into a solid 51.

The statements numbered 75 through 100 in Contact 45, refer to Semjase being astonished by Meier's ability to judge the age of the Earth to be 640 billion years old when it is actually 646 billion years old. In Contact 51, it was revealed that the Earth was formed into a gaseous state 646 billion years ago and then became solid 46 billion years ago.

7.1.1 Agharta

Meier met the blue human beings 39.P198-202

Ptaah is surprised when Meier asks him about Agharta and pronounces it properly instead of "Agharti", as is known by humans on Earth. Meier states that he spent a long time in India as well as the Himalayan Mountains and learned from blue human beings there.

Agharta - subterranean kingdom 39.P203-208

Ptaah says that there is much about Agharta that must be kept secret, but he states that the capital of Agharta is a subterranean kingdom near Shingatas and Shampulla inhabited by descendents of extraterrestrials that came to Earth. This is a center of real secrets, which hides a gigantic force within it. It is ruled by a race known as the "Sons of the Sun". There is a tendency that prevails in this race for control over the Earth, just as is the case with Earth's religions and secret societies. That is all that could be revealed.

7.1.2 Atlantis

Greater/Small-Atlantis, Mu 55.183-198

Atlantis was divided into two governments. Greater-Atlantis was located between the split continents of North and South America as well as between Europe and Africa. Small-Atlantis was located in the Santorinian region. Greater-Atlantis was damaged by war with the inhabitants of Mu, which was located in the Gobi Desert of China before sinking into the sea. Only the subterranean city of Agharta is all that remains of Mu. Small-Atlantis was destroyed about 6,000 years later by the near approach of a huge comet, known as the Destroyer, 3,500 years ago. This also caused Venus to be drawn into this solar system and inflicted great damage to the Earth. The Earth shook and broke into many pieces. Large volcanoes erupted, including Santorin, which exploded and caused different islands to sink below the ocean. The sea began to boil and generated tidal wave 200 meters high, which rolled over the island of Crete and continued until it reached Egypt and Syria. At that time, Crete was known as Minoa and its inhabitants were descendents of the Atlantians. Many of them escaped annihilation when they went to the Hellenian continent. Minoa remained standing, but the islands of Small-Atlantis disappeared into the sea. Mu had been the capital of a country on land. The inhabitants of the city, as well as the subterranean town of Agharta, had been extraterrestrials from the Lyra System who colonized the Earth.. Both cities were governed by a man and a woman before Mu was destroyed.

History of Atlantis & Mu 60.9-53

Around 50,000 years ago, the Plejaren worlds found peace and liberty after a long time of wars and revolutions. A short time before peace began, a scientist by the name of Pelegon elected himself as the leader of about 70,000 human beings. With their help, he took possession of several greatspacer ships and fled. Pelegon was unanimously acknowledged as their god, which means king in wisdom and leader. During the following millennium, they lived on Earth and originated a highly developed culture. They built many great cities and inhabited all of the continents on Earth. They flourished for 10,000 years at a high level of development. Then, some power-hungry people instigated unrest, which led to deadly wars. Everything was damaged or destroyed and only a few thousand humans survived the immense catastrophe by escaping in spaceships and settling on a strange world. Only a small number of people remained on the destroyed Earth and degenerated completely.

About 7,000 years later, the descendents of those who had escaped, returned to the Earth. They found only wild and degenerate beings there. Under the leadership of another god, they built Mu as well as Smaller and Greater Atlantis. At that time, Mu and Greater Atlantis were the two largest cities ever built on Earth. For the sake of peace, they were built on separate continents. A high culture developed and everything began to flourish. For thousands of years, unity and peace ruled until some degenerated scientists tried to take over the top leadership. But, the people remembered the wars of their forefathers and revolted against the power hungry scientists. The scientists took possession of several spaceships and vanished out into space. This occurred a little more than 15,000 years ago.

During the next two millenniums, these evil-minded refugees lived in a neighboring solar system. Their descendents were raised to hate and seek revenge in order to bring the Earth back under their control. About 13,000 years ago, their leader was IHWH Arus, a scientist of extraordinary bestial mind and overpowering force. There were 200 scientists, who specialized in different fields, who became representatives and sub-leaders. They attacked the Earth and took possession of what is now, Florida. From there, they attacked Atlantis and Mu. Wars raged for two millenniums until Greater Atlantis and Mu were completely destroyed and the survivors were taken into servitude. Fortunately, great scientists were able to escape in spaceships and returned to their ancient home worlds in the Pleiades. But on Earth, intrigues soon began between the evil-minded inhabitants of Atlantis and Mu.

Azores Islands are of Atlantis 60.54-97

Mu, which was located in the Gobi Desert, made war upon Greater Atlantis, which was located on an Island between Africa and America until it sank into the Atlantic Ocean in the greatest earthly war catastrophe. Only a few small islands now exist that are known as the Azores. The scientists of Mu discovered powers that enabled asteroids to be used as destructive cosmic bombs. After Atlantis attacked Mu and leveled it to the ground, an asteroid was guided toward Atlantis. Only a few high governors and scientists were able to take refuge in space before the catastrophe broke upon Atlantis and submerged it into the sea. The Earth was badly shaken and many volcanoes erupted. A gigantic tidal wave, 2,300 meters high, submerged whole countries and destroyed everything in its path. Atlantis submerged within minutes, approximately 11,498 years ago.

Atlantis & Mu destroyed 61.25-30

As mentioned previously, Atlantis was destroyed by scientists from Mu, 11,498 years ago. This was the first great catastrophe of the last 12,000 years. Nearly 1,300 years later, another catastrophe followed of cosmic origin. Around 10,215 years ago, a planetoid of immense size crashed into Earth with a horrible force. It divided the waters of the Atlantic exactly where the asteroid had crashed and destroyed Atlantis 1,300 years earlier.

7.1.3 Bermuda Triangle

Bermuda Triangle 33.68-75

The occurrences in the Bermuda Triangle do not originate with extraterrestrials. Certain things exist in the Bermuda Triangle that belongs to extraterrestrial races, but this does not have anything to do with the disappearances of ships and aircraft. The theories of Satan-like forces and other creatures being involved are only fantasies from religious fanatics in an attempt to explain what is occurring there. The events in the Bermuda Triangle can be traced back to very natural things. This area is very suited for high-seas piracy, which occurs repeatedly. In addition, natural dangers also exist there, which have caused ships to be wrecked or sunk along with everyone onboard, never to be found again.

Bermuda Triangle - dimension doors 34.103-182

There are three different places on Earth where natural dimensional doors periodically exist. These doors are natural occurring dangers that are caused cosmically by time-streams. The doors cause many events to occur because they interfere with the normal time on Earth. The whole sea and ground in this area is in continuous movement, which rises and sinks timelessly. Often, within only a few hours, huge sub-oceanic mountains and plateaus are pushed upwards and change the surface of the planet. Many times, ships have run full speed into the upward-pushed landmasses. This land mass was once the great continent of Atlantis. The dimensional doorway also played an important part in its destruction.

The dimensional door represents a natural cosmic appearance, which is a barrier between normal time on Earth and another dimension. The other dimension in this case, is a parallel world to Earth with differences in landscape. The door is evoked by a cosmic elimination-transmutation-radiation, which appears periodically. This originates from several large stars in the universe, which are unknown on Earth. They radiate their beams, which meet 720 light years from Earth and bundle together. These highly concentrated radiations hit the Earth in three places only when it is exactly in focus with the radiations and a dimensional barrier are created. The radiations cause an elimination of normal earthly time by changing it into timelessness. This alteration exists far outside of the center, which is in the other dimension with another world in another time.

This causes an effect similar to hurricanes where the center is calm and the surrounding area is a whirl of change from normal time into the other dimension. Normal weather conditions prevail outside of the storm of an alternating zone where the light strata becomes alternated. The first indications of this, is a calm wind, very sultry warmth, and deep silence. This appears the same as the beginning of a new galaxy. The laws of macro-cosmos and micro-cosmos are exactly the same and only differ in size. The processes remain relatively the same, but the forces correspond basically in different ways. At the dimensional door, the forces are pure cosmic energies with radiations of a special sort. The effect of the whirl or spiral remains the same even though the appearance may be different.

The Passover zone can be compared to the passage of time between two world-time-ages and into another time, dimension, and world. When an aircraft flies through the Passover zone into the dimensional door, those in the airplane see a world with a strange landscape that they have never seen before. If their aircraft does not have the necessary technology, then they become prisoners of the strange dimension and they are never able to return to their previous world. This is how airplanes disappear in the Bermuda Triangle, never to be seen again. Ships have also disappeared in this way because the radiations and the power of the elimination transformation reaches deep below the ocean surface.

The occurrences in the Bermuda Triangle are less secretive than those occurring at the other two dimensional doors. They are known worldwide because of certain dark elements. There are sea-traveling pirates who take possession of ships and kill everyone onboard. The events in the Bermuda Triangle have also been associated with stories of extraterrestrial abductions and satanic intrigues. There are deep-sea extraterrestrial bases in the Bermuda Triangle that are inhabited by the distant descendents of Atlantis. But, they are absolutely peaceful and do not pose a threat to humanity on Earth. Their spacecraft are also seaworthy and are able to dive to great depths. These ships have been seen surfacing and disappearing into space. Ufology groups have worked with religious forces to create stories of good and evil for their followers.

Bermuda Triangle, Several worlds 38.168-174

There are several worlds and several dimensions in the Bermuda Triangle. One of these dimensions has a parallel world to this world with only little differences. Another dimension is very remarkable because it has three nearly similar planets in one line within it. One of the planets is of the Earth in the dimension and sphere of time with wild flying dinosaurs. The atmosphere is not breathable and a spacesuit or other protective dress is required there. This dimensional door changes its intensity to allow for worlds in prehistoric, current, and a future time with a thick white vapor envelope that surrounds the globe.

Bermuda Triangle - dimension portal 39.36-44

The dimensional door in the Bermuda Triangle cannot be seen with the eyes alone, but it is possible to make the radiation visible with the viewing screens and windows onboard the Plejaren craft. At the present time, only two courses of radiation are visible on one side of the Earth while the third course is on the other side of the planet. In addition to the trails of radiation, there are also spheres of energy of different types and strengths that circle the Earth at different distances and intervals. They are very important for the maintenance of life on Earth.

Bermuda Triangle - dimension passage 39.312-323

Ssemjase takes Meier to the Bermuda Islands in her beamship so that he can experience what it is like for pilots and crews of ships when they pass into the dimension of the three Earths. It is a passage into another dimension that does not normally exist. Another dimension is of the Earth far into the future, from where its inhabitants sometimes penetrate into Earth's current time. As they pass into the dimensional doorway, Meier is amazed to discover that nothing can be seen that would indicate a radiation or anything else. He is able to see his own world and before him, he sees something strange, wild, and native. They are at the separation point of the whirl so that both dimensions can be seen at the same time. They enter the dimension of ancient Earth. Meier thinks this is fantastic and is surprised to see Ptaah's Greatspacer above this ancient world. Semjase talks to her father over a communication device and then her and Meier explore the ancient Earth in her beamship for about two hours so that Meier can take pictures of dinosaurs and the landscape. 7.1.4 Easter Island

Giants of Easter Island 69.10-30

The events of the past at Easter Island and the country of Tiahuanaco are connected. These two places are more than 5,000 kilometers apart, but have a direct connection between them. These areas were colonized by immigrating hoards of deserters from the Lyran System 13,000 years ago until only 2,548 years ago. They had a gigantic body structure that measured nearly 11 meters tall. They were led by a semi-ishwish by the name of Viracocoha. He was very old and greedy for government. With his position and cruel leadership, he conquered the high lands of Tiahuanaco and Easter Island.

After this victory, he settled with a small bodyguard of cherubim on a small island before Easter Island, which is known today as Motunui or similar. The cherubim were part animal and part human that appeared bird-like. Mot means bird in their ancient language, so the island was called Mot Isle or the island of bird humans. The inhabitants of Tiahuanaco and Easter Island were procreations of immigrated extraterrestrial entities of earlier epochs of time. The giant race educated the humans with great knowledge and taught them to operate their machines. They were even taught about stone masonry and the giants were celebrated as gods.

With the help of the giants and their machinery, the ancient inhabitants created the tall head formations from lava stones and erected them all over the island. They also created egg-shaped stones because the spacecraft of the giants had this form. Similar events happened in Pisco, Nazca, and Sacsayhuman because the giants had settled there as well. After several millenniums, the giants were suddenly stricken by an epidemic, which took the lives of many of them. They suddenly departed the Earth in their spaceships and vanished into the cosmos without a trace.

Easter Island Heads 69.33-42

The escaping giants left a desperate nation at Easter Island because they were suddenly deprived of technology, which their giant gods had taken with them. Also left behind, were some hundreds of incomplete statues of heads in the lava walls of volcanic craters, which were never to be completed. In their despair, the islanders tried to get back the gods who had fled, by attempting to complete the unfinished stone heads with primitive stone tools. These attempts failed and were given up in a few years. The Plejarens have been unable to determine why the islanders thought they could bring back their giant gods by improving the stone heads. After some years, the islanders put up shinny red hats in an attempt to calm the giants who had fled and bring them back. They created large hats from a mixture of red earth, sand, and small stones on the heads of numerous existing giant heads. The purpose behind this is another mystery to the Plejarens. But, their calculations reveal the probability that the hats were reproductions of the helmet-like formations worn by the giants.

Last sign of giants was in Andromeda 69.43-56

Many matters about the giants and their activities on Earth are also a mystery to the Plejarens. The only known sign of the existence of the giants came from a solar system in the Andromeda Constellation. There came news of a colonized world (Earth) and an expedition by a human race from Andomeda that were 180 centimeters tall. They brought a message of the giants to Tiahuanaco and lived there for 20 years and 7 months, 2,568 years ago. During their stay on Earth, they built a high culture and constructed electrical energy centers with underground cables protected by half-tube channels. Like the giants, the Andromedians were unable to accommodate themselves to the earthly conditions of climate and atmosphere. They were befallen by the same mysterious epidemic, which caused them to escape in panic. They are presumed to be dead. The remaining stone formations that were erected by the giants clearly show faces with sharp, small-lipped, and squeezed together mouth-parts, unusually low forms of a forehead, and extremely deep-set eyes. They also depict unusually sharp, straight, and long noses. These are traits of wicked giants, but not all giant races were like them.

7.1.5 Hyperborea

Mount Shasta - Hyperborean ETs 39.254-265

Mount Shasta is a volcano mountain in a still unexplored region of California in North America. The mountains have many cliffs that are difficult to climb. Inside the mountain, there exists a town of descendents of extraterrestrials. They are often visited by their brothers from the universe. They are a very majestic race, which is peaceful and good, but also fearfully careful of not being discovered by earthly humans. The entrance to their subterranean town is well hidden below the Eastern top of the mountain and it is impossible for earthly humans to find it. However, when Earth human beings come near them, they are paralyzed by their radiation weapons, which they usually carry hidden on themselves.

Their golden colored spaceships have a spherical form because they are able to travel into space. These ships are often seen when they are not screened from sight. The human beings of their race are very well proportioned in their appearance. Their hair is naturally long, blond, and curly, which suits their charming hyperborean character.

Although they are shy to earthly humans, they sometimes walk into villages to trade or exchange goods. Afterwards they depart in a hurry and flee when earthly humans come too close to them. Mount Shasta is not the only place where this race lives. In very early times, they divided into three smaller nations. The other two nations are on the Aleuts and in Alaska. This race of beings are very distant descendents of the real hyperboreans.

Mount Shasta Hyperboreans 39.P182-196

In the time of Enoch, the North Pole was located at the present state of Florida in North America. The polar-regions, at that time, had beautiful landscapes that were covered with palm trees and other tropical plants. It had the most advantageous climate on Earth where oranges and other fruits were grown. Similar weather conditions exist today in Florida. Hyperborea was located where the land is called today as Greenland. It was known then as "Tir nan Og", which means Green Lands and Land of Youth. Hercules, Gilgamesh, Enoch, Amitaba, Methusalem, and Noah have all been there.

Hyperboreans - splinter group 69.61

The gods or semi-gods of Greek mythology were a splinter group of giant descendents of Hyperboreans.

7.2 Status of Earth

Energy bales that circle the Earth 39.42-44

There are spheres of energy of different types and strengths that circle the Earth at different distances and intervals. They are very important for the maintenance of life on Earth.

Effects of mining, oil drilling, etc. 45.56-61

Ore and other mineral mining on a planet or star is only done by the Plejarens in extreme emergencies because they consider this process equal to the destruction of it. Stars and planets are never exploited as is done on Earth and they consider the exploitation on Earth to be the destruction of the planet. The first evil effects of this destruction on Earth began decades ago and Earth is now experiencing the pains of destruction. Humans on Earth should understand that the way in which they exploit the planet, robs its fundamental life force by depriving it of its oil, gas, and different ores. The effects of this cause the Earth to suffer shifts inside that lead to volcanic eruptions and earthquakes. This is because the Earth is slowly breaking down into itself.

Fertile ground reduced to 39.7% 45.112-116

Because of the unreasonable actions of Earth's inhabitants, she is missing many elements, which she needs for production. Human beings have robbed them from her. In only one century, the surface of the Earth has lost so much fertile ground that it will need many millions of years for it to become fertile again. Within the past 25 years, the humans of Earth have destroyed so much fertile ground that the recovery rate is surpassed by 144.2%. This means that, in only 25 years, earthly humans have generated 144.2% new unfertile wasteland with the destruction of woods and fertile ground in addition to the natural waste regions. 35 years ago, 86.1% of Earth's surface was fertile. Today, there is only 39.7% of fertile ground to grow plant life in.

Atomic explosions effects 35.P900-925

A much greater danger, as a result of the nuclear explosions, exists with the release of elementary radiations, which will present great riddles to Earth scientists. Three main factors to life on Earth are injured by the release of these elementary radiations. The catastrophic effect, after an atomic explosion the size of the Hiroshima bomb, lasts for several centuries and negatively influences all processes of life preservation. The pure atmospheric stratums of the Earth are catastrophically influenced by the release of these elementary radiations, which cause electrical energies in great magnitude.

This happens in very high frequency ranges near the ultra-violet spectrum, which are unknown to Earth sciences. This radiated energy mingles with the oxygen in the air and generates huge quantities of ozone. This ozone value is increased 34 times the normal value after an explosion. This is a dangerous concentration that destroys all microorganisms of a wide variety in a large area, which are of critical importance for the preservation of life on Earth. Then, a short time after the explosion, the ozone values decrease drastically to very low levels.

Certain elementary effects penetrate all matter and endure for hundreds of years, during which time they continually kill all microorganisms that come near them. Another important factor, in addition to lethal destruction of the ozone, is the effect on the ozone belt, which surrounds the Earth and protects it from ultra-violet radiation from the sun. Those gases are injured in several ways and become unable to absorb the ultra-violet rays. Atmospheric lightning produces ozone that does not destroy microorganisms. But, industrial ozone is generated from different factors. Lightning cleans while the other pollutes. A healthy ozone belt provides natural protection from the sun's strong ultra-violet radiations. Living creatures that are directly irradiated by radiations from the sun and from other parts of the universe, are inevitably killed. Nature always generates just as much ozone as is necessary to guarantee life.

Atomic Bomb, long-term effects 35.P926-933

Special elementary radiations that are generated by atomic explosions, reach great heights, spread themselves around the globe, and influence the different stratums. One such menaced stratum is known as the "Van-Allen Belt". This belt consists of electrons and photons that are specially caught by the Earth's magnetic field. This has a critically important function for the existence of life on Earth. The belt exists at an average height of 1,000 kilometers. The charged particles are in constant movement with spiral courses from pole to pole. The inside portion of the existing spiral values are decisively greater and have a more important meaning.

Atomic Bomb affects 45.63-66

The worst things that human beings are doing to the Earth are conducting subterranean experiments with atomic bomb explosions. The public is told that the subterranean explosions are atomic bomb test, but in truth, they are much more dangerous. These explosions are from another bomb that is produced from natural organic products of nature, whose effect is many thousand times stronger than the present atomic bomb. When exploded in a certain region, it produces an immense chain reaction that causes a complete firestorm over the Earth within eight minutes, atomizing everything. Once the chain reaction is started, it cannot be stopped and there is no escape. Not even the Plejarens could do anything about it.

Dams 45.59-62

The construction of dams and similar formations cause the collected water to shift the Earth's mass. The effects of this cause the Earth to suffer shifts inside that lead to volcanic eruptions and earthquakes. This is because the Earth is slowly breaking down into itself.

7.2.3 Earthquakes

Earthquake in Tangshan, China 70.196-204

The Plejaren explorations into the earthquakes in China on July 28, 1976 found that 893,000 people were killed, 208,000 people will bear heavy injuries for the rest of their lives, and 811,000 people have been injured. In addition, there are about 70,000 people who are missing below the ruined fields. The Earth will not find tranquility because even worse earthquakes will occur. They will be of such horrible power that countries and islands will sink.

Earthquakes, China 71.6-12

In 1977, the worst earthquakes in 900 years will shake the Earth and change the surface of the planet. The death count will be higher than in 1976. Undersea volcanoes will create new islands. The first such island will appear near Japan. Existing islands, and parts of continents, will sink below the sea and the shifting of landmasses will be felt. Earthquakes will menace all of the countries that were shaken by earthquakes in 1976, in 1977. Different earthquakes will afflict the great underwater trench between San Francisco and Alaska, as well as the regions of Austria, Switzerland, and Germany. In addition, Russia, Africa, and the island regions of Oceania will be shaken by quakes.

7.2.4 Evil on Earth

Evil on Earth 22.81-117

The earthly sphere is now in an energy level of the most-wicked negative forces, which surround the Earth like a heavy coat. These negative powers rose, and become ever stronger, from the huge negative thought energies of humans on Earth. With their heresies and many kinds of wickedness, they lay the whole world into destructive and deadly radiations. Crystals of all kinds, as well as jewels and different minerals, strongly receive and absorb such energies. The wicked negative human thought energies are strongly charged and bring dangerous needs and misery. From each kind and character, these energies become mediums of sickness, languishing states, and death to people who come into their possession. Crystals and precious stones were highly influenced where they grew before being found by humans. This was caused by the very strong coating of power that covers the Earth.

When humans want to have crystals and precious stones in their possession, own them for their value, use them as trinkets, or for health reasons, they must first be free from dangerous radiation. Otherwise, their oscillations may bring death and destruction over them. Crystals and precious stones must undergo a neutralization process for at least five years because of the huge amount of negative energies from thoughts by earthly mankind that they are charged with. The neutralization can be accomplished with a simple apparatus. If people do not submit their possessions of such things to the neutralization process, when this has been made known to them, then they should not be surprised when they are strongly persecuted by sicknesses, misfortune, misery, and depravation as well as death and damage.

People are inclined to carry many types of lockets, trinkets, etc. for their own protection. But, they are not aware that nearly all of these things are plain useless and are only pretended to be effective according to their beliefs. The carriers of such things also make themselves susceptible to great dangers and even place their lives into jeopardy because these things are often very strong receivers of negative thought powers that are transferred to the carrier. Because of this, such things should be submitted to neutralization from time to time. Based upon the mineral or material content, this should be done from six months to two years. Of course, this process can be reduced to a few minutes if the proper apparatus is used. Only crystals, precious stones and other minerals from extraterrestrial worlds, which are either uninhabited or possess very balanced forms of life, are recommended. Objects from such worlds have not been influenced from degenerate human negative thought powers, as on the Earth.

The receivers, like those on Earth, are created when the crystals, stones, or minerals have been exposed to strong negative radiation for several thousand years. The Crystals, stones, and minerals can also be receivers and radiators of positive energy forms if they are grown on worlds with positive life forms. This conforms to the all-valid law of nature. Once these things are carried by thinking-forms of life, they adapt themselves very quickly to this living form in order to receive and send out the carrier's characteristic energies. If these things have been subjected to thousands of years of negative energies, they will be shot into their carriers, which can cause them to degenerate into the negative. There are also positive degenerate forms, which are unknown on Earth. The crystals, minerals, and precious stones from worlds with positive degenerate forms, do not need to undergo a neutralization process. This would only be necessary if they had been exposed to wicked negative forces within 2 to 4 thousand years. If so, then they would only need a simple purification process for seven years before being carried by people. Pearls must also be treated in the same way.

A neutralization or purification cannot be accomplished with occult formulas, conjured potions, or anything similar. A special apparatus is necessary, which absorbs the negative energies and neutralizes them. For neutralizations, the negative energies are withdrawn from the objects and altered into neutral powers. The neutral powers are then absorbed by the objects and form a balanced power after a certain amount of time has passed. For purifications, the absorbed degenerate powers are set free after being neutralized. The objects do not need to be recharged in this case because their neutralized forces may generate their own balanced forces on their own. Such objects require purification for a full seven years only when they have been carried by very strong negative degenerate people, like those who feel delight from the torture of others. Crystals, minerals, and precious stone that have been in possession of normal-negative human beings, do not need to be purified. There is the possibility that the objects can be of extraterrestrial origin. They have usable neutral and large forces that are of worth on Earth.

7.2.5 Magnetic Poles change

Earth's magnetic field disturbed 35.P887-896

Earth's magnetism has been disturbed by atomic explosions. These explosions produce a weak repulsion of the Earth, which influences the rotation by nearly immeasurable value. In addition, the Earth has been forced a little out of normal orbit and slowly searches for a new orbital course. Because of these explosions, Earth's scientists have committed a crime against the planet and all of mankind. The changes caused by these explosions will have a far-reaching effect of great importance, which can produce catastrophic results. The magnetic poles are already being increasingly displaced. Today, the Northern magnetic pole has already been displaced into the Canadian Ice Sea while the South Pole moves in the direction of South America. In about 1,000 years, the migration of the poles will have progressed so far that the South Pole will be in South America and the North Pole will be in Saudi Arabia. The calculated location of the North Pole in the year 3,000 will be between Jeddah, on the Red Sea, and Mecca.

North Pole - located at Florida 39.P182-189

In the time of Enoch, the North Pole was located other than where it is today. Because of cosmic forces and a turnover of the Earth, the North Pole of that time was shifted far to the West, where the present Florida is located in North America. The polar regions of that time contained wonderful landscapes covered with palm trees and other tropical plants. It had the most advantageous climate on Earth. Oranges flourished and ripened there. The timeless young nature of Hyperborea was an uninterrupted summer and was called the "land of timeless youth". Marvelous fruits grew there, like nowhere else on Earth.

7.2.6 Mammoths and Elephants

Mammoths & elephants 55.63-69

The mammoth, as well as other animals, has slowly evolved, due to the glacial period, into a higher form. The changes have occurred to its animal form of spirit as well as its appearance, as with all other animal forms of life. The mammoth lived, during very early times, mainly in colder regions. Because of this, it had very shaggy hair. Its two large tusks were also different with one bowed upwards while the other was bowed downwards. This was well suited for defense and obtaining food. During the glacial period, the mammoth evolved into a higher form with a different appearance and intellectual abilities. It wandered into warmer regions and evolved into the elephant. Biologists and zoologists are still very strange to the truth.

7.2.7 Mountain, highest

Mount Everest not highest mountain 31.115-130

Mount Everest is not the highest mountain on Earth. Instead of measuring the height of a mountain from sea-level, it should be measured from the actual center of the planet. This is because planets never have an exact spherical form, but look more like an ellipse. Although Mt. Everest is the highest mountain from sea level, it is actually about 2,150 meters lower than the highest mountain on Earth. The highest mountain is Mt. Chimborazo in the Andes of Ecuador, South America. This mountain has been enveloped with many fables and tales. In earlier times, it had a very important roll in respect to extraterrestrial intelligences.

7.2.8 Oil

Oil - a form of life/germs 45.56-61

Ore mining or other mineral mining on a planet or star is done by the Plejarens only in an extreme emergency because this process is equal to the destruction of the heavenly body. They never exploit a planet or star in the form as is done on Earth. What earthly humans are doing is equal to the destruction of their planet. The first evil effects of this destruction, started decades ago and, at the present time, it is already experiencing the pains of the destruction itself. Humanity must become aware of how they are exploiting their planet and robbing it of its fundamental life force when they deprive it of its oil, gas, and different ores. This causes the Earth to suffer from shifts inside, which lead to volcanic eruptions and earthquakes because the Earth is slowly breaking down upon itself.

Oil, reserves, exploited 45.101-111

The oil reserves on Earth can only be exploited within the next 27 and a half years. The oil will be enough for around twenty years, if the delusional development of the Earth is continued. The Earth contains 646 billion tons of oil and earthly humans, through their silliness, have already exploited or destroyed 65 billion tons of oil. The destructions were generated with subterranean explosions of atomic bombs. About 20 billion tons of oil has been destroyed in this way and 45 billion tons have been exploited. A planet like the Earth produces about one billion tons of oil in one billion years. Since the Earth is 646 billion years old, it has produced 646 billion tons of oil. In less than one century, earthly humans have exploited one tenth of all reserves and will need another 65 billion years to replace it. Actually, Earth will need a total of 118 billion years to recover from the present amount of ores, gasses, oil, etc. that have been robbed from it, which is nearly twice the normal time for production.

(Back to Contents)

7.2.9 Ozone

Ozone layer depletion 7.277-303

For some time, the Plejarens have noticed that Earth's atmosphere is showing a steady increase of dangerous changes that will have deadly consequences for all life on Earth. The ozone layer in the stratosphere has been increasingly changing due to the irresponsible influences of human achievements. Different ozone-destroying chemicals raise as gaseous substances into the stratosphere and affect the ozone layer. This is especially true of bromine gases, which reach into the ozone stratum and slowly destroys it. It has already been affected and destroyed by an average amount of 6.38%. This amount already starts to become harmful and dangerous for all forms of life, which can cause mutative changes. This amount of change has occurred within only the last 60 years.

Increased ultraviolet radiations from the Sun are now able to penetrate the atmosphere and affect all creatures. Different areas of the ozone layer have become dangerously affected to the point where its protective function has varied. If the release of destructive factors is not limited, the ozone layer will become completely destroyed in three different places. Holes will be torn into the protective screen and ultraviolet radiation will penetrate unhampered, causing painful death for all life. Once exposed, there is no rescue from the destruction. Destructive chemicals are set free from internal combustion engines and matter-destroying processes, such as atomic reactions, which have subjected the whole world to a wicked change.

Things of daily life also release destructive chemical gases. Every spray bottle releases bromine and other chemicals into the atmosphere, which slowly and systematically causes destruction. Researchers and scientists of different nations have come to realize the destructive nature of bromine and other chemicals on the ozone layer and seek to use this for military weapons. They have designed missiles with warhead materials made of bromine. When exploded in the atmosphere, it would cause a huge hole in the ozone layer that would enable ultraviolet radiations from the sun to destroy all life below it. Unfortunately, it could take hundreds of years for such a hole to close itself again, if no further destructive substances invade the area.

In addition, the ozone layer moves and wanders. As a result, such a hole would not only destroy life in a very certain region, but also would wander uncontrollably and cause destruction in other regions. Earth's scientists do not yet know this and this weapon has been hidden from the public. In order to prevent such madness from progressing, Mr. Meier is asked to form a group of people that will dedicate themselves to this cause. They are to reach governments and scientists and make them aware of their wrongdoings and actions. It is extremely important to all of mankind and for all life on Earth that a prohibition against such weapons is agreed upon by all nations. This group should also contact Mr. McElroy at Harvard University in the United States, for he is a decisive scientist in this field.

7.2.10 Parallel Earth, past Earth

Parallel world to ours 38.168-174

There are seven worlds and seven dimensions in the Bermuda Triangle. One of these worlds is a parallel world to Earth's current world with only few differences. But, a second dimension is very remarkable because it hides three, nearly similar planets in one line in it. If you travel through the dimensional door, you would arrive at the Earth in another dimension with another sphere of time when the Earth was inhabited by wild flying dinosaurs. You could not breathe the atmosphere without a spacesuit or other protective dress. Because the dimensional door changes in its intensity, it opens into different dimensions and time spheres.

Bermuda Triangle - dimension passage 39.311-325

Semjase pilots her ship to the Bermuda Islands with Meier onboard. She flies low in order to demonstrate for him the dimensional passages that earthly aircraft and ships have been lost in. She explains that this passage is not something that normally exists. It is a passage into Earth's past, present and future. Sometimes, inhabitants from the future penetrate into the present time. They fly into the middle of an invisible whirl. Behind them, Meier is able to see his own world and before him, he sees something strange, wild, and native. They are at the separation point of the whirl so that both dimensions can be seen at the same time. They enter the dimension of ancient Earth. Meier thinks this is fantastic and is surprised to see Ptaah's Greatspacer above this ancient world. Semjase talks to her father over a communication device and then her and Meier explore the ancient Earth in her beamship for about two hours so that Meier can take pictures of dinosaurs and the landscape. 7.2.11 Golden Age

Aquarian Age - brings great changes 8.158-166

The Plejarens and others have contributed some to the development on Earth according to the Age of Aquarius. This epoch will bring revolutionary events for mankind on Earth, both very good and very bad ones. Especially bad, will be religious influences. This intellectual-spiritual age will create very many new and wicked religions, which will cause people to be subjected even further under their control. The Plejarens try to prevent this. Otherwise, the same thing will occur as happened to their ancestors. Namely, scientists will seek to become gods and affect the same catastrophes as occurred to their ancestors and many other races. They are always the first ones who recognize that Creation behaves fully neutral regarding everything that occurs in the universe. The Creation continuously creates new forms of life and then they remain left for themselves to fulfill their life's mission of development.

Age Of Aquarius (Golden Age) 9.163-212

It is necessary to know about a cosmic changeover known as the Age of Aquarius or the Golden Age. The religious interpretations regarding this epoch are absolutely incorrect and consciously wrong. A certain irresponsible fanaticism is partly behind the treating of the Age of Aquarius as the religiously proclaimed end-times. By no means is the New Age the end-times because it actually brings in truth and real life. This epoch enables everything to be brought towards their highest position and develop the spirit according to providence. But, many people will need a breaking-in period of the epoch before it will behave so for them.

As usual, the religiously void scientists will initially obtain profits and might from the new time while the common people are injured by religion. Because of the change of epochs, people will fall to a religious delusion in order to maintain their religious beliefs. The 184 years of time changes are powerfully marked in religious beliefs of all sorts sprouting up and taking human beings under their dangerous and destructive control. Murder, suicide, and exploitation of all kinds, as well as religious slavery, are all traits of a world that will be religiously shaken. There will be those who offer salvation and wrongful prophets who will publicly boast of their abilities and fanatically search for victims and new followers. This is the initial transmission phase of 184 years of the Golden Epoch.

The final validity of this epoch will occur at 11:20 MEZ on February 3rd, 2,028. The revolting force of the new epoch began on February 3, 1844 and, ever since then, the extensive changes on Earth hurry irresistibly forward. The New Age already demands its tribute in the way of religious delusion, the rapid development of all sciences, criminal activities and wars, which are characteristic of the time and are not to be ignored. The first half of the Age of Aquarius lasted 92 years, from 1844 until 1936. This is when the Earth reached the most outside radiations from the Age of Pieces. At 11:20 on February 3, 1937, the essential Age of Aquarius entered the transmission point into the second half of the epoch. Since that date, the rapidly evolving events, discoveries, etc. have become everyday developing standards, which are characteristic of no other age.

The beginning of the Age of Aquarius vouches for the beginning of life. The whole solar system has come under the control of the new epoch. According to Cosmic Law, Earth is apart of cosmic events that result in the elimination of all hitherto existing regulations that are not of Creational natural character. These prior regulations become newly constructed and evolved. The basis for these epoch changes is in the reach of radiations from the Milky Way galaxy's central sun, around which the Earth revolves every 25,860 years and passes 12 different signs of the zodiac. The Earth has already touched the outer border of the "Golden Radiation" from the central sun, which is the strongest of the universe. As a result of these radiations, the Age of Aquarius is also called the "Golden Epoch", the Revolutionary, the New, and the Marvel Age.

However, there is also much mischief connected to it, especially regarding religions, the use of new discoveries, and new achievements. For the first time in centuries, earthly humans will overcome their unreasonable actions and arrange everything according to Creational-natural laws. The Age of Aquarius is an important and exciting time. It also influences all later epochs of the zodiac. During the "Golden Age", humanity will find a natural spiritual direction that will not happen without confusions. Numerous people will die in delusion of their religious beliefs and find a bad ending. Those who flee from the heresies of religions and dedicate themselves to the truth, knowledge, and wisdom of the spirit, will be the most fortunate.

An immense novelty will occur on Earth when intellectuals will no longer be decisive and will be surpassed by spiritual knowledge and abilities. Anyone that has not developed spiritually enough to be susceptible for the higher spheres will be eradicated because their influences will be disturbing and dangerous to all forms of life. All of those who are obstructing and enslaving of the spirit will be destroyed when the maximal point is reached. Those first to perish will be the religiously minded, because they are the most evil suppressors of spiritual development. The new epoch will enable the Earth to become cleansed of all only-negative and only-positive forces, from where a balanced state can be created. These changes are according to cosmic and creational-natural laws.

The ones who prepare the way for these revolutions will be people who announce the truth of spiritual knowledge and wisdom as prophets and teachers. But, they will suffer from invectiveness and abuses, be accused of lies, deceit, and quackery for they announce the truth and reveal how religions only lead to damage and never to spiritual development. These way-preparers will be revolted against, called heretics, and exiled because they will fight against religions that lead people astray. Many among them will be born in the twin sign of Pieces. As earthly Pieces-born humans, they are also cosmic Pieces-born with traits of chargers, revolutionaries, prophets, teachers, and often masters of the new time.

But, the essential great ones among these are those who are born in the first year of the second cosmic transmission towards the Age of Aquarius as well as on the first day of the change-over: the 3rd of February 1937. The time of birth, in relation to the time of transition of 11:20, is also very decisive. There are only a few of these people, who are diffused around the world. If they are not influenced by religions early in their childhoods, they will be the actual way-preparer and geniuses of the new time. It is the desire of the Plejarens that the teachings and revelations provided by these people should be spread by all means possible because they are of interest and of great importance for humanity.

Age of Aquarius moving humanity 66.94-99

Since the year 1937, the strong influences of the new cosmic age have led the materialistic side of the whole world toward more gentle and harmonious courses so that the differences between spiritual plenty and materialism are no longer as great as generally thought. Many forms of spiritual direction have led to recognitions of enormous meaning and value. These recognitions appear in the development of technologies. In spite of mankind's barbarism, they have proceeded in both directions since 1937 and have advanced rapidly towards real evolution. This course of development has already been seen in the first days of entering the Age of Aquarius on February 3rd, 1844. This was also noticed since 1937 when the second half of the transgression of time began to offer its powerful force. The temporal aim of mankind in respect to their evolution will be reached after about 800 years. An attempt to reduce this to a shorter span of time has failed. Much of the guilt for this failure rests with those chosen to spread the knowledge about the truth.

7.3 Earth History

Asket's clarification of true history E10.

During Meier's meeting with Asket on February 11, 1956, she explained that the horse was not brought to America from Europe. Just the opposite was true. All horses on Earth originally came from North America. Until about 50,000 years ago, this continent was settled and inhabited by space-traveling races and their descendants. But, as usual for this world, they came to blows and destroyed each other. They invented the atomic bomb and exploded it in a lightning war. Its effect was extremely large, which caused the whole continent to become depopulated and several kinds of animals, such as the horse, was completely eradicated. At that time, horses were called Hipparion. Today, many countries of this continent are called the same names as they were known 50,000 years ago. These names have been passed-on until the present time and those who witnessed the unreasonable and barbarous time, still exist. The best known witnesses have become a curiosity to humanity because they do not know their original history. Yet, they know very well the connection to names such as "Death Valley". The "Valley of Fire" near Las Vegas, Nevada, is another example of the timeless atomic delusion of human beings in the past.

Chronology of Earth's history 5.27-30

Semjase informed Meier that earthly chronology is not very exact and it is only half way based upon facts. The dating of events is not precise, but they are the most accurate, which has ever been determined on Earth. Meier's calculations only vary from actual dates by about 200 years while the calculation made by earthly scientists and researchers are wrong by several thousand years. The actual dates of historical events can be recalculated at any time from the details provided by Semjase.

Earth history 5.135-187

After a comet, known as the Destroyer, came through a far away solar system, two-thirds of all human beings there perished and the survivors found a new beginning. Life was hard with great privation, but within nine centuries, the survivors built up a new civilization and culture. They succeeded in preventing further cosmic catastrophes. After a troublesome research and labor, they created plans for their new culture and for a far-reaching technical science. Habitations were built for protecting against natural powers. The knowledge and abilities of generation after generation were collected there. Their knowledge and spirit improved rapidly and they soon achieved a technology beyond description.

They flew into the infinite widths of the cosmos in disk-like flight machines. Expeditions were sent to other solar systems and their planets. Their home planet became too small of this new race. New worlds and possibilities disclosed themselves to them. They found many habitable worlds, which they often conquered for settlement of their race after subjecting the worlds to their radiation weapons. They also improved their spirit so that nothing remained strange for them. Step by step, they raised themselves above other races as their governors. They called themselves kings of wisdom, or IHWH. On Earth, this was translated to mean God.

They governed in an evil and dictatorial form. But after centuries of this, the people of Earth became tired of the god-like scientists and they rose up against them. Because of the spiritual forces and large knowledge of the gods, the nations had to submit under their rule. However, their love for freedom drove them to secretly prepare for fighting. Like a smoldering fire, it glowed for 500 years and flamed up at the right moment as an untamable wild fire. This was about 230,000 years ago, when the fights for freedom began. Evil wars overtook many planets and many were destroyed.

A scientist by the name of Asael, used this chance to make himself independent and flee. Secretly, he was able to take possession of a large fleet of spaceships during a battle. With 183 greatspacers and about 250 explorer ships along with 360,000 humans onboard, they fled from their home system. Restlessly, they searched through the widths of space until they found a solar system that offered the possibility of life for them. After taking possession of a planet there, it took them 300 years to create a new race of beings. Then, they settled on two other planets of their system, from which they explored the universe once again.

They entered the Sun's solar system and sat down on three different planets. They started to build a new culture there, but the planets were still rather inhospitable and often hostile. So, they left again and rarely visited them. When the first intelligent life started to move on the Earth, they returned to live here once more. As usual, fights for the government of Earth started and they departed once more. From the new home planet, Earth was developed and controlled.

From time to time, they tried to settle the planet. Creatures were deported to the Earth and left there without any help to find their own fate. They degenerated, became wild, and like bestial. Eventually, a certain culture was built up, which existed for some thousand years. But once more, the thirst for power broke out and all was destroyed. So, the Earth fell again to its old ways. After some millenniums passed and dissention arose once more on the home planet because the scientists lifted themselves up as gods and placed their nations into bondage.

Some rational scientists and other humans allied together and took possession of different spaceships. About 70,000 humans fled and settled on the Earth. Their highest leader was named Pelegon. He was voluntarily acknowledged as an IHWH or god and he kept a tight command. He had nearly 200 sub-leaders who were responsible for specialized fields of science. They were considered as sub-gods and called guardians.

War broke out on the home planets and much was destroyed there. But, they finally gained peace and freedom. This occurred around 50,000 years ago and continues today. However, Earth was not always so peaceful and many faults were committed. One of these mistakes was the creation of the original race of humans, whose descendents live today and seek to commit the same faults that their forefathers already committed.

Sanskrit texts very exact & precise 61.37-44

Sanskrit-scripts are very exact and precise in special concerns regarding earlier epochs of time. Biblical scripts are the most inaccurate. They have been falsified and mingled with tales of fantasy. The most recommended scripts are the original ancient scripts of Enoch and the calendar notifications of the old Mayan tribes. The last mentioned ones are of the greatest worth. Their dates start from when the little planet came close to the Earth and caused the catastrophe of 10,215 years ago.

7.3.1 Flood, the great

The Great Flood - 10,079 years ago 5.29-36

Earthly scientists and researchers are wrong about the dating of history by several thousand years. Many researchers on Earth have tried to calculate the biblical Great Flood, but without much success. According to Christian chronology, the Great Flood occurred exactly 10,079 years ago. It was caused by a worldwide catastrophe from cosmic origin when a gigantic comet caused the Earth's revolution period and direction to change. Before this time, each day lasted more than 40 hours and the Sun did not rise in the East as it does today. Such changes in the Earth's revolutions have occurred twice before, but they did not cause such destructive catastrophes as occurred with the Great Flood. The last change of this type occurred 3,500 years ago.

2 other great floods 61.10-20

In addition to the Great Biblical Flood of 10,080 years ago, there were two other floods that occurred 7,957 and 6,906 years ago. The Biblical Deluge was caused by the close approach of a large comet called the Destroyer. Great inaccuracies in the chronology of ancient events occurred because they were distorted and falsified to have occurred much later by Bible researchers and historians. In comparison, the destruction of Atlantis occurred 11,498 years ago.

7.3.2 Ice Ages

Ice ages (glacial periods) 55.38-51

The Ice Age is termed on Earth as the glacial period. This is when a world falls completely or partially into a frozen state as a result of climate changes. This is a natural process where whole worlds, like the Earth, have great regions covered by falling temperatures and atmospheric shifts with masses of inland ice that forms into gigantic glaciers. These events are natural and necessary for the development of the planet. The occurrence of ice formations is subject to a certain rhythm, which can be defined by a simple mathematical equation with sevens.

For example, this cycle lasts around 700,000 years on Earth. Between the cycles of glacial epochs, there are continuously rising inter-glacial periods. Because the Earth is a far-evolved planet, it no longer falls into complete glacial epochs, but only has large regions that are covered in ice while the remaining regions stay free of ice. When the ice disappears in one region, then there are preparations for another region to endure a glacial period. The Earth is now preparing itself for another glacial period. There have been four glacial epochs during the last 3 million years, but there have also been several inter-glacial ages between them.

Glacial & interglacial periods 57.17-35

Glacial epochs, or great ice ages, periodically occur every 700,000 years. Between these ice ages, are different inter-glacial ages. Their cycle is about 350,000 years. The glacial epochs normally cover one-sixth to one quarter of the earthly surface while during the inter-glacial ages, only one tenth to one twelfth of the surface is covered in ice. 12 glacial ages have covered the Earth during the last 2,800,000 years. The following glacial epoch, which the Earth is already preparing itself for, will be at its maximum affect after 550,000 years, which will be a Great Ice Age. Earthly scientists have a false assumption that the inter-glacial ages are only wanderings of glacial epochs. This is wrong because the inter-glacial ages are cyclic ice ages that have nothing in common with glacial wanderings.

The glacier shifts and wanderings cause the Earth to be regenerated with changes of the climate. The shifts and wanderings of the glaciers can be defined as small glacial ages that should be divided into greater and smaller ones. The last great shift of glaciers of this sort on Earth occurred around 600,000 year ago and it will repeat again within 10,000 years. The harbingers for this are already making themselves known on Earth. The small glacier shifts, or forward-wanderings, keep a cycle of about 35,000 years and the last event like this happened around 25,000 years ago. Calculations from this cycle show that the next great glacial shift, as well as a small shift, will cause the locations of the ice masses on the Earth to be different.

7.3.3 Prison planet

Earth was once a penal/exile planet 23.39-42

Fallible forms of life are banished to other worlds that serve exclusively for this purpose. Only beings of the same sex are exiled to such worlds. As a result, descendants cannot be created. Those banished, exist on these worlds on their own and must care for themselves with their own manufactured workings.

Prison, planet 70.27-28

The ancient home worlds of the human races were the planets within the Lyra and Vega constellations. Our early ancestors mastered space flight more than 22 million years ago. The Earth was often visited in order to set out their punished elements who were evil in their home worlds. But, this lasted only a few millenniums when those exiled left the Earth by an unknown means. This allowed the Earth to be left in calm again for millions of years, while life of all kinds developed in natural order. However, the exiled human beings mixed with the already existing human-like creatures here.

Prison, planet 70.79-81

Several kinds of creatures were deported to Earth, as well as to other worlds. These prisoners were simply set on the planet and left to their own fate. They were deprived of all technology and soon degenerated, grew savage, and mixed with the savage-grown descendants of earlier elements and became bestial. But then, finally the time came when the Earth was again occupied when several hundred greatspacers arrived with settlers.

7.3.4 Pyramids

Asket's explanation of the pyramid E9.

The history of Pyramids is a bit intricate because they date back to very early time. The great pyramid, as well as all other pyramids, was built when the constellation of Lyra stood in the constellation of Cancer. This was 73,300 years ago. This was before the time of the Hedschra. Until shortly before the Great Floods of about 10,400 years ago, the pyramids were left alone and no body cared for them. 300 years before the Great Flood, they became important, but not for their original meaning, which cannot be disclosed.

King Sahluk lived around 300 years before the Great Flood. He had a son named Saurid, who had the ability to see into the future. In a dream, he saw a great planet crash down with a terrible noise on the Earth and everything fell into darkness. Saurid realized that numerous human beings would die from the crashing planetoid. The few survivors would not know where to escape to from the avalanche of stones and stinking hot waters. Saurid told his father about this dream and, after consulting with all astrologers and scientists, Sahluk ordered that all existing pyramids would be prepared as protective and survival stations with ample food and supplies.

His descendents and all later governors also prepared the pyramids adequately. When the Destroyer comet finally came, the people walked into the pyramids and closed themselves into them. The comet overturned the Earth, inundated the land with water, and damaged everything. Very few people and animals survived without the protective buildings and the survivors once again had to find a new beginning. The Heavenly Sons, the star travelers, who were the essential settlers of this world, originally created the pyramids.

Chapter 8 HUMANITY

8.1 Origin

Spiritual reason of Earth humans 4.100-101

Humanity on Earth should understand that their forefathers have forced all of mankind to the point of ruin and had to evacuate part of the planet in wild flight. This should serve as a warning that the thirst for power and barbarism are harbingers of death.

Neanderthals, monkeys, Yeti & Adam 7.125-145

The earliest earthly creatures were of different forms and character. They were savage creatures of human-like forms that had been expelled during earlier millenniums by Plejaren ancestors. The descendents of those who were expelled copulated with different sorts of animals and created new living creatures. One such creature that exists today is known as a monkey, which represents a human-animal mutation. So, monkeys are descended from humans and not the other way around. Researchers and scientists have already found the skeletons of intermediate mutations. They are known as Africanus, Peking-Human, and Neanderthals. Four different varieties of these beings exist today in isolated or very small groups. They are so wild and timid that humans will rarely ever see them. They have become known as Yeti.

Since the early races on Earth were savage descendants of outcast humans, they devolved into wild animals that lived together in large groups. When ancient Plejarens settled on Earth, they broke a strict law and forced their will on these creatures. They took the beautiful female beings into their control and copulated with them. From this, rose the first forefathers of the present human beings. The first one was called "Adam" in the old ancestor's language, which meant, "Earth human beings". Since the Plejaren forefathers were composed of mixed races of different colors and sizes, they also generated beings that accorded to their characteristics. The smallest was only 50 centimeters tall while the largest and most wicked ones were 12 meters tall. Their appearances were also different.

Origins of first life 8.194-195

The origins of life were derived from amino acids that combined in an atmosphere that was conducive for growth. Earthly scientists know about this.

History of Mankind 9.115-162

About 50,000 years ago, the Pleja System finally found peace and liberty. But, shortly before this time, 70,000 humans fled under the guidance of a scientist named Pelegon. With spaceships that they took possession of, they settled on Earth. Under Pelegon's guidance, there were 200 sub-leaders who were scientists of special fields of knowledge. Pelegon was acknowledged as a king of knowledge, known as IHWH or god. In the course of millenniums, they constructed large cities and inhabited all continents on Earth.

This progressed for 10,000 years until seekers of power prevailed and began a deadly war over the Earth. Everything was destroyed and only a few thousand humans were able to survive, while others fled into the cosmos and settled on far-away worlds. For 7,000 years, everything remained wild and degenerated and no one else landed on Earth. Then, the descendants of those who had fled returned to Earth. They were also commanded by an IHWH and they built the two huge cities of Atlantis and Mu on different continents. For thousands of years, they lived in total friendship and peace until some scientists once again hungered for power and tried to seize control of the government. But, having become tired of continuous wars, the nations rose against them. So, they occupied spaceships and fled into space about 15,000 years ago.

For two millenniums, they and their descendants lived in a neighboring solar system. They became very evil through mutations and reached a long life span of thousands of years. Their leader was a scientist named Arus, "The Barbarian". Arus also had 200 scientists as sub-leaders, just as Pelegon had. Possessed by a thirst for power, they returned to Earth, 13,000 years ago. They settled in the high North and the American region known as Florida. From there, they continuously attacked Atlantis and Mu and succeeded in destroying them completely within a few milleniums. Some great scientists were able to flee and return to their original home worlds in the Pleja system. But, the few survivors left behind, lived a life of servitude.

The sub-leaders of Arus assumed many things for themselves and became more independent. Within three decades, while under the threat of punishment by Arus, they created their own clean race of humans that were free of mutations. They did this by secretly catching earthly creatures that were far descendents of former humans from cosmic space. Beautiful female beings were tamed and copulated with by these leaders, who called themselves Heavenly Sons. They created completely new forms of life. Semjase was the highest leader of the sub-leaders. She called the first male human being, Adam, which means "Earthly Human Being". A similar type of breeding created a female being that was ordered, in later years, to mate with Adam. Many other similar beings were also created and caused great riots. From these beings, the present humanity developed on the different continents.

IHWH Arus became very angry over what had been created and wanted to either kill or exile his sub-leaders who were responsible for this. But then he changed his mind when he realized the new power he could exercise over the newly created human beings. With newly nominated guardian angels and sub-leaders, he controlled three human races. These were the ancestors of those who settled in India, the Black Sea, and the gypsies who traveled South of the Mediterranean Ocean, known as the Hebrews. With his guardian angels, IHWH Arus let these people worship and adore him as the Creation and his sub-leaders as creational assistants. He established hard and severe laws that always demanded the blood of violators.

His son, Jehav, was not much better when he took over domination of the three enslaved races 3,400 years later. He was also called an IHWH and always demanded the blood and death of all those who violated his laws. The later descendants of gods were more humane and developed themselves according to spiritual evolution. When this happened, they decided to leave the development of earthly humans to its natural run and retire to their original home worlds. So, they left the Earth 1,943 years later and returned as peaceful creatures to the Pleja system where development had become highly evolved. Today, they live together as a united and allied population in peace and liberty. This is important information for the people of Earth to know.

Human Origins from Lyra E3.12-17

3,300 years ago, members of an entirely different universe, known as the DAL universe, entered our universe and discovered Earth in our solar system. In their research, they also discovered the original home world and history of the human race because humanity did not originate on Earth. We are the descendants of a race from the Ringed Nebula. The actual descendants of our earthly forefathers no longer populate the region of the Ringed Nebula, but live on planets in the systems referred to as the "Seven Sisters" or the Pleiades.

Humans are a creation of Creation 35.S528-556

The human form is a creation of the Creation. It does not descend from any animals, such as the monkey. The evolution of the physical human form is very long. It was first created in primitive form, but with the destiny of becoming an advanced human.

It was vivified by the Creational forces for human advancement. This form of life is basically a separate creation since its ancient beginning. Because of this, it was possible for the early wild humans to mix and mate with space travelers, which created the human race of today.

Neglected humans do not develop equally and uncontrolled inter-breeding can even be retroactive to development. But at a certain point when spiritual knowledge is lost, the degeneration runs out due to an unconscious striving for self-preservation. A natural recovery occurs towards conscious thinking and self-preservation. This affects body performance according to environmental influences. Such reflexes are not performed in a controlled and rational manner, but outside the process of thinking. When thinking finally begins, then the reflexes are replaced by determination. Actions are then performed in a controlled manner, which compliments instinctive reflexes and reason begins.

Another kind of instinctual self-preservation occurs naturally when a being becomes incapable of motion. This can be evoked by various dangerous factors such as a lack of oxygen, which leads to paralysis. This includes some of those parts that strive for self-preservation. Thinking stops and body limbs react by reflexes only. Life then proceeds organically, functioning like a machine. When the body is given food, it still digests it, but the brain is unable to realize it.

Earth humans - forefathers defined 39.P37-40

The human beings on Earth are descended from an extremely high-developed form from the depths of the universe. Because of this, they are well developed in their proportional shape. In this respect, they are equal to the Plejaren race, which is further developed by 3,500 years. Even forms of life that are even further developed, have no better or prettier proportions. There can also be found those that earthly humans would consider ugly.

Origins of the many human races 7.100-124

The reason for the existence of so many human races on Earth is a result of human history on Earth. In addition to the five basic colored races, others also exist that are completely unknown to humanity. This is partly due to the fact that they live in places where people cannot find them, such as underground and in domed cities within mountains. Occasionally, these races come to the surface and join the crowds of humanity. This is especially true in countries where many races exist so that they do not appear to be any different and they can move about freely. It is more difficult for races with different skin colors, such as those with bluish skin in the region of India.

There have also been other colored races that have been dead for a long time. They were also the result of those known as, "Heaven's Sons". The Heaven's Sons, or star travelers from the Pleja system, settled in many star systems with different climates, which affected their appearance in order to accommodate them. This also affected their skin colors and there are numerous shades in the universe. In addition, the gravity of different worlds affected their body sizes, which varied between 50 centimeters and several meters tall. There were and are creatures in the universe, which were referred to as giants or titans on Earth. They also created descendents here. But they were eradicated because they were often very evil-minded and exercised tyranny.

The present races on Earth with different colored skin are the descendents of the different colored Plejaren ancestors that came from different star systems. Human beings on Earth did not descend from the monkey, as scientists have put forward. Plejaren ancestors, who mixed with earthly creatures, known as "Evas", created them. This is a designation that means "the bearer".

All earth races have a mission 55.211-214

Each human race on Earth must fulfill a mission. If they all finally recognize and acknowledge this truth, they will be able to accomplish it together. No race is preferred over another or considered less than any other race because everyone is in the same boat with the same difficulties and challenges to face. Those termed as the white race have no special mission and are not placed above any others.

Races 70.27-28

In ancient times, extraterrestrial races often visited Earth. They exiled their punished elements here, which were evil in their home worlds. But this lasted only a few millenniums and the Earth was left in calm once again for many millions of years. Life of all kinds on Earth developed in natural order except for the human-like creatures that resulted from the mixture of animals and the previous outcast humans.

8.2.2 Aryan race

Aryan race 34.78-86

When the Plejarens attempted to locate an entity by the name of Ashtar Sheran, they were only able to find traces of him that led to a certain place in Germany. It is at a very powerful secret organization known as "The Thule Society". They use telepathic forces and have a great amount of knowledge about extraterrestrial technologies, events, and races. It is their goal to maintain and elevate the white race on Earth, which descended from the past Arus created race. Everything is screened by spiritual forces, which are difficult to penetrate.

Aztecs (Aztec God Quetzalcoatl) 55.174-178

There is no relationship between the Plejaren Quetzal and the entity known as Quetzalcoatl. Quetzalcoatl was a very high officer or high supervisor of an extraterrestrial group, which was active in the region known today as Egypt. Because he was very knowledgeable and wise, he was often ordered on special missions. One such mission brought him to South America, where he was worshiped as a god by the Aztec people. He owned a small spaceship, which he could have used to strengthen this impression, but this was not his intention. However, after he met with another commissioner by the name of Huitzilopochtli, he changed his conduct. (See section 8.3.8)

8.2.4 Hebrews

Hebrews 38.19-28

Arussem was a human extraterrestrial that was one of the most hungry for power. He created a splinter group with many thousands of followers from the peaceful group of Heaven's Sons and sought to subject the Earth and its inhabitants for himself. His method for accomplishing this was through lying, deceiving, misleading, and by teaching wrongful cult heresies with religious lessons of his choosing. His followers were mainly the Gypsies of the Nile and the far surroundings of the Mediterranean and Red Seas. They became fanatical followers of his heresies and started to spread them.

But the Hebrews, as they were called, later freed themselves from his command when he had to hand over his government to his follower by the name of Jehova. The Hebrews grew in number and chose themselves as the elected people with the right to form a world government, despite never having been a nation, but simply a gathering of lowly Gypsies comprised of many colors and races. Ever since then, they have behaved as pre-selected ones for the control of the Earth. They found a way to realize their desires through Kamagol I, who was the successor of Jehova. (See section 6.4.4)

Hebrews 70.139-143

The third race of humans on Earth was an alliance of Gypsies that were interspersed with spies and saboteurs of Jahova, who caused dissention everywhere. They were always eager to rob, burn, and murder. For this reason, the ancient Plejaren forefathers called them Hebrews, Hebraons, and Hebrons. These are names mean Gypsies, Dregs of society, and outcasts because they constantly incited fights, and quarrels that continue to persist today. The present term for Gypsies is the wanderers, traveling people, and the unsettled ones. The present people that are known as Gypsies have nothing in common with the Hebraons who proclaimed themselves as the chosen ones, just as their descendants, the Jews of today, still pretend this. Peace on Earth will finally happen when the power hungry and murderous Hebraon race connection has become completely scattered.

8.2.5 Inca

Red-haired, tall ET-descendent Chanka 52.31-38

The Chanka Indians of Peru are tall, have red-hair, and are descendants of an extraterrestrial race. Their average height is 7 feet tall and they all retreated to a subterranean village 500 years ago, although they also live in huts above ground. Their lineage traces to the Incas and they kidnap white women.

8.2.7 Sumerians

Sumerians 70.130

Coming from the North, the son of Arus, Arus II, started a war and attacked the lands known today as India, Pakistan, Persia, etc. There, they met with the Sumerians, who were peace-loving. They fled and vanished far to the South and became a nation of European appearing people with dark skin and tall growth. They had risen from a race of Sirians who settled on the Earth 33,000 years ago. This was at the same time as the settlement of refugees from the Pleja System.

Sumerians 70.172-173

Among the descendents of Arus, who had subjugated the lands to the North, there was a large number who preserved themselves as the Ausist until the time of Jehav. This was a group of 160,000 people who were called the Great Aryans because they still advocated the ideas of Arus I. They deserted the government of Jehav and wandered through the lands from Northwest to East, plundering as they went. They penetrated into the country where Arus II had settled with his people and expelled the Sumerians. But, the Aryans mingled with the lowly developed native people and forgot their actual origins.

8.3.1 Francisco Franco

Francisco Franco - death prediction 36.147-154

Meier is permitted to examine a machine onboard Semjase's spaceship that is capable of displaying the conscious and subconscious thoughts of anyone. He discovers that the subconscious thoughts of Spanish dictator Francisco Franco knows that he will suffer two new heavy heart attacks tomorrow and will die from them. But, Meier is prohibited from disclosing the date of his death prematurely because they are not allowed to interfere or influence future events, or else powerful changes could be effected.

Francisco Franco - prediction 38.153-167

Even after Meier was ordered not to disclose the date of Spanish dictator Franco until it occurred, he wrote down the date of death and mailed it so that Hans Jacob would have proof of his ability to provide accurate predictions. He is told that it is not important that the Plejarens are able to know of coming events in advance and whether they are disclosed publicly or not. But, many such revelations would have catastrophic consequences, which is why the Plejarens must remain silent about them. But, the ones who want to accept the facts can profit from them. Although Meier meant well, the Plejarens had to intercept the letter that he mailed until after Franco's death.

8.3.3 Adolph Hitler

Adolph Hitler / Thule Society 36.19-33

Adolf Hitler was, in many respects, a genius. His knowledge ranged over many areas of technology, science, and in the use of natural forces. He was an incarnated creature of good worth. He was not a human being of highly developed spirit, but he was intelligent with reasoning values and was destined to lead Earth's politics and economics in a certain direction. He was incarnated and educated for this purpose. He was destined to reshape the power of the world and initiate new forms of development. This was carefully controlled and monitored. However, all work was in vain and he was not able to carry out his mission as provided. Through the Thule Society in Germany, the Gizeh Intelligence was able to possess the being of Adolf Hitler and misuse him for their dark and wicked purposes. He was unable to defend himself against that. In addition, many forces in the form of Earth humans had fallen under the control of the Gizeh Intelligences and settled around him. Against these influences, he was unable to resist. As a result, he was forced to go against his own destiny and carry out acts that he did not agree with. His thoughts in books and scripts before the war does not fit with the impressions generally made about him after the war. Adolf Hitler was wickedly misused by the Gizeh Intelligence and the Thule Society.

8.3.4 Lee, Gloria

Hans Jacob's letter from Rickenbach 34.8-31

Hans Jacob received a letter from a spiritualist named Rickenbach claiming to have had contact with Gloria Lee in a seance. Meier asked Semjase to verify if the details are correct. But, because the individual does not wish their identity to be known, then they are not allowed to enter the personal sphere of another against their will. However, it is possible to determine if the information provided is correct.

Details about Rickenbach etc. 34.37-6

Ptaah conducted a search and found a man of about 41 years old, by the name of Alois Rickenbach. He is involved in spiritual-scientific concerns. He is active spiritually, very loyal, and good. It has been 14 years since he was in contact with an entity by the name of Sefh, who was from Alpha Centauri. He was on Earth for 11 months. They met unexpectedly and became friends. Sefh initiated the man about different matters, explained to him about the Plejaren contacts of the future, and asked him to spread this information. However, the man told Sefh that he did not feel himself strong enough for that mission and there has been no contact between Sefh and the Plejarens. There is little chance of contacting the man because he is suckled with fright and does not have the courage to allow him to be known to others. The Plejarens are not allowed to influence the man or infringe on his freedom of decision. (See section 3.2.2.4)

8.3.5 Muck, Otto

Otto Muck - spirit-form of Plato 60.98-113

A German physician by the name of Otto Muck has calculated that Atlantis was destroyed at exactly 7:00 PM on the 6th of June, 8,498 BC and exactly as the Plejarens described it. He was only wrong about the date by exactly 1,000 years and he wrongly assumed that it was purely a cosmic catastrophe. The Plejarens are aware that he first received and wrote about the legends of Atlantis 2,322 years ago for posterity because he is the reincarnation of Plato. Mr. Muck has referred to planetoids as coming from out of the "Adonis Group". He considers the Adonis Group as being all of the cosmic bodies known as planetoids.

Otto Muck - "controlled" & inspired 60.173-178

For many years, the Plejarens have controlled Otto Muck, who has been inspired by them for certain things. He should achieve great publicity from the results of his research that will prepare humanity for the truth about the events of Atlantis and Mu. He has accomplished this with a book and a magazine article.

Otto Muck - communication with him 61.116-118

Otto Muck has died and left this world. As such, he is no longer readily addressable. In order to do so, he would have to be disturbed in his present state of existence. It is not allowed for the Plejarens to do this without really deep-seated reasons.

They are the distant descendents of those who performed the actual colonization of Earth 12,000 years ago and responsible for the ancient history of the white races. Among them was an IHWH, whom Enoch received great wisdom. Methuselah had also gone to the IHWH and built Noah's ark with help from his guardians, which landed on Mount Ararat. Noah did not construct the ark with his family and animals as is falsely reported today.

Pope Paul VI poisoned 55.70-76

Meier asked Semjase about a prediction made by Asket that Pope Paul VI would be poisoned shortly after taking office. However, the Pope appears to continue to live. Since all of Asket's other predictions came to pass as predicted, he asked why this prediction did not come true and was told that the prediction had come true two years after his nomination for being Pope. Semjase explained what happened to Meier under the condition that this information must not be disclosed.

Pope Paul VI dethroned & murdered 56.1-11

Meier was provided with more information regarding the dethronement and murdering of Pope Paul VI, under the condition that it remain confidential. He was also told that, in order for the truth of this immense intrigue and series of murders to never become known, the Catholic office eradicated every drawing and notice of birth registration. As a result, today there does not exist anything that indicates the existence of the true Pope and his relatives.

8.3.8 Quetzalcoatl

Quetzalcoatl 55.174-178

Quetzalcoatl was a very high officer or high supervisor of an extraterrestrial group, which was active in the region known today as Egypt. Because he was very knowledgeable and wise, he was often ordered on special missions. One such mission brought him to South America, where he was worshiped as a god by the Aztec people. He owned a small spaceship, which he could have used to strengthen this impression, but this was not his intention. However, after he met with another commissioner by the name of Huitzilopochtli, he changed his conduct.

Huitzilopochtli - Gizeh Intelligences 55.179-182

A leader of the Gizeh Intelligences was an extraterrestrial by the name of Huitzilopochtli, who exercised a bloody sacrificial government over the Aztecs. He was insatiable in his demand for sacrificial human blood and Quetzalcoatl was against this. They became enemies of one another and each tried to be the leader of the people. But, by wicked deceit and deceptive machinations, Huitzilopochtli succeeded in expelling Quetzalcoatl, who returned to Egypt.

8.3.9 Reiz

Mr. Reiz's Rosicrucian notes & charts 55.220-222

Meier asked Semjase to review a book and drawings by a Mr. Ing. Reiz and she agreed to examine everything thoroughly.

Mr. Reiz - Disclosed Secrets 57.157-160

Meier asked Semjase to also review a paper sent to him from Mr. Reiz, which deals with a certain Lord Surya. Semjase asked Meier to forward her thanks and greetings to Mr. Reiz and agreed to review it.

Mr. Reiz's Rosicrucian notes & charts 62.71-82

Concerning the book by Mr. Reiz, Semjase stated that the notifications are in error corresponding to a hierarchy, which is connected to a technique. He has written about spiritual forces and techniques that he does not fully understand and has associated it with hierarchical constructions. As a result, his drawings are completely worthless.

Regarding the book, she tried in vain to prove the notes in the book and was unable to find any proof for any of the details. But, after returning from vacation, this will be reviewed again. A final answer will not be available for at least six months. Semjase believes that the books of Mr. Reiz are not of much worth because they originated in a form of thinking in hierarchical values that has led him astray. Earthly humans have great difficulty in liberating themselves from their religious beliefs and other heresies. They undertake this damage with open eyes and devote belief to the cheaters and imposters.

8.3.12 Stetter, Amata

Relationship to ancient Aryan group 53.

Amata Stetter has a relationship to an ancient Aryan group that is hidden on Earth. She has written a book with false statements. Mistakes and errors have to be confessed.

Amata Stetter's teleprojection 57.Q 5-9

Amata Stetter asks about great spaceships with many cabins. Quetzal states that this is a description of very great emigration ships with a diameter of 120 kilometers and seating for about one million human forms of life. (See section 4.2.8)

Tele-projections of IHWH & others 57.Q13-21

Amata received tele-projections from the Plejarens of the craft in extremely reduced size because she could not conceive of the gigantic size of the ships. Meier also saw a tele-projection that was used to dissolve a memory. He saw a human clothed in white garments that represented the Plejaren forefathers of about 70,000 years ago. Amata did see UFOs floating above the trees, just as she says. There were visible rays between the ships that served as connections for the formations and Amata also saw these. She is a very late descendent of the brother of an IHWH, that Meier saw, belonging to a group of Plejaren forefathers that mingled with humanity and forgot their actual origins. One of the tasks that the Plejarens have on Earth is to locate and care for the descendents of this group, including Amata. The tele-projection exposed the brother of the old IHWH in order to release further memories inside of Amata.

Plans for taking Amata under control 57.Q28-38

Meier expresses concern that there may be a danger when Amata occupies herself very much in the tele-projections that she may over-strengthen herself from them. Quetzal agrees that it is not beneficial for her to occupy herself too much in them because she could start to suffer from imaginations, which could lead to troubles. He asks Meier to bring her near their ships next Saturday when she arrives for his group meeting. At a certain distance from his ship, Quetzal will order him to stop and remain there with Amata. He says that when he calls for Meier and Amata is left waiting, she will be taken under Plejaren control. She should not fear this or the projections. Meier is told to be ready with Amata on Saturday.

Plejarens take Amata under control 58.Q13-18

Quetzal tells Meier that he should bring Amata there to the contact point, where he will direct him to take her to a certain place. He also gives Meier something to give to Amata, which she should eat. Meier agrees to do this and return with Amata at 3:30 AM. Meier drove back to where his friends were in an open field near Wetzikon and they all drove to a UFO viewing place near the contact point. Then, Meier drove with Amata on his motor scooter to the contact point again where everything took place according to Quetzal's plan.

8.4 Characteristics

Insane People are underdeveloped 31.A137-140

Asket states that she is a very highly developed form of life that can no longer move in respect to low levels like earthly human beings. She is not being pretentious, but complying to a law of Creation. Likewise, earthly humans may no longer relate to lower levels of life, such as with those who are insane, those who are still young and ignorant, and those who have not yet developed themselves.

Miracles versus logical reason 34.S429-434

The inability to understand bazaar concepts is characteristic of ignorant and doubting human beings of Earth. So, there should be no attempt to convince them of matters that they cannot accept. It was useless for him to offer proof of UFOs because the understanding of humanity was lacking in concerns that were not sponsored by the established powers. Visible proof was necessary for the people of earlier ages in order to provide them with certain forms of thinking. With visible proof, they started to believe in marvels before going astray once more. This time has passed on Earth and there must now only be the way of clear and logical reason with open minds.

Passion for adventure 39.45-57

Semjase expresses surprise to learn that Meier has brought his pistol with him on a trip into Earth's distant past. Meier states that this was necessary in the event that a dinosaur may want to take an interest in him and he would want to greet him in the proper manner. Semjase says that it is well that he brought it with him, but she does not understand why he has no fear since such animals can be very angry. Meier responds by saying that he would like to attempt to gently rub the chin of such an animal. Semjase becomes alarmed and says that she cannot allow such a thing to occur. She admits that earthly humans still have certain characteristics, which are no longer possessed by her race such as a passion for adventure.

Earth humans - characteristics 39.P41-53

The proportional beauty of earthly humans was recognized in old Greece, with humans that surpassed this standard of beauty and were called "Adonis". In that time, humans were a bit wider with only a few who were recognized with real beauty and called the "Beauties". Presently, when people lay aside their greater wildness and consciously care for their appearance, the beauty in their whole outlook becomes apparent. Today, nearly all of humanity on Earth is spoken of as Adonis shapes. This refers to their physiological shape as well as their proportional form.

Earthly humans are one of the best looking human forms of life in the universe, which is only slightly surpassed by their actual ancestors who have reached the best possible perfection in proportion ever seen. Super earthly beauties are expressed fantasies of ignorant forms of life that want to make believe in their deceptive affirmations of having come in contact with extraterrestrials. In the entire universe, the standard for beauty cannot be surpassed because it is truly limited. When this limit is surpassed, than degeneration results and the concerned person is considered ugly again. So, a super earthly beauty cannot exist. Every material thing is subject to certain limits that can never be surpassed. Only fantasy is able to surpass these limits, but without ever being able to realize it physically.

Materialism & anti-materialism 39.P90-148

Ptaah tells Meier that he holds him in high regard, but cannot see his modesty as a good thing because it does not suit his level of development. He is too modest and, as a result, he is unable to arrange himself to his world regarding material matters. Ptaah says that it would be better for him and his family if he would care just a little for materialism, which is demanded on Earth. Meier admits to being an anti-materialist, but says this is necessary for him to complete his mission. Ptaah reminds him that the prophets before his time depended upon donations in order to exist.

Evolutional law, different poles 41.102-105

Always, two differently oriented poles must come together in order for evolution to progress. This means that these two poles constantly rub each other and two different opinions are pushed together. As a result of this, for purposes of evolution, differences of opinion arise. This is an irrevocable law of evolution, which all creatures in all universes are subjected.

Duplicity of Earth humans 64.23-49

Meier asks Semjase why he was always urged to give lectures and write articles. She says that this was necessary for the Plejarens to examine the reality of human behavior on Earth. For several years, the Earth was only watched and recorded by the Plejarens. Their attention was mainly directed at some ufology groups. Information was mainly derived from the writings of these groups and evaluated. This gave the impression that humanity was ready for contact. Because they were not allowed to analyze the innermost thoughts of people, they were unable to realize the forms of thinking of humanity as being very complicated and illogical. Because of this thinking process, earthly humans were able to write and publish information that was completely different and distorted than how they actually thought. Unfortunately, the Plejarens were only able to discover this when they came into personal contact with Meier and learned, with his help, the truth about earthly human thinking.

Afterwards, they were able to work with this matter in the proper way. They had to realize that they had been deluding themselves for decades regarding the double character of humanity. Such duplicity was completely unknown to them because they had never experienced it before. This has caused the Plejarens to become informed in detail about the real conditions of human thinking on Earth. They ordered Meier to produce lectures and articles to reach the broad mass of the world's public for a worldwide examination. This revealed the true opinions and views of the earthly humans to them. Thanks to Meier's group, they reached all of the circles important to them.

Governments, which received Meier's explanations with great interest, forwarded special orders so that the public was able to confront these problems, which no ufology group has succeeded in accomplishing. The ufologists were of the greatest importance to the Plejarens, for they needed to explore their real views. They were successful in accomplishing this, but the result was very depressing. It showed that earthly humans were still not able to dedicate themselves in any real manner to the existence of extraterrestrials and their concerns. These ufologists, who were tasked with spreading the truth and preparing the way for alien contacts, have humiliated themselves as a primitive, semi-scientific sect that only spread their nonsense of self-constructed theories. This has resulted in distancing humanity even more from the truth.

34% chance of Meier rejecting contact 64.58-62

Regarding Meier's participation in the Plejaren examination of actual human thinking, he says that he surely would have done so because he is straight forward in wanting to help, even if there is no hope of success. Semjase states that their calculations showed that there was a 34% probability that he would have acted against their wishes and their examinations would have failed. This percentage is astonishingly low and demonstrates his logic. Meier says that sometimes, he can be a little sensible and always hopes for the responsibility of humanity on Earth. Semjase agrees with him and says they often have the same concerns.

Presents, usually given as obligation 66.1-8

When Meier brings a wrapped present to Semjase from Herbert, she says that she cannot accept any goods. He tells her that it is a present and not goods. Goods represent a payment while a present is equal to feelings of love and a desire to delight another. She states that this definition does not agree with her understanding of earthly human behavior and asks if this is only his understanding of a few same-minded people. He says that is possible. People generally give presents only when they feel obligated to do so and usually under mutual exchange. Meier strives to ensure that misunderstandings do not occur with the true meaning of words and their intent. As a result, long explanations are always necessary. Semjase unwraps the present and is pleasantly surprised to discover that it is a soft and warm Teddy Bear. She expresses her delight and her gratitude for it, but is confused by her emotions. (See section 4.3.1)

Humans governed by materialism 66.92-93

Earthly humans have become governed by their material side. As a result, their evolution runs in this direction while their spiritual side is injured and falls behind. Their technologies are more developed than their spiritual evolution.

Materialism-influence of earlier ages 66.106-109

The material thinking of earthly humans is very decisive for their lives of feelings. The more that people entangle themselves with the material thinking of earlier ages, the more they are influenced by a life of feelings based on greed and possessions. Step by step, they have connected their material thinking to the feeling portion of the brain, which has resulted in a feelings-thought complex. This has caused the feelings of love and hate to be impregnated by material values, resulting in a hunger to possess love and a greed for hate.

Materialism & anti-materialism 66.113-115

The more non-materialistic the thinking of earthly humans become, the more distance there is from the thinking for possessions. So, the standard of liberation at each spiritual level, in respect to the thinking about possessions, really serves as a measurement of the level of evolution. A fully, anti-materialistic thinking human being is no longer able to experience envy because the thinking has become all encompassing, which considers all possessions unworthy. Instead, all general goods are thought, with love and delight, to be common for everyone within the observance of the law.

Illogical thinking of Earth humans 68.14-22

Semjase expresses concern about the dangers to Meier's life. She says that the illogical nature of earthly humans cause many worries for the Plejarens and are often led astray by this. As a result, she asks him to protect himself until they have undertaken the means for eliminating the danger. He agrees, but asks if things are really that serious. She states that he does not think correctly and should consider this matter earnestly. Different influenced elements will not shrink from any means to stop him. No lie will be too great for them in this purpose. Meier, and his group, must hold together because there will be numerous intrigues against him.

Humans assume the truth of another 68.61

Height - normal to race 69.68-77

All races of human beings grow to normal size according to Plejaren terms. Humans grow to the normal size according to their race. They are only abnormal in height when there is degeneration in a race. The initial reasons for the size of the earthly human race are due to the cross-couplings with extraterrestrials and the influences of the Earth, which is only able to bear smaller beings. Although some of humanity's forefathers were giants, they also became smaller in size, during the passage of time, until they reached the same average size due to Earth's influence. There are exceptions within the Plejaren race as there are on Earth. The size of other races has been preserved since ancient times with dwarf-like and gigantic races.

Prejudices 76.1-6

In this contact, a dark-skinned woman of Lyrian descent by the name of Menara meets Meier. She expresses gratitude for his open feelings that do not distinguish between the race and skin color of human beings. She knows that on Earth, there are a great many people who are subject to racial prejudices and she wanted to explore his thoughts about this. She expresses great delight to learn of his true feelings about this. Meier is also pleased and complements her on being very pretty.

8.4.1 Age, obtainable

Age, obtainable 3.33-36

Human beings may become thousands or even hundreds of thousands of years old when they have reached a certain level in spiritual development. But past this stage, the spirit no longer needs a physical body and becomes purely a spiritual body. In very high spheres of spirituality, they can no longer be communicated with from our level of existence.

Age is controlled by genetics 8.170-176

The genes as well as other factors such as outside influences condition age. The laws controlling age are of equal value throughout the universe. When the Plejarens have a higher expectation of age than on Earth, then it is conditioned by life. Research and evolution also plays a decisive role. The Plejarens are not allowed to reveal how to influence life's expectation for age.

Age of each creature - factors 39.P59-636

The forces of thinking of each single human being can raise or lower the life force of their fellow creatures. For example, the age of every creature is partly determined by the penetration of its outer forces by others of the same form of life. The thinking of a form of life, in cooperation with its spirit, generates an extremely logical creational force, which is released as high frequency radiation. An immense force is generated, which is able to influence everything. This creational force penetrates all material forms of life and influences it according to its kind and form. Every form of life has a time for living that is adapted to its spiritual level, including the human beings of Earth.

Earth humans - prior life span 39.P64-76

In early times, when their ancestors procreated earthly humans, their average life span was 1,007 years. They were taught by their procreators and possessed an enormous spiritual level of knowledge and abilities. But, they rapidly fell into religions with their heresies and lost all true knowledge. They began to work against natural law and lived under the bondage of self-created laws. This resulted in the loss of their average span of life to a twentieth of their earlier span. Since the beginning of the Age of Aquarius, the average span of life is slowly increasing. The main reason for this is because of the acknowledgement of truth and connected spiritual direction.

The genetic and other factors, that had been wickedly influenced, regulate themselves again. The mass of earthly humans moving in spiritual form is still relatively low, which results in no great progress being achieved. But, the more that earthly humans turn towards the truth, the longer the average life span is increased. Every form of life has an important meaning in its thinking and released forces. Every thought radiates out as a great force and strikes other creatures that attract this force like magnets. According to their qualities of being negative, positive, or balanced, they generate kindred forces in the receiving creatures. Good forces generate good forces. Likewise, the same is true for bad and evil forces.

8.4.2 Barbarians

Humans, barbarous, greedy & want power 4.79-83

Scientists on Earth are working to create the same type of beamship protection screen that the Plejarens have and it will not be long before they have it perfected. Within the framework of evolution, earthly humans must first develop themselves to a greater level before they are able to solve these secrets and not simply use them to damage others. Even when they have reached this level, barbarous people will exercise their technical abilities for evil minded and power hungry motives. This has also occurred on other worlds. Yet, when humanity on Earth reaches the necessary knowledge to fly to other worlds, they will not always be victorious over other races.

Natural barbarism - usefulness 9.15-29

Earthly humans are barbarous, impetuous in their research, and often unscrupulous. But, barbarism is particular to many creatures, for it is naturally suited as a means to guarantee life initially. This form of barbarism is free of degeneration and enables higher spiritual improvement when the spirit obtains the necessary concepts. It is not true that humanity should be abused and degraded as an evil monstrosity. They are descended from wild ancestors and must go their own way of evolution. This way leads to much need, misery, and troubles in order to gain concepts and knowledge. The hardness of a certain barbarism is needed in order to claim a new lifestyle.

Initially, this barbarism allows for research and development in order to obtain the strength to overcome certain imprisoning things, which obstruct progress. This is especially true of strong religious concepts, which hamper progress in every way and even stifles spiritual growth. Fruitful research is only obtained when religious fancies are turned away and a search for the truth is undertaken. This does not affect the awe of life and the Creation. The awe of life and the Creation becomes more incited by the cognition from the research.

Mankind may recognize the fact that in order to become liberated from sickness, it is necessary to analyze the sickness and means of protection. The destruction of life for exploration purposes is a necessary trait of barbarism. Because this generates the necessary strength, all kinds of evolution of barbarism are experienced. By lying under strong imaginations of beliefs, human beings are never able to allow decisive life-sponsoring development because their thinking is too one-sided and too humane to act appropriately and degeneration occurs.

Barbarians - comment by Meier 57.186-190

When Meier mentioned that he was delighted to see others laboring up a mountain slope while he was able to drive past them effortlessly on his motorcycle, Semjase said that was very unmannerly of him. He replied that it was malicious joy. Semjase called him a barbarian for having constant desires for adventures. Meier said that, because he lived in a world of barbarians, he has become one and he was glad about it because he has experienced a lot as a result of it. In spite of that, Semjase told him to be careful on his motorcycle because his monster is not secure enough.

8.4.3 Birth Control and Abortion

Birth Control & Abortions 57.143-153

The Plejarens have no need for such things as the birth control pill. They observe the natural order of periodic regulations. Their sexual demands appear outside of the normal times of infidelity for women. So, they use many types of natural means in order to prevent pregnancy. One of their methods is for the man to pull out before reaching a climax. However, undesired pregnancies do happen. Every Plejaren woman possesses the technical means for detecting pregnancy after only three days.

When an undesired pregnancy occurs, natural preparations are taken that cause early menstruation so that the fertilized ovum is expelled before it can develop. This is not abortion because there is no destruction of a life with a spirit. This is seen differently on Earth because early detection of pregnancy is still very limited there. They are only able to recognize a pregnancy when a spirit has inhabited the newly procreated form of life. A destruction of the fetus at this stage is considered murder and is no longer permitted under natural laws except when the pregnancy menaces the life of the mother.

Pope - prejudices of birth control 57.156

Sexual matters with earthly humans are prejudiced in a narrow respect where the Pope plays a decisive part.

Birth Control 58.3-11

If the maximum limit of children is reached in a family on a planet that is menaced by overpopulation, natural plant substances can be added to their food in order to prevent further pregnancies. This, or some other method, is necessary when a planet is no longer able to sustain a certain number of humans without artificial interference. It is related to spiritual evolution. A command only prevails for birth control when it is initially introduced.

8.4.4 Couples

Guilt 23.14-22

The laws of Emmanuel, with respect to matrimony and intercourse, are valid throughout the universe. When forms of life, against their better judgment, consciously bring guilt upon themselves, then they must give atonement for it, as the law of justice dictates. If the consciously loaded guilt of a form of life is too much to expiate within their lifetime, then the entity is unworthy of life and looses the justification for existence. Expiation then becomes valid after rebirth when the life is then limited to the rest of the time of the formerly eliminated life. But, this is only valid for entities with a barbarous nature because they are only able to conceive of this law.

If the entity reaches a level of higher spiritual development with time, then the exercise of the laws also become changed. It is not true when charlatans say the extraterrestrials are super humans and no longer need laws and restrictions to live by. Only when creational order has become accepted, then laws and restrictions fall away. This is the case in very high spiritual spheres, where all connections to material needs belong to the past. Entities, with physical bodies, are afflicted with too many faults to do away with laws that provide order for their level of development.

Marriage - meaning for each partner 66.122-125

When the Plejarens join together in matrimony, it is not a taking of possession of a partner, but a connection in harmony. There are no rights of possession, but only love, understanding, and delight about enjoying each other. Each partner remains completely free within the matrimonial laws, such as the mutual agreement of all matters.

8.4.5 Deceivers, Doubters

Deceivers 3.6-9

Meier comments on how earthly humans appear to be unable to accept the truth and prefer to flee into a fantasy world of shame and hope for help. Because they cannot bear responsibility for themselves, they roll it over to a god that they pretend stands above them and would lead their fates. Semjase agrees and says that humanity ought to carry responsibility for their actions. Instead, they put their fantasy above them, which they call religion or god. When deceivers describe extraterrestrials according to their own fantasies, this is nothing more than infamous lies from spiritually poor people that allude to a better life in their fantasy. Because they cannot reach this in their lifetime, they simply ascribe it to aliens and make them into something perfect.

Doubters of the Plejaren race 8.208-231

When Meier tells Semjase of the requests from people that they desire to meet her and see her spaceship, she says that this is impossible, under any circumstances. He is the only person that they will meet with. These people making this request do so because they doubt what he says and want their own proof. They believe themselves to be rational thinkers, but this is not the case. Their recognition of reality is not based on knowledge and concepts, but on faulty reasoning. They believe that something is only real if they can see it with their own eyes. But what they do not consider is that they can be deceived by what they believe they see. Proof is only valid if it is founded in knowledge and recognition and only spiritual hard work enables real recognition and never by simply looking.

For this reason, they provided him with the ability to obtain photographic evidence to confirm the existence of their beamships. Even though he has many good pictures, people do not believe him. On the contrary, further evidence is demanded for the Plejarens to break their own principles and make contact with other people. They will not do this or deviate from their own objectives. They neither desire nor are allowed to use coercion in order to convince humanity of the truth. They are only allowed to do what is within their mission of meeting with him alone and having him spread the truth from his own estimation. Meier is asked to explain to his friends that they are not willing to grant their demands for contact. She has given him many chances to obtain good photographs of her beamship, which are still doubted by many people. So, this must suffice. It is neither their mission, nor his to convince the doubters and critics of the truth. His mission consists of many other things.

Doubters 12.10-18

Semjase says that she did not mean for people to be photographed along with her ship and she does not approve of it. When asked why, she says that she objects to certain people being photographed with her craft when such evidence is not valid proof for them and whose thoughts are filled with doubt, criticism, and other harmful things. Three of the photographed people will be caught doubting it. A fourth person is very disturbing and forms a dangerous element that could cause others to question their efforts. This person is far too captured by worldly affairs to conform to real spiritual lessons. She will even doubt what she sees with her own eyes and lacks all spiritual abilities. When Meier states that even doubters have the right to evidence and conviction, Semjase agrees, but says that these kinds of doubts are established in materialism and in disbelief, which rise from a material intellect where all spiritual and intellectual talents are missing completely. This is because of a personal religious prison that the person cannot set herself free. Such factors are only disadvantageous and harmful to his group.

Contactees with beings from Venus 29.42-43

Semjase states that, within a few years, scientists on Earth will determine that there are no human forms of life on Venus as described by charlatans and deceivers. It is not important if people reject her explanations because earthly scientists will provide proof that several pseudo contactees are only bad deceivers and charlatans.

Jakob Lorber's books are fantasy 31.P201-213

Meier stated that Jakob Lorber wrote about cosmic bodies, which appear as stars outwardly, while being inhabited inside as a planet. Ptaah responded by saying that many humans on Earth write about things that are fantasies connected with delusional imagination of religious influences. This is an evil that is widely experienced on Earth. The fantasy of inhabitable stars is only delusion of religious fanatics because there is not a single star in the universe that is inhabitable.

In a few cases, such inspirations are true, but they are never in connection with angels or gods of religious forms. Religions only exist on the Earth and nowhere else in this universe or any other universe. Earthly religions have been brought to other worlds for study purposes, but the inhabitants of other worlds are taught how religions can be deadly for creatures and the Earth serves as a wicked example.

Friends To The Stars-secret UFO group 53.

Friends To The Stars is a secret UFO group in France that began in 1953. They published books in 1997 that contain fraudulent material.

Malicious person for technology 56.25-29

Semjase warns Meier to be careful when speaking around a certain person that acts as a spy for the Plejaren's technical abilities, etc. This is a person of wicked materialistic tendencies and degenerate evil. Meier assures her that he is aware of this and tells her not to worry. He is prepared and even promises of millions leave him cool to the idea.

She knows that he is confidently able to perform his mission, but she had to warn him because this person is very malicious.

Hobby journalists & trained scientists 57.6-16

Hobby and trained scientists of Earth are very stubborn and cannot be educated. They all just cling to their assertions even though they are often wrong, but they believe they know the truth. So, any answer to their questions would be in vane. The posing of a trick question by a hobby geologist is very silly and does not indicate a very expressed spiritual activity. If she had put the question in a sincere and logical manner, then she would have received a suitable answer. This kind of questioning indicates that this person is very prejudiced about herself and not sincerely taking much interest in the answer. How else would she dare to put a question in such a false and lying manner? The question is answered, not for her behalf, but out of respect to the truly interested ones.

Michael Arends & Mario Bertossi 63.50-64

Articles in newspapers and magazines recently about UFOs have shaken things up and provided greater awareness. Although there is no official announcement, TV and radio broadcasters will dare to comment about this theme. This will cause UFO debunkers, Arends and Bertossi, to become angry especially when they realize that their intrigues against Meier and his group are just causing greater success for them. Although they still attempt to discredit Semjase and say that she is trying to conquer the Earth, any half way reasonable person should see the silliness and primitive nature of both men. If these were her plans, they would have been carried out long ago.

Earthly primitive atomic weapons do not frighten her and no obstructions could be put up against her. Only rather ill and quite silly primitive brains could breed such nonsense. Those who think reasonably, then their way would lead to Meier. With help from the contact reports, they would become convinced. Because of the triads of Arends and Bertossi, they have disturbed so much of Germany it threatens to spill over to other countries. Meier should not appear locally again until the two ne'er-do-wells are completely done, admit their blame, and plead to apologize to him. Instead, he should speak only to good close circles of friends in Germany.

Jupiter & spaceship photos - hoax 68.35-40

Meier expressed concern that a television show on November 8, 1976 contained good quality exposures of Venus, Mars, and Jupiter as well as Ptaah's beamship and that he would be accused of making photographs from the TV screen. Semjase told him that the pictures were artificially produced from information that was imparted telepathically in order to prepare earthly humans for certain things. The outline of Ptaah's greatspacer was deliberately transmitted for this purpose. She expressed concern that it may have been a mistake for them to provide the cross fades. But, they first had to learn more about humanity of Earth. Meier is told to do nothing about it.

Cautions about deceivers 31.90-109

Many deceivers will say that he should not accuse them of deceit and will wrongfully say that he accuses all contactees of deceit. Although there will be one person that will blame Meier for calling all contactees as deceivers, he should not be upset by this. Eventually, the truth will become known and those who made the false accusations will suffer as a result of it. When they speak about deceivers, they do so with the knowledge of future events and have recognized the deceivers. It is known that there are many contactees on Earth, but most of those remain silent about it.

However there are only a few who have been selected for a mission. Among these few, deceivers have penetrated and this will continue to happen. In 1975, there will be seven people who will pretend to be contactees. In later years, many of them will be discovered as deceivers. At present, 2.7 million people on Earth have seen UFOs. Among these, only 3,104 have had direct contact with extraterrestrial beings and few of those have disclosed it. These are really a very few out of a total of about three million.

8.4.6 Face, a person’s

Face, a person's 7.177-179

Every spirit owns a body that is especially tuned to them in order to live out their life in material form. Over eons of time, the facial appearance of every body incarnated into nearly always remains the same. It changes very slowly until a high spiritual level is obtained. At very low and very high spiritual positions, the faces of all incarnated bodies begin to equalize into one another.

Perception of other human beings 10.137-192

Human beings should always be conscious of the Creation, without which they would not be able to breathe, generate a single thought, recognize anything, see, hear, nor experience anything. The creational spirit is nearer to human beings than their own breath. Sooner or later, humans become aware of the reality of Creation because they are the life of its life, the spirit of its spirit, and the existence, which exceeds all human thinking. Then, all material-intellectual thinking becomes meaningless. The spirit is able to live without eyes, ears, arms, legs, or even outer reason and consciousness. But, there is always something there that enables them to live on and that is their own creational force. The spiritual consciousness in humans as all-realizing, all-registering, infinite beauty, worth, and bliss, should hold the word Creation for absolute importance.

Humans that are full of creational-spiritual truth, knowledge, love, and recognition identify themselves with everything and everyone. Within themselves, they identify their spiritual consciousness with everything in the universe including others who think materially, identify themselves with their bodies, money, and possessions as well as with those who love to preach false lessons. Those who identify themselves with the whole universe no longer have hate within them because there are no longer any selfish differences. Even though others claim something as their exclusive property, spiritual-thinking people identify themselves with the truth and keep everything inside for their own. All fear vanishes in the identity with the truth of Creation and spirit, with which they are united.

The spiritual ones are protected and sheltered and all of nature is kind towards them. Even their enemies will serve him. Their attacks, cause the spirit within them to unfold itself into an even greater force and might that conquers all evil, coarse and degenerate. The enemies only contribute to the growing of spiritual thinking and recognition of the truth. Those who are evil, wicked, and bad, think they can destroy the spiritual ones with criticism, lies, denials, objections, false affirmations, heresies, and cursing, but they injure only themselves. Their actions provide evidence of spiritual foolishness and ignorance. From this, spiritual-thinking beings learn still more and become even greater and mightier in spirit.

8.4.7 Government

Many leaders of Earth are led astray 31.A166-171

Earthly humans stay in touch with creatures who are at very low levels and are only slightly more developed than the humans on Earth. People feel inspired by them. But, they are also led astray, deceived, and denied. Moreover, there are other low creatures that are hungry for power and want to hold themselves above humanity on Earth. They benefit from earthly religious heresies by influencing those who have fallen from religion for their desires for power. These lower forms of life are only partly interested in the humans of Earth. There are many menaces behind these contacts and there is great danger that people on Earth will unfortunately only recognize when evil wars and catastrophes have broken down upon them. Many power-hungry leaders on Earth are wickedly influenced unconsciously by such entities to initiate their desired death, damage, ignorance, hate, and destruction.

Politicians & Scientists - removal 45.117-119

Earth's politicians and scientists are absolutely irresponsible creatures. Their power ought to be withdrawn and replaced by reasonable and responsible forces. But, this is regrettably, only achieved with power that would be exercised by the people themselves.

American government of 3 powers 60.1-8

Unofficially, America is governed by several kinds of governments. There is the presidential government, but there is also the Pentagon and the CIA. Officially, they belong together, but in truth, all three of them inwardly work for themselves. As a result, they form their own governments in a certain respect. The presidential government has several materials of extraterrestrial origin, but the Plejarens have no knowledge of the Pentagon having several dead extraterrestrial bodies. This may be true, but this is unknown to the Plejarens and they have been unable to acquire clear information about this.

8.4.8 Healers, spiritual

Spiritual healers - many are cheats 7.76-79

Numerous so-called spiritual healers are simple cheaters and charlatans, who only rely on the absolutely false beliefs of their patients and followers, who cure themselves. However, there are also many people who indeed are able to exercise their spiritual forces for the benefit of their fellow beings. The names of those who are deceivers and failures must be kept secret in order to avoid further evil. Generally, the greatest deceivers have the greatest and best-sounding names while real experts are mostly unknown.

8.4.9 Intelligence

Brain acids carry spiritual wisdom 8.65-79

Intelligence is caused by spiritual evolution and not by genes. Spiritual thinking results in spiritual knowledge, wisdom, and intelligence, which are pure factors of the spirit. These also precipitate organically in the brain, which consists of acid substances. These acids form the carriers of spiritual wisdom and intelligence in solid form, while the spirit hides within it, the essentially same knowledge in fine material form. As course material forms of life, everything is destined as two factors. The pure spiritual, or fine material form of life, also exists in a course material form. Wisdom and intelligence exists as spiritual energy as well as in course-material form as organic acids.

This enables wisdom and intelligence to be transplanted in course matter. This also means that these acids can be taken from a brain and transplanted to another brain. In such a way, whole races of creatures can be brought to a unitary level of wisdom, knowledge, and intelligence without every single being having to go through the different evolutionary periods. Even a new form of spirit can become a highly developed form of knowledge and life. Earthly scientists have been working on this for a long time and have obtained good success even though the public is not aware of it. Thus, intelligence and wisdom is not caused by genetics because they can be transmitted and brought along by the enlivening of the body spirit.

As a result, an intellectual or very wise human being can bear descendents, which are considered as insane or idiotic, while reverse spiritual and intellectually weak humans can create descendents of great spiritual and intellectual development. This is only connected to how far a spirit has developed in knowledge. If wisdom and intelligence were only a condition of genes, then a new spirit would never find a new body and an existing form of life would quickly die out because it was spiritualized too rapidly. Always higher developed life would be created and new spirits would have no chance for life.

Truth and ignorance 10.193-211

Truth is absolute and not simply suggestions. For the common-thinking humans that have been led astray by religion, their lives are fully susceptible to bad suggestions, fancied imaginations, heresies, and acceptances of delusion. The only chance and the only way to remove these hurts is to recognize all human fancies, observe truth, and let it govern over the highest creational-spiritual forces. All invalid suggestions and human fantasies become corrected when human beings notice, "I am a part of Creation, which enlivens my spirit". When humans realize their fantasies and illusions through recognition of the creational-spiritual force, truth, and reality, their eagerness for life is not lowered. Instead, their lives unfold and drive to unexpected heights.

Only truth is valid and always remains truth. Truth can be relied upon for all of eternity and is never, under any circumstances, in need of correction. Truth never needs to be corrected for another time. It will always remain the same and sounds the same, even if it is told with other words. It is a rock, which can be built upon for all times and in all spaces. Truth existed before life and it will exist afterwards. That which only exists for a short time is a danger, delusion, and a heresy. Creation and truth are always the same. They are always equally ever-lasting and of eternal equal worth. They never change, either in name or form because Creation and truth are without name and form. Thus, humanity should cling to Creation because only Creation is the truth. Truth, as with Creation itself, is eternal and cannot perish. It is perfect and worth all of human energies because in this, they will not be led astray. When humans cling to the truth, they remain balanced in calmness, joy, knowledge, love, strength, and wisdom in all matters. Only the Creation is infinite wisdom and truth without any error.

8.4.10 Law, Swiss

Semjase finds stupid & primitive laws 14.62-67

Semjase scrutinized Swiss laws and have noticed that there are very many laws, which are unworthy of humanity in every respect. She found that they are often stupid and primitive and became tired of studying them. Only very few laws were found to be logical and lawful. 93% of the laws are without human dignity, reason, or logic. She previously knew that many laws were not good, but she had no reason to study them until Meier made her aware of their true nature. What she found was worse than her worst expectations. Meier stated that people, as a whole, must oppose these laws in order to initiate a change for the better. Semjase agreed and stated that a single individual is needed to offer the idea, which will cause the masses to support him. But, people will only respond when things become intolerable. In order for things to change for the better, the people must first take down the enslaving religions so that reason and wisdom will enable recognitions.

8.4.11 Mental Illness

Mental illness 8.80-90

Real mental diseases result from a powerful confusion in knowledge of spirits that were already educated. As the genes become influenced by the spirit, they acquire the confused impulses, store them, and create the confused idea into a confused form of life. This hurts normal creatures from generation to generation by the irresistible further development of the spirit periodically causing conditioned evolution. This means that the confused spirit's crucial functions of the genes become afflicted with the improper regulation of certain factors. This improper regulation causes its impulses to intermingle with the brain's acids and affect the same wrong factors to evoke a confusion, which then becomes organic.

The evolution of the spirit can cause the confusion to become normal again over generations. Each hurt form of life can be burdened differently along with their descendants. The development of the descendants can be hurt, more so with low developed spirits than highly developed ones, which are even able to neutralize such wrong regulation. So, it is absolutely possible for the descendants of insane creatures to become normal. After many generations, when all is normal again, there can be small lingering factors that break out as afflictions.

8.4.12 Names

Names - according to position 69.79-80

Throughout the whole universe, names are selected for all forms of life exactly in accordance in connection with their position in evolution. However on Earth, humans are unconsciously not behaving very much in this manner. They give names to people, which are completely unsuited. The name given to a human, according to this regulation of order, should correspond to their position of knowledge and abilities as well as their level of evolution. Otherwise, disharmony occurs within the material and spiritual sphere of life, which results in confusion and wrong influences that cause the person to go astray in their development.

8.4.13 Secret societies

Danger from the Bafath in Gizeh pyramid E4.33-44

Asket told Meier that the power of the Bafath creatures is very great. They are wicked entities inside the pyramid of Gizeh, who originated from the ring-fog area. They are descendents of the originators of humanity on Earth and they seek to obtain their influence everywhere. They do not shrink from any intrigues nor infamous pieces of work in order to reach the goals of their delusion and greediness. Meier will meet with the authoritative group in Europe. But, he will have to close this contact within 10 years because the situation will require it. He will be pursued and in jeopardy of his life before being able to resume contact for another 10 years when he is ordered to do so by another creature of this universe. The interrupted contacts will be necessary for Meier to become known to the public with proof of extraterrestrial contacts that he will show to others. Then, wicked accusations will be made against him in an attempt to destroy him. But, reasonable human beings will acknowledge the truth of his reports. This can only be possible when the true events of life rule and guide these matters. This is a matter of fact for all thinking people with enough reason and brains, who will look at his indisputable proof and become beneficial to him.

St. Germain & Rosicrucians 44.47-49

St. Germain performed many things in order to fulfill his mission for the Community of Rosicrucians. These were dangerous things that would have enabled them to seize command over the world for themselves had not the other side seen fit to regulate this.

Secret group station at Unterberg 50.

Tunnel systems all over Earth 50.

Ganymede (Jupiter moon) station 55.89-95

Jupiter's moon, Ganymede, is similar to a small metallic planet that is not inhabitable. But, there are a few entities that are stationed there on behalf of the Gizeh Intelligences group.

Great White Brotherhood locations 55.96-106

Lord Neru in the Andes of Peru, Lord Kenich-Ahen/Uxmal in the mountains at Merida in the Yucatan, the Grand Tetons in Wyoming, and Buuff in Canada are all names of locations of the Great White Brotherhood. They deceitfully term these places as spiritual centers. The first three, deal with physical centers and the last one is an etheric center. But, such centers do not actually exist, either in physical or etheric form. They are only deceitful assertions of power hungry sectarians. When many people concentrate their thoughts onto one point, then they meet together and give this point a force that causes a noticeable echo. Thus, other explanations are simply fraudulent and fanciful self-illusions. Everywhere, there are greater quantities of certain minerals that can concentrate their influences.

Freemasons - no help given by ETs 61.153-156

The Freemasons do not receive any help from outside of Earth, either materially or spiritually. Their support is purely of material and natural earthly sources. This is also true for all of the others that are organized and exist in the same way.

Secret groups in Germany and Canada 65.17-42

Some evil-minded elements are ready to kill Meier because he has become unpleasant to them. This is in reaction to the performance of his mission. Because of this, certain elements are threatened from advancing their plan for world government. Due to the many publications and means of communication around the world, an extraordinary number of people have become aware of the existence of the Plejarens. Even governments that have been negative about extraterrestrials, have become just the opposite. Many different nations have researched the matter and have encountered facts, which they had previously refused to acknowledge. They discovered groups on Earth that are active in some countries that pride themselves on higher technological development. It suddenly became known that there existed stations of these elements and private groups at different locations on Earth, which possessed plans for flying disks at the end of the last war. These were namely in Germany and Canada.

These elements, who have built their stations at inaccessible locations, have developed their flying machines with the help of the stolen plans. They believe themselves to be menaced now by the investigations of some nations and fear that Meier would provide accurate information about their existence and location of their stations. This could mean that armies might be ordered to destroy the bases and take possession of all their endeavors. To prevent such a step, a special group from Brazil has tried to kill Meier. They are a group of fanatics under the leadership of a man from Germany by the name of Dunneberg. He has far reaching relations that provide him with many followers from Brazil, where technology is used to influence a great number of people there in negative ways. Without knowing why, this group opposes Meier and his mission.

Bertossi and Arends, among many other well-known people, belong to this group and provide them with information about Meier through very insincere channels. Margaret Rufer also spreads information from Meier's group in an autocratic manner. Then, lies are used in an attempt to falsify all material. When Meier refuses to heed warnings and continue to drive to his next lecture, then this may result in events that the Plejarens are not able to control. Different groups have already prepared steps to attack Meier in ways that could not be prevented and their plans could be successful. This would occur in Munich. But on the way there, they have provided for the destruction of a vehicle at high speeds that Meier would be riding in. This would threaten him and everyone else in the car.

So, Meier is prohibited from taking the journey to Munich as well as other distant travels because the Plejarens are unable to discover everything about all of the relations involved. For several months, he should not travel outside of his homeland. If he does not agree to this, then coercive interference would be used to prevent it. His obstinacy in observing his promises to others is a good and remarkable thing, but not in these matters. The Plejarens constantly trouble themselves to provide their best possible abilities for his benefit.

Secret neo-Nazi group in Brazil 68.10-13

For the past 11 days, the Plejarens have been observing the activities of the power group from Brazil, which moves around the environment in spaceships. The Plejarens worry very much for Meier's safety. They can provide him a certain amount of protection, but they cannot know everything exactly.

Gizeh Intelligences triangular craft 69.138-139

In November of 1976, a delta-shaped craft hovered over Meier's home and caused him to leave because of dizziness. It had gaudy beams of light in front and a colorless beam of light in the rear. This could only have been a ship belonging to the Gizeh Intelligences, who used their influences on him.

8.4.14 Smoking

Smoking, negative & positive effects 54.28-40

Smoking is a passion, to which earthly humans are subjected. It contains several hidden dangers, especially for psychic-afflicted people. As a result, different, often-serious illnesses can be caused by it. But, there are also people with healthy bodily and psychological constitutions who enjoy this poison. Especially dangerous are the tobaccos that are chemically treated and mixed with perfumes, while natural tobaccos have much lower values of danger. Smoking also has a very positive tendency because it decreases the amount of foods consumed and enhances the ability to think. In addition, their very affective stimulants cause spiritual powers to be kept in constant high activity and only rarely become tired. These substances are very suited for those people who practice at great spiritual labors because, besides their generated will, they are able to achieve greater results than for non-smokers. It could damage ones health if they do not limit the amount smoked, but it can also provide great benefit in psychic efficiency.

8.4.15 Subconscious

All experiences in the subconscious 11.98-110

All that humans bring with them through numerous existences as well as everything that has been learned and experienced throughout all lifetimes lays hidden in their subconscious. Why then, don't they master the techniques of concentration and order their subconscious to enable them to make full use of all their knowledge and abilities? The longing for all of their knowledge, wisdom, experiences, and abilities lies deep within them. They only need to recognize, acknowledge, and accept this as true in order to make full use of it. It is necessary for them to fight against their own foolishness and acknowledge that the material intellect does not express what humans are, but the spiritual does.

When this happens and humans recognize their spirit, then the enormous wisdom, knowledge, and abilities of earlier lifetimes, as well as liberty, love and peace will be of rich advantage to them. Knowledge, power, force, wisdom, liberty and love are the creational inheritance of the absolute. This is the right of every human from birth. They are a center of thoughts, power, force, and influence over everything. They keep everything in perspective, but they are not what they perceive. Their bodies are only an instrument and a servant of the spirit. It is their dwelling and not their prison. Their bodies are the temple of their splendid spirit, their self-shinning inner life of Creation. Their bodies are the castle of their spirit that moves with all forces. Humanity should know that they breathe the touch of the spirit and not just bodily breath.

Although a person's consciousness may tremble in fear of death, their subconscious does not. The subconscious knows very well that death holds no horrors in it and that it only forms a passage into another life.

Spiritual forces in subconscious 38.120-123

In a state of real-vision, (See section 4.2.9) people become the master of many spiritual forces which lie sleeping in their subconscious. They use them unconsciously so that when they feel hunger and thirst, they condense matter into eatable and drinkable things, which they experience in their real-visions. This then provides nourishment.

8.4.16 Ufologists

Groups pretend to be with ETs 31.P351-354

The truth often becomes distorted by religious sectarians for their own fantasies or evaluated for their own favor. Moreover, several groups exist who pretend to occupy themselves with the exploration of matters concerning extraterrestrials and their UFOs. In truth, they only use it as pretence to attach their religious beliefs to these concerns and diffuse them in order to bring humanity even worse into religious bondage.

Ventla Verlag books 38.132-136

Ventla Verlag is the publishing entity, headed by Karl Veit of Germany, for UFO newspapers, books, and magazines that contain the names of people that belong to the Gizeh-Intelligences as well as many other groups. Their names of contactees are unknown to the Plejarens while many others partly belong to the Gizeh-Intelligences and misuse the truth. Of the many names listed in those publications, only a very few are true contactees. The truth often sounds harsh.

Decalogue, Hutter Publisher 44.5-12

Meier states that he is writing a suitable introduction and last word for Decalogue, to be published by Hutter in Munich, Germany. Mrs. Von Jacobi also intends to write a manuscript of their reports. Semjase is pleased by this, but says that certain things should not be included for the general public. This is because, those who are not prepared, cannot accept everything in the same way that is communicated between her and Meier. Only those who are acquainted with everything should read the original text of the Contact Reports. The reports must be corrected for the general public while initiated people must necessarily be able to receive it in its original form. The initiated people include members of Meier's group and all of those who, in the run of time, will continue to meet with him. Meier states that he had been misinformed and was under the assumption that everything was to be released true to form.

DUIST [UFO organization] & Karl Veit 44.27-46

There has been a dissention of opinion with the Duist. The Plejarens have undergone some mistakes of omission. Regrettably, not all matters were clearly recognized. Because of Semjase's lack of knowledge with humans on Earth, she allowed herself to be led astray many times. But now, with Meier's help, she has learned many things and is now much richer in knowledge. He should no longer care about the Duist. At a much later time, his mission with them will begin again when the Veit couple is active in that society. Then, there is no reason to expect that the Duist leadership will continue to be imprisoned in religious concerns as they are now. He should be delighted in the message that Semjase has for him. It has been decided that he would be permitted to take more photographs of beamships during this year.

Horst Raps: 44.62-69

Meier asks if a contactee by the name of Mr. Raps is trustworthy and is told that he is not and has not been for some time. All of his memories of his pseudo experiences were eliminated. Since then, he has occupied himself in spreading untrue things about himself. He did not fulfill his self-obligated missions, so his memories of it were taken away from him. Only vague and uncertain things remain, from which he then pretends, from his own judgment, matters that are not true. The report written by him and about him holds little accord with the truth. He is considered to be an actual contactee who had a real contact experience, which he no longer remembers.

UFO circles, where idiots know it all 64.7-22

Meier expresses feelings of it being useless to attempt to clear up the matter of the Plejaren existence, not for the broad public, but with the ufological circles where some idiots believe they know everything. It is known that those who tout themselves as experts, are ignorant autocrats in their assumed and quite illogical fantasies. This enrages Meier because he realizes that this way towards the truth is troublesome for humanity. He knows that it is the so-called ufological groups that are the very ones, which question and cast doubt about the Plejaren existence. In addition, they cause the ones exposing their existence to be made to look ridiculous to the public worldwide with accusations of fantasy and hallucination.

This does not mean that all groups are working in this manner, but most of them are. With their misunderstandings and non-recognition, these misled people search for fantastic explanations in technical, para-normal, and purely spiritual fields. They occupy themselves with the technical possibilities and constructions of the spacecraft while they completely neglect the Plejaren mission altogether. This is typical of human beings on Earth, as they always seek only the material things and completely overlook the essential values, which are the spiritual ones. This, they consider to be unbelievable fantasies. They even pretend the spaceships to be propelled with spiritual powers and constructed of spiritual materials. This is as much misleading as their statements that the Plejarens move in paranormal dimensions.

Those people are generating great delusion in this area and concern themselves with matters that they cannot understand in the tiniest amount, but consider themselves to be apart of para-psychological circles. Yet these circle obstruct the finding of the truth. Only those people who use science in only a purely material manner to clear up the existence of the Plejarens and their spaceships exceed them. But their activity is only a delusion because they are possessed by false logic and are captured too much by earthly material and misleading forms of thinking. Because they are unable to reach real understanding, they accuse everything as being lies and fraud. In this way, they regard themselves as being very important and have a megalomaniac satisfaction. These are human beings with small minds that have still not recognized anything for themselves and have no real imagination of the truth or reality.

Ufologists and official ET contact 64.49-57

The so-called ufologists, who have been provided with the task of spreading the truth and preparing the way for the coming extraterrestrial intelligences, have humiliated themselves as a primitive, semi-scientific sect and have spread their lack of intelligence and nonsense of self-constructed theories. They have actually distanced earthly humans all the more from the truth instead of guiding them towards the truth. This clearly shows that earthly humans are still not in possession of sufficient real knowledge, which could prepare them for the coming extraterrestrial contacts. As a result, their assumed development in respect to real enlightenment has been found to only be an illusion.

This results in a calculation of probability that earthly humans will finally be ready for the recognition of extraterrestrial forms of life in 200 to 300 years. This is when they start to overcome the space outside of their solar system by manned space flight with higher developed technologies. Then, extraterrestrial races will then come to appear on Earth in an official manner. This also means that the official landing, that was planned to occur before the year 2000, is impossible and the Plejarens will recommend that it does not take place. This is resulting in the first recognition of collected data on such people as Jacob, Bertossi, Arends, and many others. It is the fault of these people that earthly humans must live further under spiritual darkness from truth.

However, Meier and his group, will continue to work with sincere, searching and knowledgeable groups in spreading the truth. The High Council and all their nations want to convey their dear and sincere thanks to the inner core of Meier's group. Semjase also expresses her dearest and most sincere thanks to all members of the group for their love, confidence in the truth, and the real lessons as well as for all of the love they offer to Meier and to her. Her thanks is still valid for all of those who occupy themselves with their matters and work themselves toward Meier's group.

8.5 Necessities

Humans need to unite against intruders 4.84-99

In space, there are dangers of many kinds and inhabitants of other worlds are not helpless to the attack from another race. There could be deadly defeats for the mankind of Earth, resulting in complete slavery and a return to primitive times. It could also happen, that the planet Earth will become completely destroyed, because the technical abilities of many humane and inhumane races in the cosmos have reached the last perfection. When Earth human beings want to carry out their barbarous thirst for power and greediness into the cosmos, then they must count on their complete destruction and no other races from other planets will hurry to assist them.

Humanity must also prepare themselves for a fight against evil intruders. This can only be accomplished with the complete union of all nations on Earth. The dangers from the universe are large, and they lunge at all angels in the galaxies. These are mainly inhumane, might-thirsty creatures, which have no feelings. Others know very well of the need to defend themselves and they have necessarily done so quite thoroughly. If a large war were to shake the universe, then the whole universe would be destroyed. There are already wars of whole solar systems, which could have the possibility for their own destruction. Although they care for peace, a force for power could destroy them.

This is something that the Earth human beings should take into consideration when, in near future, they travel into cosmic space. Cosmic races will not let themselves fight senseless battles against forces in order to prevent servitude and exploitation as is normal for the nations of Earth. They will defend themselves with power that is far superior to all technical means on Earth. Where this is not the case, they often stay under the protection of further and higher-developed intelligences, whose technical abilities reach the last perfection. This is the only way to preserve peace and not bring death and destruction over the universe. This must be told to Earth's humanity because they are still very spiritually weak.

Requirements for survival 45.120-125

Earthly politicians and scientists are absolutely irresponsible creatures. Their power ought to be withdrawn and replaced with reasonable and responsible forces. But regrettably, this can only be achieved with power, which would have to be exercised by the people themselves. Humanity would have to agree on five values: First, there must be an absolute stop in human births for several years in order to reduce the quantity of humans on Earth by one million. Second, there must be an immediate cessation of exploitation on Earth's resources, which is critical to life on Earth. Third, all atomic weapons testing must immediately end. Fourth, all constructed dams must be destroyed. Fifth, every nuclear power plant must be destroyed and no new ones should be started.

Prophecies & World War 3 45.126-137

There remains nothing left for earthly humans to do except to use their power of force. For far too long a time, people have allowed themselves to be fooled by those responsible. So now, nothing more can be achieved by peaceful means. The force on Earth is embodied in politics, religions, and the scientists. It is exactly this power that must be broken, otherwise humanity faces a very wicked end, not only by war and eradication, but by the atomization of the entire planet. The new bomb delusion has great cosmic consequences and other star systems could be affected in addition to the Earth being destroyed in a firestorm.

Fortunately, humanity still has some time for consideration and to take back the control of power and to live according to natural law. But, humanity will not be able to avoid suffering the consequences of their actions because the Earth is already hurt, inside and out, and it is reacting. Huge earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, climactic alterations, storms, tidal waves and accidental events will make their appearance in the future. A hellish war will roar over the Earth, whole countries will sink into the sea and numerous human beings will find an evil end to their lives. These coming events are already irreversible.

Chapter 9 RELIGION

Religion 1.12-16

In Semjase's very first contact with Meier, she stated that other people dare to connect extraterrestrial beamships with human religions, which they do not want to be associated with in any way or at any time. Human so-called sects do not shrink from this step and deceive their fellow human beings by such beliefs. These infamous and primitive machinations should stop before the whole world is overcome by it. If these deceivers were really in contact with them, and remained so, then they would have offered them the chance to get clear photographic proof of their beamships. But since they are not sincere humans, they have not given them this opportunity.

False religion & lack of progress 5.9-24

This is a story that will interest all of humanity on Earth. It is a bit of a strange touching story that will incite much reaction because it will sound too fantastic for all of those who still have not discovered their spiritual thinking or have developed it. The intellectual greatness on Earth is regretfully not sufficient to be able to conceive the breadth of the story. Although there are many intellectual people on Earth, they lack the spiritual knowledge necessary to understand what is real and logical. There are also those who are led wrongly by religions as well as those that have neither advanced far enough intellectually nor spiritually. They are the worst enemies to the truth, what is real, and the irrefutable creational logic. Their criticism and contesting of certain things mark them as people who live in primitive stupidity. Those who think they know better are in truth, more ignorant than the monkeys in the jungles. With their contesting of facts of possibilities, they clearly show their spiritual dullness.

These may be harsh words, but the truth can only be told this way as diplomacy would be pure lies and would make light of everything. Humanity has become so affected by untruths that they are still not able to recognize and digest the truth through sincere diplomatic means. They have become so effeminate in their thinking, treating, and speaking, that they become offended by everything and defend themselves against harsh sounding truth. But the truth can only be spread with harshness just as peace can only be forced by naked aggression. The story is about the true history of mankind on Earth. (See section 7.3 and 7.3.1)

Religions' false teachings 10.116-136

The average people that are not spiritual because of religions or other false doctrines are never able to see, hear, or recognize even one jot of the truth. They are even more non-spiritual because of their material ways. They are blind, dumb, and ignorant. However, those who observe the creational laws, become blessed and the most fearless of creatures. Their will is unconquerable. Their devotion is immeasurable and endless. And their wisdom and love is constant and perfect, not fickle or full of doubts like those who are dependent upon religion or otherwise wrongly led in general. Their minds are equal to an infinite sea that cannot be forced out of their tranquility. They do not tremble in fear. They unfold their spiritual mind, which can no longer be reached by any degenerated negative forces. Their mind, which no longer provides shelter to any negative degenerated thoughts, also pushes away all positive degenerated thoughts and actions. Only a balanced mind that is rooted in the Creation, in creational service, wisdom, knowledge, love, and delight, which is more real than the human environment, is worthy of serving for spiritual development.

Spiritual humans are always great and constructive. The spirit is the spring of all infinite creational power and the innermost character of human beings. The human outer being is full of limitations because it is only a material body and not the entity itself. The body has limitations, matter that has been led astray, labor, pain, and limited cognition and willpower, but always ready to sacrifice for liberty, love, and good fortune. When people only look at their outer body, then they can realize nothing others than the form, figure, and material of the body. Yet, if they look at themselves with spiritual eyes of cognition and knowledge, they see an all-revealing consciousness within them and in all others. Then, the type and manner of how they consider themselves and their fellow creatures changes fundamentally. They do not simply look at a man, woman or child, but they realize a creational spirit inside of a carrier, which knows about its true self, its existence, and wants to reveal itself through everyone, if only the chance were available. Those who know the truth recognize the Creation in others and they know more than they knew before. People can deliver themselves out of ignorance if they generate the will to accept the truth. They can deliver themselves from everything that can be taken from them except for their creational consciousness and the spirit within them. They can be deprived of all their possessions and exiled from their homeland, but the spiritual kingdom within them can never be taken away.

Religious philosophies - confusions 11.138-149

For a long time, humans have undertaken great efforts to find peace and liberty, but all of their efforts vanished without bearing fruit. Because of the loss of real knowledge and truth in a sound and reasonable way of life, which would bring inner poise and calmness, mankind has accepted abnormal ideologies in perishable, dangerous, and harmful religious philosophies, which lead them into even greater spiritual poverty. Natural human reason defends itself against false religious dogmas and demands the truth. But, dogmas have flourished into existence by new religious leaders and deceivers and religious delusion is spread too far in order to put up a useful defense. The monstrous confusions and delusional claims of wrongful religious philosophies lower the inner force in human beings that would maintain the spirit and assist in bringing inner peace in proportion to outer achievements.

Dangerous efforts by so-called leading thinkers have altered religions in order to bring out a new philosophy of life that conforms to modern thinking of present mankind. But these pretenders and illogical thinkers do not consider that they are increasing religious delusion and imprisoning people in false religious beliefs that only allow them to think and act in spiritually poor, mad, superstitious, and murderous ways.

But, humans of the Age of Aquarius can easily solve this problem by laying the cornerstone of truth, which will result in a completely new structure of philosophical and psychological values for a fruitful, free, and peaceful spiritual life. This is a free spiritual life that is based on everything that represents the best in the cultural and spiritual inheritance of Earth, which is spiritual truth. When humanity finally realizes and acknowledges this truth, releases itself from all religions, and lives according to spiritual and creational laws, it will then be triumphant. Only the truth is of value and able to offer progress for mankind. Religion throws humanity back into the deepest darkness.

Christian virgin birth false 23.51-65

The Christian religion pretends that Mary became pregnant with spiritual forces. This is nonsense from wicked human fantasy, constructed by abnormal thinking people who press the truth of spirit into impossible ways with their morbid and overboard fantasy. This is without any truth and knowledge. This causes people to be degraded into the most evil creature of the whole universe even though earthly humans are no more or less inferior than all other living forms in the universe. Though humanity is sliding into an evil abyss, they are not any worse than other living creatures because other creatures must also live through the same stage of development. Even though mankind on Earth may be reproached in great measure by the Plejarens and even higher spiritual levels, this does not mean that humanity is any worse than other forms of life. The truth always sounds harsh and no one ever wants to listen to it, but this does not mean that humans on Earth are better or worse than any other form of life.

Fanatics, religious adherents, and religious advocates are unfortunately inclined toward the tendency of fanciful and sick wishful imaginations. In their delusions, they imagine that the sexual way of procreation for the destined form of the Creation would be something degenerated. Their morbid delusion does not let them recognize the truth that Creation has provided this form of reproduction that has proven to be good. Those who have fallen for the beliefs of these delusional creatures think that sexual reproduction is not spiritual and impure. This delusional concept rose from old heresies by people offering religion who wanted to restrain certain sexual degenerations with wrongful, non-intelligent laws and controls. These people who pretended to make the world a better place, not only wanted to control sexual degenerations, but they forced wrongful and unintelligible explanations on humanity, which caused delusional acceptances and confusion.

The act of reproduction is the same throughout the entire universe and a spiritual reproduction into a material form of life belongs only to morbid fantasy. Mary, the mother of Jmmanuel, did not become pregnant through spiritual powers or the "Holy Spirit". She cohabitated with the Heavenly Son, Gabriel and became pregnant by him. This occurred as a result of a higher order from the leader of the Heavenly Sons, who kept the designation of IHWH meaning god.

Religion vs. Relegeon 24.32-46

All truth and knowledge until the present is preserved, even if it has been forgotten, despised, or lost by earthly humans. Because truth, knowledge, wisdom, love, and all forces of the spirit are durable and unchangeable until the present, they have to be conceived of and led forward by them. This means that all that was gained from the past must be combined with the present and taken together. So, the present name of "Religion" must be connected again to the original name in the old language of "Relegeon". In order to bring everything together once more, it should be known that "Relegeon" was originally started and not "Religion". The new must be taken with the old in order to lead into the future. The past exercise of "Relegeon" was a way of evolution that has two meanings.

Today, there is only one meaning of evolution that refers to a development and unfolding of something already existing, but hidden, which is developed and unfolded. Spiritually, this means that something from the subconscious rises to the conscious. The second meaning of evolution has been lost for a long time. It means that something that does not yet exist, is explored, developed, and unfolded. Because second meaning has been lost, mankind has lived according to a false understanding that everything involved with evolution already exists inside of human beings and that it only needs to be unfolded and developed. The spirit, living in human beings, stores everything that has been learned in the course of its existence in material bodies. People think this is a lot, but it is very little.

During numerous lifetimes, the spirit has to inquire, search, and find out more in order to collect further knowledge, cognition, and experiences, which then establish themselves as abilities within it. Because the spirit lives on past physical death of the body, it elaborates upon the results gained in previous lives as well as between lives. This is established firmly within it and affects the unconscious. When the spirit enters a human form again, all of the gained knowledge and abilities are anchored in the unconscious and must be evolved slowly in the material form of life by new lessons and understandings until they become conscious abilities.

Jesus Christ 31.P214-230

The Plejarens are aware of the concepts of Christianity. They know that Jmmanuel, whom is called Jesus Christ, is seen as the master of the universe, as a god, and that God embodies the Creation. They know this to be a very wicked degenerated delusion and assumption on Earth. If such things would have happened and currently exists, which is absolutely impossible and is only the chimera of mad men, then it would certainly be humanity's mission to spread this religion. Over many thousands of years and among many worlds in the universe, earthly humans are the only form of life throughout the universe that has fallen so deep into materialism that every spiritual evolution has been missed. It is known on many worlds of how earthly humans miss every spiritual evolution and has developed only within the most evil of materialism. It is a paradox of immense size that earthly beings without spiritual development, would be chosen for a mission of such universal importance.

When humans on Earth assert their values, they represent a huge assumption and megalomania beyond compare in this or any other universe. This also represents an immense danger for the universe. When earthly humans travel to strange worlds and conquer their inhabitants, they will spread their religions onto them. If this happens, then earthly religions will then spread throughout the universe and the still existing harmony would be destroyed. The heresies of religions would cause the peace to end and have it degenerate into murderous wars that would destroy the whole universe.

To prevent this from happening is the largest and most difficult mission for spiritually developed forms of life with space travel abilities. In order to do this, the Plejarens and races from other worlds endeavor to spread the truth on Earth. When they find receptive individuals, they transmit the truth to them so that it can be spread and taught to others about goodness and truth. But this mission is very, very difficult to perform because the delusion of religions is so prevalent on Earth that it is only with extreme troubles that this is accomplished. The religions of Christianity and Islam are the strongest enemies of the real truth, which name in their books of heresy the prophet Jmmanuel as Jesus Christ. This may cause uproar, but the truth should no longer be suppressed and there is an urgent need to speak it.

Plejaren negative remarks 31.P249-317

Meier tells Ptaah that, until now, he and Semjase have only talked in a negative way about earthly religions. However, he knows that their remarks are in regards to a certain sort of religion and asks him for his impression of this. Ptaah states that all lessons and explanations that have been offered until now have been for the laying of a foundation for the essential main work now following. Everything transmitted until now has been a preliminary operation to prepare humanity for the root of the truth. When earthly religions were spoken of negatively, this was so that people could be made attentive to the wrongness and invalid reality of their religions because they are wicked, unreal, and not found anywhere else in the universe.

Religions are a deadly danger, not only on Earth, but throughout the whole universe. They have caused embitterment for thousands of years and every spiritual development is blocked by these religions. Transmissions of real worth and wisdom, regarding creational laws and control, are contained in these religions, but they have been falsified by human procreated heresies and are so indiscernible that few are able to recognize the truth. Those who elaborated the truth from the scriptures, have been banished and cursed by followers of the wrong religions. So, when religions were discussed in a negative way, it was to address the falsifications and lies.

Earthly religions are not actually religions, but are cultic degenerations in a very wicked meaning. They are cultic religions because real religious facts are interspersed by cultic dogmas and heresies and so they have been falsified. Religions are creational and lawfully right when they are based on harmonic cooperation with the Relegeon. Both factors have to work into one another and complete each other. To rescue humanity, the cultic religions must be eradicated and destroyed to enable a place for true religion in accordance with Relegeon. People must be willing to straighten themselves out with Relegeon until they have won the fight over cultic religions. People must find the truth and combine it into the right measure and form. Only this way, will humanity walk the right way and observe the lawfulness of the spirit's evolution.

Moses and the Ten Commandments 36.108-110

The Ten Commandments were given to Moses, not in a spacecraft, but at the place written about in the Bible. In that regard, the truth was delivered just as it happened.

12 Commandments 39.P21-30

Meier is informed that a very high spiritual sphere, known as the sphere of Petale, will transmit the essential spiritual lessons to him. Only the High Council and Arahat Athersata can communicate with it. It has transmitted the twelve commandments to him. The Ten Commandments and Twelve Commandments respectively are the beginning of those transmissions. Because these transmissions will demand extraordinary forces from him, longer rests will be needed between one transmission and the next.

Heresies and other misguidance 39.P77-80

Because of the heresies and other misguidance of religions, earthly humans are mainly only able to unfold forces that destructively influence all forms of life. Such destruction is found to cause a lowering of the average lifespan. The greater the assembly of people as in cities, the lower the average lifespan sinks because of immeasurable thought energy there that is released and penetrates into their fellow creatures. In addition, all materiality suckles itself up on these destructive forces, causing early termination of the average lifespan. For example, iron does not normally rust as quickly as it does on Earth.

The Revelation of John and 666 45.134-148

The number 666 refers to a human being on Earth as well as other extraterrestrial humans and their work. In this regard, the Earth human goes against their will to the number 666, namely an anti-logo, a lie and untruth. Fanatics, liars and deceivers for religions, charlatans, and the power hungry ones give this number. The number 666 does not equate to an actual person, but to the thoughts and deeds of a human that has been long since dead on Earth. It refers to a figure of delusion, which he represented, and which governs the Earth as a religious cult figure. This figure is absolutely wicked with damage and destruction, lies, untruths, and anti-logos. The name of this figure has been known for a long time in cabalistic circles as an extraterrestrial entity along with his work. But for 2,000 years, these cabalists have tried to falsify the value of the digits because they do not want to acknowledge the truth. The value and the worth of the number 666 concerns matters of God, church, Christ, and Jesus.

The Beast = W.U.V. organization 45.152-160

The name of the Beast has been found, but humans on Earth are not yet allowed to know this interpretation. The name, W U V, is only an abbreviation of a certain value. The Beast is only to be seen as a symbol because in truth, it concerns a worldwide organization with a three-part name. This organization is embodied by the church and its adherents. Only Meier is informed of the organization that W U V refers to and, under no circumstances, is he able to reveal it. This organization has already become effective. However, its name will change in the future, from which the letters W U V will be recognized.

Hierarchy influences on humanity 55.107-114

Hierarchies are prevalent wherever people are choked by authority figures. Such people are not able to understand the truth, that everyone has the power inside of them to create whatever is desired and this power is above everything else. People constantly search for a power above them, which can make everything possible. Earth humans are susceptible to the old traditional heresies and suppressions of all kinds and forms, which make it impossible for them to be autonomous and able to develop on their own. Humanity is taught to make higher forms of ghosts responsible for everything and to put them above themselves. This is a sacrilege that obstructs evolution and is even self-destructive. They live under the mad illusion that they have solved the riddle of life when they talk of spiritual hierarchy and the energies within it. Those in the hierarchy, search for the forces beyond the hierarchy, which should be universal energies. They are never able to climb out of the hierarchy that is fancied for them.

Christ-consciousness 55.121-124

Christ Consciousness is a negative term since the word, Christ releases the value of evil and with it, a negative degeneration. This is also valid for the term, Consciousness in God. These names keep the value of degeneration along with 666, Christ Principle and God's Principle. People should not express these terms because they always release forces of negative degeneration.

Religious & religious heresies 62.83-84

Earthly humans have a very great difficulty in liberating themselves from their religious and other heresies. With open eyes, they meet this damage and devote themselves to the cheaters and imposters.

9.1 Anti-Christ

Age of Aquarius / Anti-Christ Age 39.245-247

The prophesized End-Times or the time of the anti-Christ, is actually when earthly humans will release themselves from their religious delusions and turn towards truth once again. This time is connected to the Age of Aquarius. The End-Times has already begun with the passage from the first half into the second half of this Age. The catastrophes that were prophesized by all of the prophets, as well as Jmmanuel, of great confusion, mass murders, religious and political wars, the degeneration of humanity, and the evils of the last centuries will surely come to pass with even heavier events that are still to come.

9.2 Bible

Bible 61.37

The Sanskrit-scripts are very exact and very precise in special concerns regarding information from earlier epochs. This is not the case with the Biblical scripts because they are the most inaccurate here.

(Back to Contents)

9.3 God (IHWH)

God (IHWH) 1.40-49

Above everything, there remains only one that possesses the power of life and death over each creature. This is the Creation, which has laid its laws over all. These laws are irrefutable and of eternal validity. Human beings can recognize them in nature when they trouble themselves to do so. They expose for him the way of life and the way of spiritual greatness, embodying the goal of life. While humans indulge in their religions, and by this a heresy, they pass more and more away until they finally reach a bottomless abyss.

Humanity should realize that a god is never able to take the place of the Creation or destine the fate of a human being. A god is only a governor and a mere a human being who exercises a powerful reign of tyranny over his fellow creatures. God is not the Creation, but is only a creature of it like all Creation-dependent creatures. But, Earth humans hunt for their religious wrong beliefs and affirm God as the Creation itself. They go even further and pretend that a normal Earth human by the name of "Jmmanuel", who is also called "Jesus Christ", is God's only son and the Creation itself. Different sects of the modern time go on to maintain these same things, which approach delusion.

God 5.135-151

In a far away solar system, human beings improved their technical knowledge. They also improved their spirit so that nothing remained strange for them. Step by step, they raised themselves above other races as their governors. They called themselves kings of wisdom, or IHWH. On Earth, this was translated to mean God. They governed in an evil and dictatorial form. But after centuries of this, the people of Earth became tired of the god-like scientists and they rose up against them. Because of the spiritual forces and large knowledge of the gods, the nations had to submit under theM. (See section 7.3)

9.4 Jmmanuel (Jesus)

(See section 1.4 for a conversation between Meier and Jmmanuel)

The birth date of Jmmanuel 10.272-277

Meier has intuitively been able to exactly calculate the actual birth date of Emmanuel to be the 3rd of February, as determined from the Christian chronology on Earth. Earthly years always have the same number of days every four years, so there are no shifts in years. Thus, a certain date remains the same as long as the concerning division of time is valid.

Jmmanuel - feeding 5000 with bread 38.124-130

In a state of real-vision, (See section 4.2.9) influenced people become masters of many spiritual forces, which lie sleeping in their subconscious. They use them unconsciously to compensate for feelings of hunger and thirst by condensing matter into eatable and drinkable things, which they experience in their real-visions to provide nourishment. This is similar to the event demonstrated by Jmmanuel when he fed 5,000 people with bread that he multiplied in this way. The difference is that real-vision influenced people exercise these abilities unconsciously, while Jmmanuel was consciously able to do it.

Jmmanuel in Florida 39.P197

Jmmanuel was once in Hyperborea, where Florida is located today.

Religious UFO sects & Jmmanuel 41.16

The earthly sectarians who work in UFO groups are led astray and worship extraterrestrials as sent by God and angels. They believe that they are spiritual beings of total perfection who are capable of using mental processes for the procreation of Jmmanuel. These religious interpretations are completely not true and reach the limit of stupidity.

Jmmanuel 45.149-151

Jesus is the incorrect name for Jmmanuel, who was against this name because he knew the future and he knew what would be made of him. Jesus is the value of anti-logos, which the Christian church altered to anti-Christ. In addition, the true lessons of Jmmanuel were also changed until they were indiscernible. The cabalists already knew about these matters for about 2,000 years. This is why they always try to falsify the values.

Jmmanuel 70.171

Plejos was a very wise and merciful Plejaren governor on Earth. Before returning to the Pleja system, he ordered the procreation of Jmmanuel who was educated to become a prophet for his mission on Earth.

9.5 Jehav or Jehova

Jehav or Jehova 9.152-158

With his guardian angels, IHWH Arus let the newly created people of Earth worship and adore him as the Creation and his sub-leaders as creational assistants. He established hard and severe laws that always demanded the blood of violators. His son, Jehav, was not much better when he took over domination of the three enslaved races 3,400 years later. He was also called an IHWH and always demanded the blood of all those who violated his laws.

Jehova 38.23-28

The Hebrews freed themselves from his command when Arussem had to hand over his government to his follower by the name of Jehova. The Hebrews grew in number and chose themselves as the elected people with the right to form a world government, despite never having been a nation, but simply a gathering of lowly Gypsies comprised of many colors and races. Ever since then, they have behaved as pre-selected ones for the control of the Earth. They found a way to realize their desires through Kamagol I, who was the successor of Jehova.

Jehova 39.67-75

During the time of Moses, Jehova proclaimed himself as the Creation and spoke of all-encompassing love, grace, and justice while demanding innocent human blood and allowed the bestial slaughter of millions of people on Earth. Humans call him the biblical God, while he is known to the Plejarens as the unjust and cruel one. He found his end around 2,150 years ago. He was an evil, power-hungry creature who led his regiment against another good IHWH and coerced numerous human beings toward their death. Christianity of today still provides a hellish contribution for him, as his wicked influence was immense. Ultimately, he holds the most guilt for the madness of his cultic religion and the slaughter of millions of innocent human beings in his debt.

Jehova - drawing by Semjase 39.118-120

Semjase presented Meier with a portrait that she drew of Jehova. Meier sarcastically called him their special hero and stated that he just does not look kind. He also said that it would have been best if he had been removed from power and Semjase agreed.

Jehova took power in 3,010 BC 70.157-158

Arussem governed until 3,010 BC when he was removed by a powerful forced departure, which was prepared for him by a mutineer by the name of Henn. The Hebarons called him Jehova and then, gradually within his own ranks, the surname of "The Cruel One" was added. In the year 2,080 BC, when Jehova was old and weak, he was displaced by his nephew, Kamagol I, who seized command of the evil Gizeh-Intelligences.

9.6 Prayer

Prayer 18.105-130

In the designation by earthly humans, a prayer means in truth, a wish in the form of an appeal to the spirit in humans for something that is needed. True spiritual humans, whose force, knowing, and ability of their spirit is consciousness, no longer pray. This is because they already live in the knowledge that the almighty force of their spirit is always available to be used. The non-spiritual person is not able to do this and so he must activate his spirit with conscious prayers. Spiritual humans always use the forces and abilities of their spirit quite consciously while non-spiritual humans offer prayers of wishes with devotion and doubts. Their prayers are not directed to their spirit or the Creation, but towards a higher religious power or force, which in truth, does not exist. Prayer dependant human beings cling to their deities, gods, or whatever, but never the Creation. The wrong ways of prayer-dependent humans degenerate into illusions that cause their wishes and appeals to unlawfully force desires into realization.

Certain things become named or defined differently under the spiritual mode of thinking, which conscious-thinking people are not able to understand. Because of this, different terms are used for certain matters for deeper meaning, which normal conscious humans do not perceive. This unfortunately, is advantageous for religions, which change these terms to be evaluated in their favor. So, the following terms within prayers, should have the following meanings: "Almighty" means all-knowing, alienable, all-wise, all-logical, and all-loving. "Holy and sacrificed" means to control, exercising control, etc. "Heaven" means the kingdom of the spirit, spiritual kingdom, spiritual life, etc. "Earth" means body, material life, etc. "Bread" means almighty. "Guilt" means mistakes, which are necessary for development and recognition.

The spiritual subconscious is easily able to conceive of the spiritual mode of thinking and elaborate on it. In prayers, pure spiritual forms of thoughts become exercised from the senseless prattling of many words. Even if people may not consciously understand the spiritual forms and expressions, they are still conceived by the spiritual subconscious in cooperation with the spirit and used. For non-spiritual people, this knowledge is withheld because they are mostly imprisoned by religions and they are not able to interpret the meaning of a spiritual kind of thinking. This cannot be explained because they will not conceive its meaning. Because of this, prattle-prayers are prepared by religions, which can be consciously explained and conceived of by non-spiritual people. With these prayers, people dedicate themselves to the wicked and wrongful guidance of religions.

When people understand the words and meaning of these prayers, then a belief grows inside of them and they become slaves to beliefs that have been forced onto them. However, Jmmanuel has prepared a prayer with words that people do not understand the sense of so that they would not be able to fall for any belief. But, the spiritual subconscious of people does understand the meaning of the words. When sufficiently exercised, this prayer never fails to cause the forces of the spirit to develop themselves in the desired ways without consciously knowing what is essentially demanded and desired in the unintelligible prayer. Slowly, the knowledge of recognition and truth is achieved without being influenced by a belief. If people perform this prayer without knowledge of its meaning and a certain consequence results, then it can only be the effect of those powers. If people unconsciously perform the right thing, then the right result must lawfully appear. But, when people perform prayers according to a belief and these result in the desired form, then they also trace back to the belief and its imaginings that are generated in the belief-dependent consciousness.

The following is the interpretation of the prayer prepared by Jmmanuel: "My spirit, who you are existing in almighty," means "My spirit, who is all-knowing, capable of anything, all-wise in all truth and all-loving within me". "Your name be sacred" means "Your name witnesses to me your controlling force and ability with all things". "Your kingdom may incarnate itself inside me" means "Your almighty power spreads through me towards the consciousness of thoughts, which I receive of collected knowledge, forces, wisdom, and love in universal peace and liberty and bring them into utilization and development". "Your force unfolds itself inside me on Earth and in the heavens" means "May your almighty power come to conscious destination inside of me, in my body and in all spiritual regions". "Give me my daily bread today" means "Let your almighty power inside of me daily unfold and nourish my ignorance with knowledge and wisdom". "May I recognize my guilt, and for that, discern the truth" means "With the discernment of my faults, which befall me in the way of my development, remove them. Do not lead me into temptations or confusions, but redeem me from my faults". "Because yours is the kingdom inside of me and the force and the knowledge in eternity" means "May your almighty power be conscious within me; the power of your abilities and the knowledge in the absolute for the run of all time".

9.7 Prophets on Earth

Higher creatures called Prophets 31.A141-150

In cooperation with creational laws, each world generates extremely highly developed forms of life from time to time, so that higher standing intelligences can come in touch and transmit certain facts. These extremely high developed forms of life are called prophets on Earth and unfortunately, without exception, are always persecuted and pursued with enmity so that nothing will change. Still today, the prophets on Earth are cursed, slandered, and accused of being deceitful, charlatans, and full of fantasy. This is because earthly humans do not want to listen to the voice of truth and tear themselves away from their wrong realism and materialism. Because of this, the Plejarens only communicate with earthly creatures that satisfy their demands and are receptive. Because there has only been one human on Earth in the last 2,000 years that satisfies their demands, they have had to meet with him according to the laws. No other forms of life can be considered for contact in connection with the mission. There have already been difficulties in understanding in the way that the Plejaren explanations, declarations, and interpretations have been wrongly accepted and evaluated. Meier is the only high spiritual form with which the Plejarens will come in contact with. Because of the way things are, the Plejarens have no need or desire to be realized by anyone else.

9.8 Saints

9.9 Satan

Satans only a product of fantasy 33.75-88

Certain circles of religion have used the events in the Bermuda Triangle region for their own purposes and clothe them in satanic powers. For about two decades, the unexplained events have been additionally used by certain religious and unclear working groups of ufologists to explain them as being caused by extraterrestrials. They have fed credulous people with untrue and false information to further their fantasies, which originate from religions, of dark, satanic extraterrestrial powers as reliable explanations for the events in the Bermuda Triangle. Like the unreal religions, ufology also had to have a form of Satan in order to keep its believers in check. Because their ufology was based on religious grounds, it was also necessary to create two kinds of powers of good and evil, black and white, godly and satanic.

This was successful because the extraterrestrials do not defend themselves against such pieces of work. However, no defense was necessary because such intrigues slowly run into a dead end for the truth can never be kept silent and everything eventually shines in the light once more. For many, these impure pieces of work mean a way for evolution so that they may elaborate themselves toward the truth. It is very difficult to walk the ways of truth. When people are religiously possessed, they have to fight themselves through certain labors to reach necessary cognitions and recognize their former wrong thinking and behavior. The occurrences in the Bermuda Triangle correspond only to a speculative form when they are brought into connection with extraterrestrial races.

9.10 Sin

Sin 6.23-30

When humans are put to death under a death penalty, it is not advantageous for their development. This is because they cannot fully complete their sub-period and must repeat this period until it has been finally achieved. This means that those entities must live their lives again from the point where the prior life was terminated. Accordingly, their new lives are shorter because they only have to make good what was missed in order to finish the period's goal. This could be designated as hell or a punishment because hell means in truth, nothing more than a self-caused punishment that must be suffered. In other words, this means a self-caused fault that must be made good again. The terms "hell" and "sin" in religious meaning, are pure nonsense. No one should feel guilt when they perform mistakes in life and make good for them by recognizing their faults, agreeing to commit them no more, and obtains from this a certain knowledge and wisdom.

9.11 Talmud Jmmanuel

Talmud Jmmanuel 1.60-66

In Semjase's first contact with Meier, she stated that she knows he is aware of a secret old scripture. The originals were unfortunately destroyed by the carelessness of their commissioner, who was Meier's friend, and who by regret has failed in fear. He is told to diffuse and spread the translation of this scripture, because it is the only one, which is the authentic truth. They know he also writes about this scripture and the truth. They consider it to be the most important book to be written. But, its language will be harsh and will be met with hatred. It only offers the truth to Earth humans, though some speculations are in it. It is finally able to destroy, for many, the madness of religion or at least temper it very deliberately. It is an extraordinary piece of work that Meier ought to make accessible for humanity.

Talmud Jmmanuel and Isa Rashid 6.50-55

Meier asks about the Talmud Jmmanuel and the commissioner who is guilty of destroying the original writings. The Plejarens contacted an individual with the initials of M.R. for a mission to recover the Talmud Jmmanuel and disclose it to the world. Unfortunately, he has failed in many things. For too long, he has been depending upon the false reality of religion, which took root in him and often led him to think and act illogically. Regretfully, this is a fact that cannot be made good again.

M.R. and the Talmud Jmmanuel 7.22-48

The Plejarens had been contacting M.R. since 1956. He was a priest of the Greek Catholic church. He was ordered to handle different matters, which he promised to do. As a result, the Plejarens thought him to be the right person to solve a difficult mission. He was shown the location where he could find the Talmud Jmmanuel, which was the original scripture written by Judas Ischarioth at the time of Jmmanuel. He learned the old Aramaic language and was able to translate the writings. He performed this properly and created a German translation. While reading the original writings, M.R. became troubled by his conscience and no longer knew what he should acknowledge as the truth. Outwardly, he pretended to believe the Talmud, but in truth, his religious beliefs were too strongly established within him and this troubled him. This was also the reason for him to officially retreat from his religious beliefs in order to dedicate himself to the translations, which he did very well. But, he was never convinced and never knew what to do about it.

He continuously lived in the fear that the scripts would be discovered and become known by others. As a result, he was brought in connection with others who had no fear and vouched for his character. But unfortunately, M.R. became even more fearful and spoke of things, which could cause danger for him and the Talmud. He carried it so far that by the middle of 1974, there remained nothing else for him to do but to flee from Jerusalem and retreat to Lebanon where he lived with his family in a refugee camp under a false name. But, he also had to flee from there to another country. In his fright, he enclosed all writings into a wooden wall. Only hours later, they were completely destroyed in a fire when Israeli military forces invaded. M.R. holds the guilt for the destruction of everything. The Plejarens also accept guilt for this because they confided too much in him and expected too much from him.

Now, the most valuable evidence has been destroyed by chance, which could have revealed the falseness of the Christian religion and all other religions. However, there still exists a quarter of the scripture in German. It will be sufficient to reveal the truth and to free humanity from its deadly delusion. The Plejarens have cut off all contact with M.R. when he fled from Lebanon into Iraq. From then on, the Plejarens no longer kept track of him. He and his family have lost themselves somewhere in the world. They have lost their real names, which will be kept confidential since he may use it again as a priest. In spite of everything, the Plejarens are not hostile-minded towards him and do not want to make trouble for him.

Talmud Jmmanuel - retrieved 8.196-206

The Talmud will not be used as a means of creating a new belief system or for the worshiping of Jmmanuel as an idol. Jmmanuel was only a human being like everyone else. Although he had very great knowledge, he does not embody any symbol, idol, or anything else. He was only a teacher and prophet of spiritual knowledge and wisdom. No creature should ever be idolized or adored as is done on Earth. The only reason for taking the Talmud Jmmanuel from its hiding place after 2,000 years is because the time for truth had come. The lessons of Jmmanuel are not his lessons, but are of the Creation and its laws, which Jmmanuel had to learn, recognize, and acknowledge. He has only revealed what the natural laws demand. He never intended for the delusion to be committed of having him seen as the embodiment of his lessons and be idolized for them. The truth of the Talmud should be learned and acknowledge for its own worth without the attraction of his name and his glorification. Only the truth and laws are important, not the person who has brought them. If another cult were to be constructed around Jmmanuel, then his purpose would not be accomplished. Only the truth and the laws are of absolute importance.

Talmud Jmmanuel - doubters 9.71-99

Because the Contact Reports agree so closely with the Talmud, it has been claimed that both were written by the same person and thus, could not be right. Meier is told to not trouble himself over this because it is the character of those spiritually ignorant to continuously criticize, distrust, and accuse everything. They often search for connections that they cannot understand because they are not capable of infinite thinking. Their spiritual knowledge and thinking is subjected to sharp boarders, which they can hardly overcome. It is also inconceivable to them that truth, knowledge, and wisdom should always sound the same throughout time. When Jmmanuel spoke of the lessons of knowledge and wisdom, then he was only able to use words that were spoken thousands of years earlier. When, in the present time the same lessons are spoken, the words relay the same meaning as was told by Jmmanuel and all other teachers before him. When the words of today have the same meaning as those of Jmmanuel, then nothing in the lessons have changed. The truth remains the same for all times. It sounds the same, even when told by other words.

It is regretful that others have not conceived of this and have criticized the Talmud because of it. They are advised to educate their reasoning abilities and think logically in order to master their spiritual forces and use them. They obstruct their spiritual development when their criticism is illogical. It will not be easy for this to become evident to them because they are far behind Meier's spiritual development. They may also be still caught up in their religious beliefs to be able to recognize the truth and accept it. They can be still led astray by the belief that truth, knowledge, and wisdom could only be religious and that the Talmud information must also be religious. They believe that better religious beliefs would be good and bring help to humanity. They do not understand that a religion suppresses people and makes them dependent on something that stands above them and gives orders and advice to them. As a result, the followers are no longer the masters over themselves, but subjugate and suppress themselves for something that would stay powerful over them. Throughout the whole universe, nothing good exists in any form of religion.

That which is discussed in the Talmud, is only logical. The Talmud Jmmanuel represents a single scripture that was actually written at the time of Jmmanuel, which contains the only un-falsified lessons of truth, knowledge, wisdom, and the spirit. Other writings of equal character do not exist and it should be given consideration. These lessons could have been written anew and given to Meier for distribution, but this was not intended. Only the Talmud is able to provide evidence of the untrue nature of the Biblical New Testament for humanity on Earth. There exists an evil distrust in it and an unsuited criticism of it. Those who question it are very injured spiritually by religions and live connected to distortions. The many different explanations and interpretations by religions have caused a dreadful confusion in people that they can no longer unravel. As a result, people are pulled between real and unreal when it concerns matters of religion or of true reality. The truth always sounds harsh.

Chapter 10 SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

10.1 Astrology

Astrology 54.95-98

Astrology is a science that traces back to the Plejaren ancestors and is still fostered today. But on Earth, it has lost its essential values and truths. The Plejarens practice Astrology the same way that it is done on Earth except with other planets and totally different perspectives. (See section 4.1)

Astrological signs & symbols 66.25-52

The Plejaren forefathers expressed symbols for this solar system around 12,000 years ago, but they have changed several times and some have been completely lost in the run of time. However, somehow they have always returned in their original form as they do today. Each single symbol contains quite special characteristic values regarding a star. These symbols convert themselves into emissions that affect people by showing associated peculiarities in physical, psychical, and spiritual spheres.

All stars are important with time playing a dominant part. To obtain exact astrological values, the determining of time to the second, is of enormous importance. This is a factor that is unfortunately not regarded by earthly astrologers. Their evaluations are usually only determined in relation to minutes, which only leads to approximate results. Consequently, the horoscopes on Earth are not very exact. In only a few cases are they correct, which occurs when the number of seconds relates to the proper number of minutes. In respect to human beings, the moment when the top of the head begins to show is regarded as the time of birth. As soon as the top of the head becomes exposed, influences from the outside world are concentrated and penetrate through the top of the baby. The effective emissions of outer influences complete the whole and improve it. This means that the times of many births on Earth are incorrect. This has enormous meaning for every individual.

There is a special symbol for Erra as well as for all other stars. It is rather peculiar, as it is very similar to the symbols on Earth for the Sun and other planets. This is because the symbols for the stars trace back to the Plejaren forefathers, who created each of them according to the vibrations and emissions of each star and each single sign shows its level of evolution. This is valid as well for the Plejaren home planet of Erra, whose sign was combined from different old traditional symbols of their forefathers. This is also used on Earth for the planets of this solar system. The laying part of the symbol represents the balance between up and down and its harmony. This is different for other symbols of the solar system where balance does not exist with dominant negative or positive values.

10.2 Astronomy

Venus, moon, Saturn & Jupiter 39.P213-221

Meier is permitted to visit the moon, Venus, Saturn, and Jupiter and take photographs from orbit. But, to take pictures of Venus, a source of light is needed there. Ptaah provides two special little ships with strong light generators for this purpose. However, Meier is asked to keep his pictures of Jupiter hidden because Earthly scientists could reach concepts from them, which would not be good for them. He is also told to only permit members of his group to see any pictures of Ptaah. This is because it is possible that Ptaah could walk on the Earth and does not want to be recognized.

10.2.1 Age of Earth and Sun

Age of Earth 51.71-78

The Earth was formed into a gaseous state 646 billion years ago and then became solid 46 billion years ago.

Age of Sun, Earth, Jupiter & Saturn 57.94-97

The Earth is a planet of medium age at 646 billion years old since it first gathered into a ball. Other planets are much older and are slowly dissolving themselves away. Jupiter and Saturn were the first to develop themselves into planets. The Age of the Sun is 1 trillion, 730 billion years old. This is based upon when it first became a ball of matter.

Sun system, Uranus, Jupiter & Saturn 61.77-93

A solar system is defined as a large body with smaller objects that rotate around it. The SOL System is called that because SOL is a central sun with a whole system of linked sub systems. Any large body with at least three smaller bodies rotating around it is called by the Plejarens, a sun. Such a central sun normally has a special name for all human forms of life. For example, Earth's central sun is named SOL with names for the other smaller suns such as Jupiter, Saturn, and others. But SOL means that it refers to a central sun, which has several smaller sun systems rotating around it. All of the larger suns and other sub-suns are called sun systems because they have at least three smaller bodies rotating around them.

The central sun for this sun system is a great shining, radiating, and mothering star. But, Jupiter and Saturn are also suns. On Earth, they are referred to as planetary systems and a sun system has a central star, or SOL, with different planets revolving around it. The moons of the planets do not play any part in it. It is not important that Earthly astronomers and other scientists become excited by these differences. They do not understand the logic or conceive the sense of a higher language. They are unable to recognize the truth and cannot find it from this given information. They are unreasonable and balk and criticize all new matters because they want to be known as being better informed. Regarding the comet known as the Destroyer, it is considered to be a part of this sun system because its orbit is not able to reach other stars outside of this system. This is because other stars are too far away to affect its orbit.

10.2.2 Asteroid Belt-once a planet

Asteroid Belt-once a planet 4.100-105

Earthly humans should accommodate themselves to the fact that their forefathers once brought the Earth and all of mankind nearly to the brink of ruin and had to evacuate the Earth in wild flight. It should serve as a warning of how power-hungry and barbaric people can be harbingers of death and destruction. There was also a second race that experienced this madness in our solar system. In their limitless hate and incredible thirst for power, they destroyed themselves and their planet in a vast explosion. Nothing remained except for thousands of asteroids that still today circle the Sun. They are memorial stones of the deadly unreasonable actions of human creatures. They are the only remnants of a planet known as Malona that was once a marvelous and flourishing world. Their inhabitants destroyed it and themselves in a barbarous thirst for power.

Van-Allen Belt electrons & protons 35.P928-933

The stratums around the Earth reach great heights. There is a stratum, which is being menaced, known as the "Van-Allen Belt". This belt consists of electrons and protons that are caught in the Earth's magnetic field. It has a very important function for the existence of life on Earth. There is damage to the ionosphere and the Van-Allen Belt that is being caused by atomic tests. The belt exists at an average height of 1,000 kilometers. The charged particles are in constant movement on spiral courses from pole to pole. The insides of the spiral patterns are decisively greater and of important meaning.

10.2.3 Black Hole

Black Hole 5.64-79

Deep in unexplored space, in a sun system near the Milky Way Galaxy, a lone star floated far away from its normal course. It was a dark star and devoid of any life. It was very dangerous with its incalculable course that resulted from a huge eruption on its native sun that either caused damage to its encircling satellites or shot them out like dangerous missiles out into space. The sun itself then collapsed and tore a hole into the universe. Its matter was pressed by vast forces into another and became compressed into a small mass. The sun shriveled together, from a normal size of 11 million kilometers, down to only 4.2 kilometers. Its mass became so compressed that a single cubic centimeter weighed several thousand tons.

Since then, it floats as a dark gaping excavation in the cosmos. Everything from millions of kilometers around it is sucked into it. The dark star was seized by a neighboring solar system and encircled it in an incalculable course. It encircled the huge sun for many millenniums until it broke away in a catastrophe. But, it was still far away from other worlds with life and traveled through space as a wandering planet, still dark, dangerous, and deadly. Imperceptibly, its course became more and more narrowed and continuously increased its velocity. Then, it suddenly and unexpectedly fell into a narrow orbit around the sun and its planets. Like a gigantic monster, it rose from the black of space and unleashed its deadly destruction. (See section 10.2.8)

10.2.4 Centauri, Beta

Proxima, Alpha, & Beta-Centauri 60.123-138

In the Bernanrd system, only the Beta Centauri system can be seen from Earth. Beyond that, there is Alpha Centauri and then Proxima Centauri. Semjase has friends in all three systems from planets that rotate around these suns. Two of her dear friends are Athar and Kohun from Proxima-Centauri. They often come to Earth and make contact with a few people here. Their last important contact was with a man from Germany more than 50 years ago. He received permission to portray them in great detail. Semjase was surprised to discover that they were again painted psychically in the beginning of 1976.

10.2.5 Central Sun

Central Sun (See section 7.2.11) 9.186-205

Rotation around galactic central sun 51.95-97

This solar system revolves around the galactic central sun every 25,860 years.

Milky Way galaxy central sun 69.98-103

The center of the Milky Way galaxy at the galactic central sun is 53,000 light years from Earth. The central sun consists of wild gaseous atoms in an unordered form inside a galactic storm. They constantly split one another, create new atomic compounds, and separate themselves in a spiral form from the center to the outer regions of the star in gigantic masses. They rotate around themselves with immense blaze and split themselves even further. They form themselves separately towards huge sphere-like formations that develop themselves into an accumulation of suns that rise in heaps. However, not every accumulation of this sort develops into real stars because many of them are too small in mass. These then become, in the run of billions of years, into very compact stars or planets, which will generate and support life. This is how Jupiter and Saturn were developed in this solar system.

10.2.6 Comets

Comets - some hurled through space 4.43-49

Hyperspace is allowed to be broken open only very far in remote space because planets could be torn into it. Upon leaving hyperspace, these planets would then be hurled like missiles that could cause great damage and destruction. Some comets have been originated in this way, but very few. Most comets have been led toward their dangerous ways by natural events. The comets that have been created by recklessness exist throughout the whole universe. Such recklessness usually occurs when highly developed races perform their first hyperspace exercises too close to planets. It can only be initiated safely at a distance of at least 153 million kilometers from planets.

Comets, wandering planets & stars 29.44-68

This solar system has had many comets, planetoids, and traveling stars pass through it. Comets appear as different forms. They were once traveling planets or stars that were drawn by huge attracting forces of other stars and planets into orbits with them. Because of their courses and high velocity, they usually pass by and retire again. But, because of their close approach to a planet or star, their surfaces become liquefied and loose stuff. This often causes a very long tail to appear behind it. With the energies of nearby suns, the particles that are pushed away then become visible as a shining tail.

However, even empty space is not empty and it becomes animated when numerous particles and other things continuously rub against traveling planets, stars, and comets with illuminated tails. There are also fog-like comet bodies. Normally, comets encircle solar systems with far courses. These system comets usually develop near the sun with impressively long tails that can be many millions of kilometers long. Gigantic comets are very rare. Most comets are not visible to the naked eye. Only very large comets that come near are seen from the Earth. Average comets are often not anything more than small globular clouds of low light intensity without tails.

Fog-like comets are the most numerous with three main characteristics of a foggy corona, a core, and a tail. The forms of the corona can be very different and appear as elliptical, round, or twisted in any direction. The corona becomes lighter towards the insides and more compact in the central concentration. The core forms a strong illuminated area that embodies the essential comet, which can be between a few hundred meters in size to many thousands of kilometers. The whole diameter of the comet head, with the corona, often measures up to many hundred thousands or even millions of kilometers. Influenced by the type of comet, the tail consists of gas or dust particles or gas and dust particles together. Pure gaseous tails are kept together in much more narrow dimensions than dust tails, which only appear with larger comets and are very light while the gaseous tails are of low light intensity and very slim.

The system bound comets have very long and slim courses, which reach very far, in cosmic space. These courses can run so far that they run through systems, causing the way to be even longer. Because of this, these comets often need many decades before they return to their home system. But, comets that wander through several systems have revolution periods of many hundreds or even thousands of years. Like all planets, the course of comets is dependent upon the laws of gravitation and very rarely, do they alter their course. (See section 10.2.15)

10.2.7 Cosmos

Cosmos 8.4-24

The principle of how matter originates is very ease, but it cannot be revealed at this time. Every kind of energy can be changed into solid matter. It is only necessary to bundle the energy strongly together in highly concentrated ways in order for it to be converted into solid matter. This causes the elementary components of solid matter to be generated as neutrons, protons, and electrons. From these subatomic particles are formed into atoms and then into a variety of chemical compounds, from which their 3 different aggregation states form the solid outer wrap of matter.

Solid energy, as well as original energy, is of equal value. This means that the original energy is absolute matter just as matter is absolute energy. Without exception, everything in the universe consists of matter or energy. Both terms of energy and matter represent basically one and the same in different forms as fine material and coarse-material. Coarse-material means matter and fine-material means energy. Matter is the embodiment of an idea. Matter is fine-material that is highly concentrated and condensed energy. Both forms can be generated.

Normally, they are generated quite naturally with spiritual forces, which are preceded by the idea of them. Basic for everything is the Creation, which is a huge spiritual factor that embodies the original energy. From it, rises an idea. The force of the spirit then condenses and concentrates the idea into fine-material energy. When this is concentrated even further, it becomes coarse-material matter. Everything within the whole universe is only an idea, which has been compressed and concentrated from fine-material and coarse-material. The Creation consists of an idea that has been condensed into the original spiritual energy. No more is known about this.

Universe defined 10.83-88

The visible universe, with which humanity occupies, is only a small spot in this marvelous, unlimited spiritual existence of the Creation. There are millions of universes like this one within the infinite spiritual existence of the Creation. What is visible for the physical eyes of humanity represents only a little jot in infinity. What is not visible to the eyes is immeasurable, unconceivable, and unthinkable for the non-spiritual human intelligence of limited capacity. This universe is only one of many universes in universes, opposite to universes, and around universes within the original, powerful, and all-creating spiritual intelligence of existence of the Creation. With this huge spirit and these original forces of existence of the Creation, the spiritual intelligence is connected to humanity because this spiritual intelligence of Creation lives as the spirit in human beings and enlivens them.

10.2.8 Destroyer planet

Destroyer planet - origin 5.37-57

The Great Flood, 10,079 years ago was the result of a gigantic comet that has caused great damage as it traveled through the universe since very ancient times. It is known as the "Destroyer" and has already traveled through the universe for millions of years. Its obit lasts 575 and half years and will come very dangerously close to the Earth in the year 2,255 of earthly chronology unless its course is changed by cosmic circumstances or it is destroyed. The previous close passage of the comet took place 295 years ago in the year 1680.

10,079 years ago, this giant comet, which originated by a natural cosmic catastrophe, came very near to Earth and nearly destroyed it. Only the knowledge and abilities of earthly forefathers, who had settled on Earth and created descendants here, prevented an evil ending to it. In the following millenniums, the giant comet has always been a great menace to Earth and it will remain one until it is finally destroyed. The last great catastrophe that was affected by this comet occurred about 3,453 years ago. A very seldom event happened that caused the transplantation of the comet.

As a result of the huge power of this comet, a planet in a very far solar system with life that was beginning to develop was thrown from its course and pushed into a parallel path with the destructive giant comet. For more than 130 years, this planet went behind the giant and slowly caused it to deviate from its course. Then, 3,453 years ago, the Destroyer penetrated this solar system and rearranged the courses of its planets. As it drew close the Earth, its vast tail caused it to shack heavily. There were also extensive storms and volcanic eruptions. Humans and animals died in large numbers, mountains were shifted, and the depths of the oceans were changed.

In the Mediterranean Sea, the walls of lava from the Santorini volcano tore deep grooves and large amounts of water were penetrated. This evoked a huge catastrophe because the volcano exploded and destroyed the island. The explosion generated a huge tsunami, which grew to about 2,000 meters high and raged like a primeval monster over the ocean. All in its path were killed or damaged and the water became bloody red. In Egypt, this tsunami overflowed large areas that resulted in epidemics while it also hurried Northeast and destroyed far landscapes and coastal cities in Syria. The comet continued through the solar system and returned again 575 and half years later. (See section 10.2.13 and 10.2.3)

Destroyer planet - affects caused 5.79-134

Like a gigantic monster, the "Destroyer" comet rose from the black of space and unleashed its deadly destruction. At first, it was noticed like a chimera, but then it appeared as a shadowy and diffuse half-dark round disk. Reflecting the Sun's light, it came near the outer planet of a far away solar system with immense speed. It then changed into a gigantic bubbling hell that broke the peace of this system. The Destroyer drew behind it a fine veil of illuminated particles. From great distances, it caused hellish storms that destroyed great areas, which had been cultivated by the peaceful inhabitants of neighboring worlds. They suddenly found themselves surrendering to the huge and merciless powers of the universe.

On the third day after its penetration of this system, the Destroyer invaded the elliptical orbit of the sixth planet. It evoked large cosmic storms and caused the planet to leave its orbit and come dangerously close to the sun. Immense eruptions and storms occurred, mountains collapsed, and oceans were thrown out of their beds while the planet searched for another orbit around the sun. Two thirds of the inhabitants were killed by nature's fury. Wild waters tore away great parts of the land while exploding volcanoes dug huge plains under glowing lava and laid it in ruin of ashes. The planet's revolution became twice as fast while it orbited the sun in a contrary direction. The survivors had to find a new beginning in a primeval environment.

The Destroyer continued further into the system, spreading hellish death and destruction. It passed the fifth planet, with the first forms of life, at a far distance and caused no major damage. A fourth planet in this system irresistibly traveled into the frontal force of the Destroyer comet and created Earth's moon. (See section 10.2.13) In this far away system, the Destroyer raged further on. It threw a planet nearest the sun into it causing huge explosions. The Destroyer then deviated from its course out into the widths of space. The unimaginable heat of the blazing sun caused the surface of the dangerous wanderer to become liquefied. With its immense speed, it threw off glowing substances and particles in a long illuminated tail and became a deadly comet. The cold of cosmic space soon caused the surface to solidify once again.

A myriad of small particles and substances has covered it since then and has flung them off into the long tail behind it, showing others the course of the comet. With a continuous series of meteoric dust, particles, substances, and corpuscular radiation of suns, it will never loose any more of its force until one day it falls into its own destruction. For millions of years, it will wander through the universe until it turns to dust from the pulverizing of particles or becomes caught by a star and destroyed. Perhaps human beings will destroy it one day just as it has destroyed so much life. Its course is still incalculable. Due to many cosmic forces, it often unexpectedly changes course and menaces whole solar systems. However, it always repeatedly runs through the same solar systems every 575 and half years, but with alterations in distance of up to one million kilometers.

Destroyer planet through Vega system 57.92-93

The plejaren forefathers constructed the first space flying machines 21 million years ago. This happened millions of years after a great catastrophe that occurred when the Destroyer broke through the Vega System.

Destroyer planet attracts Venus 61.31-36

The Earth was afflicted by a catastrophe that caused the present eastern part of the globe to be swamped by immense masses of water when the giant comet known as the Destroyer passed dangerously near the Earth 10,080 years ago. This led to worldwide catastrophes that were never recorded by historians. The Destroyer also afflicted a deluge on the Earth 7,975 years ago. The Earth was spared from greater catastrophes until 6,906 years ago when the Destroyer once more caused much destruction. Then, another catastrophe broke out 4,453 years ago when the giant Destroyer comet attracted Venus to its present orbit and caused Santorini to erupt. This was well documented by historians, but not always correctly and much information has later been falsified.

Destroyer planet - details 61.45-50

There are still unsolved riddles for the Plejarens regarding how the Destroyer behaves, especially with the constant returning speed of the comet. It always returns every 575.5 years, although there are great alterations of up to 205 years. This means that it decreases or increases its return time of a few orbits, because of the mutual gravitational attractions of different planets and stars, from 478 years up to 683 years. Then after a few rotations, it returns to a constant rate of 575.5 years. This phenomenon happens within extremely irregular lengths of time. Usually when the Destroyer returns to a constant orbit time, it comes dangerously close to Earth and causes great destruction. This peculiar phenomenon is partly the result of the escape velocity from this solar system and its decisive moves at high speed to the constellation of Hercules. But this is not the only factor that causes this mysterious phenomenon.

Venus torn from Uranus 61.51-66

Venus was torn from a sun system far away because of the gravity attraction of the Destroyer. It followed behind the course of the Destroyer in its tow. But the giant comet was traveling so fast, that it left its appendage far behind because of the slow starting velocity of Venus. This occurred about 8,590 years ago with an orbital time of 632 years, which was 57 years longer. The Destroyer then returned to its constant orbital time of 575.5 years. Venus moved in an extremely slow elliptical shaped orbit that turned into a dangerous orbit for the other planets and the central sun as well. It remained in this orbit for 632 years until 7,957 years ago when the Destroyer appeared again. It caused Venus to alter its course towards Earth and caused huge floods and destruction on Earth. This was the second deluge within the last 12,000 years that was caused by the Destroyer. Then, the Destroyer changed its orbital time again and passed through this system without causing harm. On its next pass, 6,906 years ago, it returned to the constant rate, but caused Venus to orbit the sun closer to the Earth's orbit. Venus remained in that orbit until 4,058 years ago when, during the next passage of the comet, Earth was damaged again and Venus slowly reached an orbit that led directly to Earth. But, the Destroyer returned again 3,453 years ago and caused Venus to enter its current orbit as well as the catastrophe of Santorini. Since then, the Destroyer has had a changed orbital time and no longer afflicted this solar system except for small irregularities.

Last & next appearance of Destroyer 61.67-76

The Destroyer reached its constant orbital time again in 1680 when it came through the system without causing damage. Its next passage will occur 575.5 years after the previous passage and will appear again in 2,255. Another inexplicable phenomenon is that the orbital times of the Destroyer balances itself without exception in such a way that every two rotations always result in a total of 1,151 years, or twice 575.5 years. Thus, if the time of one passage is 478 years, then the next orbital time will surely be 673 years. This gives a calculation for the average. It follows that, if longer, non-constant rotations appear, the years will be compensated again without exception. This is a phenomenon that cannot be found anywhere else in the universe.

Destroyer orbits only in this system 61.94-95

The Destroyer comet does not always penetrate into planetary systems within the solar system because it passes at different distances as it travels through the solar system and it is hardly visible. But, this has certainly happened within the last 12,000 years.

10.2.9 Dimensions, other

Dimensions, other 39.193-198

Mediums contact other dimensioned forms of life. Beings from the "Other World", who are a bit higher than earthly humans in evolution, are able to transmit knowledge that is somewhat higher. They do not possess very high spiritual knowledge and are only more advanced by about 70 to 90 years. But, relations with many beings from the Other World are absolutely useless and even partly dangerous because they are of low levels of evolution and low intelligence. These are the levels that are found in certain religious heresies. Many of these relations are self-deceptive or even consciously deceptive and nonexistent.

10.2.10 Eye of God

Eye of God 30.25-26

In the original home worlds of human races, there was a powerful destruction of a very great star. This occurred a very long time ago by a power-hungry barbarian. This IHWH perished along with everything else in the damage. The destruction developed into the form of a gigantic eye that should serve as a memorial to the other creatures of the universe of what an evil delusion and thirst for power can do. This formation is designated IHWHMATA or eye of god. On Earth, it can be found in the Lyra Constellation and it known as the Ring Nebula, or M57. A very powerful telescope is needed in order to see it from Earth.

Eye of God 51.84-91

The origin of the Helix Nebula [NGC 7293] was the result of the destruction of a very powerful star.

10.2.11 Life, in this solar system, LONGEVITY

Life, in this sun system, LONGEVITY 1.29-36

The other planets in this solar system have been long since devoid of life or are in the first stages of development. However, other solar systems have many kinds of life that are not only human. The animal and human forms of life are varied. Also, many animal forms and even plant forms of life have developed higher states of consciousness. So, there exists life that has acquired much knowledge and have freed themselves from their home worlds and traveled through the universe and have also come to Earth. Many of them are rather nasty contemporaries and live in a certain barbarism that exists on Earth. Mankind ought to be on its guard because these entities often attack and destroy anything that gets in their way. They have destroyed whole planets or beaten their inhabitants into barbarous bondage. It is one of the Plejaren missions to warn Earth humans of these creatures. Meier is told to let this be known to humanity because more and more time approaches when a conflict with these entities will become unavoidable.

Earth's neighbors were occupied 23.109-110

Several planets in this solar system were inhabited at earlier times by human races and today only have small importance for Plejaren bases. Those who have stated that they have seen and talked with human beings on other planets in this system are talking nonsense and quackery.

Other planets contain no human life 29.123

There are not any other planets in this solar system that contain any forms of human life.

No life on Jupiter, Saturn & Uranus 31.P193-197

If there were life on the planets of Jupiter, Saturn, or Uranus, then the forms of life would have to be half-physical and extremely small. Large creatures were never able to live on those planets. Life on the largest planet could not be any more than 53 centimeters tall. There is nothing living on these planets of either material or spiritual forms.

Meier asks if planet similar to Earth 34.P639

When Meier asks Ptaah if there is life on another world that is at about the same level of evolution as on Earth, he is told that the variety of the Creation knows no limits.

Earth, the only inhabited planet 54.93-94

Within the SOL system, Earth is the only inhabitable world that is settled by human forms of life.

Mercury - metal core & contracting 66.206-207

The metal core of the planet Mercury has such a large specific mass that the outer stratum constantly contracts inward and as a result, the outer spheres become extremely compact.

Mars has much water 60.114-122

Mars contains no human forms of life. American scientists will be surprised when their probes to Mars reveal the presence of much more water than was previously assumed. But there will also be surprises in the character of the ground and the nature of microorganisms there. Flora and fauna can absolutely be found on Mars when the scientific instruments of the probes become advanced enough to evaluate and store the concerned results. It is possible that an analysis of this could prove that there flora and fauna is life on Mars even though the planet destroys other forms of life by its harsh environment.

Mars with exotic life forms 66.199-205

The first American probe to Mars failed completely. But, the second one resulted in the fantastic announcement that it detected exotic life on Mars that is completely unknown to earthly scientists. However, this kind of life feeds off of all biological life. Biological life as known on Earth cannot exist on Mars. But the life there is a biological form of life that is not understood by earthly scientists.

10.2.13 Moon

Origins of the moon 5.58-122

A fourth planet of a far away solar system once traveled into the frontal force of the Destroyer comet. Like two wild monsters, both bodies raged towards each other. Before they crashed together, huge explosions distorted the lifeless dead dwarf planet. Its broken pieces were flung out into the endless widths of the universe to become glowing falling stars before finding their final end. Some parts of the dwarf were thrown into the sun and atomized while others were captured by the Destroyer and became apart of it. One half of the planet was flung into the depths of space. At times, its course brought it into the reach of stars where it was hit by meteors that changed its form. It became an angular, rounded form that was dead and covered by huge craters. Eventually, it was trapped by this solar system and entered the orbit of the Earth as its moon. It is 4.5 million years older than Earth.

10.2.14 Universe, size of

Universe, size of (See section 10.2.7) 10.84-87

Universal central galaxy 69.104-119

The central sun of a galaxy is formed by an accumulation of gaseous atoms that are everywhere in the universe. They grow into heaps, alternate, and change themselves. This causes them to heat one another in the run of time and condense. The heat propels them into the coldness of space, where they begin to rotate and condense even more. The gaseous atoms that whirl through space are the direct, condensed products of the central sun of the universe. This is the origin of all materializing, coarse-material matter, which is created from fine-material into gaseous atoms.

The central sun of the universe does not correspond to the same formation of substances as a galactic central sun, but it still consists of pure spiritual stuff. It is spiritual matter that shows no symptoms of coarse-material. This spiritual stuff appears as a milky-white coloration. It can be seen by humans as light because spiritual matter of this type is just light. Just as behaves with galactic coarse-material, these spiritual energies accumulate, form an immeasurable center, alternate and condense into gaseous atoms, and are flung from the center to whirl as gaseous atomic galaxies and other free gaseous atoms through space. They finally develop themselves and become visible as coarse-material galaxies and so on.

The universal central sun is roughly in the middle of the universe, which is too far away to be seen from Earth even though is light power is immeasurable. Only with a very strong instrument, can it be seen as a fine milky line. Earthly scientists have already succeeded in accomplishing this for some years. The universal central galaxy is seen as a line because it is seen from its thin side just as the Milky Way galaxy is seen. Earthly scientists have already proved that the central sun of the central galaxy does exist. Seen from the Earth, the central galaxy appears like an immense and immeasurable flash, which constantly enlarges itself. The original spiritual matter is merely condensed spiritual energies that rise from the Creation and is created by it from ideas.

10.2.15 Venus

Venus and Moon origins 5.58-61

3,453 years ago, the Destroyer comet penetrated this solar system and tore a planet that was about the same size as Earth, closely past the Earth at a distance of about 600,000 kilometers where is became captured by the sun's gravitational field. It settled in an orbit between Mercury and Earth. Since then, the transplanted and immigrated planet has become known as Venus.

Venus - details 29.69-122

The reason why no human life exists on Venus has to do with a huge dark star that destroyed half a planetary system millions of years ago at a distance of many light years from Earth. After the destruction of the far system, it became known as the Destroyer. Only a few thousand years ago, this gigantic comet brought an object into its tow and led it over many millions kilometers into this solar system. Although the Destroyer flew far outside of Earth's reach, its towed object came dangerously near the Earth and evoked devastating catastrophes. This threw the whole solar system into confusion and all planets were forced into new orbits. The object was captured by the sun's gravitational forces into an orbit between Mercury and Earth 3,453 years ago and has become known as Venus.

As a result of its close passage near Earth, Venus has an eccentric course and its rotation time is extremely slow in a retrograde rotation. As a result, one day on Venus lasts 117 earthly days and its 3 degrees inclined axis of its poles vary every 243 earthly days. As a result of its close passage with Earth, it was deprived of its rotational energy and huge frictional heat rose up. This frictional heat is the cause of the physical condition on Venus today. The atmosphere and environmental conditions on the surface of Venus make it absolutely threatening for all human beings. The surface temperature of Venus, measured at a depth of 32 kilometers, is 457 degrees Celsius. This is also the reason why all of the water on the planet was vaporized and forms a very thick stratum of clouds. The atmosphere is so thick that the pressure at sea level is 334 times greater than the air pressure on Earth. It also consists of 87% carbon dioxide. Oxygen exists in the lower strata at only 4.23% and nitrogen and rare gases account for only 5.47% of the atmosphere.

Only very few water vapors presently exists. The actual pressure of the atmosphere on Venus is 107 times greater than on Earth. Any human forms on Venus would be squashed and destroyed as well as any metal. Earthly probes were found on Venus to be completely squashed and destroyed before they reached the surface due to the huge pressure and atmosphere of the planet. The probes from Russia look like they were shot into a metallic wall. Venus has a very low magnetic field with a Van-Allen belt stratum, which is very weak and does not screen much of the solar winds. The very high temperatures adversely affect this stratum and the lack of water provides no nourishment for any life there. The planet is in a phase of resurrection and restoration and may develop itself in hundreds of thousands of years to where the lowest forms of life may exist there.

The equatorial regions are very plain and relief structural places are very distant. The night and daytime temperatures are nearly the same, but there are very great differences in wind speed between low and high regions. On the surface, the winds are calm, but at higher regions, the winds reach velocities of 117 meters per second. The lower portion of cloud cover is at 43.17 kilometers, but storms may cause this to change. The mountains reach an average height of 2.3 kilometers above the surface. The climate and structure over the planet appears the same with certain differences.

Unlike the stories of charlatans and deceivers on Earth, no life truly exists on Venus. The planet is still very wild with a surface similar to Earth's moon under the thick cloud strata. But, it is rich in different minerals and other materials. When the Plejarens travel to Venus, they do so with special protective clothing. They must also take into consideration the different kinds of poisons and deadly gases that collect around the planet. The temperatures can rise above 500 degrees Celsius on the surface and the atmospheric pressure can change from 88 up to 107.

10.3 Biology

Molecular biology 8.44-64

The development of molecular biology on Earth has reached far. There are only a few more understandings needed that will unexpectedly open doors for mankind. Earthly scientists are close to very great discoveries and the concepts from these will result in very great possibilities. Genes are the carriers of hereditary characteristics in the color bodies. Chromosomes are not universally constructed in all living forms. They are distinct and have different numbers according to the kind of creature they are for. Human beings normally have the same number of chromosome pairs. Age is determined by genes. The genes regulate the function of cells and they regulate life, regeneration, and the disintegration of cells via the spirit and brain. Chromosomes define the character, form, and sex of creatures. They are also the essential carriers of the genes, which affect their factorial influences onto the chromosomes and cause them to be normal, mutated, or switch incorrectly according to existing factors.

Mongolism essentially consists of a hurt of the genes by many possibilities, which in many cases can generate surplus chromosomes. Chromosomes mainly consist of albumins and nucleon acids. Each gene conditions the heredity of characteristics that consisted at one time. Every single gene contains in it the characteristics of both decisive factors, which are the negative and the positive, the male and the female. Occasional influences can result in "wrong switching" or "wrong breeding" that can cause mutated creatures. It can happen that a dominant gene will over-screen a recessive gene, which will not let it reach full development. This can hurt both genes. It is also possible for genes to change in the run of time because they are subjected to the processes of evolution and devolution, just as everything else in the universe.

Transplants - dangers 42.63-72

The transplantation of body parts is still primitive science on Earth, which results in few successes. Plejaren scientists are currently working on the transplantation of eyes and have achieved complete success. But only eyes are transplanted because the natural eye cannot be substituted by technology. Other organs and body parts are not transplanted because such acts conceal very great dangers in them. One danger is with the complete destruction of the immune system of the body. The body receiving the transplant must be made completely defenseless with narcotics, poisons, etc. so that it does not reject the transplantation. The body then becomes susceptible to every outside influence. The second factor concerns alien fluids that are also transplanted. These fluids work against the inner forces of the other body. This creates many dangers along with body and spirit degeneration.

Cancer 57.42-45

Cancer is embodied by wrongly controlled life. The Plejarens are fortunate enough that they have controlled this disease for a long time. But, this was only possible when these humans avoided certain negating and negative opinions and type of conduct and started to think and act in new ways. They are not allowed to share this information because earthly humans must elaborate the necessary knowledge on their own. This will cause humanity to grow from this and understand a lot of things including the right way of living. If this knowledge were simply given to mankind on Earth, it would be turned into destructive uses. The knowledge about conquering this disease hides too many forces and too much power to be revealed safely.

Sense of orientation & balance 57.181-185

Meier is very sensitive to the feeling of orientation and balance, which is controlled by the inner ear. In addition, he is very nature-bound and reacts very strongly to changes of any kind. His immunity to disturbances of balance is connected to his being bound to nature and his express desire for reality.

10.4 Mineralogy

Amulets, metals, crystals & stones 8.177-193

The use of amulets to decrease sickness is nonsense in every respect. It is true that metal compositions, crystals, and precious stones absorb and hold certain radiation. But they are only partly successful for treating sickness. Primarily, they have worth and can help to avoid much need and misery.

Radiations are absorbed 21.23-26

Although all material things do absorb different rays, the Plejaren technology allows them to remove other rays and insert Earthly rays so that no difference can be detected. If extraterrestrial rays were not removed than they could be detected and even become dangerous to many forms of life.

Precious stones could be dangerous 22.78-119

(See section 7.2.4)</

Precious metals, stones & crystals 39.P81-82

Precious metals, stones and crystals are the most dangerous for storing destructive forces, which are often collected in deadly quantities. Because of this, every earthly human is guilty for the early deaths of their fellow creatures. When they think in uncontrolled form, either consciously or unconsciously, they release uncontrollable destructive forces.

Ecology 45.113-116

Because of the unreasonable actions of Earth's inhabitants, Earth is missing many elements, which she needs for production. Human beings have robbed them from her. In only one century, the surface of the Earth has lost so much fertile ground that it will need many millions of years for it to become fertile again. Within the past 25 years, the humans of Earth have destroyed so much fertile ground that the recovery rate is surpassed by 144.2%. This means that, in only 25 years, earthly humans have generated 144.2% new unfertile wasteland with the destruction of woods and fertile ground in addition to the natural waste regions. 35 years ago, 86.1% of Earth's surface was fertile. Today, there is only 39.7% of fertile ground to grow plant life in.

10.5 Physics

10.5.1 Atomic Structure

Anti-matter 55.147-149

Anti-matter does exist, but the Plejaren scientists have only discovered it in the previous year and explored it. Before then, anti-matter was well known, but they could only prove it last year. It was only a small step from its knowledge to its utilization in actual spacecraft.

Atomic Structure 70.4-18

The primary or first molecule that became the mass of spirit or spiritual energy contains 49 atoms. Only a few people on Earth know of this. The earthly scientists had gone astray in what they considered to be atoms, but they are not. The atom is not of pure material nature, but an intermediate thing between course-material matter and the energy of the spirit. This is a seven-fold synthesis of matter. In the structure of the atom, the seven planes are completely different. Previously, earthly science only knew of two of these planes, which are the seventh and sixth planes. Now they try to explore the fifth plane because they have just become aware of it.

They are exploring the origins of life backwards. This means that they follow their research from the final product to its origins, which is good logic. But the scientists are very presumptuous and insufficiently educated because they incorrectly define the seventh plane of the synthesis of matter as the atom, which is actually at the first plane. This exists as being absolutely indivisible in its values. The second plane is known to earthly science, but it is actually the sixth plane, known as elementary particles. The fifth plane is known to science, but they are still unable to analyze it. They have no concept of the existence of four more planes. They should also be aware of the fact that a micro atomic plane exists in addition to the atomic plane, which draws through it all spiritual energies and course-material matter.

10.5.3 Gravity

Gravity & effects on/in beamships 4.70-78

Onboard beamships, their beam protection screen causes all penetrating resistance to be diverted. This technique also neutralizes the gravitational forces of a planet. This does not mean that the forces are destroyed, removed, or dissolved. Just as particles and radiation is not affected by air, the gravity is turned off and the beamship generates its own gravitational forces. The ship maintains the same gravitational forces as on Earth even when the gravitational strength of each planet is not always the same. By turning off gravity and attracting forces, beamships are able to function as an autonomous miniature planet and can fly through any atmosphere at nearly the speed of light without risk. The passengers inside the craft are not affected by planetary forces and feel normal and unburdened as if they were on their native planet. The gravity inside beamships is completely controlled. When the passengers travel to a planet with a different atmosphere and gravity, they use special suits with small, transportable instruments that provide the same beam protection screen as exists onboard their ship.

Gravity - nature of & defined 54.63-75

Gravity is of an electro-magnetic nature with two equal, but opposing forces. However, it works as well for repelling as it does for attracting. It is connected to the mass itself and the mass of the Earth provides the gravitational forces felt on its surface. Gravity and electro-magnetism exist at the same time and appears as attracting as well as repelling forces. The cause for gravity is related to the warmth of the planet in relation to the cold of space. In addition, the density of the planet and its atmosphere, are also important factors for gravity and anti-gravity. Nothing more is permitted to be revealed.

Information regarding the control of gravitational forces is revealed based upon natural cosmic laws that control the universal harmonic development in relation to all concerns at all levels of evolution. This means that the spiritual, as well as the material development proceeds constantly in harmony with one another and always complete each other in unison. In regard to the mastering of gravity, the regulation of the laws dictates spiritual evolution primarily before the technical means are made possible. Normally, the exercise of spiritual forces appears first for the ability to paralyze the forces of gravity. This is where a human being is able to move weightlessly through the air with levitation.

Step by step, humans are able to learn how control and master gravity suitably. The control of gravity consists primarily with the evolution of the spirit and feelings when humans have released themselves from the weight of the non-spiritual condition. Only then is the way made clear for them to consider technical means to do this. But, exceptions to the law do exist and is provided for earthly humans. This exception consists of a very rare mistaken development and now the material is outweighed by the spiritual. Since 1937, the strong influences of the new cosmic age have led the material side of the world toward a gentle and harmonious course, which cause the differences between the spiritual and material sides to not be as strong as previously thought.

Many forms of spiritual effort have led to spiritual recognitions of enormous meaning, which appear in the development of technologies. This has caused a disturbance of the normal sequence required by the law. Newly gathered spiritual cognitions also compensate for the lawful rule. So, in spite of earthly barbarism, humanity has proceeded in both directions since 1937 and advances with cosmic oscillations, rapidly towards real evolution. This course of development was already seen in the first days of the Aquarian Age on the 3rd of February 1844 through 1937. It is greatly probable that the temporal aim of mankind on Earth, in respect to their evolution, will be reached in about 800 years. An attempt to reduce this to a shorter span of time has failed. Humanity is not solely responsible for this failure because those who were chosen to spread the knowledge about the truth have also failed.

10.6 Technology

10.6.1 Beamships of Earth

Meier sees a strange UFO 11.150-158

Five minutes before midnight on the 14th of April, 1975, Meier heard a peculiar piping and stirring sound and saw an object fly past at an enormous speed from East to West. He also realized a great shadow. He recognized the sound as being similar to another huge flying disc. But, it was not a Plejaren craft and must have been another craft that flew into Earth's space. The Plejarens cannot control all access to Earth and normally, alien craft leave soon after arrival as soon as they have satisfied cravings for knowledge. Another craft of unknown origin also appeared in the evening of March 20th at a distance of about one-kilometer, flying from North to South. The object had a red or yellowish color to it. It was a craft from a peaceful race in a neighboring system to the Plejarens who were here on an expedition. They are especially interested in the Earth and so their illuminated beamships are frequently seen here. Their technology is not as advanced as the Plejarens and they do not care if their craft is seen. These are peaceful human forms that are closely connected with the Plejarens, which is not the case for all who come here from the universe.

Earth-built UFOs 31.P355-374

Earthly scientists have built flying craft that are similar in appearance to beamships, but they are only propelled with internal combustion engines or jet engines with a repulsion effect. The first ships of this kind were built in 1941. Their first flights reached nearly 12,500 meters high with velocities of more than 2,000 kilometers per hour. This was developed under the leadership of Adolf Hitler. At the end of World War II, they were all destroyed before falling into their enemy's hands. Several plans, equipment and apparatus fell into the hands of different groups who developed the ships of today, which are disc shaped. Many such objects are observed by earthly beings when they are test flown. The largest of these earthly flying discs are nearly 100 meters in diameter and exist in large numbers.

Governments on Earth vigorously deny ownership of them, but many of their craft have crashed. The uninitiated public erroneously believes that the earthly craft are from extraterrestrial worlds. Many of the craft have been forced to make emergency landings because their construction is rather prone to be faulty. Recently, atomic engines have been installed that have caused burn damage and those who have come near the damaged areas are often menaced by atomic radiation. When these craft have made emergency landings, observers nearby are often terrorized by the crew or are abducted in order to ensure security. Such events are not rare on Earth and are often accused of being caused by extraterrestrial creatures.

1950's Russian flying disc 62.62-69

In the 1950s, a disc was privately flown into space with a Russian woman and three men onboard. The initiators of that undertaking were a group that had taken possession of German plans for flying discs after World War II and created their own organization. Some information about these events unexplainably became public and was later falsified to be about a Russian space capsule. The destruction of communications and control functions of the ship was responsible for it going off coarse and expelled into empty space.

UFO in Iran - report read by Meier 63.21-22

Plejaren telemetry discs registered the inbound flight of an unknown object towards Earth, but it had simply disappeared without a trace and was not found again by any means even though efforts were conducted to find it.

Secret Brazilian group flying disc 65.5-9

Recent events have occurred, which deal with quite miserable efforts by elements that threaten Meier's life. This is in regards to strange traces and events that took place at Winkelriet near Wetzikon where a shining missile from an unknown ship came near him. This was in reaction to Meier's mission, which threatens to expose certain elements that seek to spread their plan for another world government. (See section 8.4.13)

Beamships of Earth 65.52-58

The beamship, which left traces in the Winkleriet woods at Wetzikon, belonged to a private Brazilian group, which was sent out to reconnaissance Meier's circumstances. The ship was stolen years ago when a crew from a far galaxy made an emergency landing in Brazil. The crew all died after their breathing containers became empty and could not be refilled. The interstellar propulsion of the ship was completely destroyed and cannot be repaired, but the planetary gravitation drive still functions sufficiently for planetary flights.

Beamships of Earth 66.182-188

Other attempts on Meier's life were performed by a Nazi-like group, which established itself after the war, in Brazil. They had stolen German and Canadian plans for the construction of flying discs, which they used to construct discs that can only fly within the Earth's atmosphere. They also obtained possession of an alien spaceship. (See prior paragraph)

10.6.3 Secret private advanced Technology

America & Russia will be cooperating 26.9-22

Earthly scientists have developed different probes and exploration enterprises to explore space and some worlds that need attention. In addition, the United States and Russia want to work together on a space station. This demands extreme attention and many controls by the Plejarens in order to prevent the participating parties from acquiring more understanding than the scientists and leaders are able to bear. This danger is considerably close and requires constant monitoring and control. Otherwise, heavy and long-lasting consequences could occur for the strengthening of power in certain states.

The greatest danger is in the total destruction of humanity and their world if certain principles are understood. This could result in very wicked consequences for the harmony of the entire solar system. Further neighboring systems would also be affected that could result in a small cosmic catastrophe. This joint project has already begun and humanity must become aware that not all power belongs to their scientists and politicians and that other forms of life exist who care for a certain order so that everyone does not live too much in worries and sorrows. In addition, earthly leaders and scientists should realize that they do not have the power to unleash destruction at their own discretion.

Plejarens have helped projects fail 26.23-32

Earthly developments have been monitored and the Plejarens, as well as others, have already performed preventive actions. They have even had to cause things to be lost and different enterprises to fail.

Secret super atomic bomb 45.69-74

There is another bomb that has been developed, which is produced by natural products of nature, whose explosive effect is many thousand times stronger than the present atomic bomb. When exploded, it produces an immense chain reaction that will cause the Earth to be engulfed in a complete firestorm and atomized within only eight minutes. The Earth is very beautiful, but it will not be that way for long if humanity does not change its ways and give up its delusions about atomic bombs. The Earth is still able to regenerate itself if the exploitations are completely stopped within a short time. But, the planet will need millions of years to regenerate.

10.6.4 Space Travel, space and time

Space Travel, space and time 1.24-26

Even though mankind has reached the moon with their missiles, it has not reached cosmic space. By using this method, humanity will never accomplish this for it requires a means of propulsion that is able to penetrate hyperspace and dissolve infinite distances. Space and time are not overcome by space and time, but by spacelessness and timelessness, which means that space and time collapse into one another and become equally directional to zero time. In this way, only a few fractions of a second are enough to rush through billions of light-years, practically without loss of time, because the zero time neutralizes space and time simultaneously.

Beamship hyper-drive 4.26-42

The Plejarens propel their beamships with a hyper drive of radiation propulsion, which changes matter into energy. To surpass the speed of light, their beamships are flung into hyperspace, where space and time collapse into one another and completely dissolve. This hyper drive enables their craft to travel many millions of times faster than the speed of light. But this drive only functions when the speed of light has already been reached. This means that another drive is needed for speeds up to the speed of light. Then the hyper drive breaks open hyperspace and produces speeds millions and billions of times faster than light speed or hyper speed. This is where mass enlarges itself in relation to the increase of its speed.

Space and time collapse and become null-time and null-space. This means that time and space cease to exist and distances of numerous light years are passed within a fraction of a second without a lag in time occurring. The Plejarens need about seven hours to travel between their home world and Earth, as experienced on those worlds. This time is needed so that they can use their normal propulsion to travel far out into space before they can activate their hyper drive. Their travel through hyper space ends far outside of this solar system where their normal drive is used again to reach Earth. They never break into hyperspace too close to any planets because they could also enter hyperspace and then be shot out like deadly missiles at the other end.

Hyper-drives and space travel 4.50-60

The Plejarens are not allowed to reveal details about the hyper drive or the normal drive. If earthly scientists were to discover these details, they would solve their drive problems in a short time and earthly humans are not yet free enough to fly into cosmic space. But, earthly scientists will soon solve these problems. They have rough drawings of devices known as light-emitting drives and tachyon drives. The light-emitting drive functions as the normal drive to propel craft around the planet and up to 153 million kilometers in distance. This is Earth's security border. Then, the tachyon drive is used to overcome greater distances. This is the hyper propulsion drive for breaking into hyperspace. But, the Plejarens are not allowed to reveal how such a drive functions or how tachyons are created and used as well as the emitting drive. (See section 4.2.8)

Theory of Relativity and Hyperspace 8.91-119

There are different possibilities for overcoming the distances of space. But for flying objects, only one possibility exists. This is the use of hyperspace, in which the dilatation of time is removed and the theory of relativity takes affect. The turning off of a time dilatation, or time-shift, requires the breaking open of hyperspace. The jump occurs very fast with the momentous parallelization of a protection screen against huge increases in velocity. Likewise, the mass also enlarges just as fast. Matter becomes distorted within a millionth of a second and becomes fine-material form, which is able to pass timelessly through hyperspace.

There are different processes involved. Because of the speed, the mass first becomes differentiated so that a hyper-leap is possible. The mass increases in relation to the increase in speed and grows without limits. The Plejaren ships are protected by protective screens, which when turned off, the distortion effect is enabled. The accelerated distortion creates a dematerialization. Then, space and time become paralyzed. At the destination, matter is re-materialized to what it was in the beginning. This whole process requires no more than a millionth of a second and those inside the ship are not aware of any alteration of any kind.

Newcomers to space flight usually act irresponsibly by flying below the speed of light, which requires much time. Eventually they all learn from their experiences and understandings. This type of space travel is very dangerous. When spaceships exceed the speed of light without using hyperspace, then a catastrophe ensues, which is the result of the theory of relativity. Speeds above the speed of light hide many dangers. Time dilatation is only one of these dangers. A further danger exists when the mass of the spaceship enlarges itself in relation to its speed. This can cause the ship to be destroyed under certain circumstances. There are also many other dangers. However, all forms of life must accomplish their process of evolution in order to collect experiences and knowledge. The Plejaren forefathers had to struggle with these problems and often went astray in space and time as a consequence. The same thing happens with other creatures and they continue to happen the same way.

Dangers of speed 8.130-152

The dangers of speed are very great even at a few kilometers per hour if the vehicles or flight machines are not properly screened. These speeds can damage the form, structure and stability of craft when protective means are not present. A natural consequence is the enlargement of mass and the dissolution of matter. Because objects enlarge themselves in relation to speed, this can result in a slow destruction. This can only be minimally detected by the technology on Earth. The results of this process can take hundreds of years, but at high speeds, the time is reduced to decades or a few years.

This process also injures human beings because their mass also changes with speed. This affects the brain as well and all functions become retarded. Quite suddenly, the functions of thinking and reacting shut off and emptiness ensues. As a result, humans can loose control over themselves and over their vehicle. Of course, people can slowly accommodate themselves to these factors and master them to a certain degree. But there is a limit to how much damage can be sustained before failure occurs. It can take years before such events afflict people.

Age and individual characteristics play a part in how much can be endured before being overcome by the disregarded laws of nature. Once their bearable limit is reached, they cannot move any faster than they can walk unless their machines are protected against the mass-enlarging influences. If earthly humans were to observe this law, then they would have less needs, misery, and deaths. But, they are obstinate, stoic, and will not listen to advice. Earthly humans still presume to be the crown of Creation and the only intelligent creatures in the universe. However, this information should be diffused for those who have overcome their megalomania and want to learn from these explanations.

Hyperspace travel possible by technology 30.9-14

In the whole universe, there are only a few kinds of life that are able to travel huge distances with the utilization of hyperspace. But when this becomes possible by the highest developed races, the universe no longer holds any limits for them. Space and time is overcome and barriers no longer exist for them between universes.

Neutralization of time and space E2.3

Asket, from the Dal universe, informed Meier that, in order to perform their mission, they will have to neutralize space and time of his and her universes. To do that, they will travel through a harmonic passage without hurting her ship and the universes.

Hyper Space (See section 4.4.2) 31.239-279

The security distance from planets 34.P626-638

The Greatspacer mother ship has much better capabilities for overcoming distances than the smaller craft. It has technology to neutralize time and achieve a safe distance from planets and stars in less time before transferring into hyperspace. Time is neutralized until shortly before departure and a neutral timeless tunnel is formed through which the short distance to a safe distance is overcome within a split second. The timeless tunnel is easier to handle than a hyper-leap, but such a tunnel can only be generated within certain distances and the environment must always be regarded. Different galaxies and systems limit the extent of the timeless tunnel.

Time travel - the process 39.201-225

Even the best Plejaren scientists know very little about shifts in time. They know the how, when, and where, but they do not know the basic cause of the process. Meier will spend two days in space onboard the Greatspacer while only two hours will pass on Earth. During the flight from Earth, they have jumped two days into the past. This concerns a shift in time. Meier will live twice with one time on Earth and one time in space. If he were to return to Earth in the past, then he would be able to meet himself two days earlier. The difference in time is regulated by a manipulation of the times.

Craft lost in hyperspace 64.86-92

There were two ships from Cassiopeia on Earth for about four months with several crewmembers. They had even contacted some people on Earth. One of these ships was destroyed along with its crew in 1962 and all records onboard were lost. The reason for this destruction is hidden in darkness and could not be discovered. This occurred in hyperspace, as shown by the impulses at its departure point. The second ship left the Earth about seven years ago. Its crew had been active here until then on expeditions. Unfortunately, this ship has also not reached its home world because of some influences that flung the ship into a strange dimension when it tried to break into hyperspace. The controlling instruments, which were connected remotely to the instruments on the ship, suddenly received no more impulses when the breakthrough occurred. This clearly indicates that the ship was flung into a strange dimension. A male leader named Elhoa had commanded the destroyed ship and the disappeared ship was under the command of a certain Ahar.

This process also injures human beings because their mass also changes with speed. This affects the brain as well and all functions become retarded. Quite suddenly, the functions of thinking and reacting shut off and emptiness ensues. As a result, humans can loose control over themselves and over their vehicle. A necessary prerequisite to understand this document

Please study the following information thoroughly and carefully before you start reading the book or booklet!

Based on our own laborious and nerve-racking experience during the translation process of 'Goblet of the Truth' into English — for the first time carried out in cooperation with a professional translation company — it was finally proven that it is impossible to translate our 'Lehrschriften` * from the German original into other terrestrial languages in a comprehensively correct wise and in accordance with the true meaning. Since our Plejaren friends have come to the same conclusion, based on their linguists' studies, FIGU Switzerland (Mother Center/Headquarters) has decided neither to translate nor print any further books after that of the 'Goblet of the Truth'. We will concentrate our efforts on the preservation and dissemination of the original texts. We cannot and will not take any responsibility for the misunderstandings and mistranslations that inevitably will result from translations.

We, "Billy" Eduard A. Meier (BEAM) and FIGU Switzerland, allow our books and booklets to be translated into foreign languages. However, the following terms must be observed:

1. If a person or a group wants to translate a book or a text — intend-ing to publish it in printed or electronic form — he/she has to get in contact with FIGU Switzerland in order to clarify the situation.
2. The copyright and the license of a work (book, text) unrestrictedly remain in the possession of BEAM or FIGU Switzerland. Before the beginning of a translation, written permission or —depending on the scope of the project — a contract has to be obtained from BEAM or FIGU Switzerland.
3. Any translations must be done directly from the German original text.
4. The person or group in question is responsible for ensuring a best possible translation. FIGU Switzerland does not pro-vide any guarantee and takes no responsibility for the correctness of the translations, because it is impossible to correctly translate the German language into any other language.

* Lehrschriften = writings/texts which have instructive and teaching/ didactic contents

5. The translator's name must be included in any translation. If there is no FIGU Land or Study Group in a country, it makes sense and is desirable to also include the translator's address.
6. Texts which are to be published in electronic form only, must be put at the disposal of a FIGU 'Daughter Group' (Land or Study Group) in the actual country for free. The Group will make the text available on the internet both in the native and German language, and any necessary corrections to the document in question will be done promptly.
7. If no Land or Study Group exists in the country in question, then the translated texts will be published on the website of the FIGU Mother Center for the country in question.
8. In the case of the coded Spiritual-Teaching texts (all of BEAM's texts with the exception of the Contact Notes and novels), the German original text must be included with the translation as an opportunity for comparison.
9. This text must be placed as an introduction at the beginning of each book or booklet, in two languages.

The books from FIGU are very special works of absolutely precise and accurate informational content which can decisively enrich your world of thoughts if you dedicate yourselves to the reading attentively, openly and without prejudice.
The informational content in the works is only of such great precision because the German language is the only language on our Earth that is presently in the position to present in its richness of expressions, clearly and without misunderstanding, all the necessary aspects and explanations as they need to be understood. The old German forms of writing, spelling and expression that are used — and that may sometimes appear somewhat strange and peculiar — are since time immemorial laid down in such a wise that interpretations and misunderstandings are ruled out right from the be-ginning and the theme can be dealt with exhaustively, logically and clearly, which is today only possible in the German language.

Necessary prerequisite II

The highly precise and absolutely accurate explanations of the German cannot - at the present time - be translated with the same value into any other existing language on Earth, for the reason that no other terrestrial language allows for the same precise expressions like the German. When translating, this circumstance requires - according to the language - more or less extensive explanations, paraphrasing and synonyms, which, however, water down the informational content and make it unclear. That is why each human being who wants to thoroughly consider the spiritual teaching and its aspects, in order to draw extensive value from it for his or her further life, is strongly recommended to thoroughly learn the German language in its complete richness and its extensive many-sidedness, so that his or her understanding is ensured at all times. Only those who make the effort to learn the German language actually have the certainty to understand completely and clearly the text at hand and to fully exhaust its richness.

It must also be considered that interwoven into all of Billy's German Spiritual-Teaching texts is an evolution-CODE. This code is fully effective only when every word of the text is in its correct place and written free of errors from beginning to end.
The code releases impulses from the storage banks which reach the reader and begin to work evolutively in him or her. This process is unconscious and has nothing to do with a coercion or manipulation, rather only with the knowledge that is retained in the storage banks for all times and which, when released through corresponding impulses, begins to penetrate very slowly into the consciousness. The same result is obtained when someone reads the German text, even though that person may not master the Ger-man language. It makes no difference whether the text is spoken silently or aloud, or whether the person is simply reading. The German language originated from the Old-Lyrian and, interestingly, has the same amount of characters per word, e.g., Salome gam nan ben Urda - Friede (peace) sei (be) auf (on) der (the) Erde (Earth). It is not possible for BEAM to work the code into any language other than the German language because no other language is suitable for incorporating the code. Moreover, one has to take into account that many words and expressions of the Ger-man language do not exist in other languages, which is why the sense of the German original can only be reproduced in part when translated into any other terrestrial language. For these reasons, each translation will have the original German text included.

Explanations by Ptaah and Billy regarding the German language (487th Contact of February 3rd, 2010)

Ptaah: We have really made the effort; we — the committee who deals with your affairs — came to the conclusion to get together with our linguists, to discuss everything with them and to get their advice. In doing so, we examined altogether all present translations that were made of the 'Goblet of the Truth' into English, as well as all the other small and large works that were translated into English and also into other terrestrial languages. Unfortunately, everything turned out to be extremely inadequate because none of the translations from the German original texts correspond with them in a valuable wise. Many times the real original sense is lost in the translations because the necessary accurate expressions, terms and words do not exist in the languages in question. Very often even synonyms do not exist that could be used as absolutely equal meaning of words and, therefore, could be exchanged or replaced in a text with-out changing the information being conveyed or its sense. Countless terms and words that are given in the German language do not exist in all other terrestrial languages, and besides, the true sense and value of many terms and words are not correctly recognized and, therefore, are absolutely falsely interpreted. On the one hand, this occurs because the origin of terms and words is entirely unknown or because a false origin is assumed, which is even the case with linguists of the German language, i.e. the Germanists, and which leads to fundamentally false presentations and explanations of terms and words. According to all observations, examinations and analysis, we have come to the unanimous decision that henceforward you from the Mother Center shall not make any further translations, also not into the English language. It (English) does not correspond to a true language, but only to a halfway acceptable auxiliary world-language that was disseminated worldwide through dishonest machinations from the USA with the aid of British English and other languages, whereby the deeper sense is to turn the terrestrial peoples into English-speaking ones, by using this meagre means of communication.

From our side, we recommend that you do not make any further translations when you have finished the work 'Goblet of the Truth' that, unfortunately, in the English language, only contains inadequate translation values of all of that which is laid down in the German language. And all this, although the basic translation work is being done by a translation company. The whole can only then be of benefit and value to those who are learning and interested, if they make an effort to learn the German language extensively, in order then to turn towards the content of the spiritual teaching works and to learn everything. Translations of the spiritual teaching and all re-lated works into other terrestrial languages only represent a poor reflection regarding the true sense, when such translations are made. ...

Billy: ... But since you are talking so clearly about terms and words, just as I often do so myself, it is perhaps necessary to explain those two values because I know that many German-speaking human beings, Germanists too, do not see any difference. So I would like to say that a term represents the content of an "idea", so to speak, which in its entirety forms an essential characteristic of an "intellectual" unity, from which a certain conception, an opinion, a picture and also an under-standing result, which altogether can be expressed verbally or with the aid of the language, but also in writing. The word, on the other hand, is a small or smallest independent linguistic unit of a pronunciation, whereby the word can also be recorded in writing, but without pronunciation or rather as mute non-pronunciation. Therefore, the word is a linguistic and also a written expression with a certain "meaning con-tent" which determines the language and the written language as small or smallest part. ...

Explanations 1

Please note

The present work OM should not be read and studied before the following is thoroughly noted and understood. Certain parts of the introduction are not directly OM-related. Nevertheless, they are given for the necessary information. Through them a certain understanding for certain things, facts and circumstances etc. is conveyed.

The Origination of the Book OM

Actually, 'Billy' Eduard Albert Meier (BEAM) should have started writing the book OM in 1975. At that time, however, in 1975, there was still nothing available, no group and no center, and also still no possibility to print all the writings that were to be created in the future. The work that Billy still had to do was incalculable, because everything had to be worked out, built up and expanded from scratch. The people who had chosen to work on Billy's mission had to find their way and be taught the truth of the creative laws and recommendations, and taught about many things. And last but not least, a suitable center had to be found and built and an organization for the dissemination of texts and teachings had to be founded.

All these many and important tasks and works, together with the lectures he gave regularly in Hinwil and later in Hinterschmidrüti as well as elsewhere in Switzerland, Austria and Germany, and thus with the foreign trips Billy undertook in the first years, delayed the beginning of the book OM more and more. But although Billy had to cope with all the many and often very time-consuming and energy-consuming jobs and tasks, he wrote regularly and produced the most important textbooks, often under difficult circumstances, with badly beleaguered health, despite lack of sleep, or in complete exhaustion, etc. etc. And so in the course of the years, always in between and not seldom in night work, the many teachings, which are available today in the FIGU resp. in the Aquarian Time Publishing House and which cover the whole large spectrum of the spiritual teachings resp. the 'teachings of the prophets' or also the teachings of truth, the teachings of the spirit, the teachings of life in the broadest sense, arose.

The Book OM

10 May 1983-1 May 1984 and 21 May 1984-9 October 1984. Billy writes the Book of Books, his greatest work to date, the Book OM. It contains 77 finished Canons with a total of 10,136 verses; until May 1, 1984 there were 42 Canons with a total of 7616 verses. The verses of each individual canon are divided in their total number by the number 7. Parts of the book OM were written in telepathic cooperation with JHWH Ptaah of the Pleiarens. Ptaah telepathically transmitted to Billy all those parts of the book OM that still agree with the original OM first written by Henok. Apart from the two Canons which Billy wrote down after the words of Semjase and those Canons in which Billy brought the old and oldest wisdom sayings back into their original and correct form, all other teachings, wisdom sayings, explanations, interpretations etc. etc. originate from him himself. The manuscript of the OM had to be written down by Billy by hand, as he was no longer able to work with the typewriter as a result of the health problems he suffered in 1982. The handwritten manuscript was copied with the typewriter parallel to Billy's notes. While the book OM was still being written, the typewritten manuscript was read out to the core group members, with an initial rough orthographic correction already being made.

Explanations II

In May 1984, the first clean copy in DIN A5 format was begun. After about half of the existing manuscript had already been written,, it turned out that the intended book format of DIN A5 was unsuitable for such a large and comprehensive work, which is why everything had to be written again in DIN A4 format. During the second and third proofreading of the book OM, further typing errors in the typewriter manuscript were corrected, with Billy already making the first minor corrections and extensions to the text. The second clean copy was unusable, since the proofreading (first comparative proofreading/fourth proofreading) showed that not all text changes and errors could be corrected, and a different font character had to be chosen, since the font previously used proved to be unsuitable. At this point, it was decided to purchase a word processing system to make proofreading easier and to produce usable, high-quality print documents. Before the third proof, the typewriter manuscript was proofread again, further grammatical and spelling mistakes were corrected, and Billy made final corrections to the text, followed by the final proofreading, which was corrected again (second comparative proofreading/sixth proofreading).

During the seventh and last proof-reading, the completed typewriter manuscript and the clean copy were again proof-read by comparison, after which the last orthographic and grammatical corrections were made. The joint proofreading of the core group members was completed on Monday, July 20, 1987, at 9.18 p.m., the seventh and last proofreading was completed on July 31, 1987, at 8.50 p.m.. After completion of the corrections, the final work on the Book OM (Foreword etc.) and the preparations for the printing of the work were started.

In addition to the existing works, Billy had, at the time of his health breakdown, started work on at least five different works (e.g. an interpretation and clarification of the Law of Love, etc.), which he had to stop due to the consequences of the accident. A continuation of the Spiritual Teaching-letters proved to be impossible after several attempts also for longer time, consequently later everything had to be reworked by him and also continued when he could expect this work again. Other works had to be abandoned even before the accident due to lack of time and support as well as a great deal of construction work on the center and the mission (e.g. the FIGU magazine FAKTEN, which Billy replaced in April 1995 with the FIGU Bulletin, which has since been very well received by readers worldwide).

In addition to the writings that Billy himself wrote and published via FIGU and Aquarian Time Publishing House, four other books were published in America, which were created in very close cooperation with Billy. For example, most of the translations of the contact reports etc. came from Billy himself, after some translators had tried the task and failed due to a lack of accuracy. The publishers of the books published in America were: GENESIS III, Lee and Britt Elders, Tom Welch and Wendelle Stevens. Three books have the same title, 'Contact from the Pleiades'. Volumes 1 (1979) and 2 (1983) are illustrated books. The report, which was published in 1982 under the same title, was written by Wendelle Stevens. In 1987 the book 'Light Years' written by Gary Kinder was published, which was also written in close cooperation with Billy. Later, in the USA, 'Steelmark Distribution' was created through the efforts of FIGU Passive Members, through which the 'Talmud Jmmanuel' continued to be published after the White Flower publishing house ceased to exist. Steelmark also published the English-language photo book, a version of the GENESIS III photo book modified and reissued with Billy. The same publisher also published the English version of Guido Moosbrugger's book '... and they 'fly yet!' under the title 'And still they fly ...'. (Correction 1st Edition Title: And yet they fly) SB
In Germany, Billy's book (The Truth about the Pleiadians) was published by the Silberschnur Publishing House and in Korea the Talmud Jmmanuel was published, which was translated into Korean by a Christian priest. At the same time FIGU-Japan took action, translating a whole series of Billy's books into Japanese and distributing them ever since. Also the FIGU-Italia became active and published the photo book translated into Italian.

Explanations III

Until 1969 Billy was active in European and Oriental, North African and Asian countries, where he was engaged in all kinds of activities and carried out cash transports for banking institutions and also for Governments and worked with police. In 1964 he suffered a serious bus accident in southern Turkey, losing his left arm. In 1965 he married a Greek woman in Corinthos, Greece, with whom he travelled in several European countries as well as in Turkey, Persia, Pakistan and India. His daughter Gilgamesha was born in Quetta, West Pakistan. After his return in 1969, Billy first worked as a machinist in the construction industry. Later, until 1974, he worked as a night watchman and for a time as a porter. Between 1971 and 1974, in addition to his daily work, he wrote five adventure novels and various newspaper articles. As early as 1970, he started working part-time on psychological counseling and healing illnesses through consciousness based influence (wrongly called mental healing), with high antenna mounting for large TV systems, bird breeding (parakeets and canaries), house renovations, oil tank cleaning, road construction and gardening. Some of these activities earned him a living for his family, which consisted of his wife Kalliope, daughter Gilgamesha and two boys born in Wetzikon/ZH, Atlantis Sokrates and Methusalem. In addition, there was also the work for building up the group and all those tasks which served the production and distribution of the writings. The 'Voice of the Aquarian Age' is a good way of explaining what, in addition to his daily work and writing, rested on his shoulders: writing articles, correcting, producing clean copies for the artwork, assembling artwork for the production of small offset plates, printing, collating, stitching, cutting and mailing the subscribed magazines. It should be borne in mind that the magazine was published monthly, which is a great achievement without the other companies alone. In addition, however, there were the contacts and the telepathic writing of the Contact Reports. A job that gave him blisters on all his fingers, as he initially typed with his old Hermes 3000 and a Swissa-Piccola in the absence of a better typewriter. At peak times he wrote contact reports for up to 22 hours without a pause, because the work was slow thanks to the old rickety vehicles. During the contacts, and often also outside the regular contacts, it was also his task to create all the many photo, film, video and tape documents which were initially the only proof of the rightness of his statements and which also served to draw the attention of the world public to his mission. This work, too, was connected with many organizational problems, which in the first years rested solely on his shoulders. As soon as certain persons and organizations became aware of Billy and his contacts, the visitors began to flow to Hinwil, to which he had to devote himself at the beginning. In addition, a rich correspondence developed with human beings from all over the world. With the attention of broader circles, however, came the reporters, to whom he was available for interviews again and again, until in 1987, after a slander campaign and the torn truth of Billy's story by the journalist Balz Theus (wrote the book 'Meier.Prophet'), he refused to answer a reporter's question again. Since it still seemed in the early years that the existing UFO Organizations would follow a good and honest path, long trips abroad to lectures were inevitable. As soon as it turned out, however, that the UFO organizations were not interested in the truth, because everything was only religiously and sectarian exploited, Billy stopped these trips again. Nevertheless, until 21 May 1978 he often spoke out in front of a large audience, which he always and without exception was able to captivate and draw under the spell of his stories.

Still in Hinwil, Kalliope, Billy's wife, and Jacobus Bertschinger, with whom he had been friends for many years, began to relieve him and to perform some of his work for the time being. Soon Kalliope and Jacobus, who also financed the first small offset printing press, which was used to collect and finish the fonts, so they were able to relieve him of other manual work. Kalliope was soon entrusted, initially under Billy's guidance, with the responsibility for the sale of writing, photographic and film material, and from 1983 she was in charge of subscriptions and the distribution of the 'Voice of Aquarian Age' as well as the sale of books, writings and materials. In the course of time she was also able to take over a large part of the visitor care. In addition to this work, she was always the main person in charge of the household, before Eva Bieri was called in in 1979 to take the strain off her. At the beginning of 1977, Bernadette Brand, who had joined the group at the time, took over the typing, and from spring 1978 Billy entrusted her with more and more correspondence work, until towards the end of the year she managed it independently.

Explanations IV

Guido Moosbrugger was a teacher and school principal from about 1978, responsible for all the correction work on all writings. During 1979, Billy handed over responsibility for the print shop, which he had had to carry himself until then, to Engelbert Wächter, who also provided the second small offset printing press, which worked much faster and better. Eva Bieri, who had been accepted into Billy's family in 1979 when she was pregnant, was given responsibility for the collection (previously done by all group members together) and finishing of fonts towards the end of 1979, and in 1980, under Billy's guidance, she also took over accounting and all shipping. After Billy's health collapsed, Eva's responsibilities included copying all of Billy's handwritten manuscripts with a typewriter. She was also responsible for the typewriter manuscript of the Book OM.

By 1979, Billy was almost completely relieved of the production of fonts by the help of his helpers, but this was not a great relief for him, because on April 7, 1977 the FIGU, under his leadership and guidance, had moved into the Semjase-Silver-Star-Center, which first had to be completely renovated and built up in day and night work under Billy's guidance. As a self-taught and all-round man, Billy was familiar with all the work involved, no matter what kind it was. He not only worked as a bricklayer, carpenter, cabinet maker, roofer, architect and garden architect, cook, cheese maker, housekeeper, buyer, farmer, mechanic, electrician, excavator operator, woodworker and well master, but also as a clever lawyer, as a skilled cattle and small veterinary surgeon, as a talented photographer, as a consultant, psychologist, astronomer, meteorologist, doctor, teacher, engineer, environmental expert, biologist, house broker, and as a prudent accountant, etc. etc. Last but not least, he understood like no other how to represent and assert our interests before the authorities and banks, in short, there was nothing at all he did not understand, even as a Fashion Designer and Goldsmith he was successful. Since the members of the Core Group only had a clue about very few things, he had to familiarize each individual with his area of responsibility, so that the responsibility for everything lay in his strong hand. Gradually he handed over responsibilities to individual core group members, but by the time the OM was published he had never been able to put the reins in other hands without worrying.

With the growth of the group and the private addition (in 1980 Eva's son Atlant Platon Sokrates was born and adopted by Billy as his son) the additional burdens for Billy also grew, because it was necessary to create room for all. But in addition to the purely physical requirements there were also great psychological pressures, because living together under one roof for so many people was neither easy nor was it easy for the Core Group members to fit into the circumstances. Often he not only had to put his foot down and act as an educator for his lambs, but all too often he was also a bouncer and scapegoat for whims and jealousies. Since he was always an excellent advisor to all people who asked him for advice and a reliable, dear friend, he could not fail to be burdened with worries and sorrows, with problems and little problems, and often even to be raked until he was completely exhausted and worn-out, for not only his fellow human beings were dependent on his strength, but also the care and responsibility for those entrusted to him and the mission. After two particularly bad years, in which everything went wrong and which seemed to consist only of grief, sorrows, needs and bad problems, a serious accident in the form of a health breakdown occurred on November 4, 1982, in the morning at 4.35 a.m. Billy, who was suffering from complete mental and physical overload and total exhaustion according to the concordant statements of the doctors, Quetzal, Semjase and Ptaah, collapsed unconscious in the washroom, smashing his head on the sink, heater and floor. The accident caused a severe brain trauma, as a result of which other severe and most severe health damages, such as a permanent disturbance of the equilibrium center, a partial amnesia, etc. etc., occurred, which will continue until 2010. The first two and a half years after the collapse were a sheer hell for Billy, as there were no suitable drugs to alleviate the damage caused by the accident, nor were there any suitable therapies that could have helped him. So a long and arduous process began for him, in which he tried to take up the fight against his suffering. He was able to control many of the damages that occurred, and others became bearable through constant self-control, but even now, in 2011, there are still new after effects.

Explanations V

Despite severe health impairments, despite acute dizzy spells and balance disorders, despite great concentration difficulties and severe headaches, and struggling with enormous visual difficulties and a severely damaged nervous system, Billy, defying all adversities, started work on the Book OM on Tuesday, May 10, 1983 at 10:30 a.m.. For more than a year he wrote his manuscript almost daily by hand, always fighting against his manifold and extremely serious health damages. He had to write standing up in front of a table, because his serious breakdown made it impossible for him to write sitting down. The fact that the Book OM was completed in the first place and that Billy himself was in charge of everything until the completion of all the corrections is perceived as a wonder by all involved, and it also seems to be a wonder that certain sufferings have not worsened over time, but have obviously even improved.
According to Billy's will, his thanks go to his family, to the Core Group, to the Plejaren and to all the other helpers and to those who support his work and mission. This time, however, we would also like to express the gratitude of all those who are the beneficiaries of Billy's immense struggle and tireless work, his research, learning and teaching, his wisdom, knowledge and goodness. The thanks of his loved ones, his helpers, all members of the Core Group, his friends and all seekers of the truth should be expressed to him for his teachings and explanations, for the effort he always gave and continues to give to everyone, for his friendship and for his love. But he may also be certain of the thanks of his readers, who draw from his work strength and knowledge, cognition and wisdom, reverence and love, understanding and insight, help and consolation, as well as guidance and direction for the path of evolution. Ultimately, however, all people who are sincerely interested in the truth of Creation, who want to work on their own evolution and participate in the progress of human beings of all worlds thank him. And so, through his tireless struggle and restless work in fulfilling his mission as prophet and proclaimer of the new age, he is assured of the gratitude of all men of all coming centuries and millennia, to whom he points the way to the knowledge of Creation and the fulfillment of true humanity.

Explanations VI

JHWH =JSCHWJSCH

JHWH represents the writing form of the name JSCHWJSCH. But JSCHWJSCH is a word from a language long forgotten on earth, the Old Lyrian. This language was not created on earth, but brought to earth in a distant star system by space travelers.

JSCHWJSCH, as a term, represents a title, which is translated into the terrestrial languages as “King Of Wisdom”. King of Wisdom”, however, means that this title is carried by a human being, who knowledgable and educated as high as possible in cognition, interpretation, and observance of the creational laws and recommendations and who strictly lives out the creational laws and recommendations and is an absolute example to all those who must still be instructed and who have not yet achieved the state of knowledge, ability, wisdom, love and logic of a King of Wisdom.
A King of Wisdom – thus, an JSCHWJSCH – lives as an absolute example in the sense of the creational laws and recommendations, and he has the highest possible knowledge and ability for a human being in terms of the knowledge itself, as well as the regard to love, wisdom and logic.
Being a King of Wisdom (JSCHWJSCH) means for this person that he is preparing for the distant future to live in the final stages of the human-physical form of existence, and that this human being is therefore already preparing to one day cast off his physical body in order to enter the areas and levels of immaterial existence as a half-spirit-form. It takes 40 to 60 million years (calculated according to earth years) until this point in time of a human being is reached, calculated from the moment of his or her creation until the period of change from the material to the immaterial body form. So this means that a human being carries a physical body after his or her creation for 40 to 60 million years, before he or she casts it off and becomes a pure spiritual form, depending on how his or her overall evolution went - faster or slower, resulting in the difference between 40 and 60 million years. This period, however, is calculated only according to the pure years of life during which a human being as such materially leads his existence.

The title JSCHWJSCH was already brought to earth in very ancient times, millions of years ago, and it always had a leading and good tone. Among the space immigrants, however, there were also elements that had unrightfully elevated themselves to JSCHWJSCHs without being qualified or educated to do so. And they were the ones who indulged in greed for power and behaved accordingly. They acquired new titles that were understood by the people of the earth, namely the titles of powers that should embody the power of Creation. Creator was the most obvious appellation which was most plausible to the human being of the earth, which is why they also let themselves be named and celebrated in this form. The step to veneration and worship was then only small. The falsification of the title JSCHWJSCH as creator was a complete success, together with and especially with the associated consequences. The next step of the falsification came then with the fact that the Lyrian spelling of the title JSCHWJSCH (JHWH) and with it also the pronunciation of the same was changed, namely in JSCHFESCH, whose Lyrian style of writing was JHFH, which was later changed by the pre-historical Hobranos (later designation: Hebiru, Hebrajos, Hebraio, Ebräer, Hebraeui and Hebrews etc.), It must be clear, however, that the old designations are in different languages and do not refer to today's Israelite language) suffered a further falsification, namely to the JHVH. However, JSCHFESCH (JHFH) does not mean anything good from the Old Lyrian languages translated into earthly languages, namely King of Falseness = King of Falseness. A title used by the Old Lyrians to describe people who lived and worked with lies, deceit, power, violence, terror, anarchism, death and exploitation.

With regard to the later falsification of the spelling JHFH into JHVH, there is no longer any extended meaning, because the letter V does not exist in the Old Lyrian Alphabet. The only interesting thing about the old spelling is that the original name of the Hobranoic JSCHFESCH was not uttered and feared by the Hobranos, which is why the ancient Hobranos called their JSCHFESCH (King of Falseness) JAHWE, which is important again in that this is also originally an Old Lyrian word and a term that translates into earthly languages as GEWALT-RULER (TYRANT). The ancient Hobranos feared this tyrant JAHWE and did not dare to pronounce his real title JSCHFESCH.

Explanations VII

Following the irrational teachings, they thought that the nine-letter name ISCHFESCH and the knowledge of the correct pronunciation alone would release miraculous powers that would bring them death and ruin.

The same happened with practically all other terrestrial human races, which were terrorized and lead into confusion by the GEWALT-rulers (tyrants), whereby the appellation and designation of the GEWALT-RULER (TYRANT) found its way into all terrestrial languages, also into the later changed and new languages. All in all, the names in the most varied languages mean the same GEWALT-RULER (TYRANT), whereby this meaning has been lost to the earthly human being in the course of thousands of years. Due to the emergence of religions, the sense gradually became so falsified that it was erroneously, consciously, treacherously, and schemingly made known to the human beings of Earth that the sense of the word would contain within itself the power of Creation, the creator, salvation, life and all-mightiness as well as all positive things. All this against better knowledge, because the name of death, enslavement, exploitation and false teachings is contained in it; and this name of death is GOD, which is used in the earthly languages as a substitute for and alteration of the name GEWALT-RULER.

What is also of interesting value with regard to the name God (Gott) is that it is always written with only four letters in all existing languages of the earth and that the relevant Kabbalistic calculations of these languages always evaluate the name God as death, ruin, destruction and damnation etc.. And in order to demonstrate that the death and destruction name of God is actually written in all languages with only four letters since time immemorial the following short list may make this clear:

Explanations VIII

ATTENTION very important!

LANGUAGE, WORD TERMS AND SAYINGS ETC.

THE OM

In the first 34 Canons, individual terms such as 'prayer, praying, worship, adoration, veneration, price, praise, glorify and extol, etc.' are partly marked with special word explanations in brackets, which are valid throughout the OM and must also be interpreted correctly in the remaining Canons.
Insertions marked as explanations refer to the interpretation of the verses above and their correct interpretation.

The language of OM is often kept in very old German written form, namely in the same way as OM text was written in earliest times - also in other languages. When studying and reading these texts, it is therefore important to ensure that they are interpreted correctly. In order to prevent further falsifications beyond recognition in this respect and for other reasons of understanding (see Bible, Talmud, Upanishads, etc.), an interpretative work must be prepared in addition to the original OM text, which is now done in this revised work by inserting explanations and additional terms in brackets (). This is to avoid wrong interpretations in the future, for every person is only too happy to interpret everything according to his own understanding, even if the truth is falsified to the impossible.

A truth is and remains a truth, and in the same way it has only one meaning, which is why it can be interpreted and explained in different forms, but not interpreted in other values.

The word terms of OM are contained in original values, without any alteration or falsification, exactly as they were partly given by the Lyrians 389 000 years ago (B.C.), when the first OM work for the earth humans originated. So apparently wrong German spellings are not mistakes, if e.g. the word ANLITZ is written for face, instead of ANTLITZ.

In all modern German language works and language interpretations, the origin of the words is usually presented completely incorrectly, and they falsify the actual origin to such an extent that it can no longer be found. Partly these falsifications occur against better knowledge, but often out of effective unknowledge. Thus word terms are attributed to some things, which were never the origin, like the term ANTLITZ and ANLITZ, about which e.g. in the Duden the following is written as origin:

ANTLITZ “Countenance”. The usage of the word is nowadays only common in an elevated style and means actually “that which is reflected”. Middle-High German “antlitze”, Old-High German “antlizzi” (combining “antlitz” and the synonym antlizzi, old English “andwlita”, Swedish “antlete”, contain as the first part of the word the prefix “ant” - “in face of, towards”, and as the second part of the word a German verb with the meaning of “glance”, look, see” (please note that in Gothic the word “wlits”means “appearance, figure features”. And in old-Islandic literature “appearance, radiance”)

Truthfully, the word ANLITZ comes from the old Lyrian language, which had a lot in common with the German language. The word ANLITZ in the Lyrian language is composed of two different values: AN, which is synonymous with the German AN, and LITZ, which literally means FACE. The two words together thus result in the term ANLITZ, which literally means face translated into German.
But if now the word ANLITZ has been falsified into the false word and the false value ANTLITZ, then on the one hand this was due to linguistic difficulties, which resulted from translations into other languages, and on the other hand due to carelessness and ununderstanding.

Explanations IX

In a further form the word LITZEN also exists in the Old Lyrian language, which literally means 'to look one's neighbor in the face', strictly speaking it means to look at a face.

In this context appear a lot of words which have been falsified in the German Language; amongst them, e.g. , VERDAMMNIS (Damn = Dam), meaning that something has been VERDAMMT, namely obstructed with a dam. Even now the dikes at the North Sea are being dammed. Those dams therefore create a VERDAMMNIS (literally “damnation”). A very hard and strenuous type of work, often talked about from time immemorial, particularly amongst the builders of the dams, the VERDAMMERN or VERDAMMENDEN.

Since the origin of the word terms have been falsified for hundreds and even thousands of years, misunderstandings arise again and again, which can lead to certain differences. In order to prevent this from happening in the OM, these explanations now take place, whereby in the interpretative text terms that are difficult to understand or have become unknown are to be interpreted and explained in () terms that are common today.

The wisdom sayings appearing in the OM should also be mentioned, which were also written down 389,000 years before today in the original OM under the Solomonic sayings. As the Bible now erroneously claims, the wisdom sayings have their origin with King Solomon. But this is just not true, because King Solomon has taken all his wisdom sayings from the Ur-OM and partly even reproduced them in a strongly falsified form. The origin of the wisdom sayings truthfully also goes back to the Lyrians, in whose language the wisdom sayings are named as SALOMONIC WORDS OF WISDOM, which translated into the German language means WISDOM SAYINGS OF PEACE, whereby several forms of translation can be used, but which basically always say the same thing.

So King Solomon's sayings have nothing to do with him, except that he borrowed them from the original OM and reproduced them in a partly blatantly distorted form. But the same happened with other sayings of wisdom and with quotations, which were not known by King Solomon, but which were also part of the Ur-OM. Often mutilated beyond recognition, many of them have survived to this day and have been falsely attributed to people who have only used and falsified them.

These wisdoms and quotations now are of course also contained again in the last and now given OM, but in their true original form, again written down by Billy, on behalf of himself and the JHWH of the earth: JSCHWJSCH PTAAH of the planet Erra, in the constellation of the Plejaren.

The once again and for the last time unadulterated given form of the OM-Writing is to bring Peace, Tranquility, Love, Truth, Knowledge, Logic, Wisdom and Justice to the earth-human being, and therefore the writing of the Word of Truth is to be finally and for all times preserved and followed in the faithful form of Truth. This is the meaning and the will of all those who have endeavored to make OM and its creation possible, so that the earth human beings can live in their paradise - on the Blue Planet of the SOL System, called Earth.

Orthographic and conceptual peculiarities

In the verses of the book OM, peculiarities emerge which show themselves in grammatical as well as in orthographical and stylistic matters. It is important to make sure that the sentences are understood correctly. The following few excerpts are examples of the above:

Canon/Vers/term:	Meaning:
Chapter JHWH (Explanations p. VII): falsely made wise	= the false wisdom given, or falsely taught
Canon 5, verse 13: throughout	= the whole
Canon 15, verse 10: on a large scale	= the big one
Canon 20, verse 105 (and in various other places): as a whole	= the whole
Canon 24, verse 99: for better or for worse	= in the good or in the evil
Canon 24, verse 182 (and in various other places): on a small scale and not on a large scale	= the small and the big, or in the small and big
Canon 25, verse 12 (and in various other places): allso	= according to this, everywhere, everything together and so on.
Canon 25, verse 28: Right: so the prophet is children and mothers	= it is actually meant to be children, not proclaimers.

Canon 25, verse 35:
Right: that the Master is Master of himself = be his own master is master of himself

Canon 27, verse 20:
on the fair path = on the path of the righteous

Canon 28, verse 51:
Until they have done evil. = until they've done the evils

Canon 30, verse 22
(and in various other places):
and become disgraceful = and become a disgrace (the disgrace: plural = the disgrace)

Canon 31, verse 829:
Watchers of the Arahat Athersata = the Arahat Athersata are watchers = Watchers of the Arahat Athersata, thus Watchers from the Watchers collective of the Arahat Athersata = Viewers of Time.

Canon 31, verse 965:
hail, snow, etc. = Old spelling adopted

Canon 32, verse 804
(and in various other places):
common = ordinary, ordinary

Canon 32, verse 972:
happy = happy, cheerful, to be in good spirits

CANON 1

1. In the Name of Creation, which is love, knowledge, wisdom, truth and perfection.
2. Praise be unto It, the Creation of all creations.
3. Man liveth unto It only, and only unto It we live continually.
4. Its laws and recommendations only we obey.
5. Creation Itself leadeth us to the goal of evolution by Its laws and recommendations.
6. It leadeth us in the way of those who tread on the path of truth and love and who already have trod the path of truth before us and have not caused displeasure nor have gone astray.
7. In the Name of Creation, that is our will and our goal of evolution.

CANON 2

1. In the Name of Creation, the loving, the wise.
2. Thus speaketh the JHWH and the Prophet, who are king of wisdom over the earthly generations of man:
3. The JHWH and the Prophet reveal the laws and recommendations of Creation, which is the only Creation of Its universe.
4. Praise be unto It, which is life and BEING.
5. Its sevenfold legalities the JHWH and the Prophet proclaim, who are human and knowing revelation of all truth, all love, all wisdom and of knowledge and of the ways of Creation.
6. They, however, are not a representation of Creation, but recognition, revelation and fulfillment of the duty of truth and love in free manner, unto the observance of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
7. And so speaketh the JHWH and the Prophet in wisdom and free recognition of duty, and in fulfillment of duty for the fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
8. The JHWH is not worthy of veneration nor worthy of worship because this is due to Creation alone.
9. And the Prophet is not worthy of veneration nor worthy of worship because this is due to Creation alone.
10. And the Spirit leaders of the Prophet are not worthy of veneration nor worthy of worship, because this is due to Creation alone.
11. A human being shall never direct his prayer to the JHWH or the Prophet or to the Prophet's Spirit leaders because performance of prayer is due to Creation alone.
12. A human being should never venerate the JHWH or the Prophet or the Spirit leaders of the Prophet because veneration is due to Creation alone.
13. Veneration and worship are due to Creation alone, which is the highest and the most complete perfection in Its universe.
14. However, esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence towards all life, as also to the JHWH of the earthly generations of man and also to the Prophet and the Spirit leaders of the Prophet.
15. Esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence towards all life.
16. Esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence towards the JHWH, who is the king of wisdom of the generations of men of three worlds.
17. Esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence towards the Prophet, who is true Prophet for the earthly generations of man in truth, love, wisdom and knowledge.

18. Esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence towards the Prophet, who is mediator, proclaimer, the knowledgable and loving and wise one between the earthly generations of man to be taught and the teachings of truth.
19. Esteem, exercise and bring respect and reverence also towards the Spirit leaders of the Prophet, who are the knowledgable and instructors of the earthly generations of man by order of the Prophet.
20. Obey the teachings of the laws and recommendations of Creation because its obedience alone grants true life and evolution unto BEING.
21. In the Name of Creation, the loving, the wise.

CANON 3

1. In the Name of Creation, the knowing, the creating.
2. Thus speaketh the JHWH, who is the JHWH of the earthly generations of man:
3. That is the book of the laws and recommendations of Creation, expounded and explained in understandable words.
4. That is the book of knowledge of the creative laws and recommendations, as is given in the word and sense by the JHWH and the Prophet of the earthly generations of man.
5. The JHWH is not Creation Itself, but he is human and king of wisdom over the generations of man of Earth in non-hierarchical manner.
6. The JHWH is the only JHWH for the earthly generations of man and for the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe, who are his helpers and watchers; but besides the JHWH still is the Prophet for the earthly generations of man, who is a power equal to the JHWH.
7. To the JHWH and the Prophet of the earthly generations of man is due respect and reverence of the human beings of Earth.
8. But unto Creation is due the honor, the respect and the reverence of the JHWH, of the Prophet and of the human beings.
9. Creation alone is the power of all Creation, of life and of BEING.
10. And nothing is worthy of veneration and worthy of worship except Creation.
11. The JHWH is wise, yet he is human, and he is king of knowledge, of love, of truth, of ability and of wisdom, therefore he is king of wisdom.
12. Besides the JHWH no human being in equal manner exists.
13. Yet the JHWH is human and remains human - until he changes to Spirit form.
14. The JHWH is human, and above him throneth and hovereth, immeasurably high, Creation in omnipotence of all Creation, and nothing comparable exists in the universe unto Its power, knowledge, love and wisdom.
15. Creation is the Creation and It created all Creation which is existing in Its universe.
16. Creation is Creation and It created all Creation, the life, BEING, the heavens and the earth worlds, the galaxies and the solids, and thus every creature and all armies of life.
17. Creation is Creation, and besides Creation there is no Creation in Its universe.
18. And Creation is OM.

19. The JHWH and the Prophet are human beings and skilled in the law and recommendation of Creation, and they present to the generations of man to be taught the book of the laws and recommendations of Creation, because they are human and JHWH and Prophet and as such in duty therefore.
20. But over the JHWH and over the Prophet ruleth and hovereth at immeasurable height, Creation as infinite all-great-timely power and as true BEING.
21. Creation is the Creation, and besides It no Creation in Its universe exists.

CANON 4

1. In the Name of Creation, the graceful, the all-loving, the just, the wise, the knowing, the all-merciful.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is the true Creation and the only Creation in Its universe.
3. Praise be unto Creation, which is the Creation of all creations and which are the universe, the galaxies, the stars and the earth worlds, heavens, light and darkness, time and space and all armies of living forms of life, each according to its own kind.
4. Praise be unto Creation, which is the only Creation in Its universe, and which is the Creation of all creations in space and time.
5. Praise be unto Creation, which is justice.
6. Praise be unto Creation, which is love.
7. Praise be unto Creation, which is strength.
8. Praise be unto Creation, which is wisdom.
9. Praise be unto Creation, which is knowledge.
10. Praise be unto Creation, which is mercy.
11. Praise be unto Creation, which is freedom.
12. Praise be unto Creation, which is grace.
13. Praise be unto Creation, which is law.
14. Praise be unto Creation, which is recommendation.
15. Praise be unto Creation, which is covenant.
16. Praise be unto Creation, which is fulfillment.
17. Praise be unto Creation, which is evolution.
18. Praise be unto Creation, which is life.
19. Praise be unto Creation, which is assistance.
20. Praise be unto Creation, which is joy.
21. Praise be unto Creation, which is beauty.
22. Praise be unto Creation, which is peace.
23. Praise be unto Creation, which is infallibility.
24. Praise be unto Creation, which is balance.
25. Praise be unto Creation, which is Spirit.
26. Praise be unto Creation, which is all-timeliness.
27. Praise be unto Creation, which is logical consequence.
28. Praise be unto Creation, which is becoming.
29. Praise be unto Creation, which is perfection.
30. Praise be unto Creation, which is contentment.
31. Praise be unto Creation, which is inexhaustibility.
32. Praise be unto Creation, which is omnipotence.
33. Praise be unto Creation, which is loveliness.
34. Praise be unto Creation, which is infinity.
35. Praise be unto Creation, which is unity.
36. Praise be unto Creation, which is perception.

37. Praise be unto Creation, which is granting.
38. Praise be unto Creation, which is exaltation.
39. Praise be unto Creation, which is sohar.
40. Praise be unto Creation, which is gentleness.
41. Praise be unto Creation, which is clarity.
42. Praise be unto Creation, which is purity.
43. Praise be unto Creation, which is change.
44. Praise be unto Creation, which is origination.
45. Praise be unto Creation, which is future.
46. Praise be unto Creation, which is power.
47. Praise be unto Creation, which is reverence.
48. Praise be unto Creation, which is all-ness.
49. Praise be unto Creation, which is BEING.

CANON 5

1. In the Name of Creation, which is Creation and truly the one and only.
2. The JHWH watcheth as true king of wisdom over the generations of man of Earth, and above him reigneth and hovereth Creation, the laws and recommendations of which he obeyeth in most severe duty.
3. The JHWH watcheth in instruction, however, never as lord so he acts equally to Creation.
4. The JHWH is king of wisdom and watching as such, not however ruling as lord.
5. Creation is Creation and no Creation in Its universe is beside It.
6. The human being, who is JHWH, is human, and as such he is obligated to the generations of men of three earth worlds, which he directs as king of wisdom.
7. Besides the JHWH of Earth, above which Creation floateth in immeasurable greatness, man shall not have any other JHWH or even idols or gods beside him.
8. See therefore: Over the earthly generations of men watcheth the king of wisdom and the Prophet also in instruction.
9. But over the king of wisdom and the Prophet, who are human beings, Creation floateth at immeasurable height, which is BEING as highest and creating power.
10. The JHWH and the Prophet are the law-givers and recommendation-bringers for the generations of men, and their wishes and suggestions shall also be obeyed by husband and wife because they descended from the laws and recommendations of Creation, which must find continuous obedience.
11. The JHWH and the Prophet are generous in their love and in all their actions and in their patience also.
12. Man shall not disregard the teachings of the JHWH and of the Prophet, because they are themselves the true recognitions, explanations and advice of the sevenfold order, which ariseth from the laws and recommendations of Creation.
13. The JHWH and the Prophet grasp and recognize in total the laws and recommendations of Creation in their own duty and they expound these, explaining and advising, because they are king of wisdom and knowing and wise in all things.
14. But Creation standeth immeasurably much higher than the JHWH and the Prophet, who are human beings, because only Creation is the immeasurable mystery.

15. The JHWH and the Prophet are human beings therefore, and they teach the laws and recommendations of Creation in their own recognition and fulfillment of duty.
16. The JHWH and the Prophet teach in wisdom, love, truth and knowledge the laws and recommendations of Creation, without being representatives of Creation.
17. Creation is infinite power, immeasurable greatness and immeasurable secret, and no human power is able to approach It.
18. The Spirit in the human being is able to carry on communication with Creation, because it is an energy-equal part of Creation Itself.
19. Creation alone shall be honored and worshiped, and unto It alone shall be praise and thanks.
20. The JHWH and the Prophet shall be respected and reverently esteemed, however, not be adored nor worshiped.
21. Worship and adoration is due to Creation alone, and It shall be praised in gratefulness.

CANON 6

1. In the Name of Creation which is the only Creation in Its universe and which is life and BEING.
2. So the king of wisdom of the earthly generations of men speaketh to the Prophet, he who is the true Prophet, and who as mediator and proclaimer receiveth the book of truth as book of the true word and the teachings and bringeth to the generations of men of Earth, to whom it is uniformly valid as way-showing and advice and to be obeyed as a guiding principle:
3. The laws and recommendations of Creation state that every herd needs a leading animal.
4. And every army needs a leader.
5. And every nation needs wise guidance.
6. And every generation of man needs a wise king.
7. Every generation of man needs a wise, knowing king, trained in love, duty, ability and in knowledge and advice so therefore, a king of wisdom.
8. And mentioned are the JHWH and the Prophet as kings of wisdom, above whom alone the Creation of all things ruleth as immeasurable mystery.
9. See therefore: The JHWH and the Prophet watch over the generations of men, whom they lead and guide through those, who as proclaimers and leaders bring their wishes, their words and their book of the laws and recommendations of Creation to the human beings of Earth and teach these.
10. The mediators, proclaimers and leaders of truth and of the laws and recommendations of Creation are the JHWH and the Prophet, and the Spirit leaders of the Prophet, who fulfill the duty of teaching the unknowing human being, and who themselves carry the strength of greatest wisdom, of truth, of knowledge and of love.
11. The JHWH is not representative of Creation, and the Prophet is not representative of the JHWH.
12. The Prophet proclaims unto the generations of men of one Earth his teachings and the teachings of the JHWH each at its own time, and no other prophet and no other JHWH is equal to them during their time.

13. And the JHWH and the Prophet proclaim the teachings of Spirit, which are the teachings of Creation from Its laws and recommendations, laid upon the JHWH and the Prophet by their own recognition of duty unto fulfillment.
14. And so the Prophet arranges his Spirit leaders, who are learning with him and thereafter are teaching among human beings, so that they teach and lead the masses of the generations of man as knowing and duty-fulfilling Spirit leaders.

CANON 7

1. In the Name of Creation, which is just and generous.
2. Praise, adoration and worship shall be unto Creation alone.
3. Creation is invisible, unseizable and untouchable.
4. But Creation is perceptible.
5. Only true knowing, true wisdom, true truth and true love make man understanding, grasping and recognizing the proof of the existence of Creation.
6. Therefore, the existence remaineth unprovable to those human beings, who do not find the power of proof in true truth, in true love, in true wisdom and in true knowledge.
7. The JHWH is visible and seizeable, because he is human but he guards his visibility and seizeability, so he withholds himself from the gazes and grasps of those human beings, who are still in need of the instruction of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
8. Therefore, the JHWH remaineth invisible and untouchable to those still to be taught, and only the prophets attain to gazing into the kindness of his countenance.
9. Unknowing and still to be taught human beings adore the higher ones in erroneous striving, such who stand above them and are more knowing and able; therefore, the unknowing one also adoreth humans, who are more knowing and truly wise.
10. And the JHWH is a human being, wise and knowing, and he must not be adored, so he remaineth invisible and untouchable to the human beings still to be taught, so that he shall not be adored and worshipped.
11. And verily, adoration and worship is due unto Creation alone.
12. The JHWH is a human being, and as such he wisheth and tolerateth no adoration and worship, but so also not the prophets, who have to defend themselves against it and who do not directly move among the people, for they are still active among the generations of man, who in erroneous striving seek adoration and worship.
13. The prophets have to defend themselves against adoration and worship, for over them also hovereth Creation as immeasurable mystery, and unto It only is due adoration and worship.
14. Therefore, the JHWH remaineth invisible and untouchable to the human beings still to be taught, and so also all those assigned to him, the helpers and watchers, so that those still to be taught do not tend to become adoring and worshipping, and so that the human being, through understanding and common sense only, and through knowledge, truth, love and wisdom becomes knowledgeable about his existence, as he equally has to do in the knowledge about the existence of Creation.

CANON 8

1. In the Name of Creation, which hath created the armies of all life.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is Creation.
3. And the JHWH speaketh and the Prophet, they who know about the beginning and about the laws and recommendations:
4. “In the beginning was the egg-shape of the Creation-spiral, brought forth by the idea of Ur-Creation.
5. The Creation-spiral was spiritual Ur-form, diminutively small and only the size of a flea.
6. But the spiral rotated and pulsated the Spirit-energy of the becoming Creation, powerful and expansion-determined.
7. The energy form grew and became compacted power and exploded in the most glaring lightning-fire.
8. A sohar among the countless universes of the ABSOLUTUM-space.
9. With powerful expansion power the Creation spiral pressed outward, stretching at many times the speed of light, steadily growing and creating creative-universal space.
10. Creation was born, conceived by the idea of Ur-Creation, and created by Its own power.
11. Freed from the endless duration in the Ur-cell, the grip of fetters loosened within It and Creation began to think in conscious manner.
12. Common-sense and mind developed and sensitivity and feeling.
13. So the thought created the idea, which is given forth by the Ur-eternal, by the ABSOLUTE ABSOLUTUM, which is the source of all things.
14. The Ur, which created Itself out of the absolute nothing of the endless duration, which is called timelessness.
15. But the idea of the Ur-eternal is given in the evolutionary sense of existence, in becoming and passing away, unto the final life of the all-timely and timeless BEING in the ABSOLUTE ABSOLUTUM.
16. Creation lived, thought, had feeling and sensitivity, mind and intelligence and the idea of life.
17. And It grew powerful and mighty in true love, to expand and to stretch Itself.
18. With Its power It changed Its thoughts and Its idea into becoming, so It therefrom created space and time.
19. It created the universe thus, which in its expanse was empty and only filled with the spiritual power-energy of expanding Creation.
20. Thus in the beginning Creation created the empty expanse of the universe in which still prevailed endless duration, and still no space had become present.
21. But the idea of change unto becoming was created, and the endless duration became time and the empty expanse became space.
22. Yet space was still empty and time stood still therefore.
23. But the idea brought forth movement.
24. The duration split itself into minutest impulse units, which henceforth coursed through space in waves.
25. The moving time was born, and living, it created past and future.
26. The hastening time set the spiritual Creation-energies hovering in space into motion, and rotation began.
27. Moving and rotating, the spiritual energies pulsated, and flaky material created itself therefrom.
28. Thus was done the first step of material-formation.

29. The idea of Creation developed itself further, which was given unto it ur-eternally by the Ur-Creation, to which in turn the idea was given by the ABSOLUTE ABSOLUTUM.
30. Until then, in the universe was only hastening time, movement, rotation, pulsation and flaky material.
31. Space was chaotic and desolate and hung in darkness, and nothing solid was present.
32. So the idea of Creation stretched itself, and it created rotation for densification.
33. The flaky material rotated and pulsated to spirals, equal to the egg-shaped form of the Creation-spiral, and densified from which originated heat, which was of a different type than the cold of space.
34. The densifying flaky material of Spirit-energy became a galaxy, so it also was born, glowing and raying brightly, whereby the darkness of space was broken.
35. Born, therefore, was the Ur-galaxy.
36. Out of the Ur-galaxy originated new becoming, new densified material which was in motion, rotated and pulsated.
37. The material of coarse form began in galaxies of a new type which, manifold and countlessly, animated the expansive space.
38. But thereby the idea of Creation was not yet completed because no life for evolution was yet created, and nothing which creepeth and flyeth.
39. And no legalities and recommendations existed yet into which life and the existence of all things were to be arranged, not for the existence and not for evolution.
40. Thus Creation thought and created all-encompassing laws and recommendations into which all life, all evolution, all becoming and passing away and BEING were to be arranged.
41. With it was created the seven-fold order of the creative legalities and recommendations.
42. Thus therewith were given the guidelines of all life and all evolution, and given were the laws and recommendations for everything existing, becoming, passing away and for BEING.
43. And Creation arranged Its legalities and recommendations into everything already created by It and in everything which would still be created by It.
44. It anchored Its laws and recommendations in everything existing and becoming, so that for all-great-times, all armies of life and everything existing shall be imbedded into this order.
45. The legalities and recommendations of the all-encompassing sevenfold order took their course, and lately other types of life also originated therefrom.
46. The sevenfold order was born, which sayeth that all life, all existence, all becoming and passing away, all evolution and BEING, each would complete itself in seven consecutive steps and planes.
47. Therefore sayeth the sevenfold order of the Creation-laws and Creation-recommendations that everything is arranged into a course and progression, which from the beginning to the goal encompasseth seven steps or, therefore, seven planes.
48. But the sevenfold order is not yet fulfilled therewith, because every such plane, again, is subdivided into additional seven planes, and these again into seven lower planes and this in sevenfold consecutively following order.
49. This resulteth in the sevenfold order of the 7 x 7-fold development, which sayeth that to all armies of life are given seven directly Creation-related development planes.

50. And every such Creation-related development plane is subdivided into seven lower development planes.
51. And every such lower development plane is subdivided into seven still lower development planes.
52. And every such lower development plane is subdivided into seven still lower development planes, which continues so up the seventh link.
53. Therefore, the number of all planes resulteth in 7x7x7x7x7x7x7, which weave through all things and all existence, each one according to its own kind.
54. And out of the sevenfold order originated a new and different kind of life, which was of denser and coarse-substanced matter.
55. The glowing, rotating and pulsating spiral arms of the new galaxies of many types in densification created large formations and which distanced themselves from the center of the galaxies.
56. Of the large, rotating, pulsating and glowing formations soon had become densifications, which formed themselves into suns and planets, and which were projected out into the expanses of space.
57. And the suns and planets were sporadic in space, and they were united and thus circled each other in groups and systems.
58. Therefore, they enlivened the space of the universe, in differing size and in manifold form and kind, and in most differing colors, so the space of the universe was manifold in colors also.
59. And the suns radiated in their own fire and spent light and warmth to the circling planets, which in part and with cooled surfaces became sporadically able to develop their own life, as this was determined by the sevenfold order of Creation.
60. Therefore it was given through the laws and recommendations of Creation, that planets should develop and bear life, every planet according to its own kind.
61. So life created in manifold form and kind on sporadic worlds, those which are called earth worlds.
62. And the first life brought forth as flora, which overgrew the solids of the earth worlds.
63. And forthwith also the life of fauna brought forth, which was the world of the animal kingdom, after the flora had flourished, which is the plant kingdom.
64. Therefore, the flora was created first, and the fauna followed it, according to the sevenfold laws of order of Creation.
65. And as last lifeform it brought forth the human being, when the flora and the fauna were already alive, and that the possibility for life of the human being was given therewith, who was the highest developed and independently thinking lifeform, preconceived by the idea of Creation.
66. In the beginning was Creation, which created the universe, the space and time and the solids therein.
67. But on the solids, manifold life created itself to satisfy the idea of becoming unto BEING in the ABSOLUTE ABSOLUTUM, and so that the way to evolution shall be opened.
68. And so shall be the course of all things, if all armies of life obey the laws and recommendations given by Creation.
69. The laws and recommendations, which are given ur-timely, and which to the knowing and wise in true love are visible everywhere in all-great-timely constant and unchangeable lasting form.
70. So the Earth also was created according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, but so were created the sun and the other planets as well.

71. In the beginning the sun of the new system formed, and it bestowed warmth and light.
72. And far beyond the sun, material structures densified themselves and the planets were formed.
73. The light of the sun illuminated the darkness and the rotating planets, so light on them also formed, and darkness on the side turned away from the sun.
74. Therefore, day and night was created on the planets and on the Earth also.
75. And according to the sevenfold laws and recommendations of Creation, manifold life created on the Earth.
76. Flora and fauna were born, each one life according to its own kind.
77. And life on the Earth was given, because the world was in part of solids and in part of water, from which firstly and lastly, all life created itself in the beginning.
78. And life created up to the human being, who developed and created himself as separate and true to his own line and highest developed creative lifeform, out of Ur-substances of Earth and out of their life in substance-binding manner.
79. And the human life created in substance-binding manner of the earth and of the existing life of flora and fauna, without direct specie-union with floric and faunic life therefore.
80. Thus was born the human specie as its own and special kind, in no direct union whatsoever with floric or faunic life therefore.
81. And the human lifeform on the Earth developed common-sense and mind, feeling and thinking, and speaking also.
82. The human being created words and strung them together to certain logical consequences, and out of it was created the meaning of the consecutive words and their connections.
83. The value of language was created, so that the human being could make himself mutually understood through words.
84. Thus the language was created.
85. And as the human being had mastered the language, he named the space above the world “heaven”, the dry solid “earth”, and the damp moisture he named “water”.
86. Therefore it was decided through the laws and recommendations of Creation, that on certain stars life of manifold kind and species shall be created, if the planets in their type were able to bear life.
87. And thus planet Earth was one of them.
88. And the laws and recommendations of Creation said that also on Earth armies of life should sprout, each according to its kind.
89. And the laws and recommendations of Creation said that on Earth should sprout grass and diverse weeds, each according to its kind.
90. And diverse trees, flowers, plants and shrubs should sprout, and they should bear seeds and fruit in great quantities, and fragrant they should be, tasty and fine smelling, each according to its kind.
91. Out of the waters and soil everything developed, as it was provided for and conceived by the idea of Creation.
92. And the Earth sprouted forth grass and diverse weeds, flowers, plants, trees and shrubs and diverse animals.
93. And all created armies of life bore their own seed and fruit, so they fertilized and propagated themselves in continued order, each according to its kind.

94. And breathing space was created over the solids of Earth and under the heaven, so every life could breathe, and each according to its kind.
95. And lights were set in the darkness of heaven over the Earth, so that during the day the sun gave light and warmth, and at night far off stars spread moderate light.
96. So was given day and night, created by the signs of light and of darkness.
97. The firm Earth circled in space around the sun and around itself, and so was thereby given the change of day and night.
98. And by the turning were given the times of the days and hours and the times of the years, but so also the change of the becoming and passing away of the entire life.
99. And with it also was given the spring, the summer, the autumn and winter, those which in the form of change are birth, the active life, the thoughtful eve of life, and death, which like a deep sleep leads to renewed life again.
100. Thus becoming and passing away ruled on Earth, given by the sevenfold laws and recommendations of Creation.
101. There was created becoming and passing away and again constant new becoming and passing away.
102. And there was created water and solid, solid and heaven, day and night, year after year, and there was created change of seasons, manifold life, impregnation and birth and passing away and reincarnation in infinite order, and each according to its kind.
103. Therefore, the Earth had become existing and living, the waters, the heavens and stars, and each and all armies of life and according to their kind also.
104. And each and all life was filled and enlivened with minute particles of creative power and creative Spirit-life, which shall develop itself unto perfection, whereby shall be fulfilled the laws and recommendations of Creation, up to and into all all-great-time.
105. Therefore, it was finished, and given over to life and to evolution were the Earth and the stars and all armies of life, while the universe spread itself further and will only pause, when the time of time has come.
106. Thus the Earth was completed, the heavens, the stars and all armies of life, light and darkness, cold and warmth and the waters and everything else, which is existing.
107. Thus everything has become, been created and born and produced in the beginning, from the very beginning of the idea of Ur-Creation to the self-creation of Creation.
108. But out of Creation sprang forth and was brought forth the universe, the galaxies, the stars and all armies of life, that which creepeth and flyeth, in fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation, those which are of validity from all-great-time to all-great-time and eternally.
109. Thus Creation Itself was born, also by the idea of Ur-Creation.
110. And thus was born the universe, by the idea of Creation.
111. And thus were born the legalities and recommendations of the sevenfold order by the idea of Creation.
112. And thus were born the solids, the galaxies and stars in the space of the universe, and also space and time, light and darkness, by the idea of Creation.
113. And finally were born the diverse and manifold armies of life, that which evolving strives toward the goal of BEING.
114. This took place so according to the will and to the idea of the ABSOLUTE ABSOLUTUM.
115. And this took place according to the will and to the idea of the Ur-Creation.

116. And this took place according to the will and to the idea of Creation.
117. So that life flourish in goal-aspiring evolution.
118. And so that life finds perfection through evolution in BEING.
119. In the Name of Creation, which is truth, and which is wisdom, and which is truthful love, this is the truth from the very beginning of the very beginning."

CANON 9

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which has created heaven and Earth and has brought forth darkness and light.
3. Praise be unto Creation, because It had imagined and created the human being and set him an evolutionary goal.
4. And It is Creation, which is existent in everything, in the heavens, in the stars and galaxies, in the earth worlds and in all armies of life, that which is given each according to its own kind.
5. And It is recognizable in everything and anything, internally and externally.
6. And It hath ordained the life-goal and the final goal of BEING for everything which creepeth and flyeth, and for everything which liveth and existeth.
7. But the Earth human doubts this, and those disregard it who are unknowing and autocratic and stupid.
8. They know not reverence and respect, and not the truth, not the love, and neither knowledge nor wisdom.
9. They are prisoners of themselves, and full of unrighteousness, evil-temperedness and selfishness and self-pity.
10. And they are imprisoned by their egotism and by their erroneous and false thinking.
11. They set other things equal to Creation and exercise adoration and worship therewith, with idols and gods of the dead and living kind.
12. And they untruthfully invent creative powers for them and they are afraid of them.
13. And they set human beings above Creation, whom they adore and worship as tyrants, and those who are called god by the Earth human.
14. And erroneously they attribute power to the gods and idols and they set them equal to Creation.
15. But Creation is Creation, and only It is true power, love, knowledge, wisdom and omnipotence.
16. And beside It is no other Creation in Its universe, and no idols and no gods therefore.
17. And to those who deny Creation, and to those who set other powers, gods and idols beside It, no sign from It cometh to them.
18. Those who have turned away from Creation are the seeing blind, who nowhere see a sign of Its existence, neither in all the armies which are living, nor in the internal or in the external life.
19. Neither cometh a sign to them of a sign of truth.
20. And they walk as the unknowing through life, distant from truth and stupid and blind.
21. Knowingly they turn away from the truth, because their life of wickedness, of greed and of passion, and their life of seeming ease, of pleasure, of egotism, of selfishness and power-greed is closer to them than the life of truth and the evolution unto BEING.

22. They do not want to see that they are turning away from true life, which in the only manner leadeth unto BEING.
23. They cast away the truth, as already the generations before them, when the truth was brought to them.
24. But news of the truth has been brought to them, as already to all generations before them.
25. And again they cast away and deny the truth, and no forbearance and no understanding will be promised unto them.
26. And they continue to pray to their gods and idols of falsehood, and they continue to bring them adoration.
27. And they continue to cast away and deny Creation and therewith the truth, and thus the love, the knowledge and the wisdom therefore.
28. But lately news has been brought to them about the truth, which laughingly they ridicule.
29. But their shameful doing remaineth not unpunished.
30. Because they impose punishment and destruction upon themselves as also have done other generations before them.
31. They themselves determine the punishment for their mischief and their mockery and denial of Creation and of truth and love.
32. But their punishment resteth in early deaths and in fears thereof, and it resteth in disease and war, in discord and hatred, in evil-temper and failure, and in pain, ruin and destruction.
33. And they all create the things of evil within and around themselves.
34. Because they deny Creation.
35. And because they deny truth.
36. And because they deny love.
37. And because they deny wisdom.
38. And because they deny knowledge.
39. And because they deny life.
40. And because they deny BEING.
41. Those, who are fallible, are human beings, to whom a dwelling place is given on Earth and every possibility of life and of evolution unto BEING.
42. Yet they do not obey the laws and recommendations of Creation since times of old, although the truth was given to them by the JHWH and by the prophets.
43. They mocked Creation and Its laws and recommendations and life also.
44. Thereby they had to bear the consequences for their reprehensible doing.
45. They destroyed themselves and annihilated their generations.
46. They died thousandfold and painful deaths in manifold terror and amazement.
47. And there were born new generations, but they did the same as the generations before them, and these also annihilated themselves.
48. They found self-annihilation by the wrong life which they led.
49. And they found self-annihilation in that they denied Creation and Its laws and recommendations.
50. And again the same and the same happened in endless sequence until the present day.
51. But since times of old, the JHWH sent down to the earthly generations of man the scripture and the word of truth, hewn into stone and written on animal skin and on parchment, and the Prophet gave the same.
52. And the scripture and the word of truth were written down by the Prophet and taught by him among the human beings of Earth, so that they would become knowing.

53. And they could feel with their hands the scripture of the word of truth about Creation and Its laws and recommendations.
54. And they could read the scripture with their eyes.
55. And they could hear with their ears the spoken words of the scripture.
56. Yet they did not feel it, and they did not see it, and they did not hear it.
57. Because they closed off their senses towards the truth, and they closed off all their feeling and also closed their eyes and their ears.
58. And they denied Creation and Its laws and recommendations, and they denied the JHWH and the Prophet also.
59. And they remained to be the unknowing and deniers of truth.
60. And they accused the JHWH of lying and of magic, and to the Prophet they did likewise and sought for his life.
61. And they reviled all prophets and persecuted them, so that they would get hold of them, and that these should die a torturous death.
62. Life in shamefulness was closer to them and more fulfilling than true life unto BEING.
63. And they continued to live in shamefulness in endless succession up to the present day.
64. Therefore, at the present time, the JHWH newly has to send down the scripture of the truthful word through the Prophet.
65. So that it again is written down by the Prophet of the New Age and be taught among the generations of man.
66. So that in final consequence the human being of Earth aspires to truth and shall be obedient to it.
67. And so that the Prophet shall be recognized and the teaching of Spirit finds adherence.
68. Therewith this matter shall be finally and irrevocably decided the last time and shall be taught in final order, because no more delay is due to the human being of Earth.
69. In the Name of Creation, this is truthful and cannot be falsified and is of most noble form.
70. Praiseth be the truth of the word of truth.

CANON 10

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, the all-merciful.
3. The JHWH hath not ordained one of his helpers, who by Earth humans would be called watcher or angel, to bring the scripture of the teaching.
4. Their life would be in danger, because they are of a different nature in perception, and the vibration of ignorance of Earth humans would kill them.
5. Because they are sensitively perceiving, as the JHWH is also and susceptible to the vibrations of evil and the negative, which is still a part of the Earth human.
6. And the Earth humans would also worship and adore them, although they are not Creation, to which alone worship and adoration is due.
7. Therefore, the JHWH and the Prophet are chosen, those who are mediators and proclaimers in their own recognition of duty between the truth and between all generations of men adjoined to them.

8. And the Prophet is a human being of Earth, and his sensitivity lieth on the border of changeability, so he is enabled to live in the frequency realm of the Earth humans and yet can also see into the grace of the countenance of the JHWH.
9. And the Prophet is mediator and proclaimer between the truth and the generations of men, so he is able to bring the scripture of the word of truth and the teaching also.
10. And the Prophet cometh close to the plane of the JHWH, and he occupies the same mission with the generations of men as he.
11. Yet the Prophet is human, and the JHWH also.
12. And over the JHWH and over the Prophet hovereth and liveth Creation as immeasurable mystery.
13. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
14. Praise be unto Creation, which attesteth to the truth of the word.

CANON 11

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is true love.
3. Verily, the Prophet is the one sent of truth.
4. And over the JHWH and the Prophet hovereth the power of Creation as immeasurable mystery.
5. Verily, Creation and Its laws and recommendations are being mocked by the ignorant.
6. And verily, the JHWH is being mocked by the ignorant.
7. And verily, the Prophet is being mocked by the ignorant.
8. And verily, whatever is being mocked by the ignorant, that is forever existing around the mockers.
9. But the mockers will find their just punishment, which they lay upon themselves and bring into operation.
10. May Earth man walk across his world, and he will see how the end was of those who mocked the truth.
11. And man may walk across his Earth, and he will see how the end was of those, who denied Creation and Its laws and recommendations.
12. And man may walk across his Earth, and he will see how the end was of those, who denied the JHWH and the Prophet, and who treated the JHWH and the Prophet as liars.
13. And verily, man may walk across his Earth, and he will see and recognize what the end is in endless succession of those, who continue to deny the JHWH and the Prophet, to mock them and to accuse them of lying, and those who in untruth and ignorance mock life and Creation and Its laws and recommendations.
14. Woe unto all, who are mockers and deniers, because painful and fearful dying awaits them and also such reincarnation.
15. There is no doubt about it, because Creation alloweth not that It be mocked.
16. Its laws and recommendations are aligned so that the mockers, deniers and ignorant place themselves into severest punishment so that fear, pain, fright and terror blossom forth unto them out of their own power.
17. Creation is in everything hallowed of Its creations, in everything which resideth and is existent, during the night and day, and It is the omnipotent, which hath created everything of laws and recommendations, and everything which creepeth and flyeth.

18. And verily, man shall never set any other protection power beside Creation than Creation Itself, which brought forth heaven and Earth, and which giveth sustenance to everything creeping and flying, and for Itself does not require any similar sustenance.
19. And it is commanded that the human being and all life shall obey the creative laws and recommendations, so that all life lead a Creation-pleasing existence.
20. And there shall be no human being and no other lifeform whatsoever which sets gods and idols or other rivals beside Creation.
21. And should this yet be done in disobedience, then the fallible will fear the day of the terrible punishment, which is being created of his own initiative and by the life of the fallible himself, as well as to the degree as also to the severity of the punishment.
22. But whoever guardeth himself against punishment and liveth faithfully according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, to him manifesteth blissfulness.
23. But whoever lays punishment upon himself by mockery and denial and ignorance, he falleth into misery, and no one will be around him, who is able to take it away from him.
24. Only the obedience of truth is able to modify and take away the punishment and the misery.
25. And the way of redemption leadeth over the obedience of the laws and recommendations of Creation alone.
26. If a human being is being touched by fortune or misery, then this lies in his own doing alone, depending on whether or not he obeys the creative laws and recommendations.
27. The human being has the power to do everything he wants in good as well as in evil, so that fortune or misery toucheth him depending on his doings.
28. Man himself has the power over himself.
29. And if he useth the power of himself for evil, then he is a fool.
30. And if he useth the power of himself for good, then he is a wise one.
31. And if he obeyeth the laws and recommendations of Creation, then he is the knowing and the able one.
32. And this is the truth of truth, which testifieth of itself.
33. And which thing is truly the most important as testimony?
34. Verily, truth alone is the true testimony of truth.
35. And all this is the testimony of truth, so therefore the scripture of the word of truth, so that all generations of men be taught and warned by this testimony, wherever and whenever the testimony of truth will reach them.

CANON 12

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, the truthful.
3. Verily, it is presented by error teachings, selfishness and power greed of man to want to prove and testify that beside Creation other powers, idols and gods exist.
4. But the truth is not so, and every presented testimony is false, a lie and unprovable.
5. But it can be proven, however, that Creation is the exclusive and only Creation in Its universe, all-timely and eternally.

6. And verily, everything is far from Creation, shameful and invented, what is being attributed by man and set beside It.
7. But the JHWH truly knows about the truth, and also truly knowing about this truth is the Prophet.
8. And all those shall become knowing, who through the book of the word of truth and by the Prophet are being taught, so Spirit leaders will become of them, who shall be instructing the generations of men.
9. But those who spoil their life, they are the ignorant and doubters, mockers, deniers, evil-tempered, discontent, unrighteous and the constant true losers, and they shall be instructed and taught of the truth.
10. They shall be instructed and taught, so that they become the knowing, and so that they honor Creation in respect and in recognition of truth.
11. And they shall be taught, so they leave the way of corruption, and that they fulfill the laws and recommendations of Creation, that they lead a Creation-just life, and their generations following them also.
12. And who needs the truth more than the ignorant and the fallible, and the mockers, spoilers and deniers, those who are the true and constant losers!
13. Because who is more unrighteous than they, who invent lies against Creation, against Its laws and recommendations, and against the JHWH and against the Prophet, and against life and against BEING.
14. But where is the wisdom, the love, the truth and the knowledge of these unrighteous and liars, and where is their blissfulness?
15. They are the misled who have misled themselves, and who are forever the constant losers, if they do not leave the path of corruption.
16. And they are the losers on the day of their self-chosen judgement, if they then hypocritically, untruthfully and self-pityingly seek and speak justification with words of fools, that in good faith they had created and exalted and worshipped their gods and idols.
17. And justification-demanding they will speak that to them only lies and fraud have been taught, yet never the truth, but there will be nobody, who listeneth to the words and considereth their erroneous belief to be truth.
18. Because they can not justify themselves, and set their erroneous belief equal to truth and carry on their untruthful speech, because to them and all prior generations the truth was proclaimed.
19. And so the truth also is proclaimed in the New Age, by the Prophet of this time, by him who acts equal to the JHWH on the Earth, and who is giving the scripture of the word of truth another time.
20. And the scripture of the word of truth is given another time and a last time, so that the teaching shall be given in final and unfalsified form for all coming time.
21. So that the Earth human finally recognizes the truth and from now on obeys it.

CANON 13

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is righteousness.
3. And so speaks the JHWH: “Verily, those who recognize the book of the word of truth as such, they recognize it so, as they recognize their own children.

4. But those, who do not recognize the truth of the word, ruin their life, and they are unrighteous and liars in the matter of life.
5. But who is more unrighteous than the unrighteous ones, who are inventing lies against Creation, against the JHWH and against the Prophet, and whose teachings they declare as a lie.
6. Verily, these unrighteous knowingly strike themselves with blindness and they obtain no blissfulness, and they punish themselves as liars also.
7. And on the day of their self-invented judgement, the question will be posed to them, where the help and existence of their self-imagined gods and idols now is, when they stand before the countenance of death and tremble in anxiety and fear.
8. And then there will be with them weeping and gnashing of teeth.
9. And their speech will fall on deaf ears, if then they justify themselves and say that they have not been polytheists and idolaters.
10. Their justification will only be a lie, and they will lie to themselves, and they will lie against all that which they invented as gods and idols,which on the day of their self-appointed judgement neither relieve them of their anxiety nor fear, nor are helpful to them.
11. The day and the hour of the self-appointed judgement will be horror and terror for the unrighteous and liars, mockers and slanderers, and they will suffer thousandfold deaths and punish themselves for their wooing about their self-appointed gods and idols.
12. And the guilt lieth with the unrighteous alone, and their punishment and their terror also.
13. And many are among the unrighteous who lend an ear to the word of truth and the teachings, however remain deaf against what is heard, so they cannot understand, because they do not want to understand the truth.
14. And many are among the unrighteous who do see every sign of the truth and of Creation and Its laws and recommendations, yet they do not knowingly and in recognition accept them within themselves, because they do not want to see the truth.
15. The unrighteous deny the truth, and they invent lies against the truth, to find dispute with the righteous and knowing ones, and to be able to lie that everything is only invented fable since times of old, and magic and trickery of the JHWH and of the Prophet also.
16. And the unrighteous and the dishonest keep themselves distant from the teachings of truth, or they acquire them only to bring them into discredit.
17. And they invent lies against the truth bringers, against the JHWH and against the Prophet, to keep away others from the teaching of Spirit and the truth and from the all-encompassing love and kindness of Creation.
18. They accuse the Prophet of lying, of swindling, of fraud, of sorcery and of magic, but also of jugglery and of profit greed.
19. And they dishonor the teachings of Spirit brought by the Prophet as masquerade and degenerate fantasy, and the unrighteous strive to pocket a profit and power and satisfaction also from their lies of such kind.
20. They forbid those seeking and hoping for truth to find the truth and also to live according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, and they forbid them to lend an ear to the truthful words of the Prophet and of truth.

21. And the unrighteous keep themselves distant from the truth, and also from the Prophet and his truthful word and his advice.
22. Verily, but with their doing and thinking they plunge themselves into ruin, and also those are dragged along by them who adhere to them.
23. Only, they all do not comprehend, because they do not want to comprehend, because their own profit and the life of easy shamefulness is closer to them than the life of blissfulness, which has to be worked for with effort.
24. They walk through the big door to the wide road, which offers the life of shamefulness.
25. They avoid the small and narrow gate which is followed by a narrow and rocky path, and which requires some trouble to walk upon, but which is being avoided by them, because effort, so they think, may not pay off.
26. If they, however, then stand at the day of their days, when death steps before their countenance, then they become remorseful and wish to live their life over again.
27. Now, suddenly, they feign to recognize those things, which all life long they have denied, mocked and handled unjustly, and they wish to be taken back into their lived life, to live it another time and now in a righteous manner.
28. Their wishes in anxiety, fear, horror and terror, however, fade away unheard, because no one is able to lend them an ear, and help also fails to appear, so they change over from this side to the other side in anxiety and horror, burdened with anxiety and fear for the next incarnation.
29. Oh, had they not treated the words and the signs of truth as lies, and had they not persecuted the Prophet, dying would not be a burden for them and also not life.
30. In the face of death, at least, it becomes clear to the unrighteous in anxiety and horror, what they consciously, unjustly tended to conceal previously.
31. And verily, would the laws and recommendations of Creation be fashioned like such, that they could retreat from the face of death and again live their wasted life anew, it would be very certain that soon they would return to that which was forbidden them.
32. Again they would lead a life of shamefulness, in mockery and denial, and again they would nibble and eat of the fruit of the forbidden.
33. Therefore, they are still liars on the deathbed and in the face of death, when weeping and with gnashing teeth they moan for mercy, which can be given by no one.
34. And their mercy-begging moaning is only falsehood and deceit, like the life they lived, because their screaming in anxiety and fear is only pretence and deceit and momentary, to yet lastly, and at the inevitable end snatch a profit for themselves.
35. Therefore, even in the last span of their life period they act selfishly and profit-minded for their own benefit, without honesty and respect toward Creation and toward truth.
36. How then, could there ensue mercy or pity, delay and renewed opportunity to live the same life a second time.
37. Verily, they will be the life-long losers, because they do not disavow and deny Creation and the truth unpunished.
38. And they do not deny and insult the JHWH and the Prophet unpunished.
39. And they do not deny the Prophet’s meeting with the JHWH unpunished.
40. Because they will punish themselves for their lies and slander when the hour of the self-appointed judgement comes over them unexpectedly, and so with them will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

41. And woe unto them, those who neglect life, because they will have to endure distress, pain and misery, and they will have to carry their burdens on their backs, heavy and depressing.
42. Verily, it is sad with which the unrighteous burden themselves, because their burden is weightier than they could recognize and bear.
43. Woe unto them, those who are unrighteous, liars, deniers, mockers and neglecters.
44. Self-created evil, anxiety and fear, and horror and terror also await them.
45. And evil self-manufactured judgement awaits them, during life as also when they enter upon the separation between this side and the other side, and when they stand in the reincarnation also.
46. But happy are the righteous, those who have lived in truth, because theirs is blissfulness in life, and theirs is the joy of death also, when they look into its countenance.
47. They will not experience anxiety and fear, and neither will there be horror nor terror for them, nor an untimely end because the righteous is knowing and wise, so to him the end is a new beginning unto reincarnation.
48. In the Name of Creation, which is justice, this correspondeth to the truthful process.
49. Praise be unto Creation, which hath created everything in love, in wisdom, in truth and knowing in justice."

CANON 14

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is truthfulness.
3. And the JHWH speaketh to the Prophet as teaching for the earthly generations of men:
4. "Life is not only a game and an amusement, because life truly serveth the righteous as a time of learning and of evolution.
5. And verily, this is so on this side of Earth as also otherwise in the realm of the other side of Earth.
6. On this side of Earth is the life of the coarse-mattered material and the learning period and evolution connected therewith.
7. But in the space of the other side is the life of the spiritual and the evolution of the Spirit form connected therewith, and also the preparation of the Spirit form for the reincarnation into a new human body takes place in the space of the other side.
8. And this side and the other side equally occupy the same space, however, separated by two different dimensions, that is by the visible and palpable material plane, and by the invisible and inpalpable spiritual plane.
9. Therefore two different dimensions are given, the material plane in which the physical life fendeth for its being, and the spiritual into which the Spirit form of man floateth after the death of the material body, to live in the space of the other side.
10. Therefore the space of the other side is the place then, into which the Spirit form of man entereth, when he hath laid down the material body of man by death.

11. And the death of man is like unto a deep sleep, recreational and developmental for the Spirit form in the invisible space of the other side, through which the body findeth enlivening in the physical life of man.
12. And the Spirit form of the human being, which is in minuteness like a flea, develops in the body of man in love, knowledge, wisdom and truth, but so it also evolveth in expanding manner in the realm of the other side therefore.
13. And for the Spirit form in the other-side realm follows evolution and preparation for the next incarnation, so that it will be newly born into a material human body, unburdened and fresh, and another time on Earth.
14. And man liveth on this side of Earth, and goeth into death to the beyond, thus he irresistibly will be born again and evolveth.
15. Therefore, man liveth and dieth and is born again into a new body, and this type of becoming and passing away repeateth itself, until the time of time has arrived, at which the Spirit form of man, as minute portion of Creation, does not need a material human body any more for further evolution.
16. Thus, the Spirit form liveth and evolveth from then on without a material human body, because it then truly liveth and evolveth in pure spiritual form and as fine-mattered Spirit body.
17. And this becoming and passing away of man and his Spirit form lasts in the measure of time to billions of Earth years, calculated from the very beginning of existence of a human being in actual person, up to the becoming of light of the Spirit form without a material body.
18. Thus, is given by the laws and recommendations of Creation that the evolution of the human being will be fulfilled in repeating order of becoming and passing away, of life and of death and of reincarnation, and the evolution of the Spirit form of man also.
19. The human being, therefore, liveth in manifold succession, arranged into birth and life and in death and reincarnation, so that the irresistible evolution and the fulfillment of the goal unto BEING is given.
20. And with this is stated, that the human being doeth not live only once, but that he liveth again and again, through birth and dying and reincarnation, which are in endless succession.
21. And verily, thereby is given that man reapeth in the life after his life and so also in the following life the fruit of that which he hath sown in the life previously, wherefore he should constantly consider to lead his life in Creation-obliging manner and like an upright just one".

CANON 15

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, the forbearing.
3. And so speaks the JHWH to the Prophet, he who is sorrowful in his mission.
4. "See, you are sorrowful in your thoughts and in your feeling, because the human beings accuse you of lying and of deceit, and the JHWH they so accuse also.
5. And they accuse Creation of deceit, and Its laws and recommendations also.
6. The accusers, however, are the wicked and unrighteous among men, because they not only renounce the meeting of the JHWH with the Prophet, but the existence of Creation also, because they consider Creation equal to a tyrant whom they call god.

7. And they reject the signs of Creation, which are given day after day and night after night, in everything living and existing, in all armies of life, which are created by Creation.
8. And they revile you, the Prophet and one sent of truth, and they accuse you of deceit since times of old already, you who already were the Prophet in manifold succession before the New Age.
9. But it doth not grieve you that they revile you as Prophet, and that they accuse you of deceit, for grief burneth within you because of the denying of the teaching of Spirit, and thus the word of truth and Creation with Its laws and recommendations.
10. Verily, you are patient, and patience you greatly possess.
11. But your patience doth not brighten your sorrow, and it lighteneth not the dark veil of the holy anger impassioned by love within you.
12. You are denied by men, as they have done unto you heretofore at earlier times of your earlier lives, when you worked in the same manner in mission for the truth, and when you were persecuted and harassed often and often by the unrighteous.
13. But to the earthly generations of men were given still other prophets, those who were sent ones of truth as well.
14. And they were sorrowful also, and reproached and flayed and reviled as being liars and false, as happened to you and is newly happening also.
15. And as has happened, is happening and threatens to happen to you, so the other prophets also were persecuted and flayed without ceasing, and their reward for love and truth was violent death by assassin's hand, which also was your lot.
16. Yet some were among them, among the prophets, who were despondent and weak, or they were false prophets of their own mercies, to whom the same happened up to the present day, so that man beware of false prophets.
17. But those who were true prophets and sent by their own sense of duty for truth, like you, remained patient and truthful, and they remained intrepid against all accusations and all persecution.
18. And verily, you also defy the deniers and persecutors and accusers, and thus also the mockers and liars, as you have done previously.
19. And you defy all injustice and all shame, which is brought over you unjustified, and you also defy all enemy strikes, which are meant to harm you and to destroy the mission.
20. And see, you are sorrowful about these things of the unrighteous, but you have to consider that your sorrowfulness widens the patience within you, which united with truthful love allows you to hope and wait.
21. And your hoping and waiting is aimed thereto, that the truth may achieve the victory, and that the earthly generations of men will enter upon the path of truth unto Creation.
22. Therefore you know: Neither on the Earth nor anywhere else doth exist a human being, who is able to change the word of truth and the laws and recommendations of Creation.
23. You have knowledge of this truth since times of old, thus you dost live and teach thereby.
24. Thus truth and wisdom are yours and so also knowledge and love, wherefore you should not bend your head in grief.

25. You are the Prophet of the New Age, and steadfast in this mission since times of old, and you are truly the one sent of truth as the JHWH is also.
26. You are suffering in sickness and suffering in deepest sorrow, and torturous are often the hours of your deeds and efforts, so you are lonely as human being among humans.
27. But you do not waver, and you do not let your word of duty and fulfillment of duty be broken, and not one iota of your will and your efforts toward the teaching and toward the progress and toward the fulfillment of the mission truly yieldeth.
28. Therefore will be allotted success to your effort, given in small measure during your life time, and in great measure after your newly passing away."

CANON 16

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is freedom.
3. Listen, only a human being who liveth in freedom, he alone liveth according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, he only can truly live.
4. And only such a human being can absorb and open himself to truth, who truly liveth in freedom, and who is willing to live in freedom.
5. Only such a human being can absorb and listen, who is free and only he can open himself to truth, because he is free in his will to do so.
6. But dead during life are all those, who lock up their freedom and place it into fetters by untruth and unrighteousness.
7. They make prisoners of themselves of their own power and falsehood.
8. And they are the living dead, who cannot be awakened, if their own sense and will is not geared thereto.
9. And they are those who are wondering and lack understanding in relation to those, who are successful in their freedom.
10. And those, who have enslaved themselves, search for their freedom somewhere else than where it is to be found, within man himself.
11. Man is not knowing and perceiving that the inner freedom is the real freedom, so that he can lie in chains or in prison and yet live in freedom.
12. But freedom existeth on the inside of man, if he liveth justly in accord with truth and in fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
13. So real freedom existeth if man liveth in freedom within himself, if truth, knowledge, love and wisdom are his, if he fulfilleth the laws and recommendations of Creation in real joy of duty.
14. And man has to be free within himself, only then doth he live in truthful freedom.
15. And if man is free within himself, then freedom taketh shape also in the outer, in daily life therefore.
16. And if man liveth justly and in freedom within himself, he liveth without attack and without wickedness and without unlawfulness in the outer; so he is neither unjust toward the inner nor toward the outer or would be one of the unrighteous.
17. And as he is righteous, he liveth as a righteous one within himself and in his outer self and in real freedom as well.

18. As a righteous one in freedom he neither provoketh displeasure nor ill will within nor outside himself, because he is not one of the fallible who truly show enmity toward the righteous in unrighteousness and wish them evil.
19. In community man liveth with his kind, but in freedom the free liveth only among the free, because the unrighteous are not free and are hostile to freedom.
20. The righteous one doth not cause offense and displeasure before Creation, because he is shown enmity only by the unrighteous, who truly should behave like the animals which live on the Earth.
21. There are no animals on Earth, no bird, which flyeth about on two wings, which are not in communities like the human beings.
22. And there are no animals on Earth which would not be free within themselves, and which would thus be an unrighteous lifeform.
23. Every animal on Earth liveth in freedom within itself, and it is free in its outer life also, thus it liveth according to the given order of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
24. And is man not much more than all animals, over whom he hath been set?
25. But the will of man lieth in his free decision, to live as an unrighteous or as a righteous one, so therefore as man in real freedom or as man, who is a prisoner of himself.
26. Verily, such a human being, who liveth in captivity of himself, will suffer a torturous life, and he will pine away outside of love and joy.
27. Truthful love and joy are his and bestowed only to the righteous one, who liveth in freedom within himself and in the outer.
28. To the free one only justice is imparted and thus real love, wisdom, knowledge and truth and peace, because he liveth in fulfillment and obedience of the seven-fold creative order.

CANON 17

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, the all-encompassing.
3. “See,” speaks the JHWH, “nothing is left out in the book of truth, and nothing remaineth hidden from man, if he willingly troubleth himself about the knowledge of the scripture of truth of the word.
4. All-encompassing is the word of truth and the teaching of Spirit, so that man can grasp the word and may truly live his life.
5. To man is given the freedom of will through Creation, and to him is given strength and power, so he may use everything justly and to his progress and for striving toward the goal of evolution.
6. And also given to him are the guidelines and the laws and recommendations of Creation, so he has a useful sign post for infallibility toward the fulfillment of life.
7. But man himself may govern according to the will of Creation and progress according to his own measure, so no force is being placed upon him by law and recommendation in this matter, and thus he shall be free in real freedom.
8. But he may obey the guidelines and the laws and recommendations, so he shall be living and progressing in righteous and true form.
9. But if man does not act accordingly, he followeth the ways of the unrighteous, to whom he forthwith renders his own punishment for his doings of fallibility.

10. And if also is said that unto man his will and his strength and power and the thinking and acting for free decision and use shall be free, this is given in the sign of free choice of correct obedience of the seven-fold order of Creation.
11. Therefore, sayeth the teaching, that the creative seven-fold laws and guidelines are given, which shall be obeyed by man and life as a whole.
12. Yet man may freely opt for the manner of compliance with the guidelines and laws and recommendations of Creation, because the ways of compliance are uncountable and so numerous as human beings exist in the universe.
13. Thus the order is not given which way should be trod for the compliance with and fulfillment of the guidelines and laws and recommendations, but given is only that truthful and lawful ways are to be trod which lead to the fulfillment of the laws and recommendations.
14. Man therefore is free and without compulsion or force in the choice of his ways, his thinking and his actions, if he only progresseth and liveth in compliance with the fulfillment of the seven-fold order of Creation.
15. Never is compulsion and force placed upon man by Creation or by Its laws and recommendations or by the seven-fold order.
16. And if man liveth justly and according to the order of Creation, a life in love and peace fulfilleth for him and also in truth and knowledge and wisdom.
17. But if man walketh the ways of the unrighteous, and if he trespasseth against the order of Creation, for the fulfillment of selfishness, power greed, and advantage and profit greed and more of similar things, he createth injury and guilt for himself of his own power, into which he lapses also.
18. The ways of the unrighteous are transgression against the laws and recommendations of Creation, and against the sevenfold order also.
19. And as man practiceth transgression against the order of Creation, he transgresseth against the all-encompassing and createth guilt and harm for himself.
20. If man transgresseth against the highest, he lifteth himself up in arrogance and he blasphemeth against truth and the existence of Creation.
21. Arrogance leadeth to burden and guilt, and the burden of arrogance presseth until the fall, as also is said that pride cometh before the fall”.

CANON 18

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is consolation.
3. And man findeth consolation in Creation, as also in Its laws and recommendations and Its sevenfold order.
4. It is life’s consolation in all greatness, if it is being lived in the seven-fold order.
5. But so goeth forth the word of the JHWH unto man, which sayeth since times of old and again at the present time, that there is truth in Creation.
6. And blessed are all those, who are spiritually rich and who recognize and obey truth, because theirs is life.

7. And blessed are all those, who endure suffering and just toil, for they recognize truth therefrom, and within it they find consolation.
8. And all those are blessed, who are spiritually balanced, for they are the truly knowing and live in reverence.
9. And blessed are all those, who hunger and thirst for truth and knowledge, for they will find truth and knowledge and will be filled by it.
10. And blessed are all those, who are obedient to the laws of nature and live according to them, for they truly live according to the plan of Creation.
11. And blessed are all, who are just and of clean conscience, for them awaits neither their own judgement nor anxiety or fear.
12. And blessed are all, who are truly knowing about Creation, for it is far from them to serve an erroneous teaching and idols and gods.
13. And blessed are all, who are the law-abiding just, for nature subordinates unto them.
14. And blessed are all, who are the Creation-abiding just, for the powers of Creation become useful unto them.
15. And blessed are all, who fall into disgrace and persecution for the sake of truth, for they endure through the power of truth of Creation.
16. And blessed are all, who endure suffering and toil for the sake of truth, for they are steadfast, knowing and firm in truth, so they derive consolation therefrom.
17. And the JHWH teacheth in interpretation of the laws and recommendations of Creation that man shall be truthful and reverent in knowledge about Creation, and offering love and honor also.
18. Man should live only in righteousness and in the truth of Creation so that life unto BEING through evolution becomes his.
19. Man shall be joyous and of good cheer in the fulfillment of the seven-fold creative order, and he will be rewarded for this by life and in his reincarnation.
20. Man may open his ears toward his Prophet, who is steadfast and bringeth the truth, although he is being slandered and persecuted, as he also was slandered and persecuted previously.
21. Be just in all things, and listen not to the slander and regard not the persecutions against the Prophet and you, if the slander and persecutions are done for the sake of truth.
22. Be steadfast, you human beings, for the truth hath to be gained by fighting against the injustice of evil, which is reluctance, hatred and disobedience of man against the truth and the existence of Creation.
23. Truth is steadfast knowledge, and it is seasoned with love and wisdom, as also man seasoneth his meal so that it becometh palatable to him.
24. And as love and wisdom are the seasoning of truth and of knowledge, so the human beings are the seasoning of the Earth.
25. And therefore you are the seasoning; you are the salt of the Earth.
26. And you human beings, you doth season and salt the Earth depending on how your life's conduct determineth such.
27. As you are the salt of the Earth, and if you salt the Earth in good measure, then you have created a balance.
28. And as you are the salt of Earth, and if you salt the Earth in excessive measure it becomes thirsty, cracked, brittle and dries out.
29. And as you are the salt of the Earth, and the salt becomes impotent, wherewith would you then salt the Earth, because impotent salt is forthwith good for nothing, so that it shall be cast away and stamped out.

30. And as you are the salt of the Earth, you are so in the sense of your life's conduct, because in the way you fashion your life, you also fashion the Earth.
31. If you fashion your life in love and joy and in fulfillment of the truth of Creation, then you season the Earth in equal measure of same, and the Earth will be a paradise for you.
32. But if you fashion your life in unrighteousness, in lovelessness and joylessness, in selfishness and power greed, in taking advantage and profit greed and in addiction and vice, you season the Earth with hatred and death, with war and sickness and with disease, discord, destruction and annihilation also.
33. But if you fashion your life in fulfilling righteousness and in truth unto the laws and recommendations of Creation, bliss will be yours, that you may think all glories of the heavens were on Earth, so creative consolation will be yours in unending sequence.
34. And verily, you shalt be the salt of the Earth, and the Earth you shalt salt with true life.
35. Think, that you are the light of your world, and the glow of light spreadeth into the universe in the manner as you fashion this light.
36. If you create the non-light of darkness, it gloomily sendeth darkness into space.
37. And if you create the light of brightness, it brightens the darkness and rayeth far throughout space, testifying thereto that true life blossometh.
38. See, man of Earth, every life createth of its own kind and in its own manner, in goodness as well as in evil.
39. And no kind and manner of any life can remain hidden, as also a city cannot remain hidden which sitteth on top of a mountain.
40. Never kindle a light and set it under a bushel, so that dark light gloometh into space.
41. Always kindle a light which is being placed into a candlestick so it may shine for all, who are in need of the shining light.
42. And the light shall not be of darkness, but radiating, beaming and bright.
43. And man shall be so righteous and just, and fulfillingly obey the laws and recommendations of Creation, so he radiateth the light and the frequency of truth.
44. And your light shall shine before all men, and your frequency shall be love-giving and peace-giving for all men, so they see your works of truth, and recognize and understand the truth and the knowledge of your love and wisdom.
45. And you shalt so live, think and act at all coming times, presently so and throughout the future.
46. And you shalt not suppose, that the word of truth and the Prophet newly given unto you, would dissolve the laws and recommendations of Creation and the teachings of the JHWH and the prophets, who have been before your time.
47. The new Prophet is not given for the dissolution of the teachings given since times of old, but to fulfill once again the duty of the revelation of knowledge, of truth, of love and of wisdom.
48. For verily, the duty of the JHWH and the Prophet is to give consolation to all those, who are willing and hoping that they will find the truth, so everyone shall find who searcheth.
49. And verily, the truth can be found by everyone who seeketh in honesty and troubleth himself.
50. And whoever findeth the truth in true manner, gaineth the recognition and the knowledge that love, truth, knowledge and wisdom are given by the existence of Creation, which is imperishable and unchangeable in the truth and in everything else that is as Its own.

51. And see: Until the heavens and the Earth pass away, not the minutest letter nor a tittle of the truth and of the laws and recommendations of Creation will pass away, but also not of the laws and recommendations of nature and of the seven-fold order, until the time of time hath been fulfilled.
52. But whoever is among men, who tryeth to dissolve but only one of the smallest laws and recommendations of Creation, and who bringeth to men an erroneous teaching, will be called the smallest and load upon himself the guilt of his own judgment.
53. But whoever truly teacheth the teaching of truth and the laws and recommendations of Creation, will be called the greatest and reap the thanks of men and of Spirit.
54. But if you are not better and more knowledgeable than the unrighteous, you will not receive the thanks of men, and not the thanks of Spirit and not the thanks of life.
55. You know that it is being said: You shalt not kill; but whoever killeth maketh himself guilty of the self-incurred punishment and of his own judgment.
56. Therefore you shalt practice righteousness according to the law of nature of Creation, so you kill not out of vengeance, out of greed, out of hatred or according to a verdict or out of other reasons of nothingness.
57. Find every clarity in the laws and recommendations of nature so that you find discernment in logic, which is consolation and justice for you.
58. And all become guilty, who kill if they do not act in given self-defense.
59. And all become guilty, who act executingly and kill according to humanly devised judgment of law.
60. And all become guilty, who kill out of joy or hatred, out of revenge, out of greed, out of passion and other emotions.
61. And all become guilty, who kill in war actions in any form, if they are the attacking force.
62. And all become guilty, who kill in any degeneration.
63. Verily, only the justice of the laws and recommendations of Creation raise a judgment in logic, which is recognizable in the laws of nature.
64. You shalt always be just, in the taking as also in the giving.
65. You shalt also not be compliant against your adversaries, if you are in the right, for the right hath to remain lawful.
66. Neither anxiety nor fear, nor vileness, nor advantage nor disadvantage shall keep you away from the right, so you shalt always strive for righteousness and procure respect for this only.
67. But if a judge goeth to law and judgeth and arriveth at the wrong verdict in one of your matters, continue to go to law unto the victory of the just matter.
68. Yet truly shall be said: You will always obtain justice only, if you find justice within yourself, if you are just of your own strength, and if you canst make the justice understandable to your neighbor.
69. The just findeth justice, if he is fighting for justice with all means of justice.
70. And the just findeth consolation in justice, if he is truly just within himself and also liveth in righteousness.

CANON 19

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is wholeness.
3. And the JHWH speaketh that Creation is wholeness, and thus are wholeness Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order also.
4. But wholeness is that which is called the all-encompassing in completeness.
5. In completeness Creation is wholeness, and so are Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order also.
6. Wholeness is understandably to be recognized as completeness, as all-encompassing, as unit and as totality, and wholeness also is the equal form, the union, the harmony and the amalgamation.
7. Therefore, Creation is wholeness, and wholeness are Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order, and as man liveth accordingly, he liveth in wholeness of the guidelines and fulfillment of life.
8. Also the word of truth is wholeness in completeness, for it revealeth in truthful manner the expounding, interpretation and explanation of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
9. And that which is wholeness and completeness remaineth unchangeable for all times.
10. Therefore all wholeness of Creation is unchangeable.
11. And unchangeable is the wholeness of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
12. And unchangeable is the wholeness of the seven-fold order of Creation.
13. And unchangeable is the wholeness of wholeness, the truth, love, knowledge and wisdom in their truthful forms.
14. Thus also is given thereby that the word of truth is unchangeable, which is given since times of old, remaining constant in sense and value.
15. And the book of the word of truth resteth once and only on the truthful expounding, recognition and explanation and interpretation of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
16. And given are the recognition, the expounding, the interpretation and the explanation in purest and truthful manner of the true knowledge and obedience of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
17. And recognized and experienced is that nothing is changeable therein, and that the wholeness of truth also is unchangeable, as also is Creation and Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order.
18. And the recognition, the expounding and the interpretation of the wholeness of Creation and Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order have been grasped by men in wisdom, knowledge, love and truth, and explored, held onto and written down for man, so he may recognize and fulfill the goal of his life for evolution unto BEING.
19. And all the knowledge of wholeness has been wholly held onto and written down in the book, which is called since times of old the book of the word of truth, as it also has been given to Earth man heretofore.
20. And also since times of old, other detailing scriptures of truth of the wholeness are given to Earth man, in which are partitioned and explained in understanding and separated manner the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.

21. Therefore also are given the separated and understandable explanations, expoundings, interpretations and recognitions of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order in detailed and separated manner, thus so taken from the book of the word of truth, and held onto and written down in the scripture, which is called the teaching of Spirit.
22. It is recognizable that the wholeness of Creation is complete, and so also Its laws and recommendations and also Its seven-fold order, which remain constant and unchangeable for all times.
23. And no doubt exists in the truthful truth of the wholeness of Creation and of Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order therefore.
24. And a possibility is not and never given, which would permit a handling of the expounding, explanation and interpretation of truth and of the wholeness of Creation and Its laws and recommendations and of the seven-fold order in two different forms and explanations.
25. Two different interpretations of truth or two explanations of truth therefore could not and never be given, because the truth is truthful and one, and so explainable only in one value and in one meaning.
26. Therefore the all-encompassing and complete wholeness of Creation and Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order can only show forth one explanation, one expounding and one interpretation, because no doubts are given in the truth, so only one possibility is given as the only one of correctness in truth.
27. And as Creation is oneness, so are Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order uniform, but so also the love, the truth, the knowledge and the wisdom in logical consequence.
28. Two different views about the same matter can never exist, and also not two different groupings of mind directions among men, when it concerneth the tuth.
29. Truth can only be recognized and grasped as the one and real tuth, therefore only as one observation and as only one view, as only one opinion, as only one comprehension, as only one mind direction, as only one conviction, as only one consideration, as only one viewpoint, as only one discretion, as only one standpoint, as only one notion, as only one attitude, as only one manner of thinking, as only one intention, as only one station, and as only one presumption.
30. As only one Creation existeth for the entire universe and all armies of life on all worlds, so only one truth is given in unchangeable manner, whereby the same is valid also for the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
31. And as man createth religions and calleth upon gods and idols, he acteth incorrectly and untrue and against the truth of wholeness, and he createth and adhereth to different types of false directions of mind, which are based on error teachings of falsities and which are far from the truth therefore.
32. So truly only one Creation is given with Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order in the universe, as also only one single truth is given as sense direction which is unchangeable for all times and for the entire universe and also for all armies of life.

33. Creation is Creation, and the truth is the only truth, as also only one single sense direction is given and never two or many thereof:
34. Because Creation is wholeness, and wholeness are Its laws and recommendations of Its seven-fold order.
35. And whatever is wholeness, verily, hath for all times only one truth and one sense direction, for the wholeness in its wholeness can never be divided or subdivided into different interpretations of truth and also not into different points of observation and perception, because one truth containeth truly only one truth within itself.

CANON 20

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is instruction.
3. "Listen," the JHWH speaketh unto the Prophet, "You are sent among men, so they will be instructed by you about the truth of wholeness of Creation:
4. Which is the strength of all life, and to which is far subordinated the JHWH as human being, as is also the Prophet.
5. Yet behold, how the human beings lie against themselves.
6. And behold, how everything pits itself against them and how they abandon what they themselves invented of belief, religions, sects, idols and gods which altogether are truly only human erroneous unjust doings.
7. Among them are some who listen to you, yet on their minds lie self-made wrappings of lack of understanding and lack of comprehension, and their ears are full of deafness so they do not hear, and their seeing eyes are closed so they do not see.
8. Even if they see truthful signs, they deny these and they do not understand them.
9. So they come to you to dispute with you in injustice, and they persecute and revile you.
10. And the ignorant and the unfair ones maintain, that your words of truth and your demonstration of truth would only be fables and wild phantasy and fraud.
11. Yet if hereafter they stand at the door of need and of hardship or at the door of death, they wish they would be returned, and they promise that they would not accuse the signs of truth and the words of truth of being lies anymore.
12. Their speaking, however, is only pretense and a lie, for quite certainly they soon would return to their false acting and thinking and also to their gods and idols.
13. And they would think, act and speak like heretofore that no other than the material earthly life would exist, and that after death they would not be awakened to live again in a new earthly human body.
14. Speak thus to these ignorant: You are the true losers, you who deny the existence and the truth of Creation and Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order.
15. But consider: When the hour of accountability cometh over you, woe unto you unrighteous for having denied and neglected the truth.
16. And verily, know you will carry your burden of unrighteous life on your backs, and verily it is bad with what you burden yourself.
17. And speak unto them: You regard life in this world only as a game and pastime, and you assume that life is a game of dice.

18. But this is not so, for life is path and goal, rooted in evolution and in the becoming unto BEING, do you not finally want to comprehend this?
19. You human beings of Earth, you are deaf and dumb and blind in dense darkness, and you do not want to hear the truth, and you do not want to speak about the truth, and you do not want to see the truth.
20. You go astray yourself, and you also let yourself be driven astray by false leaders of error, by those who are the mighty of the nation's leaders, and by those who are priests of sects and false religions with gods and idols.
21. And also speak further to the human beings in instructing manner, the JHWH speaketh to the Prophet: What do you think, when your self-elected punishment of your unrighteous life cometh over you?
22. And what do you think, when your hour overtaketh you?
23. Will you still continue to call on the gods and idols of your own making, or which are erroneously appointed by yourself?
24. Or will you call for the truth and for Creation, which will be consolation for you in the hour of anxiety and fear?
25. Truly, so it will be, because you will call for truth and for justice and for Creation in your distress.
26. And well, when you become honest, and when your reluctance against the truth becomes painful to you, in case you are still able to do so, you may truthfully recognize the signs of Creation and of truth and the words of the JHWH and of the Prophet, and also become righteous, so you no longer are one of the unrighteous.
27. And the truth is patient in long suffering, as Creation also is patient, and the JHWH and the Prophet also are patient, those who in infinite patience and love are instructing and waiting, so you find and walk the path of the righteous.
28. And further instruct the ignorant and the unrighteous, and the seeking and hoping, the JHWH speaketh to the Prophet; only those can find the truth and absorb and understand it, who listen to the truthful words of the Prophet, and who see the truthful signs which he demonstrates to them, and which are also given by Creation or by the JHWH.
29. But all those are dead in life, who taboo and disavow the truth and Its signs, for they live Creation-estranged and are disinclined toward the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
30. And the living dead search for other signs of truth and other words of truth than those, which are truly given, for they seek signs and the truth in lies and in sorcery and fraud, and also in magical and mystical hocus-pocus.
31. And those are the living dead, who say and demand that they would immediately believe in this and such matter, if they could touch the signs and truth with their hands.
32. But it is denied them to touch the signs or to step close to them, because their thinking and aim are toward destruction and toward falsehood, so they spread danger for all life.

33. And because it is denied them to touch the signs or to step close to them, so they persecute and deny the signs and their truth.
34. Therefore to them the only way is given that they must be learning and recognizing within themselves and by their own strength, without being able to touch the signs or to step close to them, so that they become knowing only by the exploration of truth within themselves.
35. And the JHWH has the power to send down signs, and also his own, who are his helpers, as signs of truth; as also Creation sends down signs every day and so proves Its existence and truth.
36. And the Prophet also has learned to do signs of truth, as has been done by the prophets heretofore and since times of old.
37. Only, man of Earth has changed during the time which has passed by; and he has become manic for proving power by seeing and touching and hearing.
38. For the intention of effort has vanished from man that the truth should be earned by one's own strength of thinking and searching and recognition.
39. He also has changed in the manner toward error that he only will accept that as truth, which he can touch with his hands, and what he can see with his eyes, and what he can hear with his ears.
40. But this is the way of falsity and of the purely material, which defies and mocks every effort of self-thinking, of self-feeling, of self-searching, of self-seeking and of self-recognition of any solution and truth.
41. Thus thereby the way for the exploration of truth is not given and the finding of truth, wherefore no sign should be given or only very scarce signs by the JHWH and by the Prophet, which are proof of the truth.
42. The word of truth is given, and this is fully sufficient, to reveal the teachings of truth to those, who are willing to approach and bear the trouble of acquisition through their own strength.
43. And furthermore the JHWH speaketh to the Prophet: Teach the human beings that not all treasures of knowing, of ability, of love, of truth and of wisdom of Creaton lie with the JHWH and with the Prophet, for the treasures and the secrets of Creation are immeasurable and never graspable to a human being, for Creation is the immeasurable secret.
44. And speak that the JHWH and the Prophet do not know about the hidden part of Creation, for Creation alone knows about Its hidden part, and man is able only to grasp and recognize the revealed part.
45. And speak instructingly to the human beings that neither the JHWH nor the Prophet come close to Creation, and neither the JHWH nor the Prophet are representatives of Creation.
46. And the JHWH and the Prophet are human beings of fulfilling wisdom, love, and truth and of ability and knowledge, and above them standeth immeasurably much higher Creation as immeasurable secret.
47. And the JHWH is a human being of recognition in wisdom, and so the Prophet also shall be to whom is revealed sometimes by the JHWH the instruction in word and writing, which he handeth down and hath to instruct the generations of men, to whom he is adjoined to.
48. And neither the JHWH nor the Prophet are punishing nor punishment-demanding, and they practice neither violence nor force, neither do they instruct that violence or force should be practiced.
49. Verily, the JHWH hath sent out Spirit teachers to the Earth to all generations of men and nations, who had fallen to gods and idols in error teachings and who lived in error and confusion, so they were visited by misery and hardship of their own making, before the Prophet of the New Age came another time in incarnation of his own call to duty.

50. And the prophets were sent to them, to teach and to instruct them in the truth, so they should become free from hardship and misery.
51. But the nations of Earth did not trouble themselves about the truth, neither through misery and hardship, nor through the teaching of truth by the prophets, whom they slandered and persecuted.
52. Their senses were hardened, as this is so also at the present time; and their evil and false thinking far from true life allowed them to continue to do everything wrong which they did heretofore, and which seemed to them as well done due to error teachings.
53. And willingly they forgot again the teachings of the JHWH and of the prophets, and willingly they forgot everything that had been imparted to them of truthful teachings, instructions and exhortations.
54. And with force they opened for themselves the doors to all things, until they were suddenly caught by the consequences of their evil life style, while they still enjoyed everything they had given themselves wantonly in an unrighteous life style.
55. Therefore they fell into despair and they murdered and killed each other in wars, and so they created infirmity and pestilence and they brought forth false and deadly legislation and new error teachings also, which were offered by priests and the power greedy and by sects and religions, who by their own power raised up gods and idols.
56. But the true prophets were persecuted and slandered by the people and by the unrighteous, and the teachings and the truth were trodden on.
57. But new Spirit leaders were sent forth by the JHWH, and also prophets came in their own sense of duty, who always were the bringers and proclaimers of truth and truly only of glad tidings.
58. And the Spirit teachers and prophets also were warners of coming threatening events and warners of false life styles.
59. And they instructed all the willing and seekers of truth and also the unrighteous that there should be no anxiety and no fear and no sadness, if they recognize the truth and begin to live according to the truth.
60. But they taught that all those fall victim to self-incurred punishment, who are disobedient, unjust and wicked against the laws and recommendations of Creation and against the truth.
61. And be instructing to the Earth humans, the JHWH also speaks to the Prophet: Do you not finally want to consider and grasp the truth, and do you not finally want to bend to truth?
62. Do not drive yourself away and always further away from the truth, which within your deepest inner self you truly are seeking and hoping for from morning till evening, and which hidden within you, you call upon, in your striving for the truthful truth of Creation.
63. And verily, man seeketh the truth subconsciously and in his most inner hope, yet nevertheless he lives in unrighteousness as an unrighteous, because he is led astray by many false prophets of their own making, and by priests and fanatics and many types of sects and religions, which are directed by despots and other power greedy, by profit greedy, by gods and idols and frauds.
64. Verily, peace and love shall be with the righteous, and peace and love shall be with those, who seek the truth of Creation.

65. Creation hath ordained that peace, love and mercy shall be rendered to everyone, who unknowingly doth something evil or anything else against the laws and recommendations or against the seven-fold order, if thereafter followeth recognition and remorse and the path of truth is trodden.
66. Creation is all-forgiving and merciful, and It also maketh clear Its existence and love, so that the fallible recognize It and the truth and live according to Its laws and recommendations.
67. And the signs of love of Creation prove that with It is forgiveness for everything fallible, if the fallible is being corrected and life becomes righteous.
68. And the signs of love of Creation prove that everything is being done erroneously and wrong, if other things, which are gods and other humans and also idols, are being worshiped besides Creation.
69. Therefore, man shall not follow the evil desires and error teachings, so he adoreth and worshipeth nothing else besides Creation.
70. But if man doth not honor this teaching and if he doth worship or adore gods or idols or human beings, he truly walketh in error and is not one of the rightly guided.
71. The righteous and knowing are forbidden by common sense and intellect to call upon and worship gods and idols, so they cannot follow the evil desires of temptation toward wrong and error.
72. The JHWH and the Prophet refer to the clear proof of Creation, but you, you cast aside the proof, because you imagine yourself to be more knowing and wiser than Creation Itself, or than the JHWH and the Prophet and the Spirit leaders ever could do and be of themselves.
73. You desire signs and wonders as proof, but especially these shall remain sealed and turned away from you, for on the one hand you would not understand them, and on the other hand you would deny them in your lack of understanding and unrighteousness.
74. So as exceptions signs of truth through the JHWH and through the Prophet are sparingly given, and only to those who are the truly righteous or who are becoming righteous.
75. Verily, only to the righteous and becoming righteous, the signs of truth are proof of the truth, so they shall see the signs of proof in sparing manner, which from time to time are given by the JHWH and by the Prophet.
76. With Creation lie the keys to the hidden, and only Creation alone knows the hidden.
77. And that which is the hidden of Creation is not graspable and recognizable by man, and also not by the JHWH and not by the Prophet.
78. Therefore, the JHWH and the Prophet can only be exploring, recognizing and instructing in those things, which are recognizable and explainable to man, and which can be explained to the JHWH and to the Prophet by beings of light from the spheres of Spirit accessible to them, and which are inaccessible to all men, which are not living in the knowledge, in love, in the wisdom and in the truth of those planes, in which the JHWH and the Prophet live.
79. And whatever is the hidden with Creation that is Its immeasurable secret, which will only become recognizable and graspable and understandable in the Spirit of man, when at some future time he will enter into BEING of Creation.
80. And it is truly Creation, into which man at some future time findeth his homecoming, at a sooner or later time, measured depending on how his lives and how his works have been:

81. For it is given that man live and lead his life in righteousness and in wise fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation, so that he walk in constant evolution to fashion his efforts of just life conduct toward perfection, so that he change himself to Spirit form and later to perfection, which granteth the homecoming into Creation as final goal.
82. And verily, Creation is life and the highest above all life, and thus It standeth above life and above death, as It also standeth as final goal of all evolution, so as true BEING, toward which man in unceasing effort through his evolution may strive.
83. And verily, through Creation is given all life and all evolution, as also the love, the truth, the knowledge, the wisdom and the logical consequence and also everything essential in nourishment and surroundings in life's portion of the material realm.
84. Thus, through Creation everything is given totally which man needs for life and for development, yet nevertheless, he deviates from Creation and Its truth and sets gods and idols beside It which only bring to him misery, trouble and distress and erroneous teachings in unending numbers.
85. And man's belief in gods and idols bringeth evil in great measure to the nations and generations of men, because due to belief and by gods and idols, by priests, power greedy, the ruling and profit seekers, false laws and recommendations are invented, which are paradoxical to the laws and recommendations of Creation.
86. And the false laws and recommendations of sects and religions and the power greedy and profit seekers bring to the nations and generations of men only force and constraint and servitude and loss, for they altogether are not intending true leadership of man, but his enslavement and compelling violent penalty even at the minutest cause.
87. Therefore, the false laws and recommendations of sects and religions and of those ruling in tyranny, and of the power greedy and profit seekers do not bring justice and righteousness and freedom, but only judgment, violence, war, infirmity and death and manifold evil, so man individually is being characterized thereby.
88. And the power greedy, the profit seekers, the rulers and sects and religions and their priests split the united thinking of men into disunity in all things, and they cause confusion and hostility, so one is against the other, and so the neighbor commits violence against his neighbor, and so the son falls into enmity against his father and the daughter against her mother.
89. And the unrighteous, the power greedy, the profit seekers, the governing and rulers, and the priests and sects and religions, due to the might of their power and their false laws and recommendations drive the people together into war armies, to lead deadly battles and wars in power greed and hatred, against their brothers and sisters, against the children of their neighbor-nation.
90. Yet man doth not heed the truth, and he furthermore disregardeth the truth, and if he seeth the signs of truth and heareth the words of truth, he only speaketh foolishly and denyingly about them.
91. But it hath been prophesied since time of old that the rejection of truth will bring evil and suffering and sorrow to the earthly generations of men and nations, and that the people will fall into misery and hardship and trouble, and verily hath this been so in steady sequence as hath been prophesied.

92. For every prophecy a certain time hath been set, when it will be fulfilled, and so it is given for the prophecies of the New Age also, which have been written down since times of old, and which newly have been given through the Prophet of the New Age, and soon you will learn about it and have to endure the terrors and deaths, for the signs of the time are set and ensued in fulfillment which warn of the end time of the fulfillment of prophecies.
93. Yet man of Earth continues to live in false belief, thinking and striving and acting, as everything has falsely been given by the erroneous laws and recommendations of sects and religions, and by tyrants and false rulers, so Earth man is rebellious and strange toward all knowledge and all truth as he was since times of old.
94. But the truth of true knowledge has been taught to the generations of men since times of old and were already given to Adam.
95. Prophets were given to the generations of men and the nations of Earth since times of old, as also were sent Henoch and Elja, Jesaja and Jeremja, and Jmmanuel and Mohammed in direct succession and constant reincarnation, in addition to Johannes and Eljas and Hjob and all the army of the other righteous and just, as they were Buddha, Zoroaster and Babatschi and others also.
96. All were chosen and led and sent down partially by the JHWH and partially by themselves and in the knowledge and ability as prophets or Spirit leaders to the generations of men and nations of Earth, yet they all were slandered and persecuted, and their teachings and their words of truth were falsified in misunderstanding or hatred, so therefrom originated misleading and false religions and sects.
97. And now a Prophet hath been sent down to Earth another time in his own fulfillment of duty, and another time the book of the word of truth is given, which is being revealed in understandable form, full of blessing and of true guidelines and to fulfill the earlier, so that the earthly generations of men and nations are taught and so that, finally, the fallible and the unrighteous shall be warned.
98. And this is the last time and for all times of time, that a Prophet of such greatness is being sent, and who is law-giving, and that the book of the word of truth and the teaching of Spirit also is given to the earthly generations of men, and never shall such return in all the future.
99. The truth and the Prophet are given, and this shall be of validity from now on for all coming times, because all ordinances were destroyed by the human beings of Earth, which would have made something else possible and a continued work of the Prophet in the future also.
100. Therefore, now the last Prophet of such importance for all times is given, and also the book of the word of truth only one final time, and a further scripture and a prophet of equal importance will not follow another time, but also a reformer will not follow, because everything in the book of the word of truth and through the Prophet is given and his teaching of Spirit in exhaustive form, so that reformers and new teachings and prophets after the Prophet of the New Age will not and never be, and if yet some should come and call themselves sent one or reformers of their own making, then they are full of falsity and full of error, lying and betrayal.
101. Therefore no other prophet after the Prophet of the New Age will exist, and also no reformer or sent one of a different type will exist, because the truth of the real truth is given by the Prophet of the New Age, and it is the given truth of all truth, the all-encompassing truth, which cannot be reformed by as much as one tittle.

102. And this truthfully is the book of the word of truth, which is revealed through the JHWH and the Prophet, and which is unchangeable and not in need of reform for all times.

103. The book of the word of truth is full of blessing to fulfill the earlier and true life, so that all human beings around the Earth be warned and taught.

104. And this is the book of the word of truth for all, for the righteous as well as for the unrighteous, and it is not changeable or to be reformed by any tittle, neither by the power greedy and the governing nor by priests of sects and religions, and not by profit seekers and doubters, and also not by false sent ones and false reformers and false prophets.

105. And the book of the word of truth is given for the instruction of the unrighteous and for the way-showing of those, who already in total or in part know about the truth and strictly adhere to the laws and recommendations of Creation.

106. But who is more unrighteous than one who invents lies against Creation, as is being done by the priests of sects and religions, and by false reformers, and by false sent ones and false prophets and power greedy and the profit seekers, who lie and speak that to them this or that were revealed, yet while nothing has been revealed to them.

107. And who is more unrighteous than one who invents lies against the truth and against the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation, as is being done by priests of sects and religions, by frauds and degenerates and by profit seekers and power greedy, who lie and speak that to them has been revealed this and that by the deceased from the realm of death or by spirit forms and demons from higher or lower planes, yet while nothing has been revealed to them, because this would not be possible for them, so they lie and deceive about this.

108. But they lie and deceive to let themselves appear as great to their fellow human beings and the believers of their error teachings, and also to satisfy their desires of selfishness and of self-exaltation in need for esteem, because they truly are the unrighteous and unable to lead a proper life, but which they want to hide by their lies and by deceit.

109. And in ignorance of truth, they lie to and deceive all, because the laws and recommendations of Creation do not and never allow such and therefore make it impossible that human beings could establish a connection with the deceased or with spirit forms or demons of higher or lower planes, if this is not earned and gained by man by the level of universal love and universal truth and also by universal knowledge and universal wisdom, as these have to be given unto the JHWH and the Prophet.

110. But when man has reached and arrived at this ability, then he truly has become knowing that the dead are not more knowledgeable than the living, so they cannot give advice or instruction in knowledge or about the unknown to the living, and as the truly able knows this, he therefore abstains from every connection and communication with the deceased, and he also does not reveal the secret of his ability to human beings.

111. And as man has acquired this ability, then the next seven higher planes of Spirit forms and of Spirit life open unto him, which are instructing him outside of his material life, but he restrains himself to call upon the higher planes on his own, because communication from the higher to the lower plane takes place only in instructive and rare form and is given and determined only by the higher plane.

112. And human beings of this ability do not and never reside among the people who are able to do such, yet those few, who are able ones among the generations of men, live in silence and in solitude, so they are not pressed and questioned or slandered and persecuted by the ignorant and by liars and deceivers.
113. Thus the truth is given that all are liars and deceivers, who declare themselves as conjurors and communicators with the deceased and with spirits and demons, and all those are liars and deceivers, who present themselves in this manner as magicians and mediums or as soothsayers, as also all are liars and deceivers, who perform magical and mystical acts in cults with all kinds of babble and assisting apparati and call themselves in this manner magician, medium, soothsayer or healer.
114. But there are some among the human beings of nations, who have true visions during sleep and during waking, and who are called seers and clairvoyants, and who truly see events of the past and future in clairvoyance.
115. But of those who have visions only few exist among every nation in real truthful manner, if they are free of belief-thinking and free of sects and religions, if they are the truly knowing about the truth of Creation and about Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order.
116. But if they are not that, they add their own non-values to the values of the visions and thereby become betrayers of the truth, as the liars and deceivers are betrayers of the truth who invent visions as revelations, but which are not revealed to them, as occurs in great numbers by liars and deceivers in selfishness, profit seeking and craving for esteem.
117. And many of those exist, who live wrongly and lie and deceive and who say and speak, that they could send down signs like Creation and like the JHWH and like the Prophet.
118. Yet they can not do this and only by lying and deceit, as through jugglery, which is called witchcraft and illusion, or by other cheating of any kind, as also by mental power by which this or that is being pretended which is neither present nor existent.
119. Thus they are blasphemers against the truth and they also are losers and the lost, who howl and have their teeth chatter in life at every opportunity, but so also in dying and in death and in reincarnation, and therefore death conceals terror and horror for them and their own judgment becomes abysses of terrible dread for them.
120. They bring shame to themselves, and shame and dread are the wages of their deeds for what they have done and spoken falsely against the truth and Creation, and because they have turned away in disdain from the truthful truth and from the laws and recommendations of Creation.
121. And the unrighteous, the blasphemers and liars and deceivers, lapse into their own judgment, naked and bare, as they have been created, and leaving everything behind what had been given to them by Creation; and leaving everything behind them what they have hoarded due to unrighteousness and falsity and through blaspheming and lying and deceit.

122. They will be alone in their hour of dread and sink down into the screaming and flaming abysses of their horror, and no intercessor will be present for them whom they imagined among their gods and idols, because lying and deceit and error teaching and unrighteousness never doth bring intercession in need and hardship.
123. Verily, only the laws and recommendations of Creation and Its seven-fold order let the kernel and the seed sprout of even the tiniest plant.
124. The laws and recommendations of Creation and Its seven-fold order alone bring forth the living from the resting, which appeareth to man in ignorance as dead, but which truthfully is transition and change unto reincarnation.
125. And the laws and recommendations of Creation and Its seven-fold order alone bring the living into the resting, which appeareth to the ignorant man as dead, but which truthfully is transition and change unto reincarnation.
126. And there could be wind and snow, and there could be rain, hail and storm and seasons, and there could be sunshine, light, darkness and warmth and cold, and yet there would not be becoming, life and passing away, and there would not be birth and not death, no sprouting, no flourishing and no blossoming, and there would be no fruit and no harvest, if there were not given and determining the laws and recommendations of Creation and Its seven-fold order, so that everything is becoming, living and passing away, all that is existing in all armies of life, which have been created by Creation, the wise, the just.
127. Through Its laws and recommendations Creation let break forth the day for life, and the night for rest, and the sun and the stars for warmth and for light and cold and for movement, and also the time for becoming and life and passing away and for evolution, and space and the solid and water and air for the existence of all armies of life.
128. And this is the order of Creation through Its laws and recommendations and through the seven-fold, and praise and thanks be unto Creation, which is true love and true wisdom, and which is true knowledge and true truth in endless patience and forbearance and omnipotence.
129. And the signs of Creation are demonstrated up to the very last detail to all armies of life and to man, so that they art recognized and obeyed and used as assistance toward just life conduct, as man also uses the stars in heaven as assistance for the stay on the right course during the darkness of the land and on the heaving waters of the oceans and in the air above the Earth and in the atmosphereless emptiness of space.
130. And to the very detail the signs of Creation are demonstrated and given to all armies of life and to man, so that man shall recognize and obey the truth and be obedient to the creative laws and recommendations, knowing and wise and considering and honoring.
131. And it is Creation, which through Its laws and recommendations and through Its seven-fold order hath created you from the minutest elements of Earth and from the minutest combinations of changed life from fauna and flora.
132. And the place of your creation is given unto you for tarrying and for evolution in obedience of the creative laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order, so your Earth is your world and on which you shalt fulfill all guidelines of justice in logical consequence.

133. And also all signs of Creation for all human beings are demonstrated in detail, and they are given in all and everything and for all armies of life also, so that all life and man recognize and comprehend and obey these, and you also shalt finally recognize, comprehend and obey them.
134. And there are the laws and recommendations of Creation and Its seven-fold order, which let the rain fall down as water from the clouds, whereby growth is brought forth and also the greening, wherefrom corn sprouts in rows, but also plants of any type and shrubbery and trees of all types, fully covered with pleasantly fragrant blossom clusters, from which grow fruit in endless numbers and in manifold form and of similar or dissimilar kind.
135. And verily, if you behold the blossoms and fruits of the plants, shrubbery and trees, when they bring forth their blossoms and fruits, and how they ripen and bring new seeds, therein you truly recognize the signs of endless love of Creation, and the knowledge and truth and wisdom and patience, which altogether are recognizable and anchored in the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
136. But all signs of Creation are visible and recognizable only to those, who truly are the knowing and righteous or such, who in honesty are walking on the path toward knowledge and toward righteousness and toward truth, and from whom any belief is far which is only ignorant acceptance, because only knowing truth concealeth true truth and true knowledge within itself.
137. But only few knowing ones exist and also few righteous, and many more of the ignorant and the unrighteous exist, who set themselves or rivals and gods and idols beside Creation, although It is the only one, which hath created all life and all existence in Its universe.
138. And the unrighteous and ignorant invent rivals next to Creation, which are idols and gods and the like, and which also are a single god or a single idol.
139. And the unrighteous and the ignorant also erroneously invent sons and daughters next to Creation and angels and saints, as they can do this with their god or idol or with their many gods or idols and the like.
140. But Creation is holy and exalted above all lies and inventions, and all Its laws and recommendations and Its seven-fold order also are holy and exalted.
141. And thus, Creation is Creation and the highest power, and It standeth in immeasurable greatness and completion over all Its creations, which are creations of Creation, and which are human being and animal and plants of all kinds, and worlds and suns, galaxies, space and time, light and darkness and whatever else exists in other armies of life of any kind.
142. And Creation is without gender and It is neither male nor female, neither modest nor immodest and neither timely nor untimely, or neither spacious nor spaceless, for Creation is truly Spirit and Spirit power and light and truly pure Spirit energy in conscious form.
143. And Creation is without male and without female companion, because Creation is IT and neuter in gender in truthful form, so It therefore differs in everything and from any life.

144. And as Creation is without gender and without male or female companion, and as It is Spirit energy in purest truthful form and without tie in depending manner, how should It have sons and daughters or who call themselves such in any type or form, and how could it then be a god who is only a human being and tyrant of a coarse-mattered type of life.
145. Creation is Creation of all things, and there is no Creation in Its universe except It, and It alone shall be honored and worshiped, which alone is truly Creation and the protection of all armies of life and everything existing, which in addition is truly created by Creation alone.
146. Verily, It, which is Creation, which is your Creation, and the gazes of which and BEING you as human beings can never reach and see and grasp, but It reacheth and seeth and graspeth your gaze and your life, however you may gaze and however you lead your life at all times.
147. And Creation is capable of everything, for It is the immeasurable secret, and It is the incomprehensible, the all-total and the all-knowing, and It is unto man as Its own existence the most obscure of all obscurity, so therefore the immeasurable secret.
148. Verily, that is Creation, which is your Creation, by which is being revealed through signs in manifold form the seven-fold order and the laws and recommendations of life, of evolution and of BEING for all armies of life.
149. Follow that which is revealed unto you by the JHWH and the Prophet, you then obey the truthful laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation.
150. Turn away from your gods and idols, from your human beings whom you honor as god and as sons and daughters of Creation, whom you set as rivals beside It, for no Creation in the universe exists except Creation, which is the only one and yours.
151. Turn away from your idolaters, who lead you astray and preach to you in falsity and lying and betrayal about the self-elected or gods and idols chosen by them.
152. And verily, if Creation were not true freedom and if Its creatures in the will of their ways of development were not free, then Itself would have willingly ordained that rivals should exist beside It and error teachings and adoration and worship, which then would be demanded by It.
153. But as this is not so and the ways of development are free unto man, so man is free and truly determining and ruling over himself, and therefore he is the lord and master of himself.
154. This maketh possible for him to dispute against what is just and what is unjust and to decide alone his way of justice or injustice.
155. And as man liveth in the free will of his decision, he seeketh only the advantage by least resistance, which lieth in the degeneracy of easiness, like the dammed up waters of the pond which seek a leak to escape without resistance, to tear away and destroy everything as increased force.
156. And the JHWH speaks to the Prophet: You have not been made the keeper of humanity, and therefore not as a watcher over them, and also not the JHWH.
157. But of your own power you have been made Prophet of the instruction of truth among men, so the JHWH also is instructor for the Prophet and for the generations of men.

158. And speak instructing to the people: Slander not your friends and slander not your enemies and slander not the righteous and not the unrighteous, because altogether they are creatures of Creation.
159. Bring forth love toward the enemies as to friends, and bring forth love toward the unrighteous as to the righteous, but be watchful and beware of falsity and lying and betrayal of the enemies and the unrighteous, so you do not suffer harm through them.
160. If an enemy or an unrighteous exist, they are human like you, so you should think and act about them and with them and for them as a human being and in love also, even if watchfulness is ordered that you do not suffer loss if secretly they are willing to bring you harm and falsity and lying and betrayal.
161. Be friendly and loving and humane to the enemies and unrighteous and give them shelter, food and drink and everything necessary, and offer them due honor and respect, because they are human beings as you also are human beings, and you all are the creatures of the same Creation, as are the righteous as well as the unrighteous.
162. And slander no prisoners, should you take some, if you are invaded by enemies and you have to defend yourself.
163. Honor the prisoners and bring forth friendliness toward them, humaneness, love and respect, and give them food and drink and everything which they need.
164. And slander not the old and not the young and not the bodily disabled, and slander not the neighbor who speaks a different language or who has a different skin color, for every human being is equal-valued to the other, of whichever type or race he is and whether he is old or young, yellow, black or brown or white or red or blue, or whether it is a child, wife or husband, or whether he is an enemy or friend or righteous, unrighteous, knowing or ignorant one.
165. And no man is subject to another, so therefore not as bond and not as slave and not as fighter of an army to leaders, and also not as a people to the authority and the rulers.
166. And also the wife is not subject to her husband, and also the children are not subject to their parents, neither is the husband subject to his wife, nor the hired man and worker to his master, and the parents are not subject to their children, and also human beings are not subject to gods and idols and to seducers and to priests and their sects and religions.
167. Every human being is equivalent to the neighbor, and he shall stand in his right equivalent to the neighbor, as the poor to the rich and in reversed manner, and so every human being to the other, what and who and however he may be, and it should never be measured in two different measures in any form for the right or wrong of man and the entire lifeforms on the whole.
168. And verily, the possessor should share his bread with the non-possessor of his free will, and the non-possessor shall not be demanding nor the possessor with his neighbor, but he always shall be just and asking as he is in need of help or a thing.
169. But it is given that everyone shall do his duty in fulfillment of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation, so also everyone shall carry out the work assigned to him, and everyone shall be learning and evolving and obedient in the creative order, so that spongers and parasites do not and never exist, who hope for help and demand help of which they are not worthy and which cannot be given to them.
170. And speak also instructing to the human beings, speaketh the JHWH:

Do not allow yourself to be led astray by those on the Earth, who are not obedient to the laws and recommendations of Creation, for they willingly live the way of effortlessness and of unrighteousness, and they constantly bring false desires and false joys and false teachings, greed, discord, non-love and revenge and evil and all unrighteousness of the world up to death.

171. They are losers who walk aside from the way of Creation, and they only follow a delusion and they lie and betray only.

172. And verily, many lead others astray with evil falsities, lies and desires and they do this in the lack of knowledge or truthfully against knowing better, but those who adhere to them and walk wrong ways become guilty also with their seducers.

173. Avoid notorious injustice as well as secret injustice also, for whether notorious or secret, both are of falsity, and whoever committeth injustice in one or the other form breaketh the law and will receive recompense accordingly.

174. And do not let yourself be led astray by tempters of faith, who set gods and idols or a god beside Creation, but if you yet adhere to the tempters, you will be captured by their gods and idols or their god, and only hardly or not at all will you find your way to Creation and to Its truth.

175. Because gods and idols demand submission and humiliation before them, and they create violence and force, and also exploitation and enslavement through anxiety and fear, which beget restraint and breaking of will of independent and self-deciding thinking and acting.

176. As you therefore obey the seducers, you set gods and idols beside Creation, and you become unfree and full of anxiety and fear, and you are obedient to the seducers and their gods and idols like beaten dogs to their masters in doggish humility.

177. For the ways of the unrighteous are covered with all evils of the world, and where seducers and gods and idols exist, there anxiety and fear and terror of punishment ruleth which shall gain validity if the seducers, gods and idols are not wooed to.

178. And the seducers, the unrighteous, the gods and idols demand cruel punishment for ways of thinking and actions against their falsity and their false laws and recommendations, and thereby the believers and adherents are being pressed into anxiety and fear and terror, so they do not become brave to oppose all falsities and the false powers which only demand punishment and death.

179. The way to knowledge and to truth in thought is being denied them, and this is being done through anxiety and fear, by which they are kept in fetters and unfree by the seducers and gods and idols, who threaten with torturous and deadly judgment and with hellish damnation if their false requirements and power demands are not fulfilled.

180. And in the background the believers of the seducers and gods and idols are aware of their anxiety and fear, but the threats of the hellish judgments and torments do no allow them to become free.

181. And those who are threatening are the seducers and their gods and idols and the sects and religions and their false laws and recommendations, and they are also the priests of the believers, and those who are threatening are also the power greedy, the profit seekers and leaders of war armies, and they also are the authorities of the nation, who rule, mislead, harass and murder in untruthful manner and according to laws and recommendations of man, and who do not rule and lead the people in the sense of Spirit and truthful freedom, and not according to the laws and recommendations of Creation.

182. Verily, as a dead one is not able to walk among the truly living, so also can an unrighteous one not obtain justice before he has not changed himself to be righteous, as also the dead one still has to be reborn before it can be possible for him to walk among the living.
183. So a human being is able to be free only, if he walks in the radiating light of life and of truth, but only such a human being will be unfree and imprisoned, who stumbleth and falleth in the prison of the blackest darkness.
184. And those, who stumble and fall in blackest darkness, they fancy themselves to devise intrigues against the righteous and against Creation, yet they only devise intrigues against themselves, only they do not notice, for they are dumb and blind, faint-hearted and weak and willingless toward themselves.
185. Verily, they are the losers and they bring to themselves degradation and punishment of their own power.
186. They do not want to live unto the truth of Creation, which Itself neither demands punishment nor imparteth punishment, so man continuously punisheth himself for unrighteous doings and actions, as also the rabbit is caught and killed by the eagle, if it disregardeth the threatening shadow of the down-diving eagle and fleeth not into the protecting hole.
187. And as the eagle catcheth and killeth the rabbit, reckless of its own power, so man draweth unto himself judgment and punishment of his own power, if he burdens himself with recklessness and the will toward wrong thinking and actions.
188. Therefore: Whoever conducteth himself justly and leadeth a Creation-righteous life, unto him his chest widens and the joy and the love, the knowledge, the truth and the wisdom, and he doeth not let himself be beaten by the enemy, for he is watchful and cautious.
189. But whoever conducteth himself unjustly and leadeth a Creation-opposing life, he narroweth his chest and his joy will be small, and also his love, his knowledge and the truth and wisdom.
190. That is the way of truth and the way of Creation, which is the truthful and the right, and whoever walketh on it liveth obedient unto the laws and recommendations of Creation.
191. Verily, most different levels for all human beings exist, depending on their doings, but everything is regulated in the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation, so everyone will be rewarded according to his level and according to his doings.
192. And it is given for all times that everyone is rewarded according to his level and according to his doings, in righteousness and in impartiality, so for all times everyone receiveth his reward, as is due him and as he is measured according to his life's conduct and according to his deeds, and according to his thinking and actions.
193. And no one can thwart or reject the reward, which is due him according to his level, for creative justice knoweth no discord and neither favoritism nor prejudice.
194. Man therefore always should act according to his best ability and also act in fulfillment of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order of Creation according to his best knowing and ability, so therefore he doth right and always giveth the best according to his understanding and ability, and as he acteth and liveth truthfully and is not unjust.
195. And many misled ones, ignorant and unrighteous exist, who believe they can present sacrifices and prayers to their seducers and gods and idols, and that thereby they are freed from their guilt of idol worship.

196. But verily, their sacrifices and prayers are directed to gods and idols and therefore not designated to Creation.
197. And whoever unknowingly presents sacrifices and prayers to gods and idols and who believeth that thereby he reacheth unto Creation, he is no less and no more than one of the other unrighteous, for he serveth idols and gods and slandereth the truth and Creation.
198. And the unrighteous will receive their own verdict and their self-appointed judgment and their self-elected punishment also.
199. And their judgment and their verdict and their punishment will not be from Creation and not from Its laws and recommendations, but they will be elected by the strength and power of man himself, measured according to the weight of the act of the trespass and the debt.
200. For man is master of himself, so he determineth his life and judgeth of his own power and responsibility about it, as he also imposeth punishment and judgment upon himself or averteth from himself".
201. And so speaketh the JHWH: "Generations of men, act according to your ability and according to your understanding and your common sense, and find which your final reward will be for the life which you lead.
202. But see, to the righteous will be given a good reward, but the unrighteous will not fare well.
203. You sacrifice fruits and fruit of the field and animals and incense to your gods and idols, and you sacrifice blood and even human beings and things of your riches, and you combine your sacrifices with blabbering prayers and through them you hope for help, mercy and grace from your gods and idols.
204. But no god at any time will impart to you hearing, help, mercy or grace, and so also an idol or other in same or similar form will not do, because gods are tyrants who only strive for profit and power, and idols are dead cult demons without any strength and power, which are used by priests and the like toward selfish and profit-seeking purposes.
205. Therefore you sacrifice your food and your animals and your riches without sense and without reasonable possibility of a hope, and therewith you only follow a superstitious cult, whereby you even murder and destroy human life and other life.
206. See, man of Earth, as you live in righteousness and truth, you adore only Creation, and therefore you only pray to Creation which is Spirit form and also as a minute part within yourself, so you also can pray to the part of Creation-Spirit within and to yourself.
207. And in no wise whatsoever is Creation similar in anything to the gods and idols, so It also never ordained laws and recommendations for cultish actions for Itself, and therefore were never created by It laws and recommendations for the offering of sacrifices to It in any form.
208. Creation is incorruptible and not caught in a partisan way, and It is without demands toward Its creations, as It is only Creation and fulfillment of life and of the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order.
209. Therefore is given that It is not demanding in any form and therefore not in need of any gifts and sacrifices to It by Its creations.
210. Creation therefore is not in need of any sacrificial offerings, which also would not be according to any order of It, but which are only destruction of life, food and goods in senselessness and squandering by cultish degenerations of man, and which are only serving as false testimony and false honesty of man for the purpose of humble submission in anxiety and fear, so therefore no sacrifice offerings should be offered in any manner.

211. Therefore the sacrificial offering represents an offence against the laws and recommendations and against the seven-fold order of Creation, which doth not demand or alloweth destruction or murdering or squandering of any life or of goods or food in whichever form.

212. And as Creation is neutral in balance and in love, and as It is incorruptible and not intimidated and without demand in any form toward all life and Its creations, so It only established directions and laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order, which contain all guidelines and directions for righteous life conduct for every life, which decideth in free will about its own way of life.

213. And as this is so, also not a tittle of a law or recommendation of Creation is established which would demand of any lifeform, and therefore also not of man, that adoration and worship or gifts and sacrifices in any form should be offered to It, for Creation is not demanding of anything, so therefore not in good or evil form.

214. But it is left to man's option, and it also appertaineth to him that he present reverence and respect and honoring unto Creation, as also appertains to every other life.

215. And it lieth in the free will of man to conduct appeals and prayers and reverence toward Creation, as he confronteth the power of true life in communication and also the part of Creation Spirit within himself, which through this type of prayers is being addressed and molded in persuasive form and in true knowledge, in love, wisdom and truth.

216. From such prayer, therefore, resulteth a better feeling and security on the inside of man, so he sheltereth hope and evolveth, that due to the strength gained by addressing the part of Spirit in man through prayer, unconsciously to man himself, It unfolds his powers and spends evolutionary power and impulses, whereby the wishes and hopes of man are being fulfilled.

217. Therefore, if a prayer is directed to the Creation power or the Spirit part in man or to the material consciousness and the material subconscious itself, it may stimulate effective powers in man himself and bring these into operation.

218. Whether a prayer is directed to Creation or to the material consciousness forms themselves, the part Creation Spirit in man is thereby stimulated in direct manner, which becomes effective through good hope and the knowledge of man that Spirit truly imparts help through Its power.

219. Therefore a prayer is of equal value, whether it is directed to Creation or to the material consciousness forms or to the Spirit part of man, which is a minute part of Creation Itself; and he therefore also hath at his disposal the power of the Spirit energy of Creation, which is neutral in all things and also balanced, and which never can be altered or changed into another form, neither the Spirit energy of Creation Itself, nor the Spirit part in man.

220. Therefore it is said that Creation is in no form demanding or commanding, that therefore It must be prayed to, because adoration of the Creation Spirit as a whole or the Spirit part within man, which is part of the entire Creation, lies alone in the will and consideration of man, as therefore also in his common sense and in his understanding, which should know that prayers are a good and effective medium of help for man and for his evolution, and also for hope, wish fulfillment, safety and security.

221. Truly, namely, prayers give man the security of knowledge and of truth, so he walks in real truth and conducts his prayers in true manner.

222. Prayers of adoration to Creation, to the material consciousness forms and to the Spirit within man are not and never to be conducted in a manner of humility or worry or anxiety and fear, for if such is done erroneously, the moral of man sinketh and also the security and the trust about the power of the Spirit energy.

223. Neither Creation nor the Spirit part in man demand humility, submission or worry and anxiety and fear, for man shall be free in every way, so he does not need to worry or to fear.

224. And if adoration of Creation taketh place, to the material consciousness forms or to the Spirit within man, then adoration ought not to be in the way that homage is paid, imploration or glorification, but there shall only be praise in reverence and respect, devotion and petitioning in true manner.

225. And as you conduct your prayer, you shall not babble like the believers of sects and religions and like the heathen and other god-servants and idolaters, who conduct adoration in humility with prayers which are endless repetitions and refer to names of idols and gods in absurd and logically incorrect manner.

226. But if you conduct your prayers as the righteous and knowing ones, then they shall be clear and meaningful and logical in word and in truth.

227. And as you pray, conduct your prayer according to free will and according to free mind, so you yourself create words for sensible and logical prayers, which are purpose-determined in a general way and determined for evolution and for righteous life conduct.

228. Take care in your prayers that you pray in devotion, which is righteous and truthful prayer in knowledge and love, so that you shalt select the correct words and the correct form of prayer offering.

229. And when you pray, you shall pay attention that you pray in honesty and not like the hypocrites, those who are the unrighteous, and who like to stand and pray at the corners of houses and in the streets and alleys, so therewith they want to shine before their fellow men in selfishness and esteem, and so therewith they win new followers and swindle in profit.

230. And verily, when you pray you shalt call on the omnipotence of Creation, which is the omnipotence of Creation Spirit and of the Spirit and of the material consciousness forms in man.

231. And in prayer you shalt not be selfish and not inconsiderate and not submissive like the ignorant, the hypocrites and unrighteous, who imagine that thereby they would be listened to by their false gods, and idols, if they speak many words nonsensically and implore them in humility or command.

232. But verily, Creation Spirit doth not need many words and also not the Spirit and the material consciousness forms within man; but the knowledge is needed that Spirit is powerful and great and infinite in Its force, through which It truly is able to move mountains from one place to another place.

233. But if you dost not understand to pray directly to the omnipotence of Spirit, be content with a matter by which you can prepare and concentrate yourself, so in concentration you may find the way for your thoughts to the omnipotence of Spirit.
234. But understand the matter of a helping medium in the correct way, for truly it is only a tool of help to concentration, that of itself it does not carry any power and also is not a medium between you and the omnipotence of Spirit, for truly the assisting tool always remaineth an assisting tool.
235. Therefore, never be like the priests of cults and sects and religions, and never be like the unrighteous, the hypocrites, the unwise and ignorant and selfish ones, who raise assisting media to cult objects and to relics and who adore their assisting media in the false belief that the omnipotence of Spirit resides within them.
236. Be knowing therefore, that even in the use of assisting media and sacred things the omnipotence of Spirit always liveth within yourself, as it is also in Creation Itself which Itself is Spirit, and which also liveth in everything that is created by Creation.
237. Therefore conduct your prayers as the knowing and righteous, and therefore you shalt pray in logical consequence in your own prayers or in prayers of general value and therefore:
238. My Spirit, thou which art omnipotent.
239. Hallowed be thy Name.
240. Thy kingdom reveal itself and incarnate within me.
241. Thy power unfold within me and be effective in the earthly and in the spiritual realm in balanced and evolving manner.
242. Give me today my daily bread, which I need in the earthly and spiritual realm.
243. And let me recognize and remove my errors, and also let me recognize and acquire the truth and the love and the wisdom and the knowledge.
244. Fill me with power against temptation and confusion, and also give me power, so that I deliver myself from error.
245. I live according to thy laws and according to thy recommendations, for thine is the kingdom of Spirit and of life, and the power and the knowledge, and the truth and wisdom and love in all-timeliness. SO BE IT. (Amen)
246. And when you conduct your prayers to the Spirit of Creation or to the part Creation Spirit or to the material consciousness forms within yourself, you pray only to a power, for the Creation Spirit is as much in Creation Itself as also in all creations of Creation, as also within man.
247. And when you conduct prayers to the Creation Spirit Itself or to the Spirit within you or to the material consciousness forms within you, then will be given unto you that which you have need of and for which you pray, but it is suggested that you are truthful in prayer and in knowledge about it, you then will receive.
248. But if you are not the knowledgeable ones, but believe the erroneous teachings that the power and the Spirit are not residing within yourself, and that Creation truly is not and is not residing in everything living and of the same type as the part Creation-Spirit form within man himself, you then are without knowledge and falsely pander to gods and idols or to another Creation-opposing belief-servitude of another form, so you live in Spirit-ineffectual poverty and in ignorant inadequacy.

249. But to those acting and living in false belief, it is also given that now and then they receive what they in erroneous belief beg for and obtain by entreaty from purpose-estranged assisting media, relics and sacred things and from gods and idols, but thereby they only receive due to stubborn and erroneous belief, and therefore in law-opposing form of forced suggestion, and therefore without knowledge about the real truth.

250. Verily, blessed are only those, who offer their life to truthful truth and to truthful knowledge, for they alone receive in honesty and in fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation and in truthful love and in wisdom.

251. Creation is honesty and fulfillment, and in conformity to It all life is formed, so man also who only has to fulfill in his own freedom and honesty the talents slumbering within him, which are given by the laws and recommendations of Creation.

252. Therefore man in his innermost part is like Creation, namely in Spirit, and he may make himself also like his Spirit on the outer part, so he may also fulfill the laws and recommendations of Creation outwardly."

CANON 21

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is equality.
3. And the JHWH speaketh: "Teach man the equality of wages of Creation," and thus speaketh the Prophet:
4. "Creation never measureth with two different measures, and also not the valuing of wages for all things.
5. Therefore is given that man also never shall use two different measures for a wage in whichever thing this may be.
6. The wages of Creation for man are uniform, if man obeyeth the laws and recommendations of Creation in any manner of correctness, and therefore, whether in lesser measure or in better measure, if the correctness and the honest best of understanding and ability of man is only given.
7. And it is stated that one man is more evolved than his neighbor, as he also possesses a greater understanding and ability and knowledge to obey the laws and recommendations of Creation, while the other one is less evolved, as also his understanding and ability and knowledge are rated as less.
8. But truly, the more knowledgeable, more understanding and more able strives the same as the less knowledgeable, understanding and able in honest, truthful and law-abiding and, therefore, in correct manner, each according to the level of their knowledge and understanding and ability, therefore they give their best.
9. And if the best is given in this manner, then the equality of effort is given, and thereby also given is the paying of equal wages by Creation, so one is not being paid better and the other worse for the same effort, even if the performance is different in the measure of more or less produced.
10. And as Creation giveth equality in justice in the paying of wages for equal effort, so man also shall act in equal manner.

11. And as Creation thus doeth not differentiate in the performance for paying of wages, but only differentiates in the effort, so shall man act in like manner.
12. And with man it happens that one due to work stands in wages with another, so one works for another or one for many or for all, but also all or many for one.
13. But as human beings differ in their evolution, in their body, in their feeling, in their learning and in their thinking and acting, so they also differ in their performances in the accomplishment of work, even if they give their best efforts.
14. But best efforts, so say the laws and recommendations of Creation, shall be paid in just equality, so one does not receive higher wages than the other for his best efforts.
15. This sayeth clearly that the daily laborer without special knowledge shall receive equal wages as the king or emperor, if both give their best efforts toward the accomplishment of the work.
16. Therefore wages shall not be paid in diversity due to different activity and work, for truthfully every work is worth its wages, which is measured according to effort and not according to performance.
17. Therefore, the carrier of burdens shall not receive higher wages than the keeper of goats, and the emperor shall not receive more than the daily laborer, and thus a different leader of the nation also shall not receive more than the farmer or house builder, and the one skilled in medicine shall not receive more than the shoemaker, if all bring and give their best effort, even if the performance is unequal.
18. If therefore a wage of a half ounce of silver is paid for the performing of 10 hours of work for the best effort of a goatkeeper, the same wage shall be valid for the best work effort of the emperor or the daily laborer or the national leader or shoemaker or anyone else, who accomplishes an activity or work with best effort during 10 hours.
19. This law is equally valid for those who are wealthy in material riches, as to them also the payment of wages shall not be higher than for those, who are not wealthy in material riches and who stand in employment with the wealthy.
20. And this law shall be valid for all human beings uniformly, as also for the instructors of truth, for the prophets and Spirit leaders, for the supporters of nations and the cultivators of the muses, and also for all who accomplish a work and give their best effort.
21. Creation is equality in justice, and therefore man shall also be so, thus in the paying of wages for all work as also in that the daily laborer or goatkeeper or shoemaker in esteem, in honor, in respect and in all rights and duties are equal to the king or emperor, as this also shall be for all human beings without difference, whether one is brown or white or red, yellow, black or blue in skin color, or whether he is poor or rich or a knowing one or ignorant, and also whether the one is of good schooling or bad schooling or whatever.”

CANON 22

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.

2. Praise be unto Creation, which is correctness.
3. “Speak instructively unto the human beings,” sayeth the JHWH to the Prophet, “ and inform them of the application of just discernment,” and so the Prophet speaketh:
4. “Creation is without compulsion and pressure in any thing toward Its creatures, therefore these manage freely according to their own estimation and in all matters.
5. And thus as man is free also and not forced and not pressured by Creation in anything, so he standeth in responsibility unto himself in all matters of his thinking and acting.
6. Thus thereby is said that Creation judgeth not over man, no matter what his thinking and acting is.
7. Creation only formeth an opinion of every matter, without casting a judgment or to demand punishment, whichever may occur.
8. Judgment therefore is established by violence and force, and a judgment is connected with punishment.
9. But an opinion only establisheth the correctness of a matter, according to which a measure can take place, which leadeth thereto that incurred damage or committed errors can be removed.
10. And therefore the measure has to be measured according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, so that the measure never shall be of the kind that a lifeform will be harmed in any way by it, or that it lose its bodily, thinking or spiritual freedom partially or in total.
11. Therefore no human being and no other lifeform shall be disadvantaged by judgment or be enjoined with punishments, if these infringe partially or in total upon the freedom of the body, the thinking or the Spirit.
12. Verdict means judgment by violence and force, which is Creation-foreign in all parts, so forming an opinion only is of correctness, which elucidateth the correctness of a matter.
13. And if measures have to be taken with a human being by an opinion, they should be Creation-concordant and therefore so that the human being suffereth no harm whatsoever in body and in thinking and in Spirit or in any other way.
14. If errors, harm or even guilt become evident by human beings, who live contrary to the laws and the recommendations against a given order, and if through misdeed they become subject to an opinion, then by an opinion, justice is to be carried out in correctness.
15. But if an opinion is to be carried out in justice of correctness, then measures are to be taken in the same justice of correctness.
16. And as man may not be harmed by measures of an opinion in his freedom of body, of thinking and of Spirit, the only measure to be undertaken in a criminal offence, as in murder of life, dictatorial power conduct, criminal acts, and everything which is of the same unworthiness, is that the fallible shall be separated from the human community for life.
17. And places of fulfillment for the carrying out of such measures shall be established, which are far away from human settlements, and which are without jail and without hardship, without violence and without force by guards and overseers and executer.
18. For measure fulfillment the most remote places shall be selected like islands and planets, from where an escape of the fallible is not possible, but where all possibilities of the teachings and of bodily, mental and spiritual freedom are provided for them.

19. And at the places of measure-fulfillment everything in essential tools shall be provided to the fallible, which are necessary that they can in evolving manner engage themselves in all teachings and in righteous life conduct, so they also are equipped for all activities which are essential to the cultivation and production of food and shelters and remedies and everything else essential to life at the place of measure-fulfillment.
20. And therefore with such kind of measure-fulfillment it has to be considered that the sexes of male and female are separated, so a place of measure-fulfillment shall be chosen for one sex only, and another place of measure-fulfillment for the other sex only.
21. And if there are women, who have to be taken to remote places of measure-fulfillment, they shall first be questioned about new life in their body, and therefore in every case they should only be brought to the place of measure-fulfillment nine (9) months after the measure-pronouncement so that no offspring is being born at the places of measure-fulfillment.
22. The offspring of the fallible shall be born in the innocent community of human beings, and thus they shall be arranged into the rearing and life there, but in the family circle of the fallible or, if it deems necessary, into the keeping of the people or with foster parents or the substitute.
23. If measures have to be taken which do not concern a form of crime but are of lesser offence as the theft of possessions in small measure and which do not exceed the value of 70 lot of silver (35 ounces), or offenses of any other type and form which are not directed against body and life and do not exceed a loss value of 70 lot of silver, the measure by opinion shall be in the first case that a warning will be given, but in the second case and in repetition of the same or other offense, the measure of separation from the human community for seven years at remote places of measure-fulfillment shall occur and in the same manner as the other fallible, however at a special place and not at the same place with the fallible, so that a return to the human community after 7 years can be made possible, where the returning ones then may or may not adapt to the given order, and at a third offense they have to be judged as fallible and have to be brought to the measure-fulfillment places of the fallible for life.
24. But an opinion shall not be formed in injustice and not as a verdict, also opinions shall not be formed by judges who pronounce verdicts, which is against the laws and recommendations of Creation.
25. The opinion-formers shall be humans beings of the people who are righteous and fulfilling the laws and recommendations of Creation, and for every opinion they shall be chosen by lot and newly from case to case.
26. And they shall also be just and unprejudiced and not be connected to those about whom an opinion is to be formed, and they shall form an opinion according to laws and recommendations, and therefore not judging and condemning and they shall be free of partiality.
27. And thus in every case you shalt only form an opinion in just correctness, and you shalt never judge or pronounce a verdict.
28. Therefore it sayeth: Judge not so that someday you yourself art not judged, and that you do not heap guilt upon yourself.
29. But if you transgressest against the laws and recommendations of Creation and if you judge therefore, and with whichever judgment you judge, so will you yourself be judged sometime by your own power.

30. And consider: With whichever measure you measure, so will you be measured again, as by yourself as also by the Creation guidelines and by your neighbor.
31. Form an opinion about everything and every matter according to the logic of the laws of nature which are from Creation, and which alone have their truth and their validity.
32. Therefore you shalt not see the splinter in your neighbor's eye and thereby not become aware of the beam in your own eye.
33. And therefore you shalt not trouble yourself to pull the splinter from the eye of your neighbor, while the beam in your own eye causeth you blindness, so you dost not take hold of the splinter in your neighbor but cuttest out his eye.
34. But if you only seest the splinter in the eye of your neighbor and disregardest the beam in your own eye, you are only a hypocrite; therefore remove first the beam from your own eye and heal the pain, and only then see to it that you removest the splinter from the eye of your neighbor without hurting him.
35. Therefore this sayeth, that first you shalt acquire the regarding of the laws and recommendations of Creation, and thus the laws of nature and Its logic, before you castest an opinion on any thing, that through the knowledge of truth you thus dost not condemn and judge and dost not want to see the faults in your neighbor.
36. First learn to recognize and remove your own faults by the laws and recommendations of nature and of Creation, so you only then recognizest the faults of your neighbor in truthful manner and can teach him how he has to remove his faults by himself.
37. Thus you shalt be watchful in honesty and righteousness, and you also shalt guard the freedom and the knowledge and also the love and the wisdom for yourself and also for your neighbor, that you givest not to dogs what is holy, which in eagerness devour everything indiscriminately if they take a fancy for it.
38. But truth and love, logic, freedom, knowledge and wisdom, and also righteousness and obedience of the laws and recommendations of Creation are best treasures of immeasurableness, and to you therefore of equal value to pearls; and you shalt not throw your pearls before swine, that they do not trample them under foot, and so they do not turn against you and tear you apart.
39. Thus therewith is said, that you dost not throw your spiritual possession and your possession of consciousness into the dirt and not waste it on the unworthy, for they do not thank you for it and tear you apart, because their understanding is small and the power of their will is weak.
40. And therefore, as you form an opinion about a matter, see the truth, do not be of false hope and false feelings therein, but form an opinion in justice of correctness and therefore in the right measure of measures, that you art not trampled down and torn apart by the unrighteous fallible and by the other unrighteous, if you seekest false opinions and false measures.
41. Thus do not judge so that you art not judged, but form opinions in righteousness of correctness, so you are righteous ones and that it be well with you.
42. Regard the correctness of the laws and recommendations of nature and those of Creation, and as you live unto them you live righteously and in correctness.
43. If facts are given then by the guilty or fallible, which prove that a deed or action of trespass against the laws and recommendations and against the given order hath occurred in confusion of the senses in diseased form, then the fallible or guilty have to be brought to healing places of diseases for such a time until they are healed, so that they then are returned to the community of human beings and lead their life under guardianship.

44. If deeds or actions have been committed by the guilty or fallible in injury of the senses by means, which have been ensued due to fermentation or brewing, pressing out, scratching off or refining of fruits and grain and plants of all types, which are a means of intoxication and of anaesthesia, then no forbearance is to be practiced for the guilty and fallible, for they already make themselves guilty and fallible thereby that they succumb to the indulgence of substances of intoxication and of anaesthesia, which hem the evolution of consciousness and of Spirit, which is destruction against body and life and therefore transgressing against the laws and recommendations of Creation.
45. Therefore it is said, as is given by the laws and recommendations of Creation, that the most serious crimes are deeds and actions and are measure-ensuing, which are committed against body and life and against possessions of greater values, as against the neighbor as it also refers to one's own person.
46. Therefore the same is valid for the indulgence of substances of intoxication and anaesthesia, if such are given to a neighbor or if they are being used by one's own person, without these being substances for the preservation or regaining of health or any other substance designated for a healing process.
47. If a deed or action in fallible manner is committed in carelessness, the measure shall be seven (7) years at the place of measure-fulfillment.
48. If a deed or action in fallible manner is committed by reasons of degenerated emotion, the measure shall be the place of measure fulfillment for the lifetime.
49. If a deed or action in fallible manner is committed in carelessness or on purpose or for fun, then the measure shall be the place of measure-fulfillment for the lifetime.
50. And every deed or action is fallible which injures the free life conduct and the evolution of a neighbor, so the measure at the place of measure-fulfillment shall be for the lifetime.
51. Every killing is fallible and murder of unborn life which is older than 21 days, so the measure at the place of measure-fulfillment shall be for the lifetime.
52. And every wickedness committed against any life and body is fallible, against a human being, to animals of all types and against nature also, so the measure at the place of measure-fulfillment shall be for the lifetime.
53. But whoever causeth pollution or destruction in anyway whatsoever and toward body or life, to the air breathed, to the waters, to the sky, to the Earth, to any animals or to a human being, but also to the natural treasures of the planet or to trees and plants, or to feelings and thoughts and to all which exists, to him the measure at the place of measure-fulfillment shall be given for the lifetime.
54. And the measures for the guilty and fallible and for their helpers and accomplices are to be uniform without difference, for the measure of crime of fallibility is the same, whether a deed or action of the offence is committed directly or indirectly and by one human being or by several.
55. And you also shalt determine measures depending upon the opinion forming of a matter, yet there shalt truly be justice in correctness and without relationship, if the just determination is worked out.
56. Opinion forming in justice of correctness is the measure of the entirety of all examination, and it only is of correctness, so a verdict shall never be cast, which only embodies violence and force, and which at the beginning was invented by man as vengeance practice.

57. Thus a verdict truthfully is vengeance demand and vengeance practice, which splits the unit of balance, so that through a verdict, which is vengeance, part of the rights of the laws and recommendations of Creation are taken from man.
58. It is justice in correctness only, if a matter through opinion-forming reveals the truthful values, to which for every matter uniformly equal measures without difference are to be ordered.
59. And opinion-forming in justice of correctness is valid equally and without difference for human beings and for all life.
60. And if opinion-forming of a matter about a human being ensues, wherefrom measures result and are essential, then all measures are uniformly decisive and without difference for all human beings.
61. The measures to be taken, resulting from opinion-forming, are valid in equal measure and without difference for all human beings, as for the one without possessions as also for the one owning possessions, and as well for the goat keeper and the king, for the water bearer and for the instructor, and as well for all people of all colors and activities, for the young and for the old and for every rank.
62. If man formeth a false opinion due to intimidation or due to partiality or greed or force or violence, he becomes guilty and shall be taken as measure to the measure-fulfillment-places for life.
63. And thus the one also shall be ordered into the measure at the measure-fulfillment-places for life, who speaks false testimony, if therefrom resulteth a false opinion-forming or any other damage in possessions or to nature or to body and life.
64. The breaking also of a contract of any type is debt-incurring, a contract-break between nations as also a contract-break in marriage between husband and wife, and also any contract-break between one or more parties of which type they ever may be, so the measure at the measure-fulfillment-place shall be for life.
65. And as an indebtedness is incurred in a contract-break, then indebtedness also is incurred in the break of trust and in break of promise, so the measure at the measure-fulfillment-place shall be for life.
66. If there is parasitism or toadism, robbery or extortion or non-values of similar type, the measure of the measure-fulfillment-place shall be for life.
67. And if falsity, greed or envy, vice, hatred or jealousy or unworthiness of other emotional types occur, as also wrong talk against the neighbor, evil bothering of the neighbor, fist fights to carry out punishment of self-justice or similar, the matter is a fallibility and to be handled as such through the three measures determined therefore; but if damage is caused to body or life or to possessions, the measure of life-time measure-fulfillment-place is to be given.
68. Self-defense proven by opinion-forming is in every case free from measure-taking, if a human being acts in defence of his own or the neighbor’s life, or to protect his or his neighbor’s body or his or his neighbor’s possessions, and if he damages an attacking or robbing being in body or life or kills him, he is free of indebtedness, if self-defence is truthfully given.
69. Self-defense in every case is given only, if one’s own or the neighbor’s body and life and the possessions are being protected thereby, when defensive force is being used during body-endangering and life-endangering aggressive violence of the attacker.

70. Anything is not and never considered self-defense without direct body-endangering or life-endangering attack, in which one's own or a neighbor's body or life would be endangered.

CANON 23

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is cognizance.
3. "Speak instructing to the human beings," sayeth the JHWH to the Prophet, "that everything is aligned in the manner as it is being impressed by the life-conduct of man.
4. It is being taught that everything, whichever you want and what shall be done unto you, you yourself shalt give the same and do the same, for that is the law in application and result, and so is the speech of the Prophet and the speech of the JHWH.
5. As you want good and if kindness shall be given unto you, then do good and give kindness, but therefore you have to enter through the narrow gate of righteousness.
6. Enter in through the narrow gate, because the gate is wide and the path is narrow, which leadeth to the fall into the abyss and into destruction, and many are those who walk thereon into ruin.
7. Therefore the gate is narrow and the path small, which leadeth unto life and knowledge, unto truth and unto wisdom and unto love, and those are few only who find it.
8. And error teachers exist among you and you shalt be cautious of those who are false prophets and scribes, sect-masters and religion-representatives and also all kinds of other scum, which cometh in lamb's clothing to you while within them they are tearing wolves and always willing to tear you apart, but whereby they preach for you to have humility before holy artifacts and before gods and deities and before idols and error teachings.
9. And the mendacious error teachings of the deceivers and seducers are slippery and lustful, and therefore they are sweet and enticing and infatuating and promising all things of pleasure, of fortune and of splendor, of peace and of wealth and of eternal life.
10. But these are only the words of the false prophets and deceivers and liars, who speak and solicit so and who smear stolen honey around your mouth with insinuating words and promises.
11. The real truth truthfully is of a different type, and the truthful prophets really are also of a different type, therefore also the truthful leaders of Spirit and the benefactors and the righteous as well.
12. And the words of truth are hard and striking the unrighteous ones, and so are the truthful prophets since times of old, and so is the last Prophet of the line also who is given at the present time.
13. Therefore is said that the word of truth is hard, which is also brought in hard expression and in hard speaking by the Prophet, so the words of truth are not insinuating, sweet, promising or enticing and slippery, but upsetting and striking and they place everything at the whipping post in recognizable nakedness, which is according to real truth.

14. Do not seek therefore your well-being with those who are false prophets and sect leaders and the like and who smear stolen honey around your mouth, but seek your well-being with the truthful leaders and with the real Prophet, who tell you the truth in striking hard words and who demand effort from you and hard obedience of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
15. Beware of the tearing wolves in sheep's clothing, for they intend to tear you, wherefore you should recognize them by the fruit they offer unto you, therefore whether the fruit is sweet and enticing, or whether it is hard and upsetting and striking and nourishing.
16. By their fruit shalt you recognize them, so you become knowledgeable that you cannot harvest grapes from thorn bushes and also no figs from the thistles.
17. Thus you shalt become knowledgeable that you shalt plant good trees and keep them in good health, if you want to harvest good fruit.
18. But as you plant and care for a healthy and good tree, you have toil and much hard labor, but as the tree hath reached its age it bringeth you good fruit.
19. Therefore you shalt be watchful and recognize the tree by its fruit, for a good tree cannot bear bad fruit, and a rotten tree cannot bear good fruit.
20. Be aware and recognize the tree which only beareth good fruit through loving care and hard work, but the one beareth diseased fruit which did not receive loving care and for which hath not been worked hard.
21. Thus you shalt recognize the trees by their fruit, and also the bringers of truthful or of false teachings, as the prophets also of falsity or righteousness.
22. And whoever of you doeth so is like a wise man who built his house upon a rock, and when the torrential rain fell and the waters came and winds blew and pushed against the firm house, it still did not fall and stood fast against wind, water and harm, for it was built upon a rock and anchored within it.
23. Yet whoever of you doeth not so is like a foolish man who built his house upon sand, and when the torrential rain fell and the waters came and the wind which pushed against his house, it crashed down and did a great fall and was washed away because it was built on sand, on loose ground.
24. Therefore do like the wise man, who heareth and seeth and listeneth and thinketh and feeleth, yet he doeth not speak about it and calleth nothing his own before he hath considered and explored all things within himself, so he hath become resolved in finding the truth, which he showeth to the seeking as advice thereafter.
25. And the time of the tree during growth is slow and difficult and having to withstand storm and rain and snow and sun and wind, before it reacheth age and beareth blossom clusters from which grow up fruit.
26. Thereby is said also that the path of man is long and difficult in his growth of learning the truth and in enduring of battles against untruth and hostility, when he hath found the narrow gate and the narrow path unto life.
27. And the goal of life is not reached in hours or days or weeks or months, when the gate and the path of life are found, for the becoming of the real recognition and of the first success lasteth a long time which is measured in years.
28. Thus the gate and the path of life and the truthful truth must first be found, only then beginneth the becoming unto real recognition and of the first success, before the time of enjoyment of truthful life follows, which is like the good fruit of the tree when they grow and ripen."

CANON 24

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is guidance.
3. And the JHWH speaketh thus to the Prophet: "Be instructive unto man about the truth, that Creation is guidance," thus the Prophet also teacheth and speaketh:
4. "It is Creation, which hath given you all ways of guidance in all things, which in balanced obedience lead to the existence of life, and to life in truthful manner according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, with everything essential for the evolution of the spiritual and the material realm.
5. So Creation is wise guidance and hath given guidelines for everything that occureth in life.
6. And man only has to follow the guidance of Creation, so he flourisheth and liveth and evolveth in balance and unto his well-being.
7. Creation alone hath created heaven and Earth, and the proof therefore has been given you in everything that exists, and man may try to sprout only one single kernel without the guidance of Creation, and verily he will not succeed.
8. Creation leadeth all things in just ways and in love, wisdom, knowledge, and truth and balance, so not one single creature suffers harm in any way through Creation Itself or through Its laws and recommendations and through Its seven-fold order.
9. Therefore It also doth not abuse the unrighteous and the other Creation-slanderers and god-servants and idolaters, but It alloweth them the free will of decision, so they may return unpunished at any time to the path of balance and to the truthful fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
10. And therefore man shall not slander the unrighteous and other Creation-slanderers, but be guidance and instruction unto them in love, knowledge, truth and wisdom, so the fallible find the way to the justice of life and to Creation.
11. And thus the guidance shall not be in violence and force, and also not by verdict-pronouncement and verdict-fulfillment, as is given, that also a punishment shalt never be passed and executed by a verdict, whereby the verdict executor makes himself guilty as do the verdict-producers also.
12. If a creature, due to a verdict, is placed into fetters or is hurt in body or robbed of his life, the executors as also the verdict-producers and the verdict-representatives and verdict-advocates become guilty thereby.
13. And Creation doth not lead any lifeform by verdicts and punishment and verdict-execution, therefore man shall do like It.
14. The guidance of Creation is justice and love, and man has to be likewise, thus guiding and just and without vengeance and similar, which is degenerative in comparison to Creation.

15. And verily, the guidance of Creation is perfect in all things, as also truth is perfect and unchangeable as it is given by the JHWH and the Prophet in truth and love and justice, and which is never changeable by lying, deceit and falsification, for the guidance of Creation doth not allow this, because It is the wise and just and omniscient one.
16. Thus is also determined in the guidance of Creation that everything shall serve man as food which flourishes as edible for him, so everything in plants, fruits and animals of the air, of the waters and of the earth.
17. And what reason should man have not to eat edibles, if the edible is given to him by nature, for he is created differently from the plant world and from all animals, namely in that he is a consumer of all things which flourish as plants, fruits and animals.
18. Thus man is omnivorous and therefore different from all plants and from all animals with exceptions to a minor degree.
19. But wherever exceptions exist among animals which also are omnivorous, these animals are to be considered as unclean as food for man in the sense that danger exists in butchered meat, if it is not fresh any more or not dried, because this is quickly infested with disease causing agents and epidemic.
20. Therefore man shall eat meat with caution from such animals considered unclean in this manner, which the pig is to be mentioned as a decisive part.
21. Meat of pigs is not forbidden to man as food, but it is unclean to him if he considers the disease-causing agents, and so he shall exercise caution in good measure, for truly the meat of the omnivorous animals is different in susceptibility of disease-causing agents than the meat of other animals, to which however also caution and heed shall be paid, as also to all other food, if it is no longer fresh or is wilted or spoiled.
22. Through the guidance of Creation also is given that man is omnivorous, but to whom is ordered heed and caution, so he only shall ingest food which is free of disease-causing agents and is in part prepared by himself.
23. And this means therefore, that by the guidance of Creation man shall stand above the mode of life of plants and of animals, so he therefore shall be well-mannered, kind and polite, whereby he differentiates himself in another way from animals and from plants.
24. Truly therefore, everything is given to man as food whatever is edible of plants and fruits and animals, but he shall practice heed and caution and discrimination, because his health is in danger in regard to spoiled and also to poisonous food which flourisheth and liveth in community with the non-poisonous.
25. And truly it is injustice and wicked doing, if you are forbidden to eat of all the edible by the mighty and seducers and sect-masters, because the guidance of Creation alloweth everything edible to flourish so that it is eaten and serves as food.
26. But it is given that everything inedible and poisonous shall be destroyed and removed by man, so that man and life in general is not endangered, which are plants and animals and everything given according to its kind which devour and remove everything poisonous and everything diseased, and therefore all carcasses and other decaying matter, which occurreth among all life.

27. And the guidance of Creation sayeth that life shall be separated, each according to its own kind, but that every life shall live according to its own kind, and that every life also shall live of the other, therefore the plants of the food of the minute animals and of water, and the animals of the plants and fruit and of minute animals and of other animals of all kinds.
28. But unto man is given that he shall be guardian and usufructuary over everything in good manner, and that he nourish himself with everything which is alive in lower manner than himself, so given unto him in wise guidance are all plants and fruits and all minute animals and animals for food, if they are non-poisonous and unspoiled.
29. Therefore man is guardian and usufructuary over everything which is given unto him in any form, and therefore he stands over everything as also over any animals and over all life of the world of plants and fruits.
30. And thus therefrom is recognizable that man by the wise guidance of Creation shall be well-mannered, thinking and standing over everything in just manner and in common-sense and understanding, that he shall also recognize the difference between himself and the animals.
31. And recognizable through the guidance of Creation is that man shall be cleanly in his well-manneredness, that he does not carry any animals and vermin on himself, because this is injurious to the security of his health.
32. Therefore man shall not allow animals or vermin to live on himself and also not in places where he sleepeth, eateth or resideth, so he doth not get sick due to animals or vermin and is suffering or dying before the time of his demise has arrived.
33. And Creation is guidance for all life, so by It is determined every age and the dying of every creature.
34. Thereby is given also that no creature may assume the right to determine the age and dying of himself or of his neighbor.
35. It is not given through the guidance of Creation that a creature may himself end or allow to end his life or that of his neighbors, and also it is not allowed that assistance in dying would be rendered, which shall end the life according to one's own will or according to the wish of a neighbor.
36. But the law of guidance stateth on the other hand, that the right is not given to a creature to preserve life by force or skill for himself or for his neighbor, when the time of life has expired and therefore the change to death has to be accomplished
37. And as no right for any creature existeth to determine death, so also existeth no right to decide or to determine about life and death of a creature in any form.
38. Every life is given for evolution and for fulfillment, so it is never allowed to be killed or to be encroached upon in any way, for every life hath to be existing up to the natural end, if it is not given as food to anyone's life as is the life of plants and fruits and of animals, each according to their kind.
39. But therefore states the law of guidance that any plants and fruits of their kind and any animals shall only serve as food and as clothing and as other necessities, as it becomes necessary in the normal use of the day.
40. Thereby wantonness and plundering shall not be pursued and no violation nor profit greed and also no excess in anything else.

41. But disloyal and unjust and guilty are all those who transgress against the law of guidance.
42. And therefore is determined through the guidance of Creation, that no cannibalism shall be committed among the evolving lifeforms, of which man is one in highest form.
43. There shall not occur a repression of the evolution of Spirit and of consciousness due to cannibalism, so it is determined that any life containing evolving Spirit and evolving consciousness shall not serve as food to any creature, except in most extreme need and if the life ends of itself without sickness.
44. And verily, nothing can be found that would need to be revealed which would be forbidden for man to eat, except if it is human flesh or stillborn, that which has died, is spoiled or poisonous, diseased or infected.
45. But woe unto those who disregard the guidance, for they will be smitten with disease, pestilence and death, and therefore outlawing will fall upon them.
46. And verily, man of Earth already has transgressed often and often against the guidance of Creation, and therefore your old ones already set gods and idols beside Creation and Its guidance; and those already, who lived before you, accused the guidance of Creation and the prophets of falsity.
47. But do you have more knowledge than your old ones, who were your ancestors up to the earliest time?
48. Verily, you possess no more knowledge than they, although you lie to yourself and your neighbor that you are more knowledgeable and understanding.
49. Yet reveal your knowledge and your understanding; but you cannot do so and you pursue only a delusion and you lie only.
50. Creation and Its guidance is the convincing proof of your delusion and of your lies, and if Creation had been willing It would have been able to force your will to act justly; but Creation is not forceful but is guidance in justice.
51. And verily, if Creation were forceful, It could lead you all forcefully and therefore disregard Its just guidance in free will, but It doth not do so but alloweth justice to rule.
52. Therefore prove your knowledge and understanding and bring witnesses who testify to your knowledge and understanding, but that you cannot do, neither in the one nor in the other manner.
53. Hear therefore the words of the Prophet, who speaketh unto you through his mouth and through the writing of the JHWH and of truth and the old prophets before his time.
54. And the Prophet expoundeth unto you: You shalt not come nigh unto evil be it open or hidden, and you shalt not kill life which Creation hath made inviolable, except if it is in accord with your right, if it happeneth in self-defense or for the sake of food.
55. And in fairness man shall give full measure and full weight in every respect, for Creation doth the same through Its guidance, as It also doth not impose more upon one creature than upon another and as each is able to bear.
56. But if a life exists and thus a human being, which and who has to bear more than what is bearable, this resteth in the doing and thinking of the life itself, and thus man burdeneth himself with what he bears and is able to bear, or what he is not able to bear.
57. If man’s thoughts and feelings are aligned in guidance-opposing form, then division and discord ariseth between the negative and the positive, so the balance suffers and is suppressed.

58. But if the balance of man's thinking and feeling, which is the psyche, is suppressed and suffers, a degeneration resulteth in one direction or another, so that the positive or the negative becomes predominant, which according to the human sense is the good or the evil.
59. And verily, due to wrong thinking and feeling is given that a degeneration in negative manner resulteth at any given time, because man produceth self-suffering and self-sadness in unclear view of the truth within himself.
60. Thus, man placeth burdens upon himself which he is not able to bear any more, because he withdraweth himself in his thinking and feeling from the guidance of Creation and followeth his own guidance, but this is illogical and destructive in his inner and in his outer life.
61. The reason for such wrong doing lieth in the egotism of man, but also in all other emotions and in the weakness of lack of will and in self-pity and weakness toward himself, which is connected to the wrong view of all things and relating all negative things wrongly to himself.
62. See, you men of Earth, such negativity entereth your life, if you are Creation-rebellious and live against the guidance of Creation, by which is shown the way of righteous life conduct unto you.
63. And as man transgresseth against the guidance of Creation, and thus liveth according to his own guidance which is always wrong in every manner, he heapeth many unbearable burdens upon himself, and therewith he createth self-punishment in degenerated ways, which are vengeance and vengeance-execution of his own power.
64. But the guidance of Creation is given in all things and in all life, and is also given in the laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order.
65. And thus the guidance of Creation is given to you, that all descendants of each lifeform stand in the protection and under the care and guardianship of the parents or the substitute parents so long, until the descendants are instructed in all essential things of life, and so they can be independent in righteous manner in regard to food procurement and storage regarding same and also in leading and handling life as a whole.
66. Thereby is also regulated that descendants remain in the protection and under the instruction and in the care and guardionship of the parents or substitute parents, until they have acquired everything essential, until such time when they can conduct their life independently.
67. And independence and leading life by oneself in duty-fulfilling manner man calleth "becoming of age", which alloweth descendants at this time to begin to lead their own life themselves, in their own responsibility, in their own care, their own guardianship and instruction and duty.
68. And as the descendant reacheth this time and this age, he shall hold the parents or substitute parents or the uncle or the orphan's parents in reverence and respect as first advisors in all things, and in case of necessity also shall be helpful to them in all things if this is essential.
69. And the becoming of age of the descendants is not to be determined according to a certain age, but the becoming of age shall be determined after the time, when all essential instruction for life hath been concluded, and when the proof of the descendants hath been furnished that they are able of righteous life conduct, so proof shall be furnished thereby that the descendants live at a strange location for three years in their own duty and controlled by the people.

70. And if means of wealth in whichever form is given to the descendants before their time of becoming of age, this wealth shall be managed by responsible people or by the educators until the descendants reach the time of becoming of age, so the wealth belonging to them shall then be handed over to them.
71. But in the instructions the descendant shall become and be knowing that they are obligated to build their own life by the work of their own hands and by their own strength, and that a value-transfer of wealth is possible at the time of becoming of age of 700 lots of silver as a maximum, which shall be equally measured for those without possessions and for those with possessions, so there is not too much wealth which would minimize a righteous life conduct.
72. And therefore shall be explained that it is equally valid, if a bequest has been promised to a minor that this never shall exceed the value of 700 lots of silver.
73. But if descendants exist to whom no possessions and wealth have been left, it is just that the community of the people hand to them at the time of their becoming of age the value of 700 lots of silver, so every descendant is placed equally to the other, whether he is possessionless from birth or is one owning possessions.
74. And it is given, if one owning possessions, to whom only parts of 700 lots of silver are given by his educators or through bequest, the remainder of the value up to the 700 lots of silver is to be handed out by the people to the one becoming of age.
75. But if there is a bequest and also an inheritance, which is to be given to survivors or relatives or to others, the measure shall be 1,400 lots of silver and not more, if the time of becoming of age is passed.
76. If the value of wealth as bequest exceedeth the measure of 1,400 lots of silver for all single heirs, the overage of the wealth is to be rendered to the community of the people and for their well-being, in accordance to the determination of the existing order of the people.
77. But if a descendant or one with possessions exist, who increaseth his wealth due to business or own work of any type, and the value of the wealth reacheth 70,000 lots of silver, then every lot of silver in excess thereof shall be transferred to the community of the people, to be used for its well-being and according to its existing order.
78. And the wealth in silver shall be separated from the wealth of possessions, so also therein shall be given justice according to the guidance of Creation.
79. The wealth of a human being in silver shall have a maximum value of 70,000 lots of silver, and the wealth in land and forest and waters shall not be more than the value of 140,000 lots of silver, and the value of the possessions of a human being shall not exceed 140,000 lots of silver as well.
80. And the people have to decide that justice prevaileth, and that there is not one who hoardeth wealth in one or the other form than what is set as just value.
81. And you may be admonished that the guidance of Creation is also anchored in all things, as also in the speaking of justice.
82. And it is given, if a matter about the neighbor is to be determined, that it shall be determined according to the guidance of Creation, which sayeth that every matter shall be determined and decided in justice for the neighbor, who is no friend and no acquaintance and no family member or relative, and also for the neighbor, who is the brother or the sister, the uncle or the cousin, or the mother or the father or the own child or the husband, and also the relative or a friend or the girlfriend or male or female acquaintance.

83. If therefore you have to make a pronouncement about one or another matter, practice justice and speak in justice, you then obey the guidance of Creation which guideth once and only in justice".
84. And the JHWH speaketh: "And again is said that the scripture of the word of truth was given for the fulfillment to the old prophets, who were in preceding order, Mohammed, Jmmanuel and Buddha, and they acted according to the scripture, to do good and for the clarification of all things, and that a direction in guidance of Creation for the human beings of Earth is given.
85. And that is the book which is sent again - full of blessings as it was given to the Prophet heretofore in large parts, and that the human beings of Earth may follow him, so they have guidance and find righteousness.
86. And do not say that the scripture of the word of truth and the prophets have only been sent to two nations of you for this is a lie and falsification, because the prophets of the JHWH were sent to all generations of men of Earth as well, and therefore to all nations without difference as the prophets also who came prompted by their own fulfillment of duty.
87. Therefore you cannot say you and your old ones have not had the proclamation of the truth and its interpretation.
88. Verily, you and your old ones have rejected the scripture of the word of truth until this very day, for the word of truth and the proclamation of the Prophet hath also penetrated to you, therefore you have no justification for your wrong and Creation-offensive doings.
89. Yet another time now a witness cometh to you from the wise guidance of Creation, through which again the scripture of the word of truth is sent by the JHWH to the earthly generations of men and through the Prophet, who is among you and doth proclaim to you about the truth.
90. Who is more unrighteous than all among you than you who deny the signs of Creation and even Itself, and than you who deny the JHWH and persecute the book of the word of truth, and therefore those of you who deny and persecute the Prophet in a foreign and in your own country.
91. Verily, many among you and your old ones have accepted the teachings of the prophets, but the teachings have been falsified, so they only retain minute parts of the truth, and so you steer your boat of life and of knowledge in waters of error and of confusion, of falsity and of destruction.
92. But do not speak that you would not know about the truth, because it is newly and for the last time brought to you through the guidance, for which sake the JHWH and the Prophet proclaim to you the teaching and the word of truth for the last time.
93. But you deny the Prophet and persecute him, and only few righteous exist who gather around him or lend him their ear from distant places, and who trust him in the knowledge about the truth.
94. But you, who are the ignorant and the unrighteous, lie against the Prophet and the teachings and the JHWH and Creation, and also against Its guidance which is regulating all things.

95. And therefore you lie and deny that the scripture of the word of truth is another time sent down to man of Earth at the present time, the New Age, and truthfully you do it because you have been beaten into captivity by your false teachings you call religions.
96. But thus you lie also against the truth for the reason, because you believe yourself to be more knowing and having more common sense, but that is not so and for which you could never produce proof, because your entire speech only rests on faith and non-logic.
97. And verily you are divided within yourself and in your belief, and therefore you are divided therein and full of anxiety and uncertainty and baseness, so through your own division in your own belief you are unscrupulous fanatics and sectarians, so the truth has nothing to do with the likes of you.
98. And because you are sectarians and fanatics and unscrupulous ones, you instruct falsely that anything shall be repaid tenfold to anyone who doth a good or evil deed, yet truly this is only human-like, because how could there be a reward in a tenfold way resulting from one good deed only?
99. And how can recompense ensue at all for a good or an evil deed, if the guidance of Creation determineth the consequence for every deed in good or evil, thus in a manner that every cause resulteth in the logical effect.
100. And how can recompense for a good or an evil deed exist, if the guidance of Creation determineth that every progress and therefore all development resulteth only therefrom that mistakes are being made which later are avoided, to bring understanding and development and progress if the mistakes are being made in a just and required measure of development, and if no conscious offence and conscious lying, conscious defense and murder of the truth occureth.
101. Verily, no human being beareth a burden except his own and no one beareth the burden of another, and really no human being's psyche carries the burden of another human being's psyche but only the burden of his own, which is created in the thinking and feeling of the human being alone who actually beareth the burden.
102. Therefore man shall be his own tester, so that he shall live according to the guidance of Creation and not create a burden for himself which at any time he has to carry.
103. And therefore is given through the guidance of Creation, that all life of the same species among one another and with one another shall be equal and without difference in all rights.
104. Therefore no difference between human beings shall exist, not between races and nations and generations of men, and thus not between old and young and not between husband and wife, not between parents and children, and also not between the righteous and the unrighteous, and not between the higher and the lower ones, and not between one with and one without possessions, if they live among each other or alone or with each other.
105. A difference is only to be made in the fulfillment of duties of one's own just life-conduct and during the time of becoming of age, or if there is a measure-fulfillment due to guilt or fallibility, or if damage due to illness exists, which doth not allow the fulfillment of duties.
106. The wife shall not be the husband's subordinate, and also the husband shall not be the wife's subordinate, because the guidance of Creation determineth the right of equality in freedom and without difference.

107. Therefore the wife and the husband are of equal rights in all types of work as also in the rearing of descendants and in the determination and handling of all matters as a whole, as also in the management of business, in education and in leadership of the nation.
108. But a unity in all things is to be granted, thus only the truth is represented in every sphere, so that therefore no powers of partiality in anything are present which are divisive and destructive in one's own house, in the community, in the leadership of the nation, in a business or whatever it may be.
109. But if in the leadership of the nation partialities are allowed, the people are led into wrong guidance and mal-administration and into loss and war and destruction, as this is the case in all other matters.
110. Therefore is given that partiality shall rule in no matter, and that one party is not for one matter and another party against the same matter.
111. If any action and speech is just according to the guidance of Creation and in obedience of the creative laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order, then every action and speech and also every thought in all things follow only the truth, so agreement is given and unity which standeth above all partiality.
112. And if partialities are present with man in any things, due to false guidance and life conduct, a fallibility occurs about which an opinion shall be formed according to the correctness of justice, which determineth measures at measure-fulfillment places for seven years or for life in case of repetition, or a warning at the first fallibility.
113. If a matter is settled with human beings, so that no partiality and therefore no flocking together exists for the maintaining or the prevailing of partisan interests, then the situation is given, that every human being has to critically decide about every matter in his own power and unrelated to an opinion of a party.
114. And if a just opinion about a matter shall be given to man for decision, then is not allowed to solicit or to influence somewhere else for it, so a matter, each at its time, will be presented to man for opinion-forming and decision, if an opinion shall be formed and a decision is to be given.
115. And thus this shall be done in every case, in the life of the family, in the leadership of the nation, in the opinion-forming of a matter about a human being, and in everything which has to be reviewed and decided upon.
116. And if a matter is to be reviewed or to be decided upon, or a matter is to be determined, the procedure of the matter shall be, that the matter-presenters first present the matter for opinion-forming, for determination or for decision, when the opinion-formers or the determining ones or the deciders have gathered at a place for the fulfillment of the duty.
117. And it is also given that every duty-fulfilling person shall be truly just in his opinion-forming, determination and decision, is thinking and truly pondering in justice, weighs the for and against of the matter, wherefrom the opinion-forming or the determination or the decision shall arise.
118. Thereby alone justice is granted to an opinion or determination or decision, as it is determined by the guidance of Creation, and therefore man shall only think, act and live according thereto.
119. But also through the guidance of Creation is given, that an opinion-forming or a determination or a decision can only take place in uniform manner, if no discord and offence and evil of any kind shall exist.

120. Thereby is given that a conclusion of an opinion or a determination or a decision can only then be given, if a totally uniform harmony and agreement toward the matter at any given time exists, which sayeth that all duty-fulfilling individuals have to be in agreement and in harmony in the conclusion of a matter.
121. And thereby is explained that all have to be in agreement and in harmony at the resolve of a matter, so that ten thousand duty-fulfilling persons or seventy duty-fulfilling persons or two duty-fulfilling persons have to be of a uniform and agreeing and harmonious conclusion, if the resolve shall reach valid power and effectiveness.
122. But if there is only one among the duty-fulfilling persons, who has a different opinion based on this or on that reason, then a conclusion in unity and harmony is not given, so the same matter shall be presented for conclusion again at another time.
123. Therefore is given that a majority shall not determine about an opinion or about the understanding or about the will of a single person, so the single one is considered in reverence and respect and in justice, as this is determined through the guidance of Creation.
124. In addition, it is given by the guidance of Creation that every life is untouchable in gender-sexual manner, if the binding of a contract of two partners of different sex of the same species is not present, as of husband and wife or of wife to wife also.
125. And every life shall be untouchable of gender-sexual touch, at least until the sexual maturity has been reached and therefore a bond between two partners exists, which has to be a marital state or the state of love in evolution.
126. Therefore the guidance of Creation is given to man, that sexual touch in the manner of sleeping together is allowed only, if the sexual maturity is present and also a bond of marriage.
127. Therefore no sexual touch in any form shall take place, if for the one part sexual maturity of a human being is not present, and for the other part if the bond of marriage is not present, or if the love of evolution is not present.
128. But whoever trespasseth against this guidance shall be considered a fallible one, so he shall be given a warning or if repeated at other times, he shall go to the measure-fulfillment-place for seven years or for life.
129. And thus any life is untouchable in a sexual manner by sleeping together, who is not fully capable in his senses and decisions and logical judgement, and who is dependent or attached in another manner, or who has a contagious disease, and also who is defenseless, whorish, urging, forcing, violent, begging or unrighteous in another manner and acting against the guidance of Creation.
130. And for the man it is given that he is sexually untouchable by a woman, until he has reached the time of his becoming of age and has a bond or marriage with a woman.
131. And therefore a man shall only live and sleep together with a woman in a bond of marriage or in the state of love of evolution.
132. And a man may have one or two wives, or he may have three wives or four wives or more, as is determined for him according to the value of his evolution.
133. Yet a husband shall not procreate more than three descendants with one wife, so thereby the bearable number of people on a planet is not exceeded, which is like the Earth and for which only a bearable number of 529,000 times 1,000 human beings can exist.

134. But the number of descendants shall be regulated by man according to need, so the number of the generations of men is kept at a balanced level.
135. And to the wife is given one husband and no more, because the wife is the birth-giving and receiving in fertilization and begetting of children, and also conditionally only fertilizable by one husband, if children are procreated in the body of the wife.
136. And the man may have wives in several numbers, because he is the impregnating and procreating one, who can pair with and impregnate several wives.
137. And as the man is the part of the whole impregnation and pairing of the woman, and of himself he can not be birth-giving, so is given to him as sexual partner to sleep with only the woman as the only lifeform.
138. Since the man cannot give birth, therefore no sexual touch from man to man or between man and man shall occur, which would be a trespass against the guidance of Creation and against Its laws and recommendations and against the sevenfold order.
139. But if the man trespasseth against the guidance of Creation in this matter, if therefore he as man gets together in wanton manner of sexual touch with another man, he becomes guilty for a measure-fulfillment-place, and the same measure shall prevail, if man or woman put themselves together with other lifeforms which are called animals.
140. And through the guidance of Creation is given that the woman is the birth-giving and also the procreating in time of need when a male shortage exists, so that the woman is able to impregnate and inseminate her own body as also the body of another woman, if woman and woman get together in times of need for insemination and impregnation.
141. And thus the guidance of Creation is given in the form that a compensation to the woman is also given regarding the male, who has several wives, so that to the woman therefore is given other women, with whom she may get together sexually, if love exists in the woman in a bisexual manner, so to the woman as also to the husband.
142. And relationships and touching of women among themselves may already occur after the sexual maturity and before the becoming of age therefore, as this also can exist among the wives of the husband among themselves and with women outside of the bond of marriage.
143. But by the guidance is given, that a woman shall be bisexual in the love of sleeping together, so that a wife may not only have effort and relationship toward women alone and therewith disregard the husband as natural partner, but if this is yet so, the measure shall be at the measure-fulfillment-place for life.
144. And therefore is given through the guidance of Creation, that no lifeform shall repress or destroy their sexual drives, also not the human being who shall self-satisfy and by his own doing provide sexual satisfaction on his own sex, if he has not become of age yet or stands in a bond of marriage, and if he desires his own sexual satisfaction, as this also is granted to him at other times whenever he is in need of such action.
145. Therefore it is not a disgrace, if the sexual desire of a human being is satisfied by himself, that he touches his own sex organ with his own hands and satisfies it.
146. And everything is regulated in this manner through the guidance, so the woman has equal value with the man as is given in the natural manner by the laws and recommendations.

147. And therefore the guidance of Creation is just in all matters, that to the wife also equality is given in all rights as to the husband, even if the equality is of a different type, as also man and woman differ in type and yet are of the same specie.

148. And as justice is given through the guidance with equal rights between husband and wife, so is also given the guidance through Creation that husband and wife shall be equivalent in sexual endeavors when sleeping together.

149. This means that the endeavors of sleeping together shall be equal for both parts, that the husband as well as the wife is satisfied to the fullest measure, so the progress and balance of the psyche can unfold by which all life conduct develops in just manner.

150. Thus neither the wife nor the husband shall sleep together without satisfying and fulfilling the partner, but satisfying and fulfilling in every manner so that the laws and recommendations are fulfilled in the best measure.

151. And therefore is given through the guidance of Creation that sleeping together is duty in the existence of a bond of marriage, calculated according to the need of the partner who requires love in this manner, and which is necessary for the development and for the preservation of existence.

152. But whoever acts contrary thereto and neglects his duty of sleeping together for no reason whatsoever, except due to sickness or exhaustion, old age or maladies of old age, makes himself fallible, so the human being shall be ordered into the measure of opinion-forming for a fallibility.

153. And whoever acts contrary thereto and neglects the duty of sleeping together in a bond of marriage, or who injures another duty in the bond of marriage or the rights of the partner, he maketh himself fallible and breaketh the bond which is called adultery.

154. But adultery is a fallibility, which shall be considered for measure-assumption, by which in the first case is given a warning, but at the second time, the measure-fulfillment-place shall be ordered for seven years, and if repeated a third time, measure-fulfillment-place for life shall ensue.

155. And thus everything is a fallibility which is bond-breaking and adulterous, as is the disregarding of a partner, chastisement of body or of the psyche, forced sleeping together, freedom deprivation and restriction of movement, food and clothing or shelter-deprivation, and also infringement of child-rearing, unallowed sleeping together with bond-strange partners or of non-evolving type of love, but as well suppression in every manner, action-restriction, development restriction and everything which is unjust against the laws and recommendations of Creation and against Its guidance therefore.

156. And it is a fallibility and trespass against the guidance of Creation, if there is endeavor for sleeping together if a contagious disease of body exists, and it is a fallibility if endeavor for sleeping together exists when the wife is impure in the monthly period of her sex organ.

157. And it is a fallibility if fruit of children is created in the body of the wife against the will of the wife or against the will of the husband, or if danger for the body and life of the wife exists, or if a contagious or hereditary disease exists, or if the senses of the husband or of the wife are dimmed by sickness or lack of consideration or by means of a narcotic, or if danger of an overpopulation exists, or if there is a known fallibility of the husband or the wife in any form.

158. And it is a fallibility, if fruit of children is produced in the body of the woman, if the woman has not yet become of age, except if the child is produced by the woman in her own procreation power, or in the process of procreation by sleeping together of woman and woman.

159. But every time both parts are guilty, the husband as also the wife, if there is endeavor for sleeping together or if there is the procreation of children in an unpermitted way, then both parts are guilty of a fallibility, and if there is common-sense and presence of mind, then the measure at the measure-fulfillment-place shall be for life.

160. Also fallible is the committing of incest, if endeavors are made toward sleeping together between mother and son, or between father and daughter, or between brother and sister, but also the endeavor toward sleeping together between husband and wife becomes fallible, if direct connection of relationship exists up to the seventh link of relationship.

161. But it is given, that no fallibility exists in the endeavor toward sleeping together and in the procreation of children, that is between mother and son, between father and daughter or between brother and sister and between relatives up to the seventh link, if a need exists to the degree of urgency that a new nation has to be created, or if it is in danger of dying out in any way according to the correct number of generations of man of a planet.

162. But the right of infallibility lasts only, until three parts of four parts of the entire number of human beings of a nation or a planet has been reached.

163. And the guidance of Creation is also valid as guidance for the leaders of nations and for the leaders of the generations of men, who shall be Spirit leaders and just ones, who follow the guidance of Creation and Its laws and recommendations and the seven-fold order.

164. And leaders of the nation and the leaders of the generations of men shall be elected by the people and without soliciting at prior time before such election shall occur.

165. And an election shall occur in such manner that the people are called to a place at a designated time, so the matters are presented to them, of which an opinion has to be determined and also about the election of leaders, whose knowledge and actions are being proclaimed to the people at the time of the opinion-forming.

166. Therefore will be introduced to the people, who shall be leading and representing the people or hold another office, and therefore man and woman in the same manner and in equality shall be introduced, and only at the time of opinion-forming and of election at the place to which the people have been called.

167. And every election shall be judged in just manner and also in consideration of all things of truth and of necessity, therefore the pros and cons also shall be questioned, and also a speech of the candidate has to be delivered about his wisdom and his knowledge and abilities, so it is recognizable who and what the expectant one is, and this is valid for man and woman.

168. And if only one among the people exists who has honest objection and hesitation or other for and against, he shall lift up his voice, as man or as woman, yet the speech shall be just and honest, and the words shall be selected and spoken in reverence and respect and free of any aggression, and they also shall not be offensive nor injurious, and not refer to things of the past if the time of more than twelve years has elapsed.

169. And as a speech of any content is being delivered by a human being, so that now the opinion-forming of a matter or of another type shall take place, then the word for common-sense presentation shall be allowed to the speaking one as long as is necessary for him.
170. If there is a speaker about a matter, whether this is man or woman, others shall not be permitted to disturbingly interrupt the speech of the speaker, except if the speech trespasses, so the officiating leader demands accountability.
171. But if there is one among the people who wants to raise his voice to speak, whether man or woman, he shall ask in given manner for the word, which then shall be granted to him.
172. But interrupters and provokers shall not be allowed and if there are yet some, they become fallible and are considered for the measures.
173. Everyone shall be given the freedom of opinion and of speech in reasonable delivery and time, whether man or woman, and whoever doth not show reverence and respect therefore, he maketh himself fallible.
174. It is determined and done through the guidance of Creation that peace shall be among the lifeforms, and that one life shall not be against the other, so that love and progress exist equally and that there is life and not destruction.
175. Therefore, for you human beings the guidance of Creation is that you keep peace among each other, and that you keep peace with all other lifeforms which are the animals and plants of all types, and which also are the air you breathe, the waters and the earth worlds.
176. Man shall not be quarrelsome against his neighbor, and he also shall not be quarrelsome against other life which is not of human type.
177. But as is said that man shall keep peace toward all life, and that he shall not be quarrelsome toward any life, this is valid in all-encompassing manner and especially therein that man keeps peace among his own.
178. Man shall not be quarrelsome against his neighbor, he shall not harm him neither in body nor in life nor in possessions, and no speech or action of a quarrelsome kind in any other way shall exist.
179. And man shall live in peace with his neighbor and with all life, which is of a different kind, therefore shall no quarrelsome word be raised, nor the fist or a weapon against the neighbor or against a life of another kind.
180. Also no quarrels among human beings shall exist, not in the family nor among relatives, and also no quarrels shall be among friends or acquaintances and also not among the working and the leading ones, not among leaders and also not among others, what and how they ever may be.
181. Through the guidance of Creation is not given that quarrels would exist among life, this right is also not given to man that he practice quarrelsomeness among life and among his own, therefore he also has no right in one or another form to be threatening to his neighbor.
182. Therefore through the guidance of Creation quarrelsomeness is not given unto man, not the evil word against the neighbor, not the fist and not a weapon against the neighbor, and also not a threat against the neighbor, and this neither in small nor in great measure, meaning not among two or three and also not among several and also not among nations, therefore no war shall be among human beings and among lifeforms as a whole.

183. But if there is only a single one, who trespasseth in a small manner against the law of guidance, that peace shall be unto all life, he maketh himself fallible, so he shall be reviewed without difference, whether it is man or woman.
184. And if one exists who trespasseth in a great manner against the law of guidance, that there shall not be peace among all life, and that therefrom ensues uproar or terror or revolution or war, he is fallible and to be brought to a measure-fulfillment-place for life, without difference whether man or woman.
185. Therefore everyone is fallible, who disturbeth or bringeth the peace into danger of groups of human beings in number up to two people, and fallible is everyone who disturbeth or bringeth the peace into danger of groups of human beings in number beyond two people, or who are families or tribes or nations or generations of man.
186. And therefore everyone is fallible, whether man or woman, who threateneth tribes or nations or generations of men of any kind, whether the threat is with large weapons arsenals or strong warring armies, or whether the threat is of a different type, if it is directed toward the security of peace or the freedom or otherwise.
187. And therefore everyone is fallible without difference, whether man or woman, who alone or by a small or large warring army attacketh groups of human beings or tribes or nations or generations of men, as there is invasion or attack, uproar, terror, violence, revolution or war or even only anxiety or fear.
188. And thus everyone fallible shall be judged with the measure of life-long measure-fulfillment-place, if a fallibility is truthfully present, which shall be equally valid for man and woman.
189. The peace and the love toward all life and among all life is protected and given through the guidance of Creation and no lifeform of any type has the right to trespass against the laws and recommendations.”

CANON 25

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is experience.
3. And the JHWH explaineth to the generations of man that the Prophet is like the JHWH, and that the Prophet is a human being as also is the JHWH.
4. The Prophet is knowing, wise and able like the JHWH, yet a difference lies therein, that the Prophet and the JHWH are highest Spirit leaders of different generations of men.
5. The JHWH is highest Spirit leader over different generations of men who live on different worlds, and the Prophet is highest Spirit leader over the generations of men of one world.
6. And the possibility of recognition is given to man through Creation, that due to greater age also greater wisdom and experience is given, as also is due to increased activity.
7. As therefore the JHWH is highest Spirit leader over the generations of men of different worlds, so the Prophet is highest Spirit leader over the generations of men of only one world.

8. And also is thereby given that the JHWH can gather greater experience than the Prophet, so that the JHWH is like a father-friend to the Prophet, into whose greater wisdom and experience the Prophet arranges himself.
9. And as the Prophet is knowledgeable of the truth that the JHWH has more values in experience, he then respects this reverently and considers the JHWH as his teacher and higher Spirit leader.
10. Thereby is given that the Prophet constantly speaketh about the JHWH, who standeth over him as power of instruction, and that he citeth the words of the JHWH in respect and reverence.
11. In the JHWH the Prophet recognizeth therefore his teacher and father-friend, and equally he presenteth to him his reverence and all respect, wherefrom resulteth that in modesty the Prophet mentioneth the name of the JHWH, if there is given by him a recognition or an instruction.
12. And the Prophet and the JHWH act so as well, if a recognition or instruction is given through Creation, as It is reverently and respectfully mentioned as instructing power.
13. And therefore is said therewith that every recognition and instruction is mentioned by its origin, without there being a factor of hierarchical form.
14. Therefore a hierarchy doth not exist among the lifeforms in the creative sense, and therefore exists no hierarchy between the Prophet and the JHWH, and also no hierarchy exists between any life or with Creation.
15. Creation recognitizes that every lifeform is equal to another, whereby a difference exists only in the level of evolution, as also in knowledge and ability and wisdom and other attributes in developing manner.
16. And from the recognition of Creation goeth forth the uniform recognition to all lifeforms, that every lifeform itself and in its inner self has to arrive at recognition.
17. Therefore the recognition of Creation bestoweth that every human being himself is responsible to evolve and to reach recognition about all things, if he troubleth himself to find and to obey the truth.
18. And everything is given recognizable to man everywhere, that in order to recognize he only has to see and to hear, as the JHWH and the Prophet do, who equally acquire all recognition as all other human beings do without difference.
19. Thus thereby is said that the JHWH instructeth the generations of man in the teachings which he hath found and discovered within himself and by his own power in obeying the laws and recommendations of Creation.
20. And as the JHWH is knowledgeable, able and wise and full of love by his own power of his own recognition, so is the Prophet also to whom nothing is handed as a gift in knowledge, wisdom and ability and love, but who, like the JHWH and all other life, of his own power had to allow recognition to sprout and become within himself.
21. And verily no knowledge, no wisdom and no love and no ability and nothing else in the universe exist, which were not created by Creation of laws and recommendations and which doeth not first have to be acquired by man of his own power and by thoughts of recognition.
22. Therefore the Prophet has to find the truth in own recognition within himself, before he can bring these instructingly to man, and therefore the JHWH is like the Prophet without difference.

23. And verily, the Prophet could conduct his office without his father-friend, the JHWH, because as the knowledge about truth ruleth within the JHWH, so also ruleth the knowledge within the Prophet, which he hath attained to and acquired as his own recognition of all creative truth, so he has not received anything from without, except possible help in path direction.
24. But all presented knowledge is given by the Prophet in creative truthfulness, acquired in own recognition and power by the Prophet, so he has not referred to the JHWH, who is his father-friend in reverence and respect.
25. But the truth remaineth forever the same and unchangeable since times of old, and therefore the truth is sent down and written by man, so he is taught through the word of truth, as it is given through recognition by the knowing ones since early times.
26. Therefore the JHWH is father-friend to the Prophet, as the Prophet is this also to the people, and as the Prophet referreth to the JHWH in his explanations, this happens only in reverence and respect to his higher experience.
27. The JHWH is like an older friend to the Prophet, like this is between father and son or between parents and children on the whole, and as this is also between the prophets and the people.
28. And therefore the Prophet proclaims about his own recognized truth and also about the recognitions of the JHWH and the rest of all life, so the Prophet is mothers and children, JHWH and fulfilling one and investigator and explorer and recognizing one in like manner.
29. Through the recognition of Creation is given that all life shall live in recognition, and that there shall not be one who does not acquire his own recognitions.
30. The Prophet and the JHWH and the Spirit leaders and all knowing ones bring the recognition they have reached, and in constant succession of their evolution attain to, so they teach the still ignorant and the unrighteous in helpful manner that these also may find the way to Creation-life.
31. Therefore, the teachings of recognition are teachings of path direction of equal validity forever, so that man learns from them and attains to the truth and recognition himself like the JHWH, his prophets and the Spirit leaders and knowing ones.
32. And thus, man shall live in recognition and not create and lay punishment upon himself, so he becomes knowledgeable in his own power and teaches his neighbors.
33. And due to recogition, man shall attain to the recognition that no gods or idols or similar exist which would be instructing or law-giving, and which would be powerful like Creation.
34. And man alone is master over himself, and nothing likewise is above him except Creation, but which is not ruler and not ruling, but which is only way-showing and direction-giving without force or pressure, yet mediating through recognition.
35. Creation is recognition and Creation gives recognition, and recognition is given to man that he makes this recognition his own, and follows it in recognition of the recognition that the master is master of himself, if he recognizes and obeys the truth.
36. Except the power of man himself, no other power exists which would be determining about the knowledge and conduct of life and the evolution and all recognition, therefore no gods or idols or other powers exist which would be determining in this matter.

37. Therefore no priests or higher ones or others exist, who would have the right to issue and impart guidelines for the evolution and for the obedience of the laws and recommendations of Creation, if these guidelines are not given through the Creation-laws, and if these are not recognized by man as such in comprehensive recognition.
38. All laws and recommendations and all order are given through Creation alone, and therefore, all life is given equally the recognition through Creation that everything is to be recognized in truthful manner.
39. Therewith the assignment is given that man has to produce recognition for all things, so all and everything has to be investigated by the recognition of man, that he becomes knowing, wise, evolution-fulfilling and able in all things, whereafter as a knowing and able one in his own power and responsibility he is instructing his neighbors, and is evolution-assisting, as knowledge and wisdom in own recognition is given to him in necessary measure, and therefore he is a Spirit teacher in the one or in another form.
40. Thus man is master of himself in all things of recognition, and he is also master of himself in the use of his recognition, as therefore in negative as also in positive aspects.
41. And as man himself and of his own power has to attain to every recognition, he also standeth in duty towards his neighbor to instruct him by his recognition and is helpful to him in all development of the fulfillment.
42. And therefore Creation hath not commissioned that human beings are sent to man as instructors, but man himself sendeth himself as instructor to those like him, if he has sufficiently grown in recognition, if he is knowing and able to a good degree and is Spirit leader also, and if within himself he is called to be Spirit leader, he is not in need of any summoning or calling from higher authority, because this authority never exists.
43. If the JHWH and the Prophet exist, they are not authorities of different values, and one is not sent by the other in the sense of hierarchy, but one is sent by the other in mutual free-will manner of cooperation in the same matter, that one is not subordinated to the other, but each one is of equal value in the same duty fulfillment.
44. Thus one is sent by the other, so therefore if the JHWH is sent by the Prophet, or if the Prophet is sent by the JHWH, they truthfully are only messengers in reciprocity and in constant exchange of their new experiences.
45. Therefore the JHWH doth not appoint the Prophet and the Prophet also does not appoint the JHWH, because their knowledge is derived from their own recognition, by which they find each other and get together in duty-fulfillment and as highest Spirit teachers of their present time.
46. And the JHWH is the sent one and the proclaimer and the messenger and the duty-fulfiller of the Prophet, and also the Prophet is the sent one and the proclaimer and the messenger and the duty-fulfiller of the JHWH.
47. But the JHWH and the Prophet elect righteous and truthfully knowing human beings as their sent ones, who truthfully are messengers and proclaimers to instruct man with greater knowledge than they have of their own, and also they announce evil events or good events which result from actual causes.

48. And the sent ones are messengers and proclaimers of the JHWH or the Prophet, who work among the people instructing and warning, proclaiming and bringing messages to the generation of man, and who are called watchers, proclaimers, overseers or mediators.
49. Thus the sent ones stand under the order of the JHWH or the Prophet, to fulfill and instruct as Spirit teachers among the people under the direction of the JHWH or the Prophet, because they as sent ones are still learning and need guidance for all recognition.
50. And the recognition is great and inexhaustible and progressive, and man also is progressive in his recognition and different from his neighbor in that one is more knowledgeable than the other.
51. Therefore one human being is not like the other in recognition and knowledge and ability, so one is different therein from the other.
52. Because differences in recognition of knowledge and ability are present among human beings, one human being is more knowledgeable and more able than the other, which means that the more ignorant can learn from the more knowledgeable ones, whichever that may be, that one with less learning possibilities learns from the one to whom more learning possibilities are presented, as is the case between the JHWH and the Prophet.
53. And due to the different level of recognition is provided, that the human being who is more knowledgeable and wiser leadeth the teaching and speech, so their greater experience speaketh and instructeth.
54. But as the greater experience speaketh and instructeth, this taketh place in greater recognition, as this occurs between the JHWH and the Prophet, that the word of truth is spoken openly by the JHWH and that the Prophet only mediates and proclaims it.
55. And as the Prophet mediates and proclaims the word of the JHWH, he also mediates and proclaims his own knowledge and own recognition, however presented in the words of the JHWH and in his detailed manner.
56. And as the Prophet proclaims and mediates the words and recognitions of the JHWH, so likewise does the JHWH, who mediates and proclaims higher recognitions and teachings, which are explored and recognized by the Prophet and by himself.
57. And the Prophet and the JHWH teach that recognition shall be practiced and done by every human being, by the young and old, by the poor or rich and by the shoemaker and by the water bearer, and by the higher ones and by kings and emperors without difference.
58. But if recognition shall exist in man, he has to be like children who learn everything easily, because they let themselves be taught freely without the burden of prejudice, as they are well-balanced and observe objectively.
59. And if the question ariseth, whoever is the greatest in Spirit, the answer will be that the greatest one in Spirit is he, who learneth like a child and does not burden himself with prejudices, and who in objective observation finds the knowledge and the truth and the love and the wisdom and liveth well-balanced therewith, obedient to the laws and recommendations of Creation and Its sevenfold order.
60. Verily, this is said unto you: If you walk the wrong paths since times of old, and if you do not turn and become like children, all of you, who are the unrighteous and deniers of truth, you will not be great in Spirit, because you do not attain to the recognition which allows you to recognize the truth, and which allows you to lead a life in righteousness and recognition.

61. Therefore realize that only he becomes great in Spirit, who seeketh and investigateth and who accumulateth recognitions and who thirsteth for knowledge and findeth and recognizeth such like a child.
62. And who thus investigateth and seeketh and findeth and recognizeth like a child, he alone findeth truthful truth and liveth according thereto, so he will always be the greatest unto himself.
63. But whoever doth not heed this truth and adhereth to erroneous teachings, neither seeketh nor investigateth nor findeth, to him would be better if a millstone were hung around his neck and he would drown in the ocean where it is deepest, which sayeth that the wicked unrighteous one, laden with all his burdens, better return to the mass of his equals and lead his miserable life there until his evil end, so he does not harm the really seeking or the really righteous or endanger them.
64. For verily, it is given that life hath no meaning and fulfilleth no meaning, if the truth is not investigated and searched for and the goal of life is found, which is provided in the recognition and the fulfillment of the plan of Creation.
65. It would be better if the wicked unwise or the unrighteous banish themselves from the evolving and righteous life, so they do not harm and hinder or endanger the willing ones and the truth seekers and the righteous.
66. And when one day the wicked ones are recalled from life, in which they did not create any righteousness, they surely will be reasonable and more willing in their reincarnation to pay respect to the laws of Creation.
67. But woe unto the world because of the offences, because the unrighteous, the ignorant, the wicked ones, they live against the laws and recommendations of Creation, and they disregard all recognition of truth and live falsely and thereby create offence.
68. And offence has to occur through the unrighteous, but woe unto them, for they also will be threatened and suffering due to their created offences, as they are hit by their induced offences, which are hatred and death, sickness, vice, war and destruction and everything which is evil.
69. Therefore be like children, be without the burden of prejudice, and be absorbing and judging in righteousness and be well-balanced and of objective observation, so you recognize the real truth in real recognition.
70. And as you are like children, you will attain to life and to the kingdom of heaven and to all riches of truth, of knowledge, of wisdom and of love, all of which is provided in all-encompassing abundance of splendor and harmony-love itself.

CANON 26

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is exhortation.
3. And the Prophet proclaimeth his knowledge in his words to the generations of men of Earth to be taught by him, to whom he is highest Spirit leader, without difference of races and languages and skin color of the nations.

4. And thus the Prophet speaketh to the human beings of Earth, that they shall be agreeable to the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation.
5. And the human beings shall also honor and esteem Creation and adhere to Its guidelines, which lead to life of BEING.
6. And verily, I say unto you, men of Earth, be righteous within you, to yourselves and to your neighbor and to all life around you in all realms, because only as you are righteous in this manner and in the adherence to truth according to the laws and recommendations of Creation, will you receive justice yourselves.
7. Praise the Spirit of life, praise the Creation of love, praise the power of life which is Spirit and omnipresent power.
8. Praise Creation in the height, which is exalted in everything existing as highest power and as life on the whole.
9. Praise Creation, the Spirit and the power, and praise all armies of life, which are created by It, Creation.
10. Esteem and honor and respect all life and all existence which is on Earth, on the water, and in the water, and which is on the ground and in the ground and in the air, and also esteem and honor and respect all life and all existence, which is in free space and on suns and moons and planets.
11. Praise Creation, which through Its idea hath created the shining stars and the heavens everywhere.
12. And man shall praise Creation in reverence and respect, for It commanded by Its idea, and thereby everything was created.
13. And Creation continues forever and eternally, and It hath ordered everything from the beginning, so everything has its order, and that nothing else would exist and nothing else would be allowed to be than what was created and was made alive by It.
14. And Creation shall be praised by all life in the universe and on all stars and on Earth, as by all life and by all human beings, by the whales and by all the depths of the waters and of the land, by fire, hail, snow and steam, by the storm, and by the animals and all cattle, by the worms and the birds, and by the water bearers and the authorities and the kings and emperors, princes and judges and nations of Earth, and also by the young men and maidens and by the young and old ones.
15. Praised shall be the Name of Creation and Creation in Its entire existence, for only Its Name is high and great and only Its Name and Its existence and Its praise reacheth as far as heaven and Earth and the immeasurable expanses of the universe.
16. And the Prophet also proclaimeth continuously in the friendly call of wisdom, that man shall be warned of being led astray and of all disobedience and of all punishment, which man raiseth and createth of his own power, like the antelope not heeding the danger of death, ventureth into the fangs of the beast of prey.
17. But the call of wisdom is presented for the preservation of peace, thus the friendly call is mentioned as salomonic word, which meaneth that wisdom preserveth peace.
18. Man therefore hath to acquire wisdom and knowledge, common-sense, truth, discipline and understanding and also intelligence and righteousness and also right and good, so that the unwise become intelligent and understanding and the young men and maidens rational and cautious.
19. And whoever possesseth little wisdom or much wisdom, may he hear the friendly call of the salomonic word, and the hearing one shall learn and improve himself, and as the hearing one understands he may accept good advice, so he becomes more understanding in the interpretation of the words of truth and in the interpretation of the friendly call of the salomonic word of warning.

20. And the hearing one shall grasp the interpretation of the friendly call of wisdom in the right understanding, so he correctly grasps the teaching of wisdom and its parables which are mentioned as examples.
21. The fear of false action and thinking of man is the beginning of recognition, but to the wicked and the unrighteous recognition does not reveal itself, for they despise wisdom and discipline.
22. Child, obey the discipline of your father, and never abandon the recommendation of your mother.
23. The father instructeth the child in discipline and in work and in duty and in responsibility and in the laws and also in everything of handicrafts, of life, of plants and animals and everything which bringeth existence in every form.
24. But the mother instructeth the child like the father, yet her form of instruction shall be in the goodliness and the laws and the domestic area, the keeping of manners and of behavior and everything thereof, which correspondeth to the feeling and thinking and everything of the psychic and up-bringing and the obedience of the recommendations.
25. And the child shall be attentive to its parents, so thereby it carrieth the most beautiful adornment on its head, for as it is obedient to righteous parents, it followeth not the evil beckoning of the unrighteous, and a life in reverence and respect will be allotted to it, and for this the child itself carries responsibility as also do the father and mother.
26. And the child in its own power shall restrain its foot that it does not enter upon the path of unrighteousness, as also the parents have to instruct wisely, so that the child does not enter upon the path of evil and of wickedness.
27. The path of evil and of wickedness is entered upon and trod by the unrighteous, who are the wicked and who want to mislead the righteous and who say among themselves, let us go and lurk after wealth and after blood and pursue the righteous and innocent without cause.
28. And wicked are they, who like hell want to devour the righteous and everything just, and who want to let everything good and righteous slide into the abyss of destruction and malice and all addiction and vice and death.
29. The wicked only want to find great possessions and riches and fill their robbers' caves with their spoil, and with everything which they have unjustly captured without work and effort.
30. Child, do not walk the way with them, with these wicked and unrighteous, and therefore restrain your foot from their path, because their feet run toward evil and hurry to commit robbery and to hoard loot and to shed blood.
31. And beware of this, child or adult, to be admonishing to the wicked and yet to go with them, for such doing is as foolish and in vain as the throwing out of a net before the eyes of birds to capture them.
32. The wicked lurk after the riches and after the blood of the righteous, but they also lurk after the riches and after the blood of the likes of them without difference, and also they lie in wait for their own life.
33. But likewise happens to all who greed after riches and profit, so their greed and their vices take their lives.
34. And with them the truth and love and the knowledge and the wisdom are decried, and wisdom and love and knowledge and truth wail for them in the alleys without being heard by the wicked.

35. Yet the unrighteous and wicked shall also hear the teaching of truth and the friendly call of wisdom of the Prophet in the salomonic word, so that the truth shall be called throughout the far lands of the Earth and also in all districts and fields, in the mountains and woods and rivers, in the seas and oceans and in the roads and streets, through all alleys and doors and entrances and in all huts and houses and in the ears and minds of men.
36. And the Prophet calleth all men of the Earth, and he calleth the wisdom into the entrance of every door, and he calleth the wisdom and truth into the masses of the people, and he speaketh his words at every place with his mouth as also with the scripture.
37. How long will you, men of Earth, still be against righteousness and against life and against the laws and recommendations of Creation and against Its sevenfold order?
38. How long will you unwise ones continue to be unwise, and you mockers, how long will you have joy in mockery, and you wicked ones, how long will you yet lie in wait for your own life and greed for the possessions and the blood of your neighbors and the righteous, and how long will all of you, you unrighteous, still hate the teaching of truth?
39. Verily, roundabout and everywhere you have endangered and even destroyed life, among yourself and also in the world of nature, of the air and the waters and of the Earth, as also in the world of plants and of animals.
40. You men of Earth, all who are the rebellious ones, the unrighteous, the mischievous and wicked, you and your old ones, since time of old have lived as such, spanning over long spans of time until the New Age, into which you have driven yourself and all life to the fulfillment of the prophecies of terror, which were given to you heretofore by the old prophets in old and ancient times.
41. Due to your wickedness in all things you have brought yourself and all life and the planet to the brink of the deadly abyss and to the brink of ruin, and through your cowardly striving in falsehood after power, wealth and self-concern you now are lying-in-wait for your destruction.
42. World-fire and endless misery threateneth you and gruesome tortures and terrible dying in horror will be your companions, because you have wanted it so in your greed for power and wealth and carefree life, and in your hatred against the teaching of truth and wisdom and love and of knowledge, and so you must bear and endure it, when the tortures and the deaths come over you, from which you cannot escape, because you have conjured these up and called for yourself.
43. And you cannot halt the progress of things determined by yourself any more, because you have gone too far and the great dying is already among and around you in nature, in the air and waters, in the Earth, in the animals and in the plants and shrubs and trees wherever they are.
44. And you are on your way and close to your goal to destroy all life totally, so only monsters can live and deadly infirmity ruleth the world, when you have spread the terrible deaths by the world-fire.
45. Turn away from these doings, or else the fire of the atomic embers breaketh down from the heights, and everything will vanish in the selfsame screaming hell as did once before Sodom and Gomorrah, and Hiroshima and Nagasaki in the New Age.

46. Turn to truth and to love and to knowledge and to wisdom, and also push far from you all hatred against the teaching of truth and also push away from you unrighteousness, wickedness, mischief and rebelliousness, because only so can you modify your self-created punishment or send it away from you.
47. But the time does not last much longer for your act of repentance and turning around and the change to righteousness, because the fruit of self-punishment of Earth man has already matured and ripened and the first death spores already fall from overripe fruit, and the death seeds already increasingly fall among all life of Earth and bring terrible evil of dying everywhere.
48. Yet see, man of Earth, I will tell you out of my Spirit and will proclaim to you my words of the teaching of truth which is truth, love, knowledge and wisdom, recognized and established by a human mind from the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation.
49. Hear then, when I call, you men of Earth, hear and listen to my word, and do not refuse to grasp my hand, which I stretch forth to help you, but verily, many of you disregard it.
50. Verily, I am your Prophet, yet you cast aside all my advice, for you want to suffer your self-created punishment as I have taught you.
51. Know however, that within me is sadness and distress, so I cannot laugh about you and mock you when the evil adversity cometh over you, which I have revealed to you and about which you secretly think and fear it.
52. Therefore you will remember my words, when it cometh over you like a storm as you secretly fear.
53. And your adversity will be like stormy weather without end, when anxiety and need, fear, misery, terror and horror cometh over you.
54. At this hour you will call for me but I will not answer, and as you search for me you will not find me, and also I will not be able to help you, wherefore you then must find the way to righteousness yourself, if you are still able to succeed therein.
55. And for you the misery and the trouble will be great at that hour, because you hate the teaching and did not carry within you reverence and respect for life and for the fulfillment of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
56. And I can not help you in your hard time and hour, because you do not want my advice, and you have slandered and persecuted me and have not acknowledged me, as I was yet among you and showed you the way and could have been helpful to you.
57. So you shall and must eat of your own fruits of bitterness and of your own evil nature, and you have to be filled with your own advice of damnation and with your own fruit of self-created punishment.
58. And the time will come for you, when you will damn yourself and kill the unwise and the wicked and the mischievous and the rebellious ones, yet therewith you will not escape your own punishment, but only increase it to hellish torment, so the death of the wicked still appeareth as fortunate to you.
59. Yet verily, whoever listeneth to my words and troubleth himself to live according to truth, needeth not to fear the disaster and the misery and the terrors and the horror, for knowledge about the truth giveth love and wisdom and real life.

60. Honor be unto Creation in all heights, and peace be on Earth and goodwill toward men, if they live in accord with the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation.
61. Man prove himself to be a human being, because it is given unto him to do so since the very beginning of his life.
62. And man may practice love and truth and knowledge and wisdom all his life long, so he becomes a human being himself and helps his neighbor to become a human being.
63. Therefore man shall become knowing and wise, loving and truthful, so he may help himself and his neighbor to live, and that peace and harmony prevail in accord with everything which is creative.

CANON 27

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is the way of life.
3. And thus speaketh the Prophet, who revealeth the way of life, as it is given by Creation.
4. “Man of Earth, as you will accept the speech of truth and keep and obey the recommendations of life and of Creation, then listen attentively and recognize.
5. Be considerate that your ears and your senses regard truth, and that your mind with diligence tends thereto, that you yourself with diligence seekest for the truth and findest the way of life and walkest thereon.
6. And be diligent therein as if you seekest for silver or gold or for precious stone, or as if you searchest for buried or sunken treasures.
7. And as you are diligent in this manner, you then will understand the laws and recommendations of Creation and also Its sevenfold order, but then you will also become understanding and reach great recognitions.
8. Creation giveth unto you laws and recommendations, and from them cometh recognition and understanding to you, if you seekest and findest them therein, so then groweth the wisdom in thanks within you.
9. But wisdom is a goodly part of the way of life and wisdom alloweth true life and evolution to succeed for the upright one, and also he attaineth thereby to protection and love, knowledge and truth.
10. And the upright one is protected and guided on the road of life by truth, if he always doeth right and is one of the righteous who keepeth the way of truth and the way of the goal.
11. But if man is a keeper of the way of life, then soon he will understand the righteousness and the right, but then he also understandeth the true love and the devoutness and every good way.
12. If you are the keeper of the way of life, then wisdom will enter into your thinking and into your senses so that gladly and with joy you continue to learn and also understandest the meaning of the goal of life.
13. And you will understand and follow the good advice of the Prophet, and the good advice will prevent you from failure and degeneration, as also your mind will be protected and will expand.
14. And wisdom will be given to you through your own recognition, so you do not come on to the way of evil, neither among the unrighteous and wicked and mischievous ones, and also not among the ignorant or among the mistaught babblers, who altogether have left the walking of the right path and who walk dark roads.

15. But those are the losers, who walk on dark roads and who are happy to do evil, and who are pretentiously happy in their evil and wrong doings.
16. And the losers themselves reverse their ways and walk on wrong ways, which lead into confusion and into darkness, far away from the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation.
17. And man is in need of wisdom, so that a husband does not happen on to another wife, on to a stranger who giveth slick words, and that the wife shall not happen on to another man, on to a stranger who giveth slick words, so a break of the bond of marriage is not committed.
18. But if partners of the marriage bond leave each other, that they separate from the bond, or if there is a break of the bond due to adultery, their house leaneth toward death and their walking is toward getting lost.
19. This also happeneth in all other matters, if a break is committed against the laws and recommendations and against the sevenfold order of Creation, because in a break a trespass occureth against the way of life.
20. Therefore wisdom is given for the ways of good, so that man walk on the good way and also stay on the road of the righteous ones, for only the righteous will some day live in the land and remain therein.
21. But those, who slander Creation and Its way of life and also Its laws and recommendations and Its sevenfold order, will annihilate themselves by self-punishment and the likes of them, so as scorners of Creation and the way of life they will become their own scorners.”

CANON 28

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is discipline.
3. And the Prophet speaketh about wisdom to the human beings of Earth, and therewith he proclaimeth his knowledge and the knowledge of the JHWH:
4. “Man of Earth, never forget the laws of Creation and also keep the recommendations in your heart and in your mind.
5. Verily, the laws and recommendations of Creation will bring you long life and good years in peace and love and joy, as you dost them justice and obeyest them.
6. Love and joy will accompany you and never leave you, let them shine and radiate and carry them as your most precious jewels, so it is inscribed upon your tablet of life eternally.
7. Verily, you will find favor and intelligence, which are pleasing to human beings and yourself.
8. Be raised up and rely on the love and wisdom of Creation, and trust therein more than in your intellect, which can be fooled by untruth, so it has to learn continuously.
9. Remember Creation in all your ways, for by Its laws and recommendations It will truly and justly lead you forever.

10. Do not fancy yourself to be knowing and wise, but consider the endless wisdom of Creation and flee from evil.
11. This will keep your body healthy and it will quicken your life and your mind.
12. Honor and praise Creation and life with the possessions of your understanding and the love and with all that you have reached of knowledge and wisdom and truth yourself.
13. Then you will not be lacking in anything, and you will have all necessities in store, as there are provisions in filled barns, and drink and wine in abundance in filled winepresses.
14. Listen, man of Earth, reject not the discipline of righteousness, and be not impatient in the practice of discipline because the unrighteous live without discipline, the wicked and mischievous ones, and to them will be self-elected punishment.
15. The human being who loveth truth and doeth it justice, practiceth discipline and doth not make himself self-punishing for he findeth pleasure in discipline, like a father in the son.
16. It is well with the human being, who findeth wisdom and whose mind is agreeable to him, if he liveth in discipline according to the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation.
17. It is of full value to man to live in discipline, which is better for him than to acquire all wealth, for its proceeds are better than silver and gold or precious stones, which the unrighteous ones heap in masses and thereby are the living dead.
18. Discipline and wisdom are more precious than pearls, and everything which man may desire is not like unto them.
19. Long life is always at the right hand of discipline and wisdom, and to their left are well-earned and honest riches and real honor also.
20. And the ways of discipline are lovely ways and all its steps are peace, for discipline is given through knowledge about what is just and also through truth and wisdom and love.
21. Discipline is a tree of life to all who grasp and practice it; and wise and just are those who create and hold it within themselves.
22. For verily, Creation has created the universe and the heavens and the suns and earth worlds and all life through wisdom, and proven and prepared everything through Its own counsel of discipline.
23. Through the discipline of creative wisdom the depths of the universe are partitioned, so that galaxies and many types of stars exist and so life on Earth exists and everywhere, and that the clouds spend fine moisture on the Earth which is made dripping as dew.
24. Man of Earth, do not let discipline leave from your mind, so you may see its success and become blissful and intelligent.
25. If you practice discipline, you will happily walk on your path that your foot will not stumble, and if you lie down to rest, tired, you will not be afraid but sleep refreshingly and sweet.
26. And if you practice discipline, the sudden fear of terror will be strange to you, neither will the storm of the Creation-deniers and other unrighteous ones frighten you, if it cometh with misery and war and hatred and persecution, for discipline is your defense and your common sense, if you act righteously and prudently so that your feet are protected and that they do not get caught.
27. Rule in discipline and do not refuse to do good to those in need, if you are in the position to do such.
28. Therefore practice discipline in all things, and also speak not to your neighbor that he shall leave to come back at another time, if you can give him of which he asketh you and of which he is in need, whether this is advice or deed or food or anything else of necessity.

29. Do not strive for evil against your neighbor, whether he loyally liveth with you or whether he is a stranger under your roof, because if you live in discipline you regard your neighbor and do not harm him.
30. If you live in discipline unto wisdom, you do not quarrel with your neighbor, equally, whether he gave you cause or has done you no harm.
31. If discipline of wisdom liveth within you, you do not emulate a wicked one and do not choose any of his ways.
32. The wicked one is a rebellious one and he createth horrors of all types for himself.
33. In the house of the non-disciplined ruleth horror and curse of their own power, but the house of the disciplined one is blessed.
34. The disorderly mocketh the disciplined one, yet the disorderly maketh himself miserable and thereby repulseth himself from grace.
35. The disciplined are wise and will inherit honor; yet they are mocked by the disorderly that they could fall into disgrace, if the fools gained the upper hand, yet the disciplined will bear rewarding harvest anyhow sooner or later.
36. Listen, men of Earth, take note that you learn and become wise, consider your discipline and live with it in wisdom and righteousness and in love and peace, in knowledge and truth.
37. Verily, I give you a good teaching if I instruct you that you shalt obey the laws and recommendations of Creation and also that you shalt not abandon the laws of life.
38. And I say unto you, I am a son of man and your Prophet, and I am taught and versed in the truth of Creation through my own power and also through the power of the father-friend who is the JHWH.
39. And Creation taught me through Its laws and recommendations, that I shall open my consciousness to It and grasp and obey Its teaching of truth, and I listened to the call of love which informed me that I shall keep the laws and recommendations, whereby I would live.
40. Therefore hear, man of Earth, accept everything of wisdom and accept everything of understanding whichever you can get hold of, however never forget and deviate from the speech of truth and from the laws and recommendations of Creation.
41. Do not deviate from nor abandon the way of Creation and thus Creation will keep you; and love Creation in reverence and honor, so It will protect you.
42. Verily, the beginning of wisdom is if you gladly hearest it, and if prudence through real knowledge is more precious to you than all possessions and riches.
43. Regard the wisdom and the discipline, as you will elevate yourself thereby and you will bring yourself to honors if you really keepest discipline and wisdom in honesty.
44. Discipline and wisdom will beautifully adorn your head, and they will decorate you with a magnificent crown of honor.
45. Hear then, man of Earth, and accept my speech of truth and wisdom, then your years of life will be many and you will be peaceful and also give your neighbor peace.
46. Verily, I am your Prophet, and I will direct you to the way of truth and wisdom and also lead you on right roads.
47. And I will lead you, man of Earth, so when you walkest your walk doeth not become sour, and when you runnest that you dost not stumble.

48. Hold onto the discipline of wisdom and never abandon it, preserve it in all things of life, for verily it is your life.
49. Do not enter upon the path of mockers and the ignorant and the Creation-deniers, and also do not enter the way of the evil ones.
50. Let go of the Creation-opposing one and do not walk with him to do likewise; withdraw from him and pass him by, if he does not want to be instructed about truth.
51. Know, the evil ones do not walk in discipline, and they do not go to sleep before they have not committed evil; and they rest not until they have committed harm.
52. The undisciplined are the evil ones, the unrighteous, the malicious, the wicked and the mockers and the non-creative, and they are those who nourish themselves with Creation-strange bread, and who drink the wine of mischief.
53. The way of the non-creative and the wicked is like dimness and darkness, and they know not and see not where they will fall.
54. The path of the disciplined and righteous, however, shineth like the light which always gleameth brighter until the full day of all fulfillment.
55. Man of Earth, neighbor, as you are to me, regard my words and bend your ear to my speech of truth and wisdom and love and to knowledge.
56. Do not let your eyes and your gaze veer away from the truth and also not from discipline, and keep them well in your consciousness.
57. Listen, discipline and wisdom and love, knowledge and truth through the laws and recommendations of Creation are life to those who find them, and to them the entire life becomes whole.
58. Protect the discipline and wisdom and the knowledge and the truth of Creation in your consciousness with all diligence, because life prospereth and liveth thereby.
59. Put away from you the perverse mouth and let the slander-mouth be far from you, and let your eyes see straight ahead and keep your eyelids open, so you see correctly before you and seest and recognizest the truth.
60. And look upon your way, and let your feet walk evenly so you walk assuredly and visibly without stumbling.
61. And be not wavering, neither to the right nor to the left, and therefore walk the path of the righteous and avoid the way of evil.
62. Observe discipline and wisdom and also the love, knowledge and truth, for life is rooted in them.
63. Be wise in discipline and truth, and be glad about what has passed away, for verily: The wise one learneth from the past, and only fools cry about what has flown away.
64. And discipline permeateth all existence of life, so also the upbringing of descendants.
65. And there shall be discipline with the parents as also with the children, so the parents conduct themselves in discipline toward their descendants and the children practice discipline toward their parents.
66. As human beings conduct their life in discipline, they only form the bond of marriage when they have become of age and have reached maturity for the marriage bond.
67. And marriage is a great duty and task and it also containeth all duties of life, as also the rearing of descendants.
68. But the rearing of descendants resteth in the strictest discipline of the parents, who must be training in righteousness and love and in wisdom and knowledge.
69. But discipline shall be present with the parents in the rearing of descendants, that just treatment is conferred upon the children, which shall not be with beating and corporal punishment, and not with psychic torment or anxiety or fear.

70. And man shall first mature to discipline within and outside himself, so he is understanding and patient before he procreateth descendants so he then shall treat these in justice, in wise discipline.
71. Discipline has to be acquired by man for all affairs of life, and the fewer in years of life he counteth, the smaller is the measure of his discipline.
72. And if the discipline of a human being is still small and not in good measure of what is essential for life, he is still not of age and not able to conduct his life in his own strength and responsibility, and therefore he shall not enter into a marriage bond.
73. Namely it is given, that the one low in discipline harmeth the smaller ones and causeth them damage and setteth himself over them, void of all mercy and void of common sense and of understanding.
74. And with the years of life, common sense and understanding of man groweth and also the discipline, if effort is made thereto, so the training of descendants is also being handled accordingly.
75. Thereby also is proven, that parents of lesser years of life treat descendants more wrongly and with less discipline than parents of greater age, who are more disciplined and wise.
76. And as common sense and understanding and the discipline and wisdom, the love and knowledge and the truth grow in man with the years of age, if effort is made thereto, the understanding for the children also groweth, so it is said according to truth, that parents in younger years treat their descendants more falsely and with less discipline than they would do at greater age with children, who are not of their own blood or who are children of their own descendants.
77. But also the same is valid for the partners of a marriage bond among themselves, and the same also is valid among sisters and brothers and friends and acquaintances, and also the same is valid from human being to human being and also from neighbor to neighbor, equally whether ties as relatives exist or whether there are no ties of a connection as in strangers to strangers.”

CANON 29

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is admonition.
3. And the Prophet of the New Age speaketh to you, man of Earth, that you takest note of my words of wisdom and that you bendest your ear to my teaching of truth, which is the truthful teaching of the laws and recommendations of Creation.
4. Therefore be wise that you hearest and keepest good advice, so that your mouth and your thinking and acting know to make the difference.
5. For verily, many differences are present among men, between good and evil, between right and wrong and between moral and immoral, and also between the honorable and the disgraceful.
6. And to the disgraceful belongeth lewdness, which is immorality and whoredom, but also viciousness and all evil of the world, which is committed due to the falsity of man’s thinking and man’s actions.
7. The whore and the male-whore commit lewdness for pay or without pay, and every female is a whore, who giveth herself for fornication to more than one husband, and also every man is a male-whore, who commits fornication with a whore or commits fornication with other women to whom he is not legally husband, or with whom he doeth not stand in evolutionary love.

8. The lips of the whore and of the male-whore are as sweet as honey, and their throats are smoother than oil and their bodies are softer than velvet.
9. But verily, afterwards the honey is bitter like vermouth and the oil is sharper than a two-edged sword, and the soft velvet is stinking slime full of disgust.
10. The feet of the whores and male-whores run down into death and their ways lead into the grave, because they create quarrel and dispute and strife, dissention and destruction, and they also create sickness, evil, disease and infirmity and spread them and carry them to the people.
11. Whoredom of man and woman goeth not straight on the way of life, and their steps and walks are unsteady, so they never know where they go, and they are never calculable in any thing.
12. So then, man of Earth, listen to my words, live for truth and do not depart from the speech of my teaching.
13. Let your ways be far from whoredom and do not go near the door of its house, so you are not a stranger before honor, and that you do not consecrate your years of life to the gruesome which bringeth to you torment in thinking and feeling and in the body, because disease and infirmity striketh you in everything.
14. But if you committest whoredom you will be stricken by all evil, and thus strangers will fill themselves with your fortune and riches, as self-created punishment which is for your doing under a strange roof and at a strange place and in a strange house.
15. And if you committest whoredom, you thereafter have to sigh when your body is stricken with infirmity and disease, and you also would have to sigh when your possessions and fortune and riches are devoured, and when strangers fill and enjoy themselves therewith.
16. If you committest whoredom, you would hate discipline and the wisdom and love, the truth and the knowledge, and you would disgrace all righteousness and life.
17. And your speech would be like this, as it has already been spoken by the disgraceful heretofore who said:
18. By creating wickedness I have come to all misfortune before all the people and before the nation, because I have not obeyed the truth and the voice of the Prophet, to whom I have not lent my ear as he yet wanted to instruct me.
19. Man of Earth, so the Prophet speaketh unto you: Drink water from your own ditch and draw from your own well, but also float on your own river.
20. Let your wells and ponds flow out into the water creeks of your own fields, so that the waters do not reach strange trenches and break through and flood the alleys and cellars.
21. Be concerned about the purity of truth and love alone and also about the knowledge and the wisdom, so strangers do not destroy them and lead you into the disgrace of whoredom which is abomination and vice.
22. Your spring shall be blessed, also enjoy your house and the husband shall enjoy his legal wives, as the wife shall enjoy her legal husband, so they preserve their youth.
23. Man of Earth, why do you want to amuse yourself with strangers in whoredom and fondle others than those, who are truly devoted to you in love and legality.
24. And verily, man himself decideth about all things of his life and his life conduct, for everybody's ways are open through the laws and recommendations of Creation, and he also measureth all his walks himself.

25. The misdeed of the Creation-denier itself will catch him, so he createth self-produced punishment, and also he will bind himself with the rope of his own infamy and will be held by it, so he hangeth himself therewith.
26. Therefore the evildoer will die in his own punishment, because he despises moral and admonition, because he will not let himself be drawn by admonition and wisdom, so for the sake of his great foolishness it will not be well with him.
27. And verily, everybody shall be admonished thus, man and woman and child, that life only prospereth by acting upon the warning, but that due to disregard of the warning life wilteth and dieth.
28. But warning is given to man for all things, man of Earth, but also duty and responsibility, so you become sponsor for your neighbor, whereby you also must stretch forth your hand to your neighbor to help and to instruct, so he may walk on the right path.
29. Therefore you are admonished to do your duty and carry responsibility that you instruct the disgraceful in the truth, but that you dost not get together with them and dost not commit whoredom and evil with them.
30. Thereby you are tied to your neighbor by the speech of your mouth, and you also are tied by the speech of your mouth, how and whatever you sayest.
31. And therefore it is well for you to conduct the speech of your mouth in honor and instructing as well, because a speech of your mouth in falsity burdeneth you with loss.
32. Thus do right, man of Earth, so you are righteous and savest yourself from evil and also the disgraceful and unrighteous and all evil.
33. Do not let yourself fall into the hands of your neighbor, so he doth not mold you according to his mind if he is evil; but hurry and press and drive the neighbor in instructing him, so he also becometh knowing and righteous, but do this only if the neighbor striveth for the truth and for instruction.
34. If your neighbor striveth for instruction, then your instruction shall not be hurried, not pressing and not driving, but it shall only bring attention and also be informing.
35. See, man of Earth, let not your eyelids close and also let your eyes not sleep and your consciousness and mind not slumber, but save yourself and your neighbor, like the deer saveth itself in a quick jump from the fangs of the beast of prey, or as the bird escapeth lightning-fast from the hand of the birdcatcher.
36. And also be like the ant which you observest, so you are not a lazy one who idleth like the useless and scamps and sluggards.
37. And like the ant so man shall also be, diligent and industrious, so he is productive and progressing, that he also is providing, and likewise that he create and earn his daily bread, and also during summer and autumn store his provisions that he has food and drink in winter.
38. But you, lazy one, how long liest you in idleness and practicest slothfulness, without doing your work and bringing in your harvest; when will you arise from your rotting sleep?
39. But if you want to, then sleep still a little, slumber a little, clasp your hands together so you sleepest and walkest in slothfulness, but do not be surprised if poverty overtaketh you like a fast runner, and lack like an armed man.

40. Verily, a wicked man, a disgraceful one, walketh with a pretended mouth and he winketh with false gaze of the eyes, and also without manners he indicateth with his feet and pointeth with his fingers, as all the while he striveth for evil and entertaineth the false and wrong in his mind and also spreadeth quarrel.
41. But the evil one, who disregardeth all warning, shall be not surprised if suddenly his destruction cometh and he will be broken rapidly, and also no help will be rendered to him.
42. Yet suddenly the destruction will overcome the evil ones and they cannot escape it, and they will be broken rapidly and no help will be rendered to them.
43. The evil ones are those, who commit every disgrace and who differentiate not between one wickedness and another, which are many with man of Earth, of which 77 are of the worst manner.
44. The 77 worst disgraces, which are committed by the evil and unrighteous ones and which truthfully are the worst evils of all evils, are:
45. Whoredom
46. Haughty eyes
47. False tongue
48. Blood hands
49. Evil pranks
50. Quick feet
51. Doing damage
52. Sowing quarrel
53. Lack of discipline
54 Taking vengeance
55. Hating
56. Thievery
57. Slimy speech
58. Bond breaking
59. Uncleanness
60. Disorderliness
61. Lying
62. Sectarianism
63. Jealousy
64. Sadism
65. Licentiousness
66. Warring
67. Power greed
68. Profit greed
69. Being greedy
70. Megalomania
71. Tyranny
72. Egotism
73 Slavery
74. Torture
75. Judging
76. Torment
77. Dispute
78. Evil speech
79. Dependence
80. Protection of prostitution
81. Angel making
82. Legacy hunting
83. Legacy disputes
84. Disgraceful speech

85. Interrupting speech
86. Causing shame
87. Violating honor
88. Disregarding respect
89. Irreverence
90. Belief
91. Idolatry
92. God service
93. Cult service
94. Sacrifice
95. Adherence
96. Greediness
97. Vice
98. Addiction
99. Defamation
100. Self-pity
101. Pity
102. Indifference
103. Wantonness
104. Negligence
105. Carelessness
106. Evil striving
107. Evil acting
108. Lovelessness
109. Ignorance
110. Naughtiness
111. Lack of wisdom
112. Lack of truth
113. Mutilation
114. Robbery
115. Sacrilege
116. Plundering
117. Spreading false teaching
118. Weakness
119. Laziness
120. Necromancy
121. Disloyalty
122. Man of Earth, keep the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation and also obey the rules of the order, which in wisdom have to be established by the Spirit leaders, so order prevaileth all around.
123. Acquire the 77 evils of disgrace as concepts in your consciousness, so they are constantly present to warn you, so if you goest they accompany and protect you, and if you liest down they keep you during sleep, and if you awakenest again, they constantly speak to you admonishingly and protect you from evil doings.
124. Consider, man of Earth, every recommendation is a lamp unto you and every law a light, and the practice of discipline is a way of life unto you.

125. And discipline shall be law and recommendation unto you, so that you will be protected from all evil, and also that the husband is protected from the evil woman or from the slick tongue of the strange one, who committeth whoredom.
126. And discipline shall be law and recommendation unto you, so that you will be protected from all misery, and also that the wife is protected from the enticing words of the beautiful man or from the slimy tongue of the stranger, who is a male-whore.
127. And the husband shall not let himself be seduced by the beauty and the slick tongue of a strange woman, and also a wife shall not let herself be seduced and entangled by lack of manhood of the womanly beauty of a strange man, as also not by lying words and gifts and wooing.
128. And neither wife nor husband shall get entangled by the eyelids or by a body part or by the speech or by riches or by any other way with strange men or women, for a whore or a male-whore take the bread and the understanding and the health from the righteous ones.
129. Verily, a whore or a male-whore greedeth for the bread of the righteous ones, and also they destroy their families, if the righteous ones in carelessness let themselves be lulled to sleep and follow the whores' and male-whores' recommendation and seduction.
130 Verily, nobody can carry a fire in his bosom without burning his clothes, and also a damageable one cannot walk on coal embers without burning his feet.
131. Therefore the feet and clothes burn of those, who go to their neighbor's wife or husband or to whores or male-whores because no one remaineth unpunished, who toucheth such illegally.
132. Whoever committeth thievery or judging or is dependent or committeth another of the 77 named disgraces, he is a fool and like those, who bring their life to destruction with other breaks of the laws and recommendations and the order.
133. And the plague and disgrace and punishment striketh the fallible sooner or later and in every case, because they themselves enjoin and create them and cannot eradicate them, if they do not totally abandon the way of evil and finally live unto truth.
134. And the husband who goeth to a strange woman, and also the wife who goeth to a strange man, are both male-whores and whores, and they shall be certain that their falsity partners and the betrayed husbands will get excited in evil fury, so they will spare no time to take vengeance for the falsity from their sides, because they also are still unrighteous ones.
135. And the Prophet instructeth further about the invitation and promise of wisdom, which is with Creation since eternity, and recognizable to man in Its laws and recommendations and in Its sevenfold order:
136. Listen, man of Earth, if you openest your ear and your mind, you hearest the call of wisdom, and also the power of prudence penetrateth into you.
137. And wisdom and prudence shall be ever present unto you, for they shout to you wherever you goest, on the open road and in the street, at the gates of cities and at the doors of houses and in the rooms in which you livest, but also in the field and meadow and forest, and on the waters and in the air.
138. But as the wisdom and prudence shout to you everywhere, you men of Earth, so I also shout to you, you men and women and you people everywhere, so that you hearest my words of truth, so that finally you payest attention and learnest and livest righteously and mayest not say another time, that you have not been taught and that you have not heard my voice nor received the scripture of truth.
139. Pay attention in prudence, you fools and unwise ones, and absorb in your consciousness that of which I have to instruct you.
140. Listen, for I speak unto you, and verily these are words which are princely, instructing and wise and they are of justice; therefore take them to heart.

141. My mouth and my scripture speak the truth, because my lips disdain untruth, as also my hand, through which the scripture is given.
142. All speeches of my mouth are just, because therein is nothing wrong nor false, for it is the truth of truth not falsifiable and not perverseable.
143. And all just and true speeches of my mouth are a straight line and correct to those, who truthfully seek for the truth and want to accept it.
144. Man of Earth, accept the discipline of wisdom, so that it is more precious to you than silver and gold, and also regard the teaching of truth higher than pearls and precious stones.
145. Discipline and wisdom, knowledge, truth, love and also true life are more precious than silver, gold, pearls and most costly precious stones; and of everything man may wish for himself, nothing can be comparable thereto.
146. Wisdom itself shouteth so that it is heard and understood by man: “I am the truth and within me liveth prudence, and truly I always know to give good advice.”
147. And the Prophet sayeth: “Fear and anxiety live within man, created by ignorance and injustice and also by oppression and tyranny and uncountable evils of every type.
148. But in fear and anxiety man hateth the eye of haughtiness, the arrogance and all evil ways and everything else, which is presented by the power greedy, misleaders and by the 77 evils of disgrace, and also man is enemy to the false mouth who denieth this truth.
149. In wisdom liveth everything, counsel and deed and understanding, common sense and might, and through wisdom the wise one ruleth and placeth justice, as everything is given through the laws and recommendations and through the order of Creation; and as man liveth in wisdom and conducteth himself, so anxiety and fear depart from him, and the bad destroyeth itself.
150. Through wisdom man is instructed and led by the JHWH, by the Prophet and by the Spirit leaders, because they love the wisdom they sought and found, as man of Earth now also shall seek it and find.
151. And verily, honor and riches are in wisdom and in discipline, but also lasting possession and justice, as also well-meaning and just admonition, so discipline and wisdom in all things shall be adhered to.
152. And the fruit of admonition shall be better to man than finest gold, and also the fruit of admonition shall be better to man than precious stone.
153. Admonition walketh upon the right path and also on the road of justice, so that man is well supplied therewith and follows it wisely and from It gives birth to a treasure.
154. Wisdom was in Creation and also discipline and admonition at the very beginning of Its ways, and therefore everything was within It, before It created the first life.
155. And love, wisdom, knowledge and truth, discipline and admonition are placed by Creation from the very beginning and from eternity to eternity and from all-great-time to all-great-time.
156. And everything was created within Creation before the depths of space existed, and before the wells issued forth water, and before the mountains were lifted up before the hills and plains.

157. So then obey the directions of Creation, men of Earth, so it will be well with all those who listen to the admonition and who walk the ways of the direction.
158. Listen to the admonition so you practice discipline and learn wisdom, so that you turn away from evil and become righteous.
159. It is well unto the human being, who listeneth to admonition and the directions that he is watchful and keeps his door open for the instruction of truth.
160. But whoever findeth truth, findeth life and will reach satisfaction by human beings and everything which creepeth and flyeth and which existeth in love and life.
161. But whoever disregardeth admonition and fleeth from truth, mocketh life and createth hell for himself, which is a condition of evil in man, but not a place.

CANON 30

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is wisdom.
3. And the Prophet handeth down the friendly call of wisdom of salomonic value, but also the warning about the beckoning of foolishness and the blessing of righteousness, as well as the warning about the ill success of unrighteousness.
4. Creation erected wisdom and cut the seven pillars of life which are loyalty, love, truth, knowledge, wisdom, discipline and justice, according to which man shall live and act right therefore.
5. And thus speaketh the Prophet: “Through my instructions I send out the joy of truth, upward unto the heights of the world that they are heard by all.
6. Whoever lacks understanding, he may come to me or to my students who have been taught, who lovingly instruct all in the truth who want to listen to truth and obey it, equally, whether the seeking ones are prudent ones or fools or jesters or unrighteous ones.
7. Come unto me, you who are unwise and seekest for truth and you, who in your search for truth, are weary and heavy laden due to lack of understanding and of wrong.
8. Arise, every one of you, and follow my words of truth, also eat of my bread and drink of my wine which I give unto you, but abandon your unwise manner so that you will live and walk on the road of prudence.
9. But know that mockers are around you who mock your way of justice, that you should not walk upon it, but regard them not and also harm them not for the mockers mock themselves.
10. Consider, whoever disciplineth the mocker will put mockery and disgrace upon himself, and who ever judges or punishes the fallible or guilty or the unrighteous one will be scoffed at and cursed and hated.
11. Punish not the mocker for he will hate you, so then practice righteousness and you will notice that wisdom also giveth love to the mocker and the unrighteous one.

12. If you givest love and friendly words to the mocker, he will thereafter be thoughtful when you have gone your way, as also a wise one taketh every gift that he still becomes wiser, as also the righteous gaineth in the teaching when he is taught.
13. The beginning of wisdom in man is life's beginning, and to recognize the wise and the knowing one is true understanding.
14. Through wisdom the days of man will become many and also the years of his life will multiply.
15. Man, if you are wise, then you are wise unto yourself; but if you are a mocker, then you mock yourself, thus you will carry the burden alone.
16. But if you are foolish, wild and full of chatter, you know nothing and are one of the ignorant and unrighteous.
17. And if you are one of the ignorant and unrighteous to whom the stolen waters taste sweet and the robbed bread is a relish, because they do not know that the waters are poisoned and that the bread containeth death sprouts, then they are already dead and guests of the deep pits of putrefaction.
18. And it is taught that a wise son is his father's joy, but that a foolish son bringeth grief and death to the mother.
19. Thereby is being said that unrighteous possession doth not help and not prosper, but that righteousness and wisdom saveth from death.
20. Verily, wisdom letteth the psyche of the righteous not suffer from hunger; but it pusheth away the appetites of the unwise and unrighteous, so their psyche suffers damage due to their own fault.
21. And it is truthfully said: Lazy hands make poor, but busy hands make rich.
22. The prudent gathers during the summer and at all harvest time, but the lazy and imprudent oversleep the time and become a disgrace.
23. The head of the righteous beareth the shine of blessing, but the mouth of the unrighteous will be befallen by their own mischief.
24. The blessing of the righteous remaineth remembered in the memory of men, but the name of the unrighteous will decay.
25. Whoever is wise in thinking and desiring and acting liveth according to the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation, but whoever has a mouth of a fool will be beaten by his own foolishness.
26. Whoever liveth in innocence liveth safely and righteously, but whoever is wrong in his conduct of life will stand openly at the whipping post.
27. But whoever winketh with the eyes will cause trouble, but whoever conducteth open signs and doeth nothing hidden, unto him will be joy.
28. The mouth of the unrighteous and babblers will be laden with infirmity, but the mouth of the righteous is a wellspring of life.
29. Love covereth many mistakes and transgressions, however hate causeth dispute.
30. On the backs of fools burn the signs of the whip, but over the lips of the understanding and righteous pour forth wisdom and love.
31. The fools live in anxiety and fear and terror, but the wise keep the teaching of truth in wisdom.
32. The unrighteous and the fools impoverish themselves and their poverty maketh them stupid, but the righteous maketh himself prudent and rich and he useth his possessions for life, while the fools and unrighteous squander their income in stupidity.
33. Whoever keepeth discipline walketh upon the path of life, but whoever liveth undisciplined and needeth reprimanding remaineth in error.
34. The man, who has a false mouth, containeth hatred within and poisoneth his life, he also is a fool like the one who denieth or lieth.
35. And the man is false within and outside who maketh many words about a matter, for a babbler babbles much, because he strengtheneth his false words in the knowledge that they are false and lying.

36. The wise is prudent and without falsehood, wherefore he maketh few words about a matter or is silent because he knows that the truth requires only words in small numbers, so he opens his lips sparingly for words and for advice.
37. Speaking compareth to tarnished silver which dirtieth the hands, but silence is like polished gold in which the eye delighteth.
38. Thus the righteous and the just one speak in discipline with chosen and striking words and are not babbling, while the unrighteous and unwise one blabbers and babbles and maketh many words about nothing, so he is recognized thereby as a liar.
39. The fools, who make many words and babble like the sparrows, will die of their foolishness, but the lips of the righteous and the wise tend and refresh many who live thereby and awaken in reverence.
40. Verily, the blessing of wisdom maketh man rich without effort, if he followeth the advice of wisdom and also liveth thereby.
41. But a fool doeth mischief with wisdom and thereby harvesteth his own scorn, for as fool he payeth no attention because he is not wise.
42. Verily, whatever the wise honoreth and respecteth and keepeth in reverence, that will bring him his wages, so he will receive everything in joy which can be given to him of goodness.
43. But the unwise and unrighteous, who is respectless and without honor and without reverence, is threatened by lightning and by thunder and everything will be for him like bad weather which passeth and leaveth its damage behind.
44. As sweet bringeth damage to the teeth and as smoke burneth in the eyes, so also the lazy and the good-for-nothing and the thief bring damages and burning pain to those, who are favorably inclined toward them.
45. Verily, wisdom increaseth the days of life for the righteous one, but the years of life of the unwise will be shortened.
46. The life of the righteous and wise is joy and knowledge and love and truth, the life of the unrighteous and unwise is joyless, ignorant and loveless and without truth, and all their hopes will forever be lost.
47. The way of the righteous and wise is truly a defiance of the best defense, but the way of the fools and evildoers and unrighteous and unwise is troublesome stupidity.
48. The righteous and wise will never again fall or be pushed over, but the unrighteous and unwise calleth himself a fool and he stumbleth and falleth and will be pushed over all the time, so he hitteth his head and stupidity gaineth further possession of him.
49. Therefore, it will be that the mouth of the righteous bringeth wisdom, love, prudence, truth and knowledge as also joy and peace, hope and progress, but the false and unrighteous and unwise and all offenders and all other rabble will break their tongue and find annihilation through their own kind.
50. The lips of the righteous and wise teach and instruct of truth, wisdom and knowledge and love, as also of joy, righteousness, peace and the laws and recommendations and order, so life beginneth therefrom and also healing things.

51. Yet the lips of the unrighteous and unwise do not teach and instruct, but they babble about lying and deceit, and they sow hatred and vengeance and unrighteousness, ignorance, war and bloodshed and all evil up to destruction and annihilation, so they destroy life and also create harmful things.
52. Verily, false ways are like a false scale which createth discord and injustice and which betrayeth and also lets arise horror; equally, the right way is like a scale which the full weight thereof giveth righteousness and honesty and also a well pleasing, good life.
53. Wisdom liveth with the reverent and prudent who practiceth modesty and unobtrusiveness, but whoever manages his existence in pride, he starveth in disgrace and unwilling gazes.
54. Agitation befalleth the scorners of truth and their malice bringeth damage to their psyche, equally the innocence of the righteous is devotion, and it leadeth and produceth joy.
55. Verily, righteousness delivereth from manifold evil and from evil dying, but the unjust possessions of the unrighteous createth only rage and anxiety within them on the day of their death.
56. Devotion is given to the righteous and wise who devote themselves to the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation; but devotion meaneth that something is being fulfilled, so the devotion is fulfillment and man is fulfilling, therefore devoting.
57. And the devoted maketh the way of his life straight in righteousness, but the undevoted will fall and crash due to his undevoted character.
58. The scorners of devotion catch and harm themselves in their own malice, but the devoted are protected and delivered from distress by their own righteousness.
59. When the undevoted one dieth, all his hope is lost and all his hating in malice and unrighteousness cometh to naught.
60. The devoted one delivereth himself of all trouble, but the undevoted one carrieth himself to the place of affliction and damnation.
61. The hypocrite babbleth in slimy lying and misleadeth and destroyeth the neighbor, yet the righteous and devoted one avoideth the slime and keepeth himself clean.
62. The undevoted destroy and annihilate, but the devoted erect and elevate everything to life.
63. The devoted one helpeth the neighbor to live so he will be blessed, but the fool is undevoted and he disgraceth his neighbor so his own evil punishment will overtake him.
64. The devoted and wise who is of loyal mind, keepeth silence about a matter which he secretly knoweth, but the slanderer deceitfully babbleth about it and carrieth on secret and malicious slandering talk.
65. Where no wise advice exists no right action exists, as also every nation dieth if the wise one doth not give his advice and leadeth the nation and the events according thereto.
66. But for a nation shall only be ONE wise advisor, because many cooks spoil the meal, likewise many advisors turn the advice into nonsense.
67. A human being shall and cannot be sponsor for another, for as he becometh sponsor soon harm will come over him; therefore everyone shall be sponsor for himself so he striveth to stand up to his own sponsorship.
68. And only such a man is safe from harm and doubt and prick of conscience, who does not tie himself with a vow to his neighbor in any matter, for man truly is changeable in his mind so that discord and malice and other evils can arise, if the level of the wise ones in modesty and love and righteousness has not been reached.

69. Verily, a most gracious wife attaineth to honor and respectful esteem, yet the one sponsored unjustly attaineth to riches not earned by himself like the tyrants, if he changes his mind and defieth the sponsorship.
70. Through his deeds to his neighbor the merciful doeth good unto himself, but the unmerciful can thereafter raise his fist against him, even if he harmeth his own flesh therewith.
71. The one who sponsoreth and voweth in wisdom and soweth in righteousness harvesteth certain goods, but the work of the unrighteous will fail.
72. Righteousness promoteth life, but to pursue evil promoteth death.
73. The evil ones may all join their hands, yet they will never receive help; but the seed of the righteous will fall on fertile ground and bear sprouts, so they will harvest.
74. Verily, a beautiful woman without discipline and without love is like a sow with a golden necklace and velvety shoes over her hoofs, also an unmanly man is like a boar without teeth and without propagation.
75. The wish of the righteous will always turn out well, but the hope of the unrighteous endeth in misfortune.
76. Verily, the righteous giveth and yet his wealth always increaseth, but the miser is stingy and always becomes poorer yet.
77. The human being who blesses abundantly will be refreshed, and as he giveth drink abundantly, so will he also receive drink in good measure.
78. Whoever hoardeth food will be cursed by men, but whoever selleth it, unto him will come blessings.
79. Verily, whoever seeketh good, to him good happeneth, but whoever striveth for misfortune will meet it.
80. Whoever seeth only the evil of the past constantly meeteth evil anew in daily life; but whoever seeth also the good of the past, to him life will become worth living and a joy.
81. Whoever praiseth the neighbor for whatever matter, he burdeneth the neighbor with passing joy and increasing trouble, for due to the praise he slackeneth in diligence and in effort because he thinketh that he is the best.
82. Whoever relieth on his wealth will perish, but whoever relieth on his hand’s work and on wisdom and prudence greeneth like a leaf.
83. Verily, whoever grieveth his own house, to him winds will be his inheritance, also a fool remaineth the slave of the unrighteous and unwise.
84. From the fruit of the righteous groweth a tree of life and a wise one winneth love and honor, reverence and respect from the seeking, hoping and righteous.
85. And as their life is right in all things and as the righteous has to endure all kinds of suffering, how much more has the unrighteous to suffer.
86. As the laws and recommendations of Creation are valid, they shall also be obeyed and regarded by man.
87. And as the laws and recommendations of Creation are of Spirit, they also are the laws and recommendations of order and of life.
88. In the beginning, Creation created laws and recommendations as order for justice and also as guidelines of life.

89. So therefore, the laws and recommendations are valid as ways which man shall walk in wisdom and prudence so that he be righteous.
90. And as the laws and recommendations of Creation are obeyed, man must not produce any other laws.
91. The laws and recommendations of Creation shall be valid as the true laws and recommendations of Creation, so they also shall be obeyed, because they alone have eternal validity.
92. But if man falleth away from the laws and recommendations, he produceth human laws and recommendations which are established on an erroneous logic and are faulty.
93. And if man is faint-hearted in his thinking, all laws and recommendations produced by himself are also faint-hearted which are like erroneous teachings.
94. If man presumeth to disregard the laws and recommendations of Creation, he forceth himself to produce his own laws and recommendations, but which are full of faults and which all lead astray also.
95. Laws and recommendations made by man provide injustice, murder and evil, so that evil spreads and gains the upper hand and man has no control over it nor over anything anymore.
96. And verily, laws and recommendations produced by man have a value only if they are produced in love, knowledge, truth and wisdom and logic.
97. But logic requires wisdom and recognition, love, knowledge and truth from man.
98. Verily, human laws and human recommendations are without power, if they do not rest in the laws and recommendations of Creation.
99. Verily, I say unto you: Wisdom hath to be acquired from the laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order of Creation which man altogether recognizeth in nature.
100. But if man doth not think and doth not seek for the truth, he is not able to acquire wisdom and remaineth a fool.
101. But if man is a fool, he cryeth about things which are not worth crying about, so therewith he increaseth his sorrow and his need and his misery.
102. But the wise do not cry and wail about lost things, and also not about those already long dead and about things of the past.
103. Whoever hath acquired abundant wisdom and liveth according to the laws and recommendations of Creation doth not tolerate that only the very minutest suffering is caused to any creature.
104. A fool, a jester, who doth not conquer his mind, seeth loss as advantage and advantage as loss and considereth great suffering as a joy.
105. Thereby, that man doth not apply himself to wisdom and doth not seek the knowledge, the love and the truth, and also doth not recognize the laws and recommendations of Creation, ariseth within him misunderstanding and all vices and evil, outrage and wickedness.
106. The dishonorable one, the whore and male-whore and protector of whoredom, the dumb, the stupid, the grumbling, the greedy and everyone who is an unrighteous, mischievous or other offender, as also the infamous or the rude or angry one, injury and punishment striketh him of his power, and he is poor in conscious reflection and also poor in thinking.
107. If man daily receiveth only a little of wisdom in Spirit in suitable manner, he groweth like the changing moon in the bright half of the month.
108. Verily, wisdom is the great possession of man, but also the created will which allows man to be male or female master over the truth and the knowledge and over fortune and love; but everything is truly meaningless without the power of Spirit.

109. A fool, who idly waiteth for destiny and resteth without being busy, cometh to naught like an unburnt clay pot in water.
110. Whoever tendeth a milk cow always receiveth milk; also the one harvesteth abundant fruits who tendeth wisdom, and through the power of Spirit bringeth it into application.
111. May man recognize every law and recommendation of Creation and as he has recognized one, he shall grasp it and live according thereto, for the laws and recommendations of Creation are the greatest wisdom.
112. Verily, not one eye can be found which would be like wisdom, no darkness which would be like ignorance, no force which would be like the power of Spirit, and no terror which would be like the poverty of thinking.
113. Verily, I say unto you: No greater happiness existeth than wisdom, and also no better friend existeth than the truth and the knowledge and the love, and no other savior existeth than the power of Spirit.
114. Whoever hath understanding may grasp the speech of my wisdom, so he is wise and knowing in truth and love.
115. Whoever truly and gladly is taught will be clever, but who wants to be uninstructed maketh himself a fool and remaineth such.
116. Whoever is devoted always receiveth comfort from love and wisdom and from knowledge and the truth, but a wicked damneth himself.
117. An uninstructed nature doth not further man, yet the root of the righteous absorbeth power and nourishment and bringeth growth and fruit.
118. A virtuous wife is the crown of her husband and also a disciplined husband is the greatest blessing to his wives; but a wife without virtue is evil and a burden to her husband and like a purulent boil on his leg, likewise an undisciplined husband is a horror to his wives and like a pool of corruption.
119. The striving and thinking of the righteous is sincere and good, however, the doing and thinking of the unrighteous is deception and disgrace and destruction.
120. The mouth of the wise and the righteous bringeth knowledge and hope and delivery, but the speeches of the unrighteous bring bloodshed and every evil.
121. The truth remaineth standing unchangeable for all times, and also remaineth standing the life and the house of the righteous, but the unrighteous will topple themselves and will perish in the fire of destruction.
122. Verily, the advice of a wise man or of a wise woman will be praised in reverence and respect, but the unwise fall into disgrace because they cannot impart wise counsel and are tricky.
123. Verily, I say unto you: Whoever establisheth small demands and waiteth patiently and doeth his work therefore is better off than the one who regardeth himself as great and maketh great demands, for he will be in need of bread.
124. The righteous treateth the people of every level justly and also the cattle and animals and the plants of all types, but the unrighteous is cruel and false, wherefore he also treateth everything like it.
125. Whoever indulges in unimportant and unnecessary matters and doth not do his work is a thief and good-for-nothing and also a fool, but whoever cultivateth his field will have a rich harvest and also bread in abundance.
126. The delight and joy and thinking and striving of the unrighteous is to do harm and to live ignorantly and unwisely in lovelessness, but the righteous createth roots in all things and growth and good fruit.

127. The unrighteous and evil one will be caught by his own words of falsehood, so he falls into anxiety and fear and misdirects his life unto his reincarnation; but the righteous and good escapeth all anxiety and fear and leadeth a life of joy, as this is also in his reincarnation.
128. Verily, much good cometh to the righteous wife and husband by their mouth and by their actions, and they also will receive recompense in equal measure, likewise the unrighteous husband and wife will be rewarded in evil.
129. Every man truly harvesteth the fruits of his hand's work and also the fruits of his mouth's words.
130. To the fool his own manner is well pleasing, yet the wise listeneth to good advice and liveth well in the fulfillment of the laws and recommendations.
131. Whoever is truthful and also wise speaketh freely what is right and without anxiety and fear, and he also doeth no swearing or other oaths, because as a man speaketh justly he does not need to enforce his testimony, wherefore his word shall be only yes or no.
132. A fool showeth his rage and his lack of self control and doth not recognize his own disgrace therein, but the intelligent one practiceth understanding and only when needed he pretendeth anger, so he does not disgrace and excite himself.
133. The tongue of the wise is healing like the best balsam, but the tongue of the unwise is careless and jumpeth out of his mouth, so it is stung by a poisonous insect like by a dagger.
134. A false tongue is not able to prevail long, however the truthful mouth speaketh eternally.
135. The wise createth peace and love and knowledge and truth and wisdom, yet the evil and unrighteous giveth evil advice and createth fraud and misery and all evil.
136. The righteous create a life for themselves without true suffering because they understand the truth, yet they are harmed by the unrighteous, but do not fall into misfortune like these.
137. Verily, a wise man or a wise woman do not broadcast or display their wisdom, but a fool loudly broadcasteth his foolishness.
138. Verily, the casual or the lazy hand has to pay interest and the tenth all the time and it will not create possessions, the industrious hand, however, createth possessions and collecteth the tenth and interest.
139. The wise bringeth comfort and peace with a friendly word, yet the unwise soweth suffering and discord with bad and unfriendly words.
140. The righteous has a better life than the unrighteous, but he shall beware of his neighbor and his artful seductions, if the neighbor is an unrighteous one.
141. The industrious man createth honest wealth in all things, yet the actions of the casual and lazy one do not prosper, so he becometh poorer and burdensome.
142. The way of righteousness is true life, and the prepared path holdeth no insurmountable obstacles and no evil deaths.
143. A wise child letteth itself be taught by its parents, but a mocking child mocketh its parents and runneth into ruin.
144. One relisheth a good fruit like the wise words from a mouth, but the offender trampleth down the good fruit and mocketh the wise words.

145. And whoever truly relisheth the good and wise words of a mouth keepeth his life, but whoever curseth wise words and abuseth with his mouth cometh into terror and horror.
146. The industrious one earneth his possession and receiveth it, but the lazy one becometh a thief therefore and yet doth not keep it.
147. The unrighteous one lieth and disgraceth and revileth himself therewith, but the righteous one is enemy to the lie and leadeth a happy life in honor.
148. The innocent one is protected by his righteousness, so hostility doth not scare him, but the unrighteous character bringeth downfall to a guilty one.
149. The righteous one is rich in poverty, the unrighteous one, however, is poor in his wealth.
150. A rich one is well able to save his life with his riches by bribing, but the poor one heareth no chiding and liveth in honor and esteem.
151. The lamp of the unrighteous man giveth off twilight and strife, yet the light of the righteous one brighteneth far away and bringeth calm and peace.
152. Wise is he, who letteth himself be advised and followeth the instruction and peacefulness is with him, but the proud one liveth in strife with himself and his neighbor.
153. What man keepeth together in honesty that increaseth and groweth large, yet the wealth quickly diminishes if it is kept loose and is squandered.
154. Hope which man desireth is a tree of life unto him, but if an unrighteous man hopeth, it vanisheth and he doth a deep fall.
155. Whoever disregardeth the word of truth, he corrupteth himself, yet whoever esteemeth and obeyeth the word of truth, to him it will be recompensed as he also rewardeth himself.
156. The teaching of truth is the teaching of the wise, and truly it is the wellspring of life by which are avoided the chains of evil.
157. The way of the unrighteous and scorners bringeth them suffering and pain, yet the fine prudence of the righteous one createth favor and joys for him.
158. Thus a prudent man doeth everything right in discernment, a fool, however, only spreadeth his foolishness and thereby createth advantage for the righteous, while for himself he createth loss.
159. The righteous messenger bringeth an honest message, but the unrighteous messenger bringeth lying and deceit, yet he himself suffereth loss thereby.
160. Whoever disregardeth discipline or abandoneth it falleth into poverty and disgrace, but the one practicing discipline attaineth to wealth and honor.
161. Only the jesters and fools avoid and hate and misunderstand a fault meant for instruction, but to a wise one an instructing fault is no dread but the joy of recognition.
162. Whoever truly associates with the wise in honesty will himself become wise, but whoever is a fool's fellow falleth into stupidity.
163. The righteous man findeth wisdom and understanding even in suffering, the fool, however, thinketh trouble and self-pity and hatred and destroyeth his life.
164. The righteous one transmitteth the true life down to grandchildren and into the far future, but the skeleton of the unrighteous one bleacheth without recollection and his remembrance is extinguished like a small fire over which water falleth.
165. Whoever raileth at just reproach, he is not worthy of life, but whoever is just practiceth his own censure and strict discipline.
166. The righteous is just so he liveth justly, but the unrighteous is unjust, because as fool he liveth in idiocy and in stupidity and doth not recognize the truth.

167. Because of a wise wife a husband erecteth a house, but a foolish woman breaketh it by her doings.

168. A wife, who esteemeth and honoreth her husband, walketh on the right path, also likewise is valid for the husband; but whoever disregardeth the husband walketh the wrong way, it is also as if one mate wants to be superior over another, or attacks him or her unjustly with words or unjustly contradicts the other.

169. A bad wife speaketh tyrannically to her husband like a fool, but a wise wife guardeth her mouth, the same is also valid for the husband.

170. And the tyrannical human being liveth in a delusion and also the obstinate one, as they bend and break everything to their advantage, yet the speech of delusion is transparent like an old cloth, so they call themselves fools.

171. The mocker is a fool even if he seeketh wisdom, for his seeking is falsehood and self betrayal, and he neither findeth wisdom nor truth.

172. The fool understandeth not the truth, and his thinking and feeling regardeth only himself, therefore, he liveth in idiocy and stupidity and whatever he causeth in suffering for himself that he claims to see in the others, only he doth not recognize it and destroyeth himself.

173. The fool himself destroyeth his psyche, yet he seeketh the fault in others and revileth them of dishonor and of false life conduct, but he only deepeneth his injury therewith and goeth astray without deliverance.

174. The fool babbleth and grumbleth about his neighbor, while he destroyeth his own life and home and also atrophieth in love and in understanding.

175. And as the fool babbleth and grumbleth about his neighbors and destroyeth his own life, for the slandered ones, meanwhile, from the backbiting babble and grumbling ariseth yet unintended advantage, because the prudent seeketh the truth and useth the foolishness of the fools as direction, so that he findeth the truth with the one slandered.

176. And the Prophet warneth man of Earth, so he commandeth unto him wisdom and the word that he shall not walk with the fool, because he learneth nothing from him but deteriorateth to foolishness and idiocy himself.

177. Verily, it is only the prudent one’s wisdom, that he payeth attention to his way of life, that he doth not fall for the deceit of the foolishness of the fools, and truthfully walketh the way of true life.

178. The fool’s suffering is to live in misfortune and in anxiety and fear and distress, the prudent one, however, recognizeth joy and wisdom even in suffering.

179. The righteous also suffereth, yet he suffereth not as fool, for he draweth up from the fullness and increaseth his recognitions and joys.

180. The sufferings of the fools are full of vice and disgrace and also of guilt, of misfortune and anxiety, of fear and need and distress, but the sufferings of the righteous are grief and starvation caused by the guilt of fools and other unrighteous, yet the wise one learneth therefrom and, nevertheless, liveth in joy, while the fools are annoyed and destroy themselves.

181. And verily, wherever much wisdom exists, there also is much grieving and starvation, yet the wise one learneth therefrom and groweth wiser, and thereby he also createth more joy, love, knowledge and truth, and so he always liveth high above the idiocy of the fools.

182. Foolishness createth anxiety and fear and the fools perish therein, but wisdom createth recognition and love, and so the wise one leadeth a life in righteous joy.

183. Wherever much wisdom blossometh, there truthfully is much grief, and whoever learneth much, he hath to suffer much, yet the suffering again is learning which bringeth joy and blissfulness and a righteous life.
184. The fool suffereth and doth not learn and doth not become wise, although he wants to have good days which he, however, doth not receive because his life is terror.
185. The wise one knoweth his own suffering and also his joy, and no stranger and no fool can meddle therein, but the fool doth not know his suffering and joy is unknown to him, and the likes of him and strangers daily meddle with his ill-humored character and his wrong doings.
186. The fool laugheth while he is mourning, however, his false joy bringeth him suffering and misery.
187. Only a fool wishes his neighbor good luck at his birthday or when another milestone of a year or another time is reached, for as he doeth so, he createth bad guidance of remembrance in a small brain so that new evil beginneth to fulfill itself.
188. The wise one speaketh about a matter in a straight line, but the fool in his babbling jumpeth from one matter to another and cannot keep one direction.
189. The fool fareth like the wise one, because as he speaketh, thinketh, acteth and feeleth, so it cometh back to him, therefore, to the fool comes foolishness and idiocy, but to the wise one come knowledge, love, truth and wisdom and joy.
190. The devoted man in his wisdom standeth eternally above the fool and his idiocy, likewise the wise one in his knowledge standeth eternally above the king and emperor.
191. Prudence in caution is the mother of wisdom, yet stupidity and thoughtlessness are the specters of foolishness.
192. A wise one averteth the bad, but the fool reacheth for it with both hands.
193. The wise one practiceth and liveth consideration, yet the impatient man rusheth and draweth harm to himself, like a jester who reacheth into the beehive with bare hands when the bees are inside.
194. Caution is the prudent one’s crown, but idiocy flickereth in the eyes of fools.
195. The neighbors talk behind the back of a fool and they also despise and hate him, but the prudent man is honored and he also has many true friends.
196. The fool despiseth his neighbor; but well unto the wise one who showeth mercy to the neighbor.
197. Where work is done with wisdom, there always is success and sufficiency in all things, but where words only are rendered, there is lack of everything.
198. The folly and stupidity and idiocy of the fools remain folly and stupidity and idiocy, however, the wealth of the wise one is wisdom which increaseth to love and loyalty, to kindness and knowledge and to joy, calm, truth and to everything, which is worth living for.
199. A loyal and righteous witness saveth the life of his neighbor, but whoever witnesseth falsely endangers his neighbor’s life and destroyeth his own.
200. Whoever honoreth truth liveth in a secure fortress, but also are protected his obedient family and his true friends, but whoever abuseth the truth, his house crasheth down and killeth him and his family and his company of fools.
201. To a man of prudence and wisdom life meaneth fulfillment, but the imprudent man is stupid because he leadeth his existence without meaning and understanding.

202. Around the wise one his students gather and he enjoyeth the few in number, but the fool is surrounded by many stupid people and he atrophieth in idiocy.
203. The student seeketh the wise one and teacher and letteth himself be taught by him, but the fool seeketh pupils whom he leadeth astray and maketh to offenders, so they murder him and laugh about and ridicule him.
204. The wise one is patient and harvesteth success, but the impatient man suffereth failure and defeat and he also revealeth his stupidity.
205. Whoever harmeth even the minutest life, slandereth life, but whoever giveth reverence even to the minutest, he honoreth Creation.
206. The righteous one is also comforted in his dying, but to the unrighteous man everything is only misfortune.
207. Understanding liveth in the wise one, and this also becometh apparent to the fool, but he can do nothing about it and is angry.
208. Righteousness elevateth every nation, but unrighteousness plungeth it into destruction.
209. The good industrious one delighteth every heart, but the shirker of work even suffereth slander among the fools.
210. The prudent answer of the wise one calmeth anger, but the unjust answer of the unwise man createth evil fury.
211. The wise one is able to conduct his speech in hard words and can impart advice, yet the wisdom therefrom is recognized by the neighbor and gratefully obeyed, however, the soft and false speech of the unwise man hitteth upon defense and hatred.
212. The tongue of the wise one maketh every teaching lovely, even if hard words coin the truth, but the mouth of the fool speweth forth mere foolishness and misunderstanding, even if the words are chosen.
213. The eyes of the wise one gaze everywhere and also the ears of the wise one listen around, however, the eyes of the fool look around and yet see nothing, and also his ears play in every corner and yet they hear nothing.
214. The wise one streweth good advice around, but the unwise man spreadeth rubbish and the plague.
215. The scorner does not love the one who scorneth him, but the wise loveth to be taught.
216. By kindness and loyalty an offence is reconciled, and also anxiety and fear driven away and the evil removed.
217. Man’s thinking deviseth many ways, yet the way of truth is only one.
218. Prophecy is only in the mouth of the wise ones, but lying and deceit leave the mouth of fools and liars, the necromancer and sectarians and idol-worshipers and god-believers and all who want to shine more and yet are ignorant.
219. A wise one reconcileth the dying with death, however the unrighteous is a fool and disgraceth the living one to death.
220. Whoever runneth into destruction is a fool, but fools are proud and carry their noses high, yet pride always goeth before the fall.
221. To the fool his way is well pleasing, yet it bringeth him death in the end.
222. Due to his own mouth and actions the fool runneth into great misfortune, but for the prudent man his mouth and actions achieveth honor and wealth.
223. An evil one and fool listen to evil and foolish mouths, as also a false one listeneth to false and dangerous tongues.
224. Wisdom’s last conclusion is wisdom itself, but the fool’s decision is evil dying.”

CANON 31

1. In the Name of Creation, the wise, the just.
2. Praise be unto Creation, which is remembrance.
3. And the Prophet proclaimeth the speech of remembrance of the JHWH that Earth men may know the past.
4. “This is the book of the word of truth which is revealed to you as teaching of wisdom and also as remembrance and way showing for your life, so that you carry no anxiety in your breast if you are one of the righteous, however that you let yourself be admonished to change to become righteous if you are one of the unrighteous.
5. Follow that which is given to you by your Prophet, and also follow that which is sent down to you by the JHWH and by his helpers.
6. Follow the wisdom of your Prophet and also follow the wisdom of the JHWH and follow your truthful Spirit leaders, so you do not follow false protectors of lying and deceit.
7. Many cities and many nations and much human life have been destroyed, since times of old, due to the guilt of false protectors and false prophets, as already also long before the time of Noahndakan, who lived in wisdom and erected the ark and survived evil destruction with his kin and all servants and animals.
8. Truly, punishment came over Earth mankind manifold and often, yet only because they fled from wisdom and the truth, the love and the knowledge, so that they created and burdened themselves with punishment.
9. Earth man hath cursed against himself and hath created for himself suffering and burdens and disgrace, guilt and lack and misery, and they also have lived in murder and fire and destruction, for due to their flight from truth, wisdom, love and the knowledge, they fell into the dark gorge of damnation.
10. Since times of old you didst commit injustice in all things, and you knowest this very well, yet therefore you feign false prayers of forgiveness to your false god and to your idols and believe that thereby you are forgiven, which however is not so, if you continuest to live in corruption and erroneous belief.
11. Therefore, abandon your false belief, your sectarianism and your selfish thinking, in which you are imprisoned and in which everyone is the other one’s enemy.
12. Truly, to you men of Earth, your world is given you as a place of life, where you are furnished provisions, where you shall live and die, where you spend the time of death and where you are brought forth in reincarnation; therefore, live in righteousness and change yourself to the life of life.
13. But you are like this, if you committest an act of disgrace since times of old, that you say: “We found our old one’s doing such, and our Creation hath commanded us so,” yet truly, Creation never commandeth acts of disgrace, and as the old ones have committed acts of disgrace, then this doeth not have to be with the descendants also.
14. But you knowingly act wrong like the old ones, because you mislead yourself in that you befriend devilish fools but exclude Creation and It’s laws and recommendations.
15. Truly, the creative laws and recommendations do not exclude the small and great joys of life, but only the disgraces which are committed openly or secretly in all manners of injustice.
16. Everything shall be cleared away which may be of grossness in the thinking of men, and through them shall flow streams of love and of peace, so they will speak that all praise shall be unto Creation which hath led them thereto.

17. And truly, man findeth not enough guidance within himself, if Creation Itself through Its laws and recommendations were not guiding, but as the wise ones are also guiding who are the JHWH and the Prophet.
18. And verily, the JHWH and the Prophet have actually always brought only the truth and have called thus: “Man of Earth, the truth is that you preparest heaven and hell for yourself, and that heaven and hell are given to you as an inheritance of your thinking and acting as recompense, depending on how you thinkest and actest.”
19. Noahndakan was a prophet of the JHWH and sent among the people of Earth to testify to the truth, that no other Creation existeth besides Creation, yet man of Earth ridiculed him and therefore, due to their own guilt and absurdity, they had to atone in the number of millions, because they excluded themselves from the ark and drowned in the wild waters.
20. The scorners and heads of the people babbled to Noahndakan, that he is in notorious error and confused in his speaking and thinking.
21. But Noahndakan said that he is bringing a message from the JHWH and sincere advice, that there will be a great flood of waters for many weeks, caused by a wandering star which often already had brought disaster.
22. But the people did not want to listen to Noahndakan and also did not want to know the truth about the wandering star, therefore, they did not follow the advice to leave the endangered land or to erect arks like Noahndakan did.
23. And Noahndakan warned the people and said: “Are you not surprised that a warning has come from the JHWH of Earth through a man from your midst, so that you are warned and become righteous and that you find deliverance?”
24. However, the scorners and rulers accused Noahndakan of falsity; so he fled from them and rescued himself and his kin in the ark, just before the wild waters broke loose and drowned the scorners and all people.
25. Truly, Noahndakan’s people were a blind people, but of the same blindness all generations of men of the Earth suffer today and the Prophet again mourneth about the blindness of his people.
26. Verily, only those are acting justly, who follow the word of truth of the JHWH and also those who follow the words of truth and wisdom of the Prophet, who in his true love is an immaculate one.
27. And the Prophet of truth is with you one last time, men of Earth, and he is also the same Prophet, who was with you heretofore, as you can find him mentioned in the scriptures of the ancestors of your old ones, as in the epics of Uruk Gart and in the Upandischadis, but also in the signs of the Tut anch Amon, in the old Thora and in the Qur-an and in the gospel and in other scriptures.
28. The Prophet, who is your Prophet, and who is the Prophet of the New Age, he, man of Earth, took all misery of suffering upon himself in true love to instruct you about the just and the unjust, so you can free yourself from burdens and fetters, which weigh heavily upon you and oppress you.
29. Men of Earth, but you doest not honor and strengthen and help your Prophet, and also you doest not accept the advice of his wisdom and teaching, as you have done in your previous life and as your old ones did also.
30. Oh’ mankind, truly, the Prophet is teaching wisdom and life unto you, as he hath done heretofore for all times, yet today like then, he is persecuted, scorned and accused of falsity by the fools who are the unrighteous.

31. But let yourself be taught, because thereby alone you attainest to true life, and also only thereby dost you prevent the threatening desolation caused by yourself and the manifold dying on your world.
32. Verily, man of Earth, if you followest not the truth of the Prophet, you condemnest yourself to erring, then no leader existeth for you who showeth the way of life unto you.
33. Already the old ones and you in former lives didst not look to the kingdom of the heavens and the Earth and to all things which are created by Creation, so you didst not see that your span of life rapidly approached the end, as you also seest it not today.
34. But ask not when your hour will be, because you knowest that the Prophet is apprised thereof, for as you are still offenders the truth can not be handed to you, even if erroneously you thinkest you hast a right thereto, however, as ignorant ones you have not this right, only you doest not want to know this truth.
35. And verily, it was revealed to you in former lives and also to your old ones, that you alone have the power to benefit or to harm yourself, therefore you also have to find the truth of the hidden in every thing and matter.
36. Truly, every man createth the bounty of good for himself, but also the measure of evil of all kinds, and he also is his own warner and bringer of all fate which befalleth him.
37. Man is human and also not higher and not lower than such, therefore no man standeth above another, so neither the master above him he presideth over, nor the king above the poor; but if you settest man and idols above you, then you passest yourself into slavery to the likes of you or to dead matter.
38. But if you still callest upon and worshippest those whom you placest over yourself, then you are deluded, for never ever will you receive help from those you worship, as you hast not received help formerly in other lives, and as also hath happened to your old ones.
39. Yet be fools, jesters and weak-minded and call upon your gods and idols and superiors and priests, yet truly, they are not able to help you, neither can they help themselves for they are offenders and unrighteous like you who also cannot help themselves.
40. Truly, only in the laws and recommendations is found forbearance and kindness, therefore, turn away from ignorance, man of Earth, and walk in the use of wisdom.
41. Displeasure, evil and injustice weigh on man of Earth since times of old already, and this was already so heretofore, when the first Prophet was on Earth, who was called Henok.
42. And Henok did his duty among the generations of men of Earth, yet he was mocked by fools the same as the Prophet of the New Age.
43. But Henok was born as Earth human and was prophet 9,308 years before the time of the prophet Jmmanuel, and thus 11,245 years before the Prophet of the New Age, and although he was Earth human due to birth on Earth, but his origin, meantime, was on Lasan, which is a world very far from the Earth.
44. Hence, this meaneth that Henok was a traveler from afar from the depths of the universe, but who was wise and knowing and able in truth, and who also was full of love and of sense of duty, so he took suffering and misery upon himself and worked as Prophet on Earth.

45. And much of the history is written in scriptures and books of Earth men, yet many things are falsified, so that the truth is much lacking.
46. But the words of blessings of Henok are written down somewhere else so they shall be instruction to man of Earth in remembrance, and so that man of Earth may remember the truth and change.
47. Therefore, the JHWH reporteth about the words of remembrance, which are given through Henok and others and which are of much instruction.
48. Thus these are the words of blessings of Henok, wherewith he blessed the righteous and wise, and who will survive without affliction at the day of dying, and who will be far away from the anxiety and fear of the evil ones and unrighteous.
49. And Henok was a righteous man, and thus his eyes were opened in wisdom, so he saw things which the watcher angels of the JHWH showed unto him, and from whom he heard and knew and understood everything that he saw.
50. And Henok was lifted up by the watchers of the JHWH, so they brought Henok unto him, where he was taught for a long time about what was coming to the generations of men of Earth.
51. But also Henok was seeing in visions the events of time into the future, wherein he also taught the people of Earth, and therefore he spoke:
52. “Everything which I saw and heard fell into my mind, and also I understood and knew everything which was given, said and revealed unto me.
53. But what I saw was not for this generation of man, but for the distant generations of the future, who will come.
54. Truly, about the righteous and about the unrighteous I spoke to the wise ones of the JHWH and with the great ones and also with the JHWH, who is the JHWH of Earth and the earthly generations of men, and who is a traveler from afar from the universe.
55. And the JHWH and his helpers live at a place unknown to Earth, from where he watcheth over the Earth and the generations of men, and from where he or his watchers also appear in the singing light, thus floating through the air.
56. And also coming from that place, the JHWH appeareth alone floating through the air or with his armies, and also in the full power of his might and covering the sky with the radiating ships of light, which are without sail but fly through the air singing.
57. And as man today is fearful thereof, as also about that which I have seen and heard, so the people of the coming distant time will also be anxious and fearful.
58. And verily, all will be fearful in the distant time, and also the watchers will tremble and the new JHWH of the coming time, for much disaster will fall upon the world caused by Earth man, and also great fear and trembling will grip the people everywhere unto the ends of the Earth.
59. And the high exalted mountains will be shaken and be hurled down, and the high hills will sink to become plains, flat like melting honey before the flame of fire.
60. The Earth will sink into itself and everything which is on the Earth also.
61. Life will perish because there will be a judgement over everything which liveth, and also judgement will be over the unrighteous as also over the righteous, produced and created by man himself, who in hard consequential chain determineth destruction for himself and his world in succession of many millennia and already beginning at my time.

62. Verily, but the destruction will create peace for the righteous and a great number of them will remain protected, because of the righteous will truly only be few, but who will be protected by the wise counsel of the true Prophet, if the righteous lend them their ear at the distant coming New Age.
63. The righteous will be chosen ones, yet through wisdom they will make themselves to chosen ones, so grace will hold sway over them when the death suns, ignited by human hands, will glow in the most glaring fire, if a stop will not yet be ordered due to reason and due to the wise teachings of the prophets of the passing times.
64. But only few righteous will fare well, if the instructions of the prophets will be ridiculed and verily only few will survive the fires of the death suns.
65. To the surviving, however, shines the light of love and wisdom, as they will be blessed, likewise the unrighteous will crumble into ashes by the embers of the fire.
66. And see, justice cometh with myriad-fold force to hold judgement in self-created punishment over Earth man, whereby through their own offence all unrighteous will be annihilated who were fools and have mocked Creation.
67. Their self-created punishment will rightfully come over them, which will burn their flesh while alive, if a stop is not ordered due to reason and the turning and changing to truth and to Creation.
68. The wicked human being, due to his own offence, will be punished with deadly fire, which he createth himself in deadly delusion from the minerals of life.
69. So I saw the events of time in the distant future, and so also it will be fulfilled, if there is no reversal and turning away from evil to good.
70. Therefore, man shall be admonished and warned for this and all coming times that he shall walk the way of righteousness, before the deadly destruction of irreversibility breaketh down over him.
71. Verily, I have seen all things about Earth, of the universe and about men, and also I have acquired all things about life and the laws and recommendations.
72. I have seen everything which occurreth in the sky, the lights which are stars in the sky at night, and as they do not change their course in a short time, but only in thousands and millions of years.
73. Verily, I have seen that the stars are suns and planets, as our sun is also during the day and also the moon of the night.
74. Verily, I saw as they rose in the sky in the land of the morning and also how they set far behind the horizon in the land of the evening, exactly according to their order and every star at its time, true to the laws and without breaking them.
75. And I saw the Earth as an uneven sphere, like all other stars which are spheres yet not quite spheres, therefore they are in between the shape of an egg and a sphere.
76. And also I saw the paths of the stars around their suns, and also the moons which circle around the planets, which have their paths like that of an elongated shape of an egg, which is laid by the feathered ones.
77. Therefore, man, like me look at your Earth and also notice everything which occurs on it, by day and by night and from the first to the last, as every work of Creation appeareth.

78. Open your eyes and see the summer and the winter, see the growing fruits and the grain and the clouds and the dew and the rain, and also see the snow in winter, how it lieth like a white mantle on the mountains and on the land.
79. But I also saw other things than what presently is visible to the eye of man, and what I saw was the time of another time which is yet to come.
80. Thus I saw pictures and occurrences, which showed me how all trees were desecrated and looked as if they were withered - and all their leaves had fallen off, except for fourteen trees, which did not shed their leaves and kept their leaves for three years, until the new leaves sprouted.
81. And again I observed the days of summer, and I notice above the sun and also opposite from it another sun, but it was created by man's hand from the minerals of life.
82. And the sun concealed many deaths within itself and spread them over all the land and over the waters and in the air, and the people sought cool places and shade from the burning of this man-made sun, yet only few could save themselves and many were mutilated.
83. The Earth burned in the glowing heat of the man-made sun, and the people could not step on the Earth and not on a rock, because the burning was severe like the liquid earth of a volcano.
84. But the people also could not cool themselves in the waters of the oceans and lakes and rivers, because the waters boiled and evaporated, so the waters rose as thick fog and baled together in heavy dark clouds.
85. But the deadly man-made sun emitted invisible power of death, which mixed with the clouds and also with fine dust, which floated in the air and darkened the light of the sun.
86. And the clouds, impregnated with the death power, let fall down their death rain on all the land and waters of the Earth, and therefore the skin of the people burned from the rain and this also happened to the animals and all plants, and whatever was affected succumbed to death or to mutilation.
87. But I observed further, seeing how the trees newly covered themselves with the green of leaves and newly bore fruit.
88. I also saw that the people who survived were changed and prayed to Creation, because they had recognized to regard everything and to esteem Creation, which hath made all life and which liveth eternally.
89. And men recognized the works of Creation, which existed to the full extent long before man, and which newly arise every year at its time.
90. And man also recognized that the works of Creation do not change, but that they remain as Creation hath created them by Its laws and recommendations and by Its order, that everything occurreth eternally in the uniformity of determination.
91. See, therefore, you human beings, see how the rivers and lakes and the oceans and the smallest watercourse always accomplish their common business together.
92. Yet what are you human beings doing, you seest not and hearest not, and you have not endured and you also have not fulfilled the laws and recommendations of Creation and not obeyed Its order.
93. You have violated all determinations of Creation, and with haughty words from your unclean mouth you blasphemingly have slandered the greatness of Creation.
94. Verily, your doing and thinking and acting is an offence to life and to Creation, for you are hard-hearted and will find no peace for a long time, which will be for many thousands of years.

95. And do not think that you dost not have to atone for your offences, because you would die of death anyway, because as you err in your own foolishness so you also err therein.
96. Verily, life hath not been lived when you diest of death, for again and again, after death you will awaken to new life and newly have an existence on Earth, often and often and irresistibly, and no human being exists who could avoid this.
97. Therefore, you will live again after death, always and always again, so you will be the old ones of yourself in future coming lives, therefore you will endure self-created punishment in coming times for your acts of disgrace of previous lives.
98. And as this is so, you will therefore curse your days of disgraceful life which you, now and in coming times, will lead and that for you, at the hour of disaster, the past and presence will exist.
99. And as you are uninstructable, the years of life for you vanish, and the damnation for you will be great and also you will find no mercy.
100. And verily, in distant coming times, your own judgment will overtake you, as you must hand over your own fictitious and brittle peace, to famish in your own curse as self-accursed unrighteous ones.
101. But verily, for the righteous will be joy, love, light and peace, and they will inherit the world and form it anew, when you hast been snatched away by your own curse of damnation.
102. And the elect will acquire more wisdom than ever before, and they will all live and not surrender to unrighteousness again, neither due to carelessness nor due to bravado, but they will be knowledgeable ones, who have great wisdom and who in respectful joy will fulfill the laws and recommendations and the order of Creation.
103. And they will no longer punish themselves of their own power throughout their life, as you art still doing and will be doing for many thousands of years.
104. And also they will not die any more by murderer hands and judgements, by plagues and raging judgements and wars and jealously and other evils, like you willst still do for many thousands of years.
105. Human beings of the distant future will complete the number of their days and years of life up to the last hour and also will grow old in peace, and also the years of their happiness will be many, in long lasting bliss and in love for their entire life.
106. And unto me, Henok, is given the knowledge about the truth of the future and the past, and also about the events regarding the generations of men of Earth.
107. Therefore, I was educated about these things by the JHWH and by his watcher angels, that I may instruct the people on Earth, so they shall know about the place of origin of their specie.
108. And man created from out of his Earth, from the minutest life of plants and animals, but therefore not in commonality with an animal or with plants, hence of his own kind and specie.
109. And it happened in those days, after the people of Earth had multiplied, that the sons and daughters of the heavens came to Earth, who were the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe.
110. Mankind in those days were still wild and unruly, yet they possessed beauty to a great extent, the women as also the men.
111. And the sons and daughters of the heavens saw the beauty of mankind of Earth, therefore they lusted for them and they counseled among themselves and said: “Well then, we will select husbands and wives for us from among mankind of this world, and with them procreate descendants and found our own nations."

112. But this doing was against the regulation of the JHWH, who was the highest leader of the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe.
113. And the highest leader, the JHWH, had sub-leaders who were his representatives among the sons and daughters of the heavens, who were like watchers and called watcher angels.
114. But among them was Semjasa, the highest leader of the sub-leaders, who was responsible to the JHWH, and therefore, he spoke to the sons and daughters of the heavens, when he became aware of the intent of theirs: "Well, I fear, you are not willing to carry out your deed and to shoulder the threatening punishment for it, for you know very well that such doing is forbidden by the JHWH, therefore I alone would have to endure the punishment."
115. But all answered and said: "All of us will do an oath of alliance and obligate ourselves among each other thereby, not to abandon our intent and to carry this out and to keep silence about it, that the JHWH does not learn about it."
116. Therefore, they all swore and obligated themselves among each other, and forthwith they departed secretly, at a number of two hundred, and flew with one singing light to the peak of a mountain.
117. And as they had landed on the peak of the mountain, they swore a second time the oath of the dark covenant, and they also called the mountain of the oath in their language, Ardjs, which means oath mountain.
118. And among the two hundred the highest of the sub-leaders was Semjasa, and thus among all of them were also lower sub-leaders, who were called by name, Andanj, Ezekeel, Daanel, Urakjbarameel, Arjjsa, Lunera, Akjbeel, Tamjela, Tamjel, Ramuela, Asaela, Asael, Batraala, Armers, Sarakajal, Arazjal, Turela, Jomael, Sartael, Satanon, Samsafel, Satana, Zakebel, Larjjsa, and Terjel.
119. Therefore, the daughters and sons of the heavens took for themselves husbands and wives from mankind of Earth, and the daughters selected a husband for themselves, and every son selected a wife for himself, and then they began to go into them in undisciplined mixing.
120. And the sons and daughters of the heavens taught their unjustly taken human beings of Earth in all types of handicrafts and of thinking, and they made them familiar with the cutting of roots and diverse fruits and plants and also with wood.
121. But the time came when the women of the human beings of Earth became pregnant from the sons of the heavens, and also were impregnated the daughters of the heavens by the men of mankind of Earth.
122. But it happened that the human beings of Earth were of a different type than the sons and daughters of the heavens, therefore they gave birth to offspring who were different than they.
123. And they gave birth to offspring, who grew up fast and were taller than mankind of Earth and also taller than the sons and daughters of the heavens.
124. For the offspring grew up to giants, who measured in height thirty-three feet, which is thirty ells.
125. But of the descendants were many, and after a few generations they grew to a large nation.
126. And the new nation increased, and it also was wild and unruly like mankind of Earth from whom they all had descended.
127. And as the new nation was great in number of people and they also were big eaters, they consumed all the provisions of mankind of Earth, and soon a nation-wide starvation ensued.

128. But the starvation became greater, so the human beings soon were not able to nourish the giants any more.
129. Then the giants turned against mankind of Earth and also against the sons and daughters of the heavens, from whom they had descended.
130. And the giants declared war against mankind of Earth and the daughters and sons of the heavens and took them prisoner, butchered and devoured them.
131. But many human beings of Earth and also many sons and daughters of the heavens fled and were seen no more and not pursued by the giants any longer, who steadily grew in malice and increased in savagery.
132. And when the giants could not find the human beings of Earth and the sons and daughters of the heavens any more, they began to disgrace all animals which moved.
133. They also slept with the animals, the birds, the land animals and the fish of the waters also, but they also killed them and devoured them among themselves, so they had nourishment of the flesh and also drank the blood.
134. So thereby the evil was created on Earth, unrighteousness and war, lying and bloodshed and all other evil, which exists among the human beings of Earth.
135. But the giants lived a long time on Earth, before they fell into infertility and died out.
136. Mankind of Earth had escaped into distant lands, and with them were the sons and daughters of the heavens.
137. But they were all caught in the event, which was caused by the giants, who were their descendants and descendants of the descendants.
138. And henceforth, the sons and daughters of the heavens and the human beings of Earth lived together and thus, they were like the giants, namely evil and characterized by all evil.
139. Thus, they also lived wild like the rushing of the wind, and also degenerated like the mighty roaring of the storm, wherefore it is said that they lived riotously, (in rushing and roaring).
140. But as they lived in this manner among themselves, they behaved also to others who were strangers to them, so they seduced them to do evil and also warred against them.
141. But at the time of their trespass, the sons and daughters of the heavens were banished by the JHWH and his people, so they could not return to their own kind, wherefore they remained among mankind of Earth, among whom they lived longer in age then these, because their time of a completed life was two thousand years.
142. And mankind of Earth was instructed by the sons and daughters of the heavens in all types of handicrafts and in many other things, as also in good and in evil.
143. But the grasping of evil was always greater so that it spread, as it was born by the giants, which were procreated in prohibition.
144. Therefore the human beings of Earth learned from the sons and daughters of the heavens, and they also were teachable students.
145. And Asasel taught the human beings to forge swords and also knives and coats of mail and shields for warfare and for daily use.
146. But he also taught the human beings to fight and to fence for life, but likewise also the handicraft of the art of jewelry, so he created jewelry for the decoration of the body and also cosmetics for the same purpose.

147. And he taught the women in the wearing of arm bracelets, the beautifying of the eyebrows and the wearing and putting on of most costly and selected precious stones, and he also taught the human beings in the manufacture of all dies and the finding of ores and the smelting and forging of the metals of the Earth.
148. And verily, soon there was great unrighteousness and whoredom on Earth, because all people were corrupted and lived in erroneous teachings and to their own advantage.
149. And much teaching of truth and much error teaching was spread, which stemmed in correctness or incorrectness from the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe and from mankind of Earth, who had lapsed into evil due to the evil doings of the giants.
150. Temela taught the art of stargazing, Kakabel taught to interpret the signs of nature, Asradel taught about the course of the moon, Amezaarak taught the conjuration of the dead and also the art of therapeutics from roots, Barakala taught the art of astrology, and Karanas taught the laws and recommendations of Creation.
151. But man was corrupt as they walked wrong ways and did not want to strive for truth, but which was seen and heard by Tekla, the daughter of Gabrjel, who was the highest commander over the armies of the JHWH and also a traveler from afar, son of the heavens from the depths of the universe.
152. And Tekla observed all events on Earth, while she flew over the land in the singing light, for she was to observe what was happening among mankind on the Earth, and also what was being done and shown as a result of the banished sons and daughters of the heavens.
153. But there was only injustice, bloodshed, whoredom, horror and evil of every type which was observed, therefore Tekla rendered clarification to her father, Gabrjel, about everything seen and heard and observed.
154. And the highest commander, Gabrjel, fell into horror and also made his report to the JHWH about what he had heard, who fell into deep concern and also commissioned his highest commander, Gabrjel, and also the sub-leaders, Mjkaal, Urjana and Surjana that they should obtain clarification another time and according to his order.
155. Therefore, the highest leader, Gabrjel, and the sub-leaders, Mjkaal, Urjana and Surjana climbed into their singing lights and flew over the lands of the Earth, and they also gazed down from heaven and saw much blood which was being shed on Earth, and they also saw all the unrighteousness among the people on the Earth.
156. And when they saw all the evil, they were much horrified and spoke among themselves: “We have to report to the JHWH what we have seen of all the evil abominations.”
157. Therefore, they stepped before the JHWH and said: “What we have seen are greater abominations than human beings can do, for the voices of their cries and their misdeeds echo throughout the Earth up to the portals of heaven.
158. Only few righteous remain, who implore heaven and wail and beg that justice shall be produced for them, no matter who would ever bring this justice to them.”
159. And they also said to the JHWH: “The people beseech Creation with words of prayers and of fainting and thus: ‘Creation, thou art the Creation of all Creation, thou which art king’s power on the throne of glory and existing throughout all generations of all worlds, thy glorious Name be hallowed and praised throughout all generations of all worlds.

160. Creation, thou alone hast made everything and thy control over everything is with thee, therefore, everything is disclosed and revealed unto thee, as thou seest everything and nothing may remain hidden unto thee, yet why dost thou not help us and why dost thou not rescue us?"
161. So therefore, they reported to the JHWH and said that the few righteous hoped for help from Creation, and the people have come to believe that Creation were a king with armies and warriors, who should fight with the sword against all evil.
162. And they also told the JHWH that Semjasa had become the highest leader of the evil ones and also the main leader of the error teaching of all evil, but they also reported that Asasel taught all unrighteousness among the people of Earth and also had betrayed great secrets of the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe.
163. But they also reported to the JHWH, that the lands were full with blood and whoredom and unrighteousness on the Earth and that the few righteous are not able to escape from all evil.
164. And the JHWH was shocked and said that soon there would be an end among the unrighteous of Earth, because such doings could only be pursued so long, until man would lapse into destruction and destroy everything, so that they only had to wait until such time.
165. Therefore, everything happened according to his statement, while the people of Earth fell into warring, the companions and people of Semjasa on one side, and Asasel and his companions and people on the other side.
166. But Semjasa and Asasel were knowledgeable of the manufacture of death suns from the minerals of life, therefore, they betrayed these secrets and built death suns which secretly they hid in the cities of the others to destroy and burn these in evil death embers.
167. But the city of Semjasa was Somon, and the city of Asasel was Turas, and thus death-suns glaringly ignited within these, made by the hand of man and every one at its time, thus in Somon at the rising of the sun, and in Turas as the sun stood at its highest peak.
168. And not one stone remained upon another, and also no life remained far and near, for everything turned to ashes in the sun-embers.
169. Therefore, the prophecy of the JHWH fulfilled itself and thus, all evil in the two cities of damnation was eradicated by the guilty ones themselves.
170. Therefore, be instructed thereof, mankind, that such may teach you, so you walk the way of righteousness."
171. And also Henok spoke to the people: "Hear how it was told to me by the JHWH:"
172. 'Listen, Henok, such happened long before your time and the same will occur again at a future time, for the people of Earth are still misled and adhere to evil, and they also do not want to learn about the truth and about life in righteousness.
173. See, Henok, therefore, it will be as I tell you, for I see the future and prophecy that there will be other JHWH over the Earth, who, together with their adherents are evil intended, who will bring hardship and great misery over mankind.
174. And there will be JHWH and people of Earth of a malice, and degeneration will prevail among them up to the last measure.
175. And the malicious travelers from afar, sons and daughters of the heavens, will be less in all unrighteousness of whoredom and degeneration than the oppressed people of Earth, therefore, they will be punished by the travelers from afar, to whom the actions of their slaves will be too much.

176. The sons and daughters of the heavens will do the same another time, as have done Semjasa and Asasel long time before, but as there will be a difference therein that they will drop down their death suns from a great height on the cities of damnation, when they fly over them with their singing lights.
177. And also the places of abomination and of degenerated whoredom and damnation will still be erected in the distant future and will be destroyed by the spheres of death-suns, as heretofore Somon and Turas, and their names will be Sodom and Gomorrha.
178. But the time will further follow its law, and thus thousands of years will pass over the Earth, yet man will not change in his thinking and actions, so again the same event occureth, however, at that time during a war of which the entire Earth will be seized.
179. And another time, two spheres of death-suns will fall from the sky and spread deadly fire, when the minerals of life hurl forth their force.
180. But at that time, the death-suns will not glare over two cities of whoredom and unrighteousness and damnation, for they will fall on places of life, which will be called Hiroshima and Nagasaki.
181. And this will be the time, when the world beginneth to die and also the lives of men rise in great number, so that there will be misery and hunger, disease and infirmity and murder and war.
182. But this will not set an end to all evil, for truthfully, therewith will only be set the beginning of the most evil abominations, which will ever be caused by the human beings on Earth, and of which its equal will never be found in all the past and also not in later times, when by one hundred death-suns in the high north of the Earth world, an evil end will be set to the destruction craze and the infamy of the people of Earth and all their abominations by their own destruction.
183. Such will occur in the distant New Age, when mankind of Earth will do like the sons and daughters of the heavens and thus escape from the planet themselves and advance with airships without sails into the expanses of the universe.
184. But at that time, the for or against is also given, so also the good and the evil, which is called right or wrong, therefore the state of things will result therefrom.'
185. Therefore, if man of Earth continueth to work in the wrong, then everything will fulfill itself in evil, as I have seen it in my visions and as I am instructed by the JHWH and the watcher angels.
186. But if man of Earth, therefore, worketh in what is right, if he considereth and becometh just, then the evil doth not fulfill itself.
187. Therefore, is being said thereby that the fulfillment of the right or the wrong lieth in the hand of man, depending whether he liveth in striving and acting for the good or in unrighteousness and the false.
188. But man of Earth hath fallen off from the laws and recommendations of Creation and become forceful to do evil, so he also disregardeth the prophecies of the wise ones, who prophesying announce the effect of every cause in logical consequence.
189. But as man disregardeth the teachings of prophecy of the wise ones and the prophets, and thus continueth to live in the doings and actings of the wrong, therefore, due to violence and force, the evils of wickedness and wrong will fulfill themselves.
190. And as you people doest not right at my time, so you will also create evil and find your own punishment therefore, as this will also be in coming times and throughout the future.

191. If therefore, you walkest on the paths of truth now and during all coming times, then life will be good and of joy, but if you walkest the ways of evil and of falsity now and during all coming times, then the prophecies will fulfill themselves in evil manner, because you conjurest up the evil.
192. As the evil fulfilleth itself due to the guilt of mankind, because you offend against life and against the truth, verily then no stone will remain upon the other, so that not one remaineth which would not be broken.
193. And verily, such will fulfill itself in the coming time, if the path of truth is not trod, if man also continues to build on human blood and also committeth whoredom, licentiousness and all evils of degeneration.
194. Verily, due to plunder and murder and war and due to impure business and thievery and all evil, you hast stolen the land and all your possessions, and you also hast killed your friends due to your rapacity and lust for murder.
195. Thus, you hast murdered and betrayed your own friends and even your families to satisfy your own greed; but the same will happen to you in the future because you have wanted it so.
196. And all your evils will fulfill themselves in you in the coming times, as you will be your own descendants in your reincarnations, so you art the descendants of your descendants at the same time and the procreators of the procreators and therefore, the old ones of the procreators and the old ones of the old ones.
197. Verily, much of war cries will be among you during the coming times, and suffering and misery will befall you in great number, if you do not change for the good of truth.
198. This is so now and also when I am hidden from you in death, and this will also be so when I am reincarnated and again live another time as your Prophet at different times and with different names.
199. But this will also be so, when again I am the prophet, Henok, when thousands of years in the coming time have rounded themselves, if mankind hath not changed to truth and to life.
200. And listen to what will be during the near and distant coming times, if you continuest to remain unrighteous and conductest your life in disgrace and wickedness.
201. Everything will happen as I have said, because everything must happen if you continuest to damn the path of life, yet verily, there will be no end yet of the evil events which have been prophesied.
202. For one nation will rise against another and also one kingdom against another, and there will be deaths and earthquakes and droughts and great waters to and fro, from one end of the Earth to the other.
203. The trees and shrubs and plants will die, and also many animals and other life will be exterminated by man while he overextendeth his number and at the same time dieth in great number, due to evil scourges of infirmity.
204. And the waters of the oceans and lakes and rivers will become sick, and also the waters of the creeks and rills, and the air will also become sick and everything which serveth as nourishment.
205. But everything will occur due to man’s fault, who in his delusion createth the art of the great poison mixing, and therewith polluteth the entire Earth and all life.

206. And the world and all life falleth ill of infirmity, due to the burning and the mutilation of the rays of death which rush through the air and become invisible like the rays of the sun, but are created by man's hand, by death-suns in huge furnaces and in great numbers, from one end of the Earth to the other, and due to the acquisition of death power and destruction from the minerals of life.
207. This will be the time of the New Age and the time of the Prophet before the storm of annihilation, and this will be the time of uncountable cults around idols and gods of falsity, while the teaching of truth will only be taught by the Prophet to the seeking and the few righteous ones.
208. And the time will be, when the knowing ones around the Prophet and he also will be reviled by cult-pursuers and cult believers, who will live in the erroneous delusion of autocracy and of gods and idols.
209. And soon thereafter the time will come, when many of the knowing people will be given over to affliction because they will be hated for the sake of the teaching and the truth, some among them will also be killed therefore.
210. But the manifold cults will also arise against each other, so human blood will flow in great quantities.
211. Many people will succumb to the attack and will betray one another and will hate themselves among each other, because they will have yet remained small in thinking and in the truth while they yet lie that they would be learning.
212. And while ignorance and cult beliefs will gain the upper hand at that time, the love in many people will grow cold, wherefore only greed and non-love will prevail.
213. And only hate will rule over the world and therefore, only the evil will reign.
214. But verily, it will be as at all times, for whoever persisteth in truth and lendeth his ear to the advice of the Prophet, he will endure and survive.
215. And the teaching will also be preached during that distant New Age on the entire world, from one end to the other, as testimony for all the nations and mankind, so that the righteous will hear it and also the unrighteous, after which the prophecy fulfilleth itself and the end cometh, if there is not a great change in man toward truth and according to the advice of the Prophet.
216. When the people see the abomination of their destruction around the world, from one end to the other, in all that is alive and in their places of residence, in the air, in the waters and on the land, then the end will come, so therefore, the self-chosen punishment of annihilation and destruction.
217. Whoever at that time is on the land, he shall flee onto the mountains and hide in deep caves, and whoever is on a roof top, he shall not climb down to fetch something from his house, but he shall flee into the structures of Earth and in to deep cellars; and whoever is in the field, turn not to fetch his coat, but he straightway shall rush to his neighbor and hide himself in his cellar or in an Earth structure.
218. But woe unto those at that time, who live in big cities, for they will be without protection, and they will be buried alive by the houses crashing down onto them.
219. And woe unto all those, who will be struck by the mighty blow of light, but also woe unto the pregnant and nursing at that time, for they will suffer trouble and death, and the fruit in their womb will be dead or mutilated and marked by the rays of death and of poison, and also their milk will be polluted with which they nourish the infants.

220. Then at once, will be great affliction as it has never been from the beginning of the world until then and also will never be thereafter.
221. And verily, if these days of the New Age would not be shortened, no human being on the Earth would remain alive; but for the sake of Spirit and for the sake of truth the events of those days will be shortened, but also for the sake of the human beings, who will be righteous ones and who serve the laws and the truth.
222. But there will yet be wailing and gnashing of teeth when that time arrives, due to the absurdity of man and due to his greed.
223. And mankind will construct metallic machines, by air and by water and by land, yet they will not be like the singing lights of the sons and daughters of the heavens, for they will be like fiery and thundering monsters with which mankind can also annihilate each other.
224. And the people will hurl forth heavy missiles from their metallic flying machines and drop them down on the land and the cities.
225. And fire and searing and glowing heat and a mighty death storm will break forth from the missiles and burn and destroy the world, so not much will be spared.
226. The minerals of life they will place into the missiles, so therewith they ignite the death-fire, the destroying storm and the glowing heat and the striking of the light also.
227. And if at that time, the sons and daughters of the heavens and the Prophet of the New Age would not come to order a stop to the human madness of destruction, verily, not one human being would survive.
228. But the order to stop will not occur by the sons and daughters of the heavens themselves in the manner that they themselves interfere toward the restraint, for they will only cause an order of restraint by thoughts, so that mankind does not know and, therefore, cannot cause too much destruction, so several of the human beings will survive and so that life can begin another time.
229. But there will also be the Prophet, who will be powerful in Spirit, so he also does his duty in great measure through the power of his thoughts, but also by his word and the teaching of truth and also by his counsel and other means, which still must remain hidden and cannot be grasped by man’s unwise intellect.
230. And the Prophet of the New Age will be the most important power at that time and also a secret to mankind in many things, likewise the power of Spirit will still be a secret to mankind at that time.
231. And the Prophet at that time will neither find calm nor peace and often will be agitated in holy anger, by day and also by night, but also while awake and while asleep, as already is said about him by the JHWH that he will never sleep nor rest.
232. He will be the Prophet who will do the work of many, but who will yet be unflagging during the day as also at night and during the time of his life, as no prophet will ever have done like him heretofore.
233. And mankind, at that time, will not understand that the Prophet accomplishes heavy work when seemingly he walketh about at ease or sitteth down tired, for his work at all times is impetuous, as the work with his hands, as also with the power of his Spirit and also with this thinking.

234. And the Prophet of the New Age will be; he preventeth much evil and suffering and misery and also the worst destruction and annihilation, while the sons and daughters of the heavens remain invisible to mankind in hiding or semi-hiding and yet work rendering help by the power of their thoughts and their Spirit, jointly with the Prophet.
235. Verily, to the destruction at that time will not be set a post of limit, therefore, the evils will be greater than can be grasped by the intellect of man at that time.
236. And such occureth and is fulfilled, when the generations of men of Earth have reached the number of ten times five hundred million people, of which then two parts of them will be annihilated and killed, if there is no change among them toward truth and if they do not follow the counsel of wisdom.
237. The law of self-punishment wills it so, because man trespasseth against this law since times of old and also in the distant future.
238. But it is also given by the laws and recommendations of Creation that all evil and the great downfall shall be averted and prevented, if man changeth and adhereth to the truth and also to righteous life, but as man doeth not do so, the evil will come.
239. And verily, at that time many false counselors and false preachers and false prophets will come, so that mankind will not know anymore, who will be the true Prophet and where he can be found.
240. Yet there will be the truly righteous and the truly seeking, who will find the Prophet and who will gather around him, if they go on their way to the lands in the north of the Earth, where a small nation of peace will exist during a long time, before the great annihilation cometh, by which the small nation of peace will be overshadowed.
241. Therefore, if at that time then someone goeth and sayeth to the people: “See, here or there is the Prophet!”, they shall not accept it as true.
242. For verily, many false prophets and false preachers and false miracle workers and false advisers will arise and do great signs and wonders so that, if it were possible, also the wise and righteous and knowing ones would be misled.
243. See, this hath been said before and it will also be said often in the coming time by the prophets of truth, who will come after me and between me.
244. And it will be admonished and warned about that New Age, that people shall not accept as true if it is said to them that the Prophet is in the desert, so that man shall not go out and search for him.
245. But the true Prophet at that time will exist, but he will let himself be recognized, so that he does not have to be made known, so that no one needeth to go out, if it is said that he is in the chamber.
246. Truly, so the law wills it, and so it also will be.
247. As the lightning goeth forth from sunrise and also shineth in the fire until sunset, so will also be the coming of the sons and daughters of the heavens, as at their appearance the Prophet of that time also cometh and worketh during his reincarnation.

248. The appearance of the sons and daughters of the heavens at that time will be like lightning which is seen by man, and yet already in the wink of an eye it has vanished, so that their singing lights are seen flying in the sky and yet are not seen, as if they were lightning or schemes of error, but which they truthfully are not.
249. Over the Earth will be the sons and daughters of the heavens, thus led by their JHWH, who will also be the JHWH of the generations of men of Earth, yet they will remain in hiding and cannot act restrainingly in their own appearance and of their own work of interference, for so the laws and recommendations and also the order determine.
250. Therefore, man at all time and also during the New Age, shall listen only to the voice of truth and also to the truthful words of the Prophet, so that they shall not be misled and rush to false prophets and false miracle workers, false preachers and false advisers, for truly, where the carcass lieth, there the vultures gather, likewise, a true prophet unintended draweth to himself all false prophets and liars, miracle workers and preachers and advisers of falsity.
251. If the downfall of that distant time cometh, if man doeth not change his thinking and striving and acting to truth, then will be affliction in great measure and destruction will also be of two parts of all life.
252. But soon after the affliction, the destruction breaketh forth which will be the world fire with dreadful devastation and dying in great numbers, and also will be that the sun darkeneth and the moon loseth its shine, because too great masses of fine earth floating in the air and also the invisible clouds of death.
253. And it will be that the powers of the heavens begin to reel, so that small stars with their shining tails will fall from heaven in great numbers.
254. And the Earth breaketh away from its course around the sun, due to the dreadful force of the death-suns of mankind and, therefore, the Earth will seek a new course of rotation.
255. Verily, the strata of the heavens will be disturbed by the irrationally kindled power of man, who will live in greed and power and mania and in the misuse of the minerals of life.
256. And henceforth a sign will appear in the sky, and henceforth the generations of man on the Earth will howl and truly see and recognize the singing lights of the sons and daughters of the heavens in the clouds, during the day and also by night, as they will come with great power because of the absurdity of man.
257. But it is not determined what the actions of the travelers from afar will be, whether they will hold judgement against the absurdity of man of Earth, or if they will only be observing, for it will be that some among them do not belong to the adherents of the JHWH, who is our JHWH.
258. Therefore at that time, the event can occur that there will be sons and daughters of the heavens under the jurisdiction of a strange JHWH, who is not ordained for the generations of men of Earth, so that he punishes all violent acts of mankind of Earth by judgement pronouncing through his representatives.
259. Therefore violent actions can come to mankind of Earth from the depth of the universe committed by a strange JHWH and his adherents, because of man's absurdity through which they not only endanger their own world, but also other worlds in space.

260. Verily, unto Creation man oweth his begetting, and It is the true life in everything, therefore, Its laws and recommendations have to be obeyed.
261. Therefore shall be said to the people of that time: ‘If they all see what in truth is prophesied, they may know that the time of the fulfillment of the truthful prophecies is near.
262. Heaven and Earth will pass away and also the universe; but the words of truth will not pass away, for they are the words of truth of Creation.
263. And verily, of the day and the hour, when everything prophesied will be fulfilled, no one knoweth, also not the sons and daughters of the heavens and also not the prophets know, so it will be sooner or later, depending on the value of thinking and striving and acting of mankind of Earth.’
264. This, therefore, is the prophecy of the JHWH and his sons and daughters of the heavens, thus, I faithfully repeat this unto you, mankind, at the present time and according to my best ability.
265. But I am also taught by the JHWH and those who are his, somewhere else about many things, which are things of wisdom and the laws and recommendations of Creation and of life.
266. Therefore, I, Henok, report unto you of what I have to instruct you, mankind of Earth, thus in the teaching of wisdom, which is the teaching of the word of truth.
267. But the teaching of the word of truth stemmeth from the laws and recommendations of Creation and also Its order, so will be truthfully given unto you the wisdom of all wisdom.
268. Listen, mankind of Earth, retain my words and my counsel within you, because these are also the words and the counsel of the JHWH, and they truly are the wisdom of Creation; but also do not hide them within you, but use them freely and live according thereto.
269. And if you keepest the words and the counsel, then you will live; and thus you will guard the laws and recommendations of Creation like the apple of your eye.
270. Bind the words and counsel to your fingers, and also write them down and hold fast to them in your thoughts.
271. Speak unto wisdom: “Truly, you are my sister, in you liveth prudence, which is my friend.”
272. Only by wisdom the husband is guarded against the strange woman, against another who speaketh smooth words , but also the wife is guarded only by wisdom against a strange man who speaketh flattering words.
273. And woo not strangers, for it bringeth misery and dying.
274. So listen and follow my words, you children of man, and mark the speech of my mouth.
275. Let you heart not yield to the way of evil, and let yourself not be misled on its road.
276. The evil truly hath wounded and maimed and cut down many, and by evil many people in great numbers have been strangulated, the poor, righteous and unrighteous as also the mighty.
277. The evil is the way to the grave, into which the unrighteous man in fear driveth down into the chambers of death.
278. If you callest wisdom, then you will hear from prudence, for often it standeth along the street and at the roadside and at the doors of the city, so it shouteth at you all the while.
279. Oh, you men and women, I shout to you and call all of mankind: ‘You unwise, regard wisdom and prudence, you fools, and accept my words in your minds.

280. Listen, for I speak unto you about what is wise, and I teach you what is creative.
281. My lips speak wisdom and the truth, and they are not able to speak what would be wrong and also false.
282. And truly, all my speeches are just and straight, and they are just and straight to those who want to live in truth.
283. Accept discipline, of which I instruct you, for it shall be dearer to you than silver, and regard the teaching of the word of truth higher than costly gold.'
284. Truly, wisdom is better than pearls, and everything which man may wish for can never be more valuable than the truth.
285. And prudence liveth with wisdom, and it always knoweth to give good advice.
286. Truth is the enemy of the bad and false, of haughtiness and of arrogance and of all wrong ways and evil, and also the righteous mouth is enemy of every wrong mouth.
287. And of truth and wisdom are both, righteous counsel and righteous action, and in truth and wisdom are intelligence and common sense and power and might, as also in love and in knowledge.
288. Through wisdom the JHWH instructeth the generations of man, and also doeth the Prophet like him.
289. And by wisdom a righteous king ruleth his people, and also by wisdom he appointeth his advisers and wise ones and sub-leaders.
290. And only by wisdom can sovereigns and regents lead a nation in righteousness, so on the Earth as also somewhere else.
291. Wisdom loveth those who love it; and those who seek for it will find it early.
292. Wise riches and honor are in wisdom and lasting possessions of knowledge, truth, love and righteousness.
293. The fruit of wisdom is better than the finest gold, and its profit is better than most precious stone.
294. And wisdom walketh on the right path, on the road of justice.
295. And wisdom provideth well for all who love it and fill themselves with its treasures.
296. And wisdom existed already in Creation at the beginning of Its ways, before It created anything.
297. And Creation lived in wisdom before the depths were there, and when the fountains did not well up yet.
298. Therefore, wisdom was the workmaster in Creation, by which It created everything and brought to life.
299. Therefore, mankind of Earth shall also heed that they enjoy and appreciate to have wisdom as workmaster of all things within them.
300. And it is well with the human being, who in truth obeyeth wisdom, that he always watcheth and waiteth to do right and live truthfully.
301. Whoever findeth wisdom, he findeth true life and will harvest satisfaction and honor.
302. But whoever slandereth wisdom or disregardeth it, he injureth his own life, and they are also the living dead whom misfortune leadeth.
303. And wisdom built its house and hew seven pillars, on which standeth the house of life up to BEING.
304. Therefore, the seven pillars of wisdom are the path of life, and everything which is progression and BEING.
305. And the seven pillars of wisdom are named in their value, as I teach them unto you:
306. Love

307. Truth
308. Righteousness
309. Knowledge
310. Logical consequence
311. Respect
312. Honor
313. Whoever is still unwise, he shall set out and seek wisdom.
314. You unwise ones, you fools and jesters, seek and eat of the bread of wisdom and also drink the wine, which it giveth to you.
315. Expel your unwise character, so you will live, and then you also walk on the path of prudence.
316. Notice: Whoever disciplineth the mocker, he will receive disgrace, and whoever punisheth the unrighteous, he will be mocked.
317. And punish not the mocker, for he will hate you, but his mocking will also bring you unexpected benefit.
318. Give unto the wise so he will yet become wiser, and teach the righteous so he will yet become more righteous, but if you reprimand the fool and the mocker, there will be more yet of foolishness and of mockery.
319. The beginning of wisdom is the recognition of truth, yet to recognize the wise one it requires a good intellect.
320. And verily, by wisdom the days of man will become many, and also of the years of life will be more.
321. If you are wise, then you are wise unto yourself; if you are a mocker, then you mock yourself; if you are a fool, then you fool yourself.
322. A foolish, wild woman is full of prattle for she is ignorant, as also the man who reveals his ignorance with much blabber and loud shouting.
323. The wise one works in honesty for his nourishment, while the fool is unrighteous and stealeth his water as also his bread, and does not know that death liveth within them because they are spoiled.
324. Wise children are a joy and delight to their parents, but foolish children are their parents grief and burden.
325. Unrighteous possessions do not prosper, but righteous possessions bear the fruits of joy and delight.
326. The lazy one's hand causeth poverty, but the industrious one's hand bringeth riches.
327. Whoever busily gathereth at harvest time is prudent and will not have to starve, but whoever sleepeth at harvest time causeth himself disgrace like those, who woo idleness at planting and tending time.
328. The head of the righteous one carrieth the blessing, yet the mouth of the unrighteous man lapseth into mischief.
329. The memory of the righteous remaineth as a blessing when they have departed, but the name of the unrighteous will be forgotten as sound soon gets lost and also as smoke vanisheth, as it is said that the remembrance of the unrighteous quickly evaporateth like sound and smoke.
330. Whoever is wise in his thinking, he shall accept wisdom, but whoever disregardeth wisdom, he is a fool and will be beaten.
331. Wisdom does not let the righteous suffer from hunger, but it pusheth away the greed of the unrighteous.
332. Whoever liveth in innocence liveth securely, but whoever is on wrong ways will be revealed and beaten.
333. Whoever winketh with the eyes is a crafty fool and will reap affliction, also the fool's mouth will be beaten.
334. The mouth of the righteous is a wellspring of life, but the mouth of the unrighteous is a pit of offence.

335. Hatred causeth burning rage, but love bringeth gentleness and peace.
336. Over the lips of the righteous spilleth wisdom, but on the backs of fools burn the blows of rods.
337. The wise keep the teaching of the word of truth and wisdom, but the mouth of fools is always close to terror.
338. The possession of the knowing rich is a fortress, but the wealth of the poor in knowledge maketh him stupid.
339. The righteous one useth his honest possessions to live, but the unrighteous man casteth his income among the whores.
340. Whoever practiceth discipline walketh on the path of life, but whoever disregardeth discipline destroyeth his life.
341. False mouths harbor hatred and strife, and whoever slandereth is a fool, for he bringeth loss to himself and also createth advantage for the slandered one.
342. Wherever many words are spoken there are lies, but whoever useth his mouth for truthful speaking is prudent and wise.
343. The wise one's tongue is like most noble love, but the thought of the unrighteous is like a stinking pit.
344. The wise one's lips tend many, young and old, poor and rich, but also the righteous and unrighteous, but the fools die of their stupidity and yet their lips speak and say nothing.
345. The wise one knoweth that he knoweth nothing and, therefore, he knoweth much; but the fool believeth that he knoweth much while he knoweth nothing and is stupid and dieth in foolishness.
346. The blessing of wisdom fulfilleth man and maketh him rich without effort, but the fool's stupidity maketh everything unfulfillable and laborious.
347. A fool conducteth mischief and mockery, yet the mocker doth not need to concern himself about his own mockery, for in a moment it returneth unto him.
348. The wise one carrieth on in comics and wittiness, yet never mocketh, and he reapeth thanks and joy and love and honor.
349. Whatever the unrighteous feareth he will meet, for by the fear-power of his thoughts he draweth misfortune unto himself, likewise the suction of a whirlpool draweth everything unto it and devoureth it.
350. But what the righteous desireth in honesty will come unto him, like the sun ray which cometh to the ear with light and warmth, therefore it thriveth and ripeneth.
351. The unrighteous man is like bad weather which passeth and leaveth vast damage and destruction behind, but the righteous one is like an inexhaustible fountain which delighteth all life.
352. As sweets corrodeth the teeth and smoke burneth the eyes, so the lazy man treateth his master who giveth him work.
353. Wisdom increaseth man's years of life, but stupidity and idiocy break the life of the fool.
354. The unrighteous lose themselves in unfulfilled hopes, but the waiting of the righteous is pure joy.
355. The path of the righteous is effort and joy, but the way of the unrighteous is trouble in misfortune.
356. The mouth of the righteous bringeth wisdom, yet the tongue of the unrighteous speweth evil poison.
357. The lips of the righteous teach healing things, yet from the mouth of the unrighteous streameth forth stinking breath.
358. The unrighteous slanderously lieth against his neighbor by rumors, while he hath eyes and ears with which he doeth not see and hear the truth.
359. Everyone is a traitor and liar, who lies in wait about his neighbor's speaking and actions and passes these on, for while he lieth in wait, he only seeth and heareth what in delusion he createth as truth.

360. Everyone has fast feet, who speaketh evil about his neighbor and betrayeth his fault to others, for truly he only betrayeth, because he wants to hide his own fault therewith.
361. The fool is stupid and weak in his thinking, for he only seeth the dust before the door of his neighbor and sweepeth it away, yet he seeth not the stinking pit before his own door.
362. Whoever betrayeth his neighbor, he betrayeth himself, for he revealeth what type of spirit he is.
363. The wise speaketh not maliciously with quick feet about his neighbor, if he seeth a fault in him, yet he confronteth him, but the unrighteous hath quick feet and is malicious and stupid, therefore, he speaketh behind the back of his neighbor, while therewith he only bringeth disgrace and loss upon his own head.
364. The seeing and hearing one recognizeth the true truth, but the liar seeth and heareth the truth he wants to see and hear.
365. The fool seeth the grain of sand in the eye of his neighbor, yet he doeth not notice the boulder in his own eye.
366. The way of Creation is defense to the devout, yet the evil doers are stupid.
367. Wherever pride exists there is also offence and disgrace, and the fool is proud because he decayeth in stupidity.
368. Righteousness leadeth the devout, yet malice stampeth out the unrighteous.
369. At the hour of death, wealth helpeth no unrighteous one, but righteousness delivereth from all anxiety and fear.
370. The righteousness of the devout smootheth his path, but the way of the unrighteous is not even, and he will fall by his character of stupidity.
371. The righteousness of the devout delivereth them from the fetters of joylessness, but the unrighteous are caught in their malice and stupidity.
372. When the unrighteous human being dieth, then all his hopes are lost and all his waiting cometh to naught; but when the righteous human being dieth, then all his hopes fulfill themselves.
373. The righteous is delivered from all his misery when he dieth, yet the unrighteous arriveth at his place.
374. The liar acteth hypocritically and the hypocrite lieth, therefore, the liar is a hypocrite and the hypocrite a liar.
375. By the blessing of the wise ones all misery is tempered, but for the traitor, who listeneth and looketh at strange windows, hatred and discord thriveth.
376. The righteous in wisdom elevate a city into blossoming, yet by the mouth of the unrighteous it is destroyed.
377. Everyone disgraceth his neighbor who secretly speaketh about him, and a secret talker hath quick feet and is stupid.
378. Whoever disgraceth his neighbor is a fool, but fools are stupid and have a weak mind.
379. A slanderer betrayeth what he believeth to know, for his belief is delusion; but how can a deluded one be knowledgeable!
380. How can a man be sponsor unto his neighbor, if he can not sponsor himself to only keep his own house clean and not try to sweep in the house of his neighbor.
381. The unrighteous, who pretendeth to be just is like a sow with rotten hooves.
382. The unrighteous, who pretendeth to be just and secretly talketh about a fault of his neighbor is like a sow with stinking breath and decaying body.
383. The intrigues of the unrighteous always last only a short time, for they will be recognized and destroyed, but the works of the righteous endure for a long time and are constant.

384. Whoever talketh about his neighbor is a fool and disgraces him, but the prudent keepeth silent and createth peace.
385. A slanderer betrayeth what he secretly knoweth and becometh a liar, but whoever is wise keepeth the secret to himself and hides it.
386. Where there is a wise counselor the people flourish, but where there are many counselors, the people perish, for they are unable to find just advice among much councel.
387. One is not able to sponsor for another, because the innermost of a human being remaineth hidden and is changeable, so the sponsored one is right today and bad tomorrow.
388. Tyranny gaineth wealth by violence, but wealth gained by righteousness bringeth honor.
389. A wise one doeth good unto his neighbor and himself, but the unrighteous one grieveth his neighbor and his own flesh.
390. Whoever soweth righteousness harvests healthy possessions, but the work of the unrighteous faileth and bringeth foul fruit.
391. Righteousness promoteth life, but unrighteousness promoteth evil and death.
392. The righteous one's seed thriveth, yet nothing helpeth the evil ones, even if they wring their hands.
393. A beautiful woman without discipline is like a sow with golden hair, also a man without discipline is like a boar with golden hooves.
394. The wish of the righteous is fulfilling hope, but the waiting of the unrighteous is evil misfortune.
395. The wise one dispenseth and giveth in joy and receiveth increasingly, however the less the unrighteous giveth and shareth in joylessness, he yet continuously has less.
396. Whoever is stingy and hoardeth becometh poorer every day, who, however, giveth in joy and righteousness, he always obtaineth more.
397. Verily, the man who blesses abundantly will be delighted and therefore, who giveth abundantly to drink will also be refreshed.
398. Whoever seeketh good, good will happen unto him, but whoever striveth for misfortune will soon wrestle in misfortune.
399. Whoever trusteth in his wealth will perish, but whoever trusteth in the work of his hands greeneth like a leaf and never starveth.
400. Whoever grieveth his own house will become the game of the winds, for his inheritance will be like a whiff of the wind, which cometh and goeth and loseth itself somewhere.
401. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and a wise one wins the love of the people.
402. As the righteous on Earth has to suffer among the unrighteous, how much more do the unrighteous suffer among themselves and among the likes of them.
403. Who gladly alloweth himself to be taught becometh wise, yet whoever does not want to be taught remaineth a fool.
404. Whoever is devout receiveth comfort through wisdom, but a wicked one damns himself.
405. An unrighteous character doth not benefit man, but a righteous character formeth new roots and bringeth blossoms and fruit.
406. A virtuous wife is a crown of her husband, and also a virtuous husband is a shine of blessing on the head of his wives, but likewise unvirtuous husbands and wives are an evil burden and like purulent boils for their spouses.

407. The thoughts of the righteous are sincere, but the thoughts of the unrighteous are lying and deceit.
408. The speeches of the unrighteous cause bloodshed and strife, but the mouth of the righteous createth love and peace.
409. The unrighteous will perish and be no more, but the house of the righteous remaineth standing and pure life will be therein.
410. A wise one's advice is praised and he liveth in peace, but the malicious ones fall into disgrace and live in strife.
411. Whoever is wise and just and regardeth himself as humble and waiteth for his hopes will find fulfillment, but whoever is unwise and unjust and regardeth himself as great and doth not wait for his hopes will lack bread.
412. Whoever tendeth his field will have bread in abundance, as also the one who prevaileth in his righteous work; but whoever pursueth unnecessary matters will starve as fool in stupidity.
413. Whoever measureth with one measure will be measured by the same measure, and whoever judgeth will also be judged.
414. The desire of the unrighteous is to cause loss, but the righteous ones form roots which bring trees and fruit for refreshment.
415. The evil one is caught in his own false words, but the righteous one remaineth free from anxiety and fear.
416. Much good cometh to the wise and just man by the fruit of his mouth, and he also will be recompensed according to what his hands have earned.
417. His false way pleaseth the fool well, but whoever listeneth to true advice is wise.
418. A fool soon showeth his rage, but whoever hideth the offence is wise.
419. Whoever is truthful sayeth freely what is right, but whoever is full of falsity deceiveth and speaketh what is not right.
420. Whoever putteth words into the mouth of his neighbor, deceiveth and has quick feet when the neighbor speaketh wrongly.
421. The one is a deceiver and has quick feet, who speaketh falsely and is caught doing so, he then twists what he said to the degree that pretentiously he shall appear as right.
422. The word of the truthful mouth lasteth eternally, but the false tongue doth not last long.
423. A wise one doth not show his prudence openly, but the mouth of the fool proclaimeth forth his foolishness.
424. The thief stealeth and the robber robbeth, yet both remain poor and in misfortune, but the righteous one createth in honesty and hoardeth few possessions, so he attaineth to riches and happiness.
425. On the way of righteousness is life, and on its prepared path is no death or terror.
426. Whoever controlleth his mouth controlleth his life, but whoever has a loose mouth createth terror and horror for himself.
427. The lazy one desireth and yet starveth, the industrious one, however, doth not desire but he worketh, so he receiveth everything he needs.
428. The righteous one is enemy to the lie, but the liar disgraceth and abuseth the truth and offendeth himself.
429. The truth protecteth the righteous, but the untruthful character of the liar casteth him down.
430. Among the proud is always strife, but love is with the wise who accept advice.
431. The wealth quickly diminisheth where it is squandered, but whatever is held together will grow quickly.
432. Whoever disregardeth the word of truth destroyeth himself, but whoever obeyeth the laws and recommendations of Creation will live.

433. The teaching of the wise is a wellspring of life, which bestoweth joy and peace, so the ropes of anxiety fall off and true life prevaileth.
434. Fine prudence createth favor and joy, but the foolishness of the scorners bringeth woe and anxiety.
435. A prudent one doth everything with common sense, but a fool spreadeth foolishness.
436. Whoever speaketh much repeatedly in rage without cause, from him men shy away as from a spark-spewing fire.
437. Whoever speaketh at the incorrect time, perisheth in the speech of the one who speaketh at the correct time, like a crow which loseth the eyesight by the owl which hunteth at midnight.
438. The wise one is honored everywhere, even if he is of poor descent, but the unwise is unworthy of any honor, even if he is of royal descent.
439. Man is weak in his mind, if he honoreth and venerateth the great one, who bringeth disaster; but man is prudent if he honoreth the wise one, who preventeth and destroyeth disaster.
440. What man does not want done unto him, that he also shall not do unto another.
441. What man shall not do he should never do, even at the threat of the loss of his life, yet what man shall do he should not leave undone.
442. A man, who letteth himself be driven by foolishness and stupidity, thinketh that what is impracticable is practicable, what is unattainable is easily attainable, and what is not edible is edible.
443. A man, who undertaketh an attack against his neighbor in word or in deed, before he is protected by wisdom and prudence and just defense, is like a man who walketh with his face covered on a dangerous summit of a mountain with a deadly precipice.
444. Goats and horses have a clean mouth, cows have a clean back, the impure human being in his thoughts fancies himself to be pure, but the wise one is pure all over, inside and outside his body, in his thinking and actions and feelings and also in his speaking.
445. Liars and slanderers are able to make untruth appear as true to the unwise, as trained artists create indentations and elevations on an even surface.
446. Wise ones, who are brought to a boiling rage, soon return to gentleness by proper treatment or by their own wisdom.
447. If a wise one becometh enraged, he only shouteth at the guilty one, but to the innocent he speaketh calmly and friendly at the same time, which the unwise is unable to do.
448. The wise one only becometh enraged in hallowed anger, wherefore he only chooseth words and actions, which strike the guilty in their innermost character; however, the unwise doth not grasp and understand it, for he starveth in self-pity and justification.
449. The wise one, who tires on a long road, seeketh out the shade and then he walketh away feeling refreshed; who then findeth it fit to moan, if he doth not do the same as the wise one.
450. Excessive familiarity causeth disdain and disregard, dishonor and disrespectfulness toward the neighbor, as also through constant visits indifference and dependence are caused, while the students of the wise one lose respect for him, if they live under his roof and remain unwise.

451. The unwise bathe in the drinking water of the wise, because their familiarity is without limits.
452. Excessive familiarity causeth envy and looseneth all restraint, and all evil overbordereth and destroyeth reverence and all respect.
453. Excessive familiarity causeth the delusion that the neighbor should be like the neighbor in everything, so that he does not retain his own character of his own human nature, and does not retain his own character of his thoughts and deeds.
454. Whoever visiteth relatives and acquaintances and friends too often createth excessive familiarity and lack of honor and reverence and respect, like the offspring who do not become of age because they let themselves be ruled by imprudent and unwise parents, who do not grant their children their own life.
455. The resident of a holy place polluteth everything around, if he succumbeth to indifference by his constant presence which becometh a foregone conclusion to him.
456. Nothing is more laughable in the world than when someone, who is a scoundrel, calleth another human being a scoundrel.
457. A man, who in secret speweth forth hard and untrue words or who speaketh ambiguously, him the noble soon refrain from approaching, even if he feeleth inclined toward the others.
458. Whoever getteth enraged in anger by hard words of wisdom, feeleth attacked or doth not understand that words of truth are hard, is unwise, imprudent, believes and is also of false character and of erroneous life conduct.
459. If one doth not see you, one longeth for your sight, but if one sees you, one fears the impending separation, yet while often indifference or weariness ariseth for you, so one does not wish to see you, as there is never joy any more if your visits are excessive.
460. Not to harm any creature, neither by words nor by thoughts or deed, or by benevolence or gifts, that is the eternal law of the wise.
461. Violent pain hurteth the unwise and unrighteous more than a wise and righteous, for soon the feeling of cold taketh possession of the body of the unwise and unrighteous.
462. Man always appeareth great unto himself in untruth, if he always looketh down to his feet, but whoever gazeth upward sees his smallness under the stars of the heavens and therefore, he sees truthfully and knoweth very much.
463. The human being, who heareth wisdom only from afar and doth not own it, sees not the snares of mischief which have been laid around him.
464. Whoever maketh impracticable plans for the future lieth eternally dormant, like a bare boulder in the heat of the sun.
465. But whoever maketh plans for the future and submitteth to the false joys of vice will be laughed at like a blockhead, who stumbleth over his own feet.
466. Whoever setteth wise precautions for the future and is always wisely on guard will become successful, however, the courage of the irresolute sinketh and he suffereth failures.
467. Whoever detecteth something himself and without order, which would cause his neighbor loss, and striveth to remove same through advice or deed, is a wise one and worthy of life.
468. Youth, life, beauty, authority, acquaintance with friends and every thing are transitory, wherefore the wise keepeth distance from them and doth not attach himself to them.

469. The blameless blame themselves; the estimable do not esteem themselves; the righteous judgeth himself; the wise instructeth himself and letteth himself be instructed, yet the fool only pursueth false pleasures of life and wealth.

470. A lying disposition, foolhardiness, falsity, folly, stupidity, idiocy, greed for possessions, desire, vice, insubordination, uncleanliness, cruelty, power greed, tyranny, violence, lewdness, degeneration, selfishness, avarice, laziness, vengeance, hatred, joylessness, anxiety and fear, killing without self-defense, discord and strife and all evils are the misfortune and every day life of those, who are believers of sects and religions, for they are ignorant and unrighteous ones, who lead a wrong life in error teachings.

471. The wise is like a shell: Outside it is rough and like a log of wood, yet inside it is gentle and soft and delicate and concealeth the beautiful and valuable treasure of the pearl.

472. The wise never plotteth evil against those who cause him pain, for he knoweth that the evil ones fall over their own feet, like the tree which falleth of its own, if it is rooted at the water's edge from which it washes away.

473. From the wise, the one even benefitteth, who causeth him pain.

474. The wise chooseth disdain from his enemies and foregoeth the esteem of the well-minded to advance a good matter, for to abandon a good matter is foolishness.

475. All those who are truly adapted in science, but who are strangers to the word of truth and wisdom, make themselves laughable, like all fools of the learned and unlearned.

476. A learned head of science claimeth much knowledge about science, but wisdom, truth, love, prudence and true knowledge he lacketh everywhere.

477. Even the most unimportant matter one shall not discuss in the company of others, if it concerneth only a single one; but the most unimportant matter shall be discussed in the company of everybody, if it concerneth all of them.

478. Whoever lieth even about a very unimportant truth, if it causeth harm, he perisheth quickly, even if he is highly esteemed.

479. Empty is the house of the childless, and empty is the world unto him who hath no relatives and no friends, but the life is empty of those who have no wisdom.

480. The fool speaketh when he is not asked, so he reapeth not only no honor, but also ridicule.

481. Even if not asked, one shall tell the one, whom one can save a humiliation, the advice from which he can benefit.

482. The evil one, who causeth others loss and enjoyeth the misfortune of others, createth loss for himself and doth not notice his own downfall.

483. Even the time of misfortune seemeth to be worth the price to the wise one, but the fool sees only terror and horror therein.

484. Whoever is not afraid of liars and slanderers is wise, and he is also not afraid of enemies and kings.

485. The insignificant one becometh significant if he becometh wise and just, but the significant one becometh insignificant, if he regardeth himself higher than others.

486. Only seldom doth one find the Earth adorned with those, who are poor in unfriendly and rich in friendly speaking and striving.

487. To whom man is devoted in true love, he always remaineth in love, even if he demonstrateth something loveless, likewise with the fire, for who withdraweth his respect for it, even if it has burnt his best things in the house.
488. Only those are true friends, who do not depart during times of misery, and endure hardship and misery themselves for the sake of friendship.
489. And truly those are called friends, who impart hard advice and hard truth and hard healing words for the sake of truth and help and friendship.
490. A true friend delighteth the heart and mind of man under all conditions, even if for the sake of truth, he suggesteth something unpleasant and if he speaketh hard words.
491. A true friend remaineth so even in death, however, a false friend remaineth not so, even if only the wind bloweth.
492. A weak one sinketh into belief and is befouled by delusion, however, the strong one seeketh and findeth truth and becometh a knowledgeable one.
493. To obtain wisdom in everything is by no means easy for man, therefore, he hath to study with the wise ones and be persistent and patient.
494. To gain wealth without work, men and women attire themselves as male-whores and whores, and give themselves to others for hire as a tool; but the righteous do not attire themselves as whores and male-whores, because they are industriously about their hands' work and live in comfort and peace.
495. The success of everything desired, man oweth only to his own doing and devising and thinking, and whatever man calleth fate is a reward of man alone, as he forges his own fate by his thoughts, by his thinking and striving and by his deeds.
496. As the good one delighteth in greeting older people, so the fool delighteth in disdaining a righteous man.
497. Youth and wealth, whores and male-whores, a cloud's shadow, new clothes and a false friendship can only be enjoyed a brief while, yet wisdom remaineth eternally young and is immortal.
498. An unwise man is a fool for he selecteth the enemy as friend, but toward the true friend he is disinclined and causeth him loss, therefore, he considereth in his weak mind good to be bad but bad to be good.
499. The fire is a pleasure in winter; the gaze at a friend is a pleasure, the wise one's wisdom is a pleasure; the acquaintance of noble people is a pleasure; but fulfillment is the love of Creation.
500. As the drop of water disappeareth instantly on hot iron, so every wise advice ebbeth in a moment in the ears of the scoundrels.
501. This one is either one of us or a stranger, so the fools, unrighteous, jesters and others of low thinking calculate; the manner of action of the noble wise one, in comparison, considereth all people as his family.
502. Through water a dam collapseth, due to treason a secret conference collapseth, due to whispering and slanders false friendships and false bonds collapse, and due to words of truth a quick-footed one collapseth and also the unrighteous, the fools and jesters and scoundrels.
503. Thoughts, striving and deeds, by which one purchases dishonor, by which one goeth to self-created hell and loseth the condition of heaven within oneself, one shall not do because they only delight the unrighteous.

504. If the wise one sees no prosperity for peace without a fight, he dieth fighting together with the enemy, for his thinking and striving for wisdom and peace is his duty and doth not abandon him.
505. Even to an enemy hospitality hath to be granted if he cometh to the house, likewise as a tree doth not withhold shade and protection from him who cometh to cut it down.
506. Through the spokes the hub of the wheel is carried, while the spokes find support in the hub, also the course of things rounds itself with the wise, whose wisdom is also of that nature.
507. It is truthful that man is slave to his wealth, but wealth is slave to nobody.
508. Even if no advantage and no comfort and no honor and no fame are derived from it, but only sheer disadvantage resulteth, nevertheless, the wise remaineth true to his obligation and energetically pursueth his work.
509. If the one, who striveth for truth and for deliverance from ignorance, only bore the thousandth part of the suffering which the jesters, fools, scorners, offenders and other unrighteous create for themselves, then within the blink of an eye, he would attain deliverance.
510. All deeds and desires of a human being of small intellect, who liveth in poverty of wisdom, dry up like small water courses in the heat of the sun.
511. A wife of a husband is his other half, therefore, the husband is a whole with one wife, and as he has several wives, he is a whole with each wife, and also his wife is his best friend, and the wife shall be the root of the wealth, of comforts and virtues, and the wife also is the root of descendants.
512. The lust-cries of love adorn the peacocks, but the speech of wisdom adorneth the wise one.
513. What the wise one doth not have yet, he wisely seeketh to obtain, the obtained he guardeth carefully, what he guardeth he multiplieth, and what he multiplieth he shares with the worthy ones.
514. The combining alone of even insignificant things lead a matter to the goal, for even with grasses, which are woven into nets, the wild lion is caught.
515. Whoever is contented and determined, respectful and understanding, and doth not think too long if something is ordered to him, he liveth as a student with the wise and will become a wise one himself.
516. A ruler who is a fool, a learned one who is imprudent, and the one who from nothing attaineth to wealth, sees the world and the people like a bundle of straw full of noxious insects.
517. If one presenteth reasons of proof to someone who doth not think, this is like thrashing empty husks.
518. To render services to fools or other unrighteous ones is like impressing signs of remembrance in sand blowing in the wind.
519. Whoever dieth as an unrighteous one will, without doubt, be unhappy in his reincarnation and have to endure much disgrace.
520. As a man liveth, thinketh, striveth, and acteth, so the harvest of his life will be, for it is impossible that if thistles would be sown, grain would sprout therefrom, for the seed which is sown also sprouteth.
521. Without resting the donkey carrieth his load and during its work it neither feeleth cold nor heat and is always content, and as the donkey doth so man shall do and learn from it.
522. The wise one even looketh upon worms and ants as to himself, and as the unwise therein emulateth the wise, he obtaineth knowledge about himself.

523. A man, who considereth to commit things, which are not of true life and also foreign to wisdom, findeth death like a fool who with outstretched arms jumpeth off a boulder and thinketh he can fly like the birds.

524. The imprudent bemoaneth things not worth lamenting about and speaketh words of absurdity, however, the wise bemoaneth neither what is dead nor what is alive.

525. Earthly possessions and people are never to be bemoaned, only the fool doth so and bemoaneth live and dead possessions and people and creates new sorrow from sorrow, so he suffereth loss for a matter several times.

526. If ten thousand cult offerings and the truth were weighed against each other, then it would always result that the truth is better and higher and of immeasurably greater value than all cult offerings.

527. Only bad people relish the fortune of the bad ones, likewise the fruit of the avocado tree is only eaten by swine and other animals and by humans without any sense of taste.

528. Whoever praiseth preferences, which only seem to be present, should be ashamed of himself; who, therefore, shall not be laughed at, if someone calleth the fruit of the avocado tree well tasting, as it is only an apparent fruit and eaten by creatures without any sense of taste.

529. To a man, to whom the descendants, the friends, the relatives, the people are attached, and from whom even in need and suffering and lack contentment doth not depart, he hath the kingdom of heaven within himself on Earth.

530. Only the fool imagineth that he would be highly esteemed by men, wherefore he is like an ox which lacketh horns.

531. The wise teach that man's first duty is to cause suffering to no one, as also men, plants and animals have to be given consideration.

532. Even the hunter is guilty of killing, if he hunteth and killeth while not in need of food of the hunted, if he only killeth the animals as pastime, out of lust and joy, or out of anger because an animal is grazing in his field.

533. A wise one doth not allow that even his own children do wrong, and his treatment of them is the same as he would confer upon other people

534. Man doth not trust himself as much as he trusteth a wise one, therefore, the prudent seeketh the friendship of the wise.

535. The fool, who committeth treason in a good matter and becometh an opponent, cometh to naught and is also despised by the likes of him.

536. According to nature, the husband is equal in his rights to the wife, yet the husband is the procreator and the wife the one bringing forth, therefore, a husband can pair with several wives, while one wife can only be coupled by one husband, therefore, the wife shall have only one husband, but the husband several wives.

537. According to nature, the husband is equal in his rights to the wife, yet the husband hath greater strength and is more logical in his thinking, therefore, he shall lead the business and family and everything in terms of work, therefore, he shall be the protector of wives and of children, however, in separated duties of equality in all things.

538. The wise only then ariseth to battle, if he knoweth himself and his opponent, for the prudence of wisdom lieth therein that one knoweth oneself and others.

539. First, man shall consider to adorn himself with wisdom, only then may he test others.

540. First, the wise one acquireth good manners, only then he teacheth such to his students and neighbors.
541. If a righteous one judgeth a rascal according to himself and believeth that he speaketh the truth, he will be betrayed by the rascal.
542. If an unrighteous one judgeth the neighbor, he recognizeth in him his own evils and disgraces and getteth angry about it, but he doth not grant the neighbor the same right as to himself, for he has quick feet.
543. If a man doth not think fast, nor act fast, neither complete a work fast nor learn fast, he is not reliable, for time drinketh up his life.
544. Friendship at the beginning, in the middle, in all trouble and at death is only found in the truly righteous, but not in the unrighteous; one is able to cut asunder, burn, crush or beat a true friend, yet he will never become a different one.
545. In misfortune and at work, and in battle and in misery and suffering the greatness of man is revealed, as the spirit of the wine can only be recognized when it is drunk.'
546. Thus Henok taught mankind of Earth, speaketh the JHWH; and Henok, the Prophet, taught mankind when he was 40 years old, therefore, during 326 years, before his life ended at 366 years.
547. And the JHWH also spoke further and said: 'Henok was gone from the world of the living, therefore he was on the other side of this side.
548. But Henok was often reincarnated as a human being on the Earth, without fulfilling a task as Prophet.
549. Truly, thousands of years were completed on the Earth before Henok was again reincarnated with the fulfilling task of a Prophet.
550. And when Henok was reincarnated as prophet, many generations of mankind of Earth and their descendants, since his first time as Prophet, had passed and the evil and unrighteousness had increased in great measure, which was created due to the treason of Semjasa and his followers.'
551. And the JHWH revealeth the secret about Semjasa and his followers and about the events, which changed the course of progress on Earth.
552. 'It was three hundred seventy eight thousand and four hundred eighteen years (378,418) before Henok's first birth on Earth, when the event occurred about Semjasa and his accomplices, who were killed by the death-suns.
553. And it was as the law of Creation determined that the Spirit forms of the killed remained in the ban of Earth, therefore, they reincarnated many times according to the cycle of time.
554. But the JHWH of that time endeavored to again accept the fallible after several reincarnations among his daughters and sons of the heavens, therefore, at a given time, he let them be seized and brought them back to their home in the depths of the universe, where they were taught during many reincarnations, and where they became true leaders and watchers of the JHWH.
555. And the time came, when they were prepared for a new task by a new JHWH, who endeavored to remove the evil events on the Earth of earlier times, therefore, the wise ones took counsel to revisit the Earth to remove all evils.
556. And through the advice of the JHWH, a new generation of men was to be procreated on Earth, which was to be like the sons and daughters of the heavens, therefore the scholars undertook a lot to make this possible.

557. But three thousand seven hundred years were completed before the first birth of Henok on Earth, when the daughters and sons of the heavens and their JHWH traveled again to the Earth, after many new incarnations.
558. And as was ordered by the scholars, they also lived there for 60 full years.
559. Then the change was completed as the scholars demanded, while the sons and daughters of the heavens could get together with mankind of Earth, so that a new genus of man could be procreated, which was to be like the sons and daughters of the heavens.
560. And the year one thousand seven hundred (1,700) was complete before the first birth of Henok on Earth, when Semjasa, the son of heaven and overseer of the JHWH, the great ruler of the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe, through his own advice procreated with an earthly woman the descendant, Adam, the father of the white race of man, which was like the sons and daughters of the heavens.
561. But Asasel got together with an earthly woman and procreated, Ledon, the father of the dark race of Earth.
562. But Sartael got together with an earthly woman and procreated Tet-el, the father of the red race on Earth.
563. And the descendants of the different races got together among themselves and procreated new races and nations, because burdened since times of old, they did not obey the laws and recommendations, so that in a rounded five hundred years, they again lived in great evil like their ancestors a long time ago.
564. Therefore, the JHWH advised that through his leader, Gabrjel, a descendant was to be procreated with an earthly woman, who then would be taught by him and his wise ones, and whose Spirit form would be one of theirs, therefore, of the travelers from afar from the depths of the universe.
565. Therefore, procreated and born by the earthly woman, Sarana, was the one Henok, who taught mankind of Earth, and thus he lived 366 years.
566. But the teachings of Henok did not bear much fruit among mankind of Earth, therefore, he was born again at a new time as Prophet and, therefore, as the son of Jared.
567. But Jared was begotten by Urakjbaramel,
568. But Urakjbaramel was begotten by Mahalaleel,
569. But Mahalaleel was begotten by Kenan,
570. But Kenan was begotten by Aruseak,
571. But Aruseak was begotten by Akjbeel,
572. But Akjbeel was begotten by Enos,
573. But Enos was begotten by Seth,
574. But Seth was begotten by Adam,
575. But Adam was begotten by Semjasa, one of the leaders of the JHWH and according to his advice, with an earthly woman.
576. And the descendants of the sons of the heavens and the earthly women lived many hundreds of years, so they became many times older than mankind of Earth.
577. Therefore, at a new time, Henok was born and procreated Methusalah, and thus he was Prophet another time.
578. And Henok was taught of his own power and also by the JHWH and his teachers and wise ones, but he also had visions and was filled with great wisdom.
579. And Henok wrote down what he had to teach and also what were his visions.
580. Therefore, Henok wrote: “And I, Henok, see visions and am taught by myself and by the JHWH and also by his helpers and wise ones.

581. And I, Henok, praised Creation during my life and also at a time when I was not among you, mankind of Earth, while I was with the JHWH of the world and also with his watchers.
582. And the JHWH called me and spoke: “Henok, you writer of righteousness, go to the people of Earth, and make known to them the teaching of truth and, therefore, do this in the new language which is now understood by mankind of Earth.
583. Go to mankind and bring to them the proclamation of truth, that they are all creatures of Creation and arranged in all things into Its laws and recommendations.
584. And go, therefore,” the JHWH spoke unto me, “Henok, and proclaim that mankind of Earth are descendants of earthly women and men and of sons and daughters of the heavens, who, some time ago, were fallible and brought corruption.
585. Make known the earlier occurrences, which you have proclaimed at earlier times, as in word as also in writing.
586. And announce the truth that mankind, against all warning, has newly lapsed into all evil offences.”
587. And the JHWH spoke unto me: “Henok, as mankind of Earth committeth evil offences, they will have no peace on Earth.
588. The people of Earth will find no forgiveness because of their offences, and they also will not be allowed to enjoy their children.
589. They will see the murder of their loved ones, and they will sigh about the downfall of their children.
590. And so they will beg for mercy, yet no mercy nor peace will be imparted unto them, for despite their begging and supplication in anxiety and misery, they will remain unrighteous.”
591. Thus the JHWH spoke to me, and also the watchers spoke to me, when I stayed with them, yet while they taught much else which they commissioned me to teach you.
592. Therefore, I, Henok, come to you human beings of Earth and say to you: “You will have no peace, for due to your own guilt, you have brought a severe judgement upon yourself.
593. You have ordained this judgement over yourself that you are bound by yourself, so that no alleviation and intercession and mercy will be imparted to you because of your offences and your violence.
594. And violence you have acquired, but also all acts of slandering and unrighteousness up to murdering.
595. And you continue to live in this manner, although you lie in fear and in terror and know what will get hold of you.
596. Therefore, do not beg me to write a petition for you, to bring it to the JHWH of the world, that he may help you, for truly, I do not have the power to do such, that I simply could bring a begging- and supplication-petition to the JHWH.
597. But listen to what I have seen in a vision, when I rested and slumbered.
598. The vision showed to me the decay of the people of Earth, their offences and evils, the vices and everything bad in all things, as in the thinking and acting and striving and in the nourishment.
599. I saw that the people of Earth broke the recommendation, which told them that they shall eat only what is edible for them, for the vision showed me how the people robbed the animals of their nourishment.
600. Verily, through the laws and recommendations of Creation and also through Its order is given that mankind has its own nourishment, as also every animal has its own nourishment, so therefore, each one according to its own kind.

601. Therefore, to man is given as nourishment everything which he can eat raw or cooked, so that it does not harm his health and also is in taste of that nature, that it is appetizing without the need to add changing ingredients to make the taste of the nourishment tolerable thereby.
602. Everything is edible for human beings, everything shall be allotted to him as nourishment and without concern, if the food is appetizing raw or cooked without adding ingredients for taste tolerance.
603. But if nourishment is not appetizing and is not taste-tolerable, because it is bitter or bland to a great extent, then it is not compatible with human beings, as it is with intense burning or with putrefaction.
604. Therefore, what is not edible for human beings is the nourishment of the animals, that which is bitter or bland or burning or putrefied or any other way, and which consists of semblance fruit, semblance vegetables and semblance herbs, however, given as nourishment for man are real fruits, vegetables and herbs.
605. Therefore, to the animals is given the food and everything edible, and also to man is given the nourishment and everything edible, but everything edible is also divided thus into the edible for the animals and into the edible for the human being.
606. The edibles for man are different in their energy values, but the same is also valid for the edibles of animals, yet a difference shall be set between man and animal, so that human beings only eat food assigned to them and do not rob the nourishment of the animals, even if the food of animals may be palatable to him if it is falsified with added ingredients and made palatable to his taste.
607. Thus man may not falsify his own edibles with false ingredients, as it were, that fruit is not mixed with vegetables or with fish or meat, or as it were, that no sweet is stirred into the edibles which are not compatible with sweet.
608. Also man shall be moderate in his eating and drinking, so that he doth not submit himself to gluttony and overeating, but just the same, if this is still done, this then is equal to the falsification of edibles, therefore, both issues fall into the category of imprudence and weakness and also of weak-mindedness and stupidity, because both lead to sickness and evils in the body and in thinking and feeling, likewise because man robs and eats edibles of the animals, is the reason that many people suffer from manifold diseases and from weak and slow thinking and from all types of weaknesses.
609. If man transgresseth against the laws and recommendations and against the order of Creation, he createth self-punishment for himself, which also resulteth from these things, which I have seen in this vision during sleep, which was given unto me through the wise thoughts and the power of the JHWH.
610. And I also saw many other things in this vision, and each thing was less joy than the other, for all things were impressed with the suffering of man of Earth, which he createth through his absurdity and offence and unrighteousness.
611. But that which followeth here written down is the word of justice and the reprimanding of the people of Earth by the JHWH, whom I saw in this vision.
612. And in my sleep, I saw what I will now tell with my writing and with the tongue of my flesh and with my breath, which Creation hath placed into the mouth of every human being, so that he shall speak therewith and understand with his intellect.

613. And man shall understand in the manner as Creation has created him and endowed him with intellect, thus he shall understand the word of insight.

614. Creation has also created me, and by the power of the JHWH and my own, it is granted me to work as Prophet among you human beings of Earth, and to instruct you and to impart advice to you and also to scold you.

615. You know me well and I know you, and I know your supplication for mercy, but I say unto you that in my vision also appeared, that your supplication namely cannot be granted by the JHWH into all eternity, for the power is not his to fulfill your supplication of mercy, because all this lies in your power alone.

616. Thus, as you actest and livest will also be your life, therefore will your petition for mercy also lie in your power and in your determination, for as you change and become righteous ones, you then will fulfill your petition for mercy yourself and will be freed from all evils.

617. In all things you are master over yourself, therefore you have to help yourself, but that you dost not do, for you believe in a human being whom you call god, and who allowed himself to be attributed to, to have created the world and all life and space and the stars; yet not at all has he done such, for such work is only possible to Creation.

618. But as you erroneously believe that a god is the highest to you, then you thinkest and believest in error; but if truthfully you thinkest and knowest that Creation truthfully alone is the highest, then you knowest about the Spirit of Creation, which also enliveneth you and resideth within you, and as you therefore help yourself, then Creation helpeth you.

619. But many of you do not want to be instructed, wherefore you only laboriously climb up to BEING of eternity, therefore, already a saying exists on Earth, that you are bound in your evils all the days of your life.

620. But before the days of the Earth world are ending, before that you will have to witness the annihilation of your beloved sons and daughters who, because of your infamous actions and your unrighteousness, you are not allowed to own, but whom, due to your own guilt, you yourself murder and annihilate through war and pestilence and robbing and all evils.

621. Your petitions for mercy about them will not be heard by your false priests and gods and idols, and they will also not be granted by the authorities and scholars and army leaders, because you will raise and elect them yourself to butcher your sons and daughters and also yourself.

622. You will weep and implore and whine like young dogs, when annihilation cometh often and often up into the most distant future, and you will not be allowed to take a word of solace or of the teaching into your mouth from the scripture, which I have written, but so it will also be with the teachings, which I will bring to you during other times in the future through other prophets, if you do not change your life according to the laws and recommendations of Creation.

623. And thus in a vision has appeared to me: Clouds invited me and covered me with fog, and the course of the stars and the lightning urged and drove me, and also the winds gave me wings and carried me away.

624. They took me up and brought me close to a wall, which was constructed of many shining crystal stones and was surrounded by a wall of fire, which caused me fear.

625. But in my vision I stepped into the wall of fire and approached a house, which also was constructed of shining crystal stones.
626. The walls of the house were smooth like a floor, but they were also constructed of crystal stones as also the floor.
627. The ceiling resembled the course of the stars and lightning, and in between hovered fiery comets and behind them was their sky, purest water.
628. Flaming fire flowed around the walls of the house, and the door also was a burning fire.
629. And yet, I entered the house which was like hot fire and yet as cold as ice, and in which was nothing delightful and also no life.
630. Fear covered me and also terror gripped me, and I was also shaking and trembled and fell on my face, and soon I had another vision.
631. And in the vision I saw another house, which was larger than the first.
632. And at the second house all doors stood open before me, and it was constructed of pure fiery flames.
633. But this house was extravagant in size and magnificence and splendor, the like of which I have never seen before, so that I cannot describe the full size and magnificence and splendor.
634. The floor of the house was undulating in fire and also the ceiling was aflame, yet above the house was lightning and the courses of the stars.
635. And as I looked up, I saw a throne in the house and its appearance was like white frost, and around it everything was like shining suns, glittering stars, and fiery comets.
636. And under the exalted throne flowed forth streams of blazing fire, and everything was so dazzling bright that it was impossible to look at everything longer than a tiny moment.
637. And on the throne It sat, which is great in love and Glory, and It was not enveloped in any form and It was also without time.
638. It was Spirit in all Its Glory, and It rayed into BEING of the Ur-eternal and eternal.
639. Its robe was more dazzling and brighter than the sun and whiter than the white hail.
640. No form of life could enter here, neither could a mortal see the shape and the countenance of the glorious and majestic one, and if I had not seen It myself in a vision, to me also the view of It would have remained eternally hidden.
641. And human beings could not enter unto It, and not the sons and daughters of the heavens, also not the JHWH, to whom also this secret of all secrets was hidden.
642. Thus only to me was revealed the Glory of this secret, and this will also remain so eternally for the mortals.
643. But the immortals could enter in, who were freed from the bodies of mortality, and who were pure Spirit form and blazing flaming fire like the Glory of Creation Itself.
644. But the immortals could only approach Creation up to thirty ells, and nobody could approach closer of all those who were around the Glory.
645. But ten thousand times ten thousand (10,000 X 10,000) were around the Glory of Creation and all those were themselves flaming fire and the holy ones and wise ones of time, and they are likewise called Petale.
646. The Glory of Creation required not the counsel of the holy and wise ones, but they were Petale and, therefore, the wise and holy ones and the advisors of time.

647. And the Petale were near the Glory of Creation and did not leave by day and not by night and they also never left.

648. And until then, I have had a veil over my countenance, so I could see everything, yet I trembled, because I could not come to know all the Glory and also not understand, yet the seeing was revealed to me.

649. But the Glory of Creation called me and I heard Its call within me, without having heard a sound with my ears.

650. And the Glory spoke unto me: “Henok, hear my holy words, but also come here close to me.”

651. And the Glory of Creation let me stand up and go hither close before It, while I lowered my countenance, for awe welled up within me, and the blinding light of grandeur blinded me.

652. And I heard the words of the Glory within me which spoke unto me: “Henok, do not be afraid, for you are a righteous man and as such the writer and proclaimer of justice.”

653. But, thus, the Glory spoke further and laid upon me, that I was sent through Its will and my will unto you, mankind, that you may be taught by me, Henok, the proclaimer and Prophet.

654. “But listen,” for so the Glory of Creation spoke unto me, “Go to the sons and daughters of the heavens and to the human beings of Earth, and teach them that they shall pray to themselves and for themselves, but that they shall not pray to petition idols and gods, therefore, also not to objects and not to priests and other human beings, except to themselves or to their Spirit and also to Me, for I am Creation and the Spirit of BEING.

655. And ask them,” I heard the words of the Glory, “Ask them, the human beings of Earth and the sons and daughters of the heavens: ‘Why have you left the way of the high, holy, eternal justice, and why do you commit whoredom with women and men, and why have you defiled yourselves with all offences, disgraces and evils of law-breaking and recommendation-breaking and order-breaking.’

656. Why have you burdened yourself with all evils, while you were yet spiritually hallowed and had a long life, which was longer than a thousand years, but which you have defiled and destroyed through all your evils, so now fewer that 40 years remain to you for a life!

657. Therefore, in the future, your life span will be very short for many thousands of years, and only few will exist who survive two generations.

658. But a change will come, when a part of the generations of man of Earth changeth and turneth toward the truth, which will be at the time of the Prophet of the New Age, when the life span will rise through the life conduct of the righteous in obedience of truth, so your age will reach a value in the middle of three generations of men, which is three parts of four parts of one hundred years.

659. But the life span will continue to increase, if the righteous ones will not decrease but increase.

660. But your age in the middle value does not outlast two generations, for through your unrighteousness and all your offences, evils and disgraces, you have abandoned the truth so far, that you have shortened your years of life to a small part of the whole.

661. You have lusted for the blood of your neighbors and murdered them, and you also have lusted for the flesh of your neighbors and committed whoredom with them and also brought forth children, who inherited from you the rapid mortality and transitoriness, so they transmit the same to their descendants.

662. You also have created and lived all unrighteousness, all foolishness and stupidity and evils, offences and loss, which weigh heavy upon you and always strike you again, because every one of your evil thoughts joineth all other evil thoughts of yours and of the neighbors, so they become a powerful force, which continueth to live and always striketh you by day and by night.

663. The power of evil thoughts, however, hovers like a mighty invisible sky around the world and in your cult places, from where every moment you are struck by the evil forces of this power.

664. But, in your misunderstanding, you call these evil forces, created by yourself, and according to your erroneous belief, evil spirits and demons.

665. Therefore, you call your own evil thoughts evil spirits and evil demons, which are foundation stones to you for new evil thoughts and deeds.

666. Verily, the thoughts of you human beings have their residence within yourself, but they also have their residence in the invisible sky around the world, and they also have their residence wherever you live or where you often conduct your truthful or false prayers.

667. But only good thoughts or evil thoughts live at one place, and as a human being cometh to a place of good thoughts, the energies of good come to him, but if a human being cometh to a place where there are evil thoughts, the energy of evil befalleth him, as this is so in all of your cult places, in which you pray to gods and call upon idols, so that at such a place, malice and severe confusion befalleth you, from which you art not able to free yourself.

668. A thought is like a mighty invisible energy, which liveth many thousands of years and storeth itself like the grain in the granary; and likewise, as man fetcheth grain from his granary and nourisheth himself, man continuously fetcheth from the stored thoughts of power new energies of good or evil, with which his own thoughts are nourished in good or in evil.

669. And all those, on whom crash down thought energies of evil, will continue to corrupt for they are those, who deny the truth and practice violence and cause destruction on Earth, and who cause disaster, but who therefore, will have lack of food and will have to suffer from thirst.

670. Their misery will be great, and they will find no mercy, for they will be struck and punished through their own unrighteousness.

671. Verily, the power of evil is very great, which is stored everywhere, in places which you call houses of god and wherever else you conduct your cults.

672. And at these places manifold deaths lie in waiting for you, wherever they are, so that your thinking and striving and acting and also your flesh is corrupted.

673. But therefore, you will corrupt at these places and by all stored evil forces everywhere until the day, when you let the great judgement fall over you, before you become righteous ones.

674. But if you die as unrighteous ones, then your flesh falleth into decay, but while your evil character storeth itself in the invisible skies around the Earth as powerful force.

675. But if you art born again and standest in a new incarnation, then again you will be befallen by your old evil character, which lasteth throughout endless times in the invisible skies around the Earth, which strikes you like poisoned arrows of evil.

676. But the poison of the arrows poisons you more and more, and you do not try to remove the poison from yourself, therefore, you demoralizest further and determinest in advance for many reincarnations, that you will be struck by your own poisoned arrows of evil.
677. But if you change to righteous ones, then you begin to fight against the evil, but therefore, you create a harness against your own poisoned arrows, which rain down on you from the invisible skies of evil around the Earth, where they are stored for thousands of years, so they do not strike you with full force anymore and slowly lose their force of evil.
678. And if you art steadfast and, in your change, defendest yourself against the evils of your own making and those of your neighbor, then your harness groweth, so you have a mighty protection therein.
679. Verily, you human beings of Earth were corrupted at early times by sons and daughters of the heavens, although then the hidden things of the laws and recommendations of Creation were not revealed to you yet, but nevertheless, you became guilty of all evils and of all unrighteousness, by which you have made yourselves to burdened ones.
680. Small and meaningless secrets were betrayed to you by the guilty sons and daughters of the heavens, and you willingly accepted them and made them your own without feeling guilty and without defense, as you were only too willing.
681. In your hardening of heart you made the meaningless secrets your own and also taught them to your children, so since then you have caused much evil on the Earth and have no peace and no love, but also no truth, knowledge and wisdom, and this likewise among the women and men and among the children."
682. So then, the Glory of Creation spoke to me that I instruct mankind of Earth about It, before It breathed me away to another place, where again were shapes like flaming fire, and who appeared like human beings, whenever they desired this by their thoughts.
683. And these shapes like flaming fire were similar to the shapes of Petale in their appearance, but their changeability was greatly dissimilar and only their very own, which were called as Arahat Athersata.
684. And the flaming shapes Arahat Athersata led me to the place of the storm on the summit of a mountain, the pinnacle of which reached high into the sky.
685. And on the summit of the mountain, a flaming shape of the Arahat Athersata stepped close to me and changed into a human being and said: "See, I am Urjel, one of the Arahat Athersata.
686. Like the Petale, we are a form of unity and also singular as ourselves, but we are WE, like the Petale, who are higher in everything than we.
687. Verily, Henok, you are astonished that you are with us, but soon you will understand that you do not need to be astonished.
688. I am Urjel from the WE-Spirit forms of Arahat Athersata and like the Petale, our existence of solid bodies has ended and we live in the BEING of a world unknown to man.
689. But man liveth in a world which lieth quiet deep below ours, in which the time of our BEING has become existence in the great ocean of duration.
690. Our BEING has become knowledge and truth and love and also to energy and power in the obedience of the laws and recommendations within and about Creation.

691. In the endless duration, the Spirit has freed Itself from the body, and reincarnation has vanished into the past.
692. Our life has become Creation-approximate, forceful and powerful, in striving completion of perfection.
693. We, Arahat Athersata, are the beholders of time, and we are the recognizers of truth of all things in their source and in their consequences.
694. The boundaries between the human world and our world are of great duration, and they are measured in many million years times million years and, therefore, they constitute the barriers of the spiritual worlds.
695. We know the communication in the spaceless and timeless realm, which maketh the past and the future present to us.
696. And this shall be said unto you: What you seest and hearest is given to no other human being except you, therefore it is also inaccessible to an JHWH, only to you at all times, when you breathe, at a time or at another time, as Prophet of the highest standing.
697. But therefore, you now shall see and hear things, which will also be strange for you to understand, and the secrets thereof you will only solve in the distant future, when seven thousand years have passed over the Earth.
698. But as the seen and heard will remain a secret to you for seven-thousand years, it will thus remain a secret for the human beings for a much longer time, before they will grasp the secret of our signs, which we let you see and hear.
699. Therefore, Henok, do not be depressed, if at this time, you do not understand our signs to the full extent, but be glad if you grasp a portion and by and by in further incarnations more and more.
700. Therefore, listen carefully and see what we, the observers of time, have to announce and to reveal to you."
701. Thus spoke Urjel, the flaming one and one of the Arahat Athersata, so that I saw and heard the secrets of the past and the future.
702. And I saw places in dazzling light and I heard thunder at the ends thereof, in the depths of heaven above, I saw a quiver with arrows and a mighty fiery arch, which stretched from the rising of the sun unto its setting.
703. But in the same depth hovered a mighty fiery sword, and all the lightning of Earth flashed round about.
704. Then Urjel, the flaming one, took me away and he brought me to the waters of life, and up to the fire of the West, which burns in the sky at every setting of the sun.
705. And I came with Urjel, the flaming one, to a fiery stream, the fire of which, however, was like water, and which towards the west poureth forth into a great ocean, and I also saw all other great streams which, like the first, all poured forth into the ocean.
706. And then, I reached a world with Urjel, which is darkness and light at the same time, and which is the world in which the mortals walk during death, and from which they return again into incarnation after a long time.
707. But Urjel led me into the world where the mortals walk during death for a long time, and the time suddenly was gone, and timelessness prevailed in endless duration.
708. And my body had vanished from me, and also everything which was human, and also my feeling was only a perception in love and calm and peace.
709. And I was aware that I was Henok and yet not Henok, for I was Henok and yet was one with all the mortals, who walked in this world for a long time.

710. But this world was like the Earth, which is in darkness and in light at the same time, yet the Earth was different and another world, for it was the world and the life of reincarnating ones in their coarse manner, but they did not see the world of the changing mortals, and also the world of the changing mortals was so that they did not see the world of the coarse type.
711. But the one world was the other world, and yet both worlds were two other worlds and different from each other, and also the world of the coarse type was impressed by time, but the world of the changing mortals was of timeless duration.
712. But so Urjel led me out again from the world of the changing mortals, and thus I again felt my body and everything that was human of me; and an evil grief and fear befell me, and I felt pain in my breast that I had to leave this world of the fine type.
713. But the grief remained in me and never left me again, for the perception of joy and calm and love did not cease to glimmer within me, which had filled me in the other world.
714. And Urjel took me further, and I saw the mountains of black clouds of winter time and the places into which the waters of all the depths discharge themselves.
715. And I also saw the estuary of all streams of Earth and the estuary of all depths of the universe.
716. And Urjel, the flaming one, who was one of the Arahat Athersata, showed me the containers of all winds, and also I saw how Creation has wisely adorned everything.
717. And I saw the foundation of the universe and also the cornerstone of the Earth and the seven invisible winds, which carry the Earth and the firmament of heaven.
718. And I saw how seven other winds span the heights and the depths of the heavens, and how they wind and float between heavens and earth worlds and suns, and how they are the seven pillars of the universe.
719. Also I saw the winds which turn the heavens, which evoke the circling of the sun around itself, and which let the constellations circle their courses around suns and cause stars to go down.
720. But then I saw that the winds were no winds, because every wind was energy of a certain law, and therefore, energy like the swinging of a stone, which by a sling flieth infinitely far.
721. But also the energy was likewise the energy of Earth, on which every stone falleth back, which is thrown quite high with a sling.
722. But also I saw the true winds, which are perceptible and which move the dust and whirl up in the air, and likewise I saw them above the Earth, how they carry and drift the clouds.
723. Thus I was at the end of the Earth and saw that the end was not the end, because the end went further and further and it also rounded itself almost to a sphere, and as I was outside of the solid of Earth, the world floated in the lightness of heaven and like a sphere in the air.
724. And Urjel penetrated a strange world with me, of which the like I had never seen before.
725. We went to the south, where a great fire burneth from heaven day and night, and where seven mountains of most precious stone are, three which lay towards the east and three towards the south and one in the middle.
726. But the mountains which lay towards the east were different, one of them was of multi-colored precious stones, one of pearl stones and one of spear glass.

727. But the mountains towards the south were of a different type, for one was of red stones, the middle one reached into heaven and was of alabaster, and the third also reached into heaven and was of sapphire.
728. But in all mountains was a flaming fire by which the mountains shone and played in the light.
729. But far from the mountains and on the other side of the great land was a place, where all the waters gathered, and there also was a deep abyss in the Earth with pillars of heavenly fire.
730. But under the fires, pillars of heavenly fire fell down, which one could neither count in direction upward or downward.
731. But above the abyss was a place, which had no heavens above it and also no firmament and no foundation of Earth beneath it, and also there were no waters at the place and no birds, but everything was deserted and empty, for it was an empty and desolate place.
732. It was terrible what I saw there, for there were seven stars, like huge burning mountains, and like evil spirits having become visible, who implored me for mercy and intercession.
733. And Urjel spoke unto me: “This is the place where heaven and Earth end, and this place serveth the stars of the heavens and all wise ones of the heavens as place of instruction.
734. This likewise is the place here, at which all laws and recommendations of Creation and Its sevenfold order reveal themselves since Its very beginning.
735. But here also arrive all thoughts and all feelings of all human beings of good as well as of evil, and from this place they rise into infinity if they are good, but if they are evil then right away they dissipate into nothing, so that the end of all days is only full of peace and of love in eternity.
736. But the end of all days will be the judgement of all judgements, and all life which at that time still walketh in unrighteousness, causeth itself to vanish and to be extinguished for all eternity.
737. But the life, which at the end of all days liveth in righteousness, entereth into Creation Itself to become one with It and to live in all-great-timeliness.”
738. And truly, I, Henok, alone have seen the view of all this truth and received the instructions thereto.
739. I, Henok, saw all the beginning and ends of everything and no human being, except me, has seen them as I have seen them.
740. And Urjel taught me that there are seven flaming energies of the Arahat Athersata, who watch over everything in the universe jointly with the entire Arahat Athersata, but the seven are the proclaimers and instructors and uniters to the true wise ones of all worlds, who are lower than their world.
741. But one of these watchers is Urjel, and he watcheth over all thunder and all quaking, over the lightnings and weather and seasons and over all energies which are in all things.
742. And the second watcher, therefore, is Rufael, who watcheth over all forms of Spirit of man, of animals, of plants of all types, of the stars and everything which liveth, creepeth and flieth.
743. And the third watcher, therefore, is Raguel, who watcheth over everything which liveth against the laws and recommendations of Creation and against the sevenfold order.
744. And the fourth watcher, therefore, is Mjkel, who watcheth over everything which liveth according to the laws and recommendations of Creation and according to the sevenfold order.
745. And the fifth watcher, therefore, is Sarakel, who watcheth over the instructions and the progress of the forms of Spirit of man and animals and of everything, which creepeth and flieth.
746. And the sixth watcher, therefore, is Gabrel, who watcheth over all worlds of the low and high forms, and who watcheth over all boundaries of all different worlds.
747. And the seventh watcher, therefore, is Kerubel, who watcheth over all remainders of life, which is presented by man and animals and stars and plants and energies, and everything which liveth and creepeth and flieth in the entire universe.

748. And the WE-form of Arahat Athersata jointly watch in all tasks of the seven watchers and therefore, they are one with them and in all things.
749. And Urjel led me to a different place where nothing happened, and there I saw something terrible.
750. There was no firmly based earth and there also existed no high sky, and everything was empty, desolate space, quite august and terrible.
751. And in the august space, bound together, seven gigantic spheres of wobbly energy floated, like great mountains, and flaming like dark fire.
752. This time, I asked Urjel: “Due to which cause of malice are these spheres of flaming dark fire power bound, and why are they expelled to this august and terrible space?”
753. Then Urjel, my leader, the flaming one, said to me: “Why do you search with me about these things, and why do you inquire and ask and are curious?
754. But therefore, listen: These are the seven different powers of evil of all human beings, who have transgressed against the laws and recommendations and against the sevenfold order of Creation, and they are those, who are degenerated in their energies.
755. These powers have quite mightily stored themselves for all times in the universe, while the guilty human beings, meantime, have become righteous ones or are in the change toward righteousness.
756. But their evil energies, which originated through thoughts and pondering and striving and acting, are not changeable and full of danger, because they attack every life and force it into their ban.
757. Therefore, these energies of evil in degeneration must be captured by the power of this place, so they are bound here unto the end of all days, when they are then taken to the place of the end of the earth worlds and the heavens to their last judgement of all judgements, where their extermination will be.
758. And as the degenerated evil is held here unto the end of all days, so it also is not dangerous to life.”
759. And from there, Urjel, the flaming one, one of the Arahat Athersata, floated off into the expanse of the universe with me.
760. But in deep space he brought me to a high place which had none of terribleness, but which was great like a glaring fire, which flamed and blazed and had incisions like flaming tongues.
761. The space was limited only by the high area of space and the place floated therein like an island in a boundless ocean.
762. But from the depths of space, round about came flaming small fire pillars and let themselves fall into the glaring, fiery place.
763. The expanse of the place and its size, however, I could not see, neither was I able to grasp the origin thereof.
764. Then I said to Urjel: “How exalted this place is and what joy and reverence to view it.”
765. Then Urjel answered me: “Henok, you feel no fear and no terror in you about this exalted place and in the view of this joy.

766. This is a place like many others in the expansive universe, which are all of the same type and of good form.
767. This place is a mighty block of energy and this energy is knowledge, wisdom, truth, love, logical consequence and everything which is good.
768. At this place, all knowledge and all wisdom, love and logical consequence in truth of all forms of life are gathered and stored, like in a granary all gathered grain is stored.
769. Therefore, this place is a mighty storage block, which stores everything within that is recognized and acquired of knowledge or is created in some other place, so here, from the very beginning everything is stored which has been found of knowledge of every type.
770. This place is a storage block of all wisdom and accessible to every wise one, who is human or Spirit form, if he, through spiritual energy, useth a secret word as key, through which the door of the block openeth to him, so he can enter in and obtain knowledge.
771. But truly, the wise one only sparingly obtaineth knowledge from here, if he is truthfully in need thereof, so that he doth not rob but only meets his need.
772. But it is also provided that the block of wisdom only releases knowledge to every wise one which lies in the comprehension of the wise, that he is not overburdened in his understanding, so that he does not become insane and confused in his mind and in his consciousness."
773. From here I went to another place with Urjel, but now the other watchers of the Arahat Athersata joined us thus, Rufael, Raguel, Gabrel, Kerubel, Mjkel and Sarakel.
774. And in the west they showed me a great high mountain, which was of quite hard rock and where were seven wonderful places.
775. But under the hard rocks, down in the depths, were expanses which were like something smoothed, which rolls and I recognized it as alive, something which liveth.
776. Therefore, I asked about this place and this time Rufael, one of the flaming ones of the Arahat Athersata, answered:
777. "These seven beautiful places are the seven worlds of the realm of death, which by man is called the other side.
778. At these places the Spirit forms gather, when through death they escape from the coarse body.
779. Thus, they gather here at these seven places, each at one place or another, depending on and determined by the level of fineness of the Spirit, which each generateth and formeth depending on wisdom.
780. And the seven beautiful places are seven different worlds and they, therefore, are the seven worlds of the fine realms of death which, at the same time, exist on every coarse world, however, separated by the boundaries of the fine and the coarse matter.
781. Therefore, these worlds which you see as beautiful places are created, so that there all Spirit forms of mankind gather, when they escape from the coarse bodies through dying.
782. These places, therefore, are made as living places for the Spirit forms of mankind, when they escape from the coarse life and enter into the fine life of death.
783. And the Spirit forms remain at these places for a certain time, which followeth a cycle, and is only duration in which each Spirit form develops further in knowledge and in the development of its energy, before they again leave this place and are born anew into a coarse human body in reincarnation."
784. And Urjel took me away from this place and to a distant wasteland, over which was only darkness and round about everything full of wailing.

785. But in the wide and terrible plane of the place hovered shadows, from whom emanated the wailing which echoed into the darkness of heaven, and therefore, I asked for the purpose of this horror.

786. Now Raguel answered and also said to me: “This is the horrible place, where all the wailings of those human beings gather, who are murdered by the likes of them.

787. Here therefore, resound all the wailings of the murdered and tormented and tortured ones, because at this place all the wailings of mankind gather which are caused by unrighteousness.

788. But here also every wailing resounds for a long time and as long, until some time the kernel and the seed of the cause in the evil-doers among mankind has disappeared, while here, in horror the wailings are heard.

789. And the shadows which hover are single wailings in restlessness, and no shadow can bind itself to another, for they are separated among each other, because every wailing is its own cry of horror of an evil, which hath been committed each to a human being by his own kind.

790. Therefore, the wailings are separated from among each other, but which also again are partitioned in different areas at this place, of which again are seven.

791. So here can be heard the wailings of mankind, who are murdered and tormented and tortured by the likes of them, and here also they reveal their pain and their ruin, until the infamous action has been atoned by the guilty.

792. But the wailings resound here for the reason, that the guilty originators find no rest and are constantly reminded of their infamous actions, so that they feel guilty and therefore strive to change to righteousness.

793. But truthfully, these seven locations of this place are seven invisible heavens around the Earth and therefore around all earth worlds, from which the human being in every new life is reminded of his deeds.”

794. And I, Henok, praised the Glory of Creation for Its justice which hath created everything, and which leadeth all life to BEING in all all-great-time.

795. From there I went with the watchers, the flaming ones, to another place towards the west, further unto the ends of the Earth and the heavens.

796. Then I saw a quite brightly burning fire, which restlessly ran and never ceased from its course, neither by day nor by night.

797. But I asked while I said: “What is this here which findeth no rest?”

798. And this time Kerubel, the flaming watcher of the Arahat Athersata, answered me: “This burning fire, the constant movement which you see towards the west, is the fire of the energy of all constellations of the heavens.”

799. From there the flaming watchers brought me to another place, and they also showed me a mountain of fire which blazes day and night.

800. And I went closer to the mountain and recognized that truthfully, there were seven magnificent mountains and every one different from the other.

801. And the mountains consisted of magnificent and precious and most beautiful stones, and everything was quite magnificent and of glorious appearance and of beautiful and wonderful exterior.

802. Three of the mountains sat toward the east, one strung behind the other, and also three sat toward the south, and also one strung behind the other, and like the others, one was higher than the others.

803. But in between the mountains were deep windings valleys, of which none was connected to another.

804. But the seventh mountain sat in the middle between the six others, and on all their summits they resembled a throne-seat of Creation at a lofty height, surrounded by fragrant trees.

805. But among them was a tree, as I had never seen before and also had never smelled before.

806. The fragrance of this tree was not equal to any other fragrance, and its leaves and its blossoms and its wood never withered throughout eternity.

807. Therefore, the fruit also did not wither throughout eternity and besides was of great beauty, and which compareth to the cluster of a palm tree.

808. This time I said: “Look at this beautiful tree, it is wonderful to behold and lovely, and its leaves and branches and its fruit are delightful to the eye.”

809. Then Mjkel, the flaming one, answered me: “Henok, why do you ask me about the fragrance and about everything of this tree, and what do you try to learn with secretly hidden words, for know that we know your great knowledge and also the secretly hidden inquiry in your questions.”

810. Then I, Henok, answered him and said: “About everything I like to learn something, but especially about this tree, for it appeareth to me that it concealeth a great secret which also concerneth me.”

811. And Mjkel answered me, while he said: “You are great in knowledge and also trained in wisdom and truthful.

812. Listen, Henok: This high mountain, which you see and the pinnacle of which compares to the throne of Creation, is the dwelling place of the Glory of Creation, from which all laws and recommendations and the sevenfold order thus come down to all worlds and mankind, and also to everything which creepeth and flieth everywhere.

813. But the tree, about which you inquire, which is of such exquisite fragrance, is holy and exalted, therefore it is not allowed any mortal to touch it until the time of the end of all days, at which the justice will be completed and the eternity of life unto BEING.

814. Only at the end of all time of the days will be given to the righteous of the fruit of the tree, so thereby they obtain the life of all-timeliness.

815. But you, Henok, you are a mortal immortal and, therefore, highest JHWH of all JHWH among all of mankind of the universe, as all JHWH and leaders honor you, while you force yourself into a human body as Prophet and suffer in evil torment.

816. You are the highest among the leaders and give yourself as the lowest, for which you suffer torment and yet dost not complain, yet at this place shall help be bestowed upon you, that you survivest all times and all torment.

817. It shall then be accomplished here, that you enjoy the fruit of this tree at this holy place, so that you become the eternal temple of love and all fulfillment, therefore take this fruit here and eat it.”

818. And Mjkel handed my a grape-like cluster and I ate it, which tasted quite exquisitely and filled me with joy and love and with the understanding of many secrets.

819. But, therefore, I cannot explain how everything happened to me, for that very moment, I saw infinity which I could yet not see with my eyes.

820. And I heard Mjkel, who said to me: “Henok, now you have eaten of the fruit of the tree and therefore, you will be strong throughout all time and be a temple of truth.

821. Into the most distant future, you will willingly carry the fruit of truth and bring the great teaching of the word of truth to mankind.

822. And in the distant future you will create a new holy place, and also plant the fruit of truth high in the north of the Earth, when the New Age hath come and the time of the great instruction.
823. The place will be the place of truth and the place of instruction, but also a temple of understanding and of love.
824. But many incarnations you will still live until then, and often you will experience evil misery and torment, yet despair will not be yours.
825. But the New Age will not be of great difference in misery and torment, but also will be allotted that among many of mankind of Earth exalted joy will awaken and rejoicing in the recognition of truth, so that they recognize the holiness of truth and of Creation and of yourself.
826. And the scholars among mankind of Earth will allow the fragrance of truthful holiness to penetrate into their bones and slowly change everything, that in the coming days they will live a long life on the Earth, as their ancient ancestors have lived.
827. Therefore, they will learn and in the later future truly lead a life that will not touch them any more by sadness and suffering and trouble and toil, but also there will be no more need and misery and unrighteousness.
828. Verily, so it will be, but before this happeneth, a very long time after the New Age, still much torment and offence and unrighteousness and disgrace will exist among mankind of Earth."
829. And as I, Henok, heard the speech of the flaming one, one of the watchers of Arahat Athersata, I was quiet in reverence and modesty, yet then, I praised the Glory of Creation that It hath prepared everything so well for the righteous human beings.
830. But also I praised Creation, which hath created everything, and created love in infinity and also justice and life, which is according to Its laws and recommendations and according to Its sevenfold order in truthfulness.
831. And from there, I went with the flaming watcher to the center of the Earth, and soon I saw a blessed and fruitful place, where there were many branches, which rooted and sprouted from a felled tree.
832. But there also was a holy mountain and to the east thereof, underneath the mountain, was a water which flowed toward the south.
833. But toward the east was another mountain of equal height as the first, and between the two mountains was a deep valley but which was not wide, and in the valley a water also ran along the mountain.
834. And toward the west of this mountain was another mountain, lower than the two others, and therefore not high.
835. But here also was a valley, but which was not wide, and therein also flowed a water along the mountain.
836. But there were three other deep and dry valleys at the end of all three mountains, and in them flowed no water.
837. And all valleys were deep, but not wide and of hard boulders.
838. And there were trees planted on the mountains and in the fertile valleys, which prospered and bore sublime fruit.
839. And everything was exalted and beautiful and like a paradise, except for the deep and dry valleys which were of smooth and hard rocks.
840. And I was curious about the rocks, and I was also curious about the horrors of the rocks, and I was quite curious about everything.

841. Then I said: “What is this blessed land for, which is totally filled with fruit bearing trees and is like a paradise, and what is the accursed land of the valley for behind it?”

842. Then one of the Arahat Athersata, Sarakel, the flaming one, answered me:

843. “These accursed valleys are for the Creation slanderers among mankind, and here also the energies of their evil slandering thoughts and slandering speeches gather.

844. Here, therefore, all slander-energies have to gather and wait in accursedness so long, until the guilty ones change to righteousness, and until they ban their unseemly speeches against Creation from their mouth.

845. And therefore they remain here for a long time, until the guilty ones rid themselves of their shamelessness toward the Glory of Creation.

846. And in one valley of the horrors and accursedness, the energies of the slanderers gather, which are the Creation-deniers and also the atheists.

847. But in the second valley of horrors and accursedness, the energies of the slanderers gather, who are sectarians and gods-worshipers and other human-worshipers.

848. And in the third valley of horrors and accursedness, the energies of the slanderers gather, who are idolaters and the autocratic.

849. And therefore they will all remain here until the guilty change to become righteous ones, so that through truth they find mercy and praise the Glory of Creation.

850. And they remain here as long as they themselves have determined this by their own lot, as they have imparted this unto themselves.

851. Truthfully, these valleys of horror and accursedness are three invisible heavens around the Earth, where the energies of the slanderers gather and remain for a long time, until the guilty ones change to truth and righteousness, as the energies then disappear in dissipation.

852. But while the energies of the slanderers remain in the invisible heavens above the Earth, they are powerful and evil, and they also strike the guilty in every life and incarnation like poisonous arrows.”

853. Therefore, I praised the Glory of Creation and spoke to It in prayer, and I also remembered Its greatness as It is seemly.

854. But from there I went with the flaming watchers of the Arahat Athersata to another place, far away from the desolate valleys, approaching a mountain range in the east.

855. There I saw trees which were called judgement trees, and there were especially such which give off incense fragrance and myrrh-fragrance, and therefore, they were not like ordinary trees.

856. Over the mountain of the east, high above it and not far therefrom, I saw another place, but therein were valleys and with water like that which never dries up.

857. And there I saw a beautiful tree, the fragrance of which was like the fragrance of mastic.

858. And on the sides of the valleys, towards the end of the valleys, I saw grown fine-smelling cinnamon.

859. Then I went up these valleys, closer towards the east.

860. And I saw another mountain, overgrown with trees, from which flowed water, but which was something like nectar, and which one calls sarisa and galbanum.

861. And beyond that mountain I saw another mountain, where upon aloe trees grew, which were full of hard almond-like matter.

862. And if one took the fruit of the tree and ate it, it tasted better than all fine fragrances.
863. And after I had eaten of the fruit of the best fragrances, I gazed towards the north over all mountains.
864. Forthwith, I saw seven mountains, and they were full of delicious spikenard plants and fragrant trees, but there was also much of cinnamon and pepper.
865. And I went further to the seven mountains, and forthwith I stepped across their summit, far towards the east and in accompaniment of the flaming watchers of the Arahat Athersata, who did not leave my side.
866. And we moved further towards the east, far over the Erythaeic Sea, high over the place, Zutuel, unto the two-stream-land near Uruk Gart, in the kingdom of Gjlgamesch.
867. But there, the watchers led me back in time and into the garden of righteousness, where I discovered an abundance of multicolored trees and plants and flowers.
868. And quite many trees and plants and flowers were there, large and small ones which grow there, fragrant, very lovely and magnificent.
869. But also, I saw there the tree of wisdom, covered with large and sweet and delicious fruit, which teach great wisdom to those human beings who eat thereof.
870. And the tree of wisdom resembleth the carob tree, and its fruit, like the grape, is very good.
871. But the fragrance of the tree infatuateth and spreadeth far away and therefore I said: “Quite lovely is this tree and how lovely and delightful its view and fragrant its fruit.”
872. And the flaming watcher, Rufael, answered and said to me: “See, Henok, this is the tree of wisdom, from which your ancestors already have eaten, so that they found recognition of wisdom and they opened their eyes.
873. The tree of this type, however, standeth only here and once on the Earth, as it groweth nowhere else at another place.
874. But it is also not a creature of Earth, but a stranger here on this world, for it has been brought here from far away, from a distant world in the universe and, therefore, been planted here by the sons and daughters of the heavens.
875. To give wisdom unto the human beings.
876. And to give life unto the human beings.
877. And to give BEING unto the human beings.
878. And the tree liveth in beauty and splendor and beareth fruit for seven hundred years, after which it drieth up and dieth without fertile seeds, because it is one-gendered and findeth no fertilization by its own kind, therefore it hath no offspring.
879. Truly, therefore, this is the tree of wisdom and the tree of life in the garden of righteousness, the secret of which, however, mankind on Earth does not know, but while they call it the tree of life in paradise.
880. But the secret of the tree of wisdom is that its fruit concealeth a substance, which expandeth the consciousness of man when he eateth thereof, so he attaineth to great understanding of wisdom, as it is like with various plants of the Earth.
881. But this here is likewise the garden of righteousness, where Adam and his wife were procreated, and from which emanated all evil of mankind of Earth due to the sons and daughters of the heavens, who got together with the earthly mankind and procreated with them malicious giants, therefore, they were all driven away from this place."

882. From there, we again went to other ends of the Earth which were places where large animals lived, each different from the other and wondrous.

883. But there were also birds, which were manifold in their shape and in their beauty and voice, and also everyone was different from the other.

884. And there were also birds with magnificent multi-colored feathers and they had curved beaks, as otherwise only vultures have this, which are the hawk and eagle and the owls and falcons.

885. Yet forthwith we left these places, where also gigantic animals lived, which were often larger than the largest elephants and which were quite as large as the whales in the ocean, but while these giant animals lived on land and in virgin forest in small numbers.

886. And we went far towards the east into the depths of space, close to the ends of the worlds and constellations, where heaven doth not rest and constantly expandeth.

887. And I saw how from the immeasurable expanse of the shining expansion, the constellations of heaven come forth.

888. And I counted the radiating doors from which the constellations and fires issue forth and rotate and become firm, so that one can walk on them after a very long time, when the heat embers have cooled.

889. But also, Urjel wrote down for me all the exits of them, of every single one especially, exactly according to their numbers, their names and their connection, their position, their time and their months and days, as he showed them to me.

890. Urjel showed me everything but he also wrote down everything for me, also all laws and recommendations and the order, and also the orbits of the constellations and their life and their performances.

891. From there we went towards the north in space and also to the end of the worlds, and there I saw a great and magnificent wonder at the ends of the universe.

892. Here I saw three open doors of heaven in space which were like dark velvet, and from each door issue forth winds in the northern direction, which meaneth, that the winds blow forth from the doors of heaven in the direction toward north, but while they escape toward the south.

893. But these winds were great energies, like those by which all stars circle, but they also were of a different type, for they can be captured by the worlds and cause many events on them, like cold, hoar-frost, hail, snow, dew, rain and storm, and changes in the feelings and thoughts of man and also diverse other things.

894. Yet from the doors only streameth and bloweth balanced energy, therefore, it is neither evil nor good, but in between, yet if man absorbeth them within, he maketh it to good or evil, so within him is formed the measure of center or misery or vehemence, depending on the way how man useth the energies.

895. These winds, however, are energies of life, so therefore, cosmic life energy, which doth not contain good or evil, but is centered.

896. But this energy is of great power and powerful toward the good as also toward evil, depending upon how man useth it.

897. From these doors of heaven we went towards the west, to other ends of the worlds, and forthwith I saw there three other doors of heaven, like those I saw in the north and they also had the same exits.

898. From there, we went towards the south and other ends of the worlds in the universe, and there again I saw three open doors of heaven.
899. Thereupon we went towards the east to the ends of the worlds, and here also were three open doors of heaven, from which blew forth the winds like the winds from the doors of the north and of the west and of the south.
900. Thus, the wind powers of these doors of heaven storm from all sides through the space of the universe, equally all life in all directions is affected by them without difference.
901. And as I saw everything, I praised Creation, and always anew I praised the Glory of Creation, which hath made all the great and exalted and magnificent wonders.
902. And I praised the Glory of Creation about Its greatness and the greatness of Its work, to show the flaming watchers and also mankind, so that they also shall praise the greatness and the works of Creation.
903. But also I praised Creation so that all forms of life, as creatures of Creation, see the works of Its power, and also that they all praise and honor the great works of Creation into all eternity.
904. This, therefore, was a vision I had, and forthwith another vision of wisdom followed.
905. And verily, I faithfully report what I had seen also in this visions, as I say this, I, Henok, the son of Jared.
906. And this is the beginning of the speech of wisdom of this vision, which I began to speak and to tell to those who live on Earth and are mankind of Earth and thus sons and daughters of the heavens:
907. Hear, you old ones, and hear, you descendants, the holy speeches which I will speak in truth before Creation.
908. It is the right of the old ones to tell them everything first, yet also from the descendants shall not be withheld the beginning of wisdom.
909. And verily, up to today, has never been imparted so much wisdom to a human being through the flaming watchers of the Arahat Athersata and through the Petale, than I have received after my insight, according to the pleasure of Creation, from which hath been imparted unto me the lot of eternal life.
910. And there were given to me in a newly vision three picture-speeches, which I began to tell to those who inhabit the solid of the Earth.
911. But the first picture-speech was this: When the community of the righteous will appear in unity, and when the unrighteous will find their end for their unrighteousness and offences and will be driven from the face of the Earth, that is the secret of time alone.
912. But it is also a secret of time when the New Age will be, at which the righteous one will appear before the eyes of the chosen ones, whose works will be weighed and will appear as light to all those righteous and chosen ones who will live on the Earth.
913. But where will be the dwelling place of the unrighteous and the stay of those, who have denied all the Glory of Creation, for quite mighty the truth will begin to undulate, therefore, the unrighteous will suffer and lose their life.
914. Truly, it were better for the unrighteous to have never been born, for their torment will be great.
915. And when the secrets of the righteous one will be revealed, there will first be ridicule and foolishness and offence and denial and disgrace, yet forthwith, the unrighteous will be judged by their own judgements, so that they suffer and die like flies after their hatching.

916. And therefore, the unrighteous drive themselves from the face of the righteous and chosen ones, who change themselves to righteous and chosen ones in determination and understanding.

917. Therefore, horror and terror will befall the unrighteous and from now on, they will not be mighty and exalted any more neither those who own the Earth.

918. But the unrighteous will not be able any more to see the countenance of the wise and righteous one and the truly greatest one, who is the wise and the righteous one of all wise and righteous ones and their highest one also.

919. The light of Creation hath appeared to the countenance of the wise and righteous and highest one and, therefore, only the righteous and chosen ones will see his countenance.

920. But at that time of the righteous one, mighty kings and national leaders will perish, and also discord in great measure will be on Earth.

921. And there will be war quite severe and evil, and annihilation and destruction will be on Earth, but forthwith, the destinies will be taken over by the hands of the righteous and wise ones, and from then on, no unrighteous and guilty one will be able to implore for mercy before justice any more, for their life will be arranged into the laws and recommendations of Creation and also into Its seven-fold order.

922. But thus will also happen in those days, when chosen and wise human beings will fly down from the high heavens and reveal themselves to mankind of Earth in mysterious signs and appearances.

923. But it also will be that a long time thereafter, the mysterious is solved and again other sons and daughters from heaven come and their seed will unite with the seed of mankind of Earth.

924. Truly, this picture-speech was given to me, Henok, and in those days of my visions, I also received books of fervor and anger and books of urgency and of expelling and driving away, in which was written nothing about mercy for the unrighteous, to whom without change toward righteousness, justice will not be imparted.

925. But this also happened at the same time, when a cloud and a storm caught me up from the Earth and brought me to the ends of the heavens.

926. And here I had another vision, in which I saw the dwelling places of the righteous and the encampment of the wise ones.

927. Here my eyes saw their dwelling places and encampments with the flaming watchers, who begged and prayed for mankind.

928. And from all of them righteousness flowed out like water and also mercy like clay on the Earth, and so also from eternity unto eternity.

929. And therefore, my eyes saw this place of the righteous and of justice and of loyalty and of wisdom.

930. And I saw how righteousness ruled at the place, and the multitude of the righteous and chosen ones was uncountable, who were adorned with fire splendor.

931. And I saw how their mouth is full of praise, and how their lips praise the Glory of Creation and as their righteousness doth not cease.

932. Here I wished to live, and my thinking and striving longed for this place and also for a dwelling place there.

933. And I recognized the truth and was sad, for here it previously had already been my portion to be and to live in love and wisdom, and yet due to my duty, my portion has retreated from here, to live among mankind of Earth, tormented by an imperfect body of coarseness.

934. And my portion wanted to remain at this place, yet I remembered and parted in torment, and in those days I also praised and exalted the Name of Creation with blessings and praises, because It hath allotted to me even blessings and glory according to Its pleasure.
935. My eyes long contemplated the place, and forever I praised Creation while I said: ‘Praise be unto thee, the Exalted, and be It praised from the beginning into all eternity.’
936. Before It is no ceasing and It knoweth what It is, before a world is created and It knoweth the generations of generations who will be.
937. Oh, Creation, those who do not sleep, praise thee.
938. Creation, before thy Glory stand the righteous and praise, glorify and exalt thee, while they speak: ‘Holy, Holy, Holy art thou Creation, thou which fillest the forms of life with forms of Spirit, so that all life liveth and becometh BEING.’
939. And at this place my eyes saw all those who do not sleep.
940. I also saw them, how they stand before Creation and praise It and speak: ‘Be thou praised, Creation, and praised be thy Name from eternity unto eternity.’
941. And I detached myself from this view in great torment, and forthwith my countenance was changed until I could see no more.
942. But when I saw again, I recognized uncountable and incalculable many, who stand before the Glory of Creation.
943. I saw and at the four sides of the Glory of Creation I noticed four faces, but which were different from those who stood there.
944. And their names I learned from a flaming watcher, who came to me and who revealed their names to me and also showed me all hidden things.
945. And I heard the voices of those four faces, how they sang praises before the Glory of Creation.
946. And the first voice praised the Glory of Creation from eternity unto eternity.
947. And I heard the other voice praise the just and wise one of all just and wise ones, and also all just and chosen ones, who are weighed by the Glory of Creation.
948. And the third voice I heard pray for all those, who live on the Earth and truthfully seek and live in the Name of the Glory of Creation.
949. And I heard the fourth voice, how It warded off all energies of the adversaries and did not allow them to step before the Glory of Creation, to slander those who are righteous ones on Earth and live without offence.
950. Thereafter, I asked the watcher of peace, who went with me and showed me everything which is hidden and spoke to him: “Who are these four faces, who I have seen and whose voices I have heard and written down?”
951. And he spoke to me: “This first one is the merciful and long-suffering, the Holy Mjkael.
952. And the second one is he, who is set over all diseases and over all wounds of mankind, the Holy Rubael.
953. And the third one is he, who is set over all energies, the Holy Gabrjel.

954. And the fourth one is he, who is set over all changes and all hopes of those, who inherit eternal life, the Holy Fanuel.
955. They are the four watchers of the highest power of Petale, and they also reside at the doors of Creation and are mightier in their power and wisdom than all watchers of the Arahat Athersata, as they are like-wise Mjkel, Rufael, Raguel, Gabrel, Sarakel, Kerubel and Urjel."
956. I, Henok, truly testify: These are the four highest watchers of the flaming rays, and the four voices I have heard in those days.
957. And thereafter, I saw all the secrets of the heavens and also how the Kingdom of Glory is distributed.
958. But I also saw how all actions of mankind are weighed on the scale of justice.
959. There I saw the dwelling places of the righteous and chosen ones and also the dwelling places of the wise ones and the dwelling places of the watchers of the flaming fire and the flaming rays.
960. And there my eyes saw, how all the unrighteous were driven away from there, who denied the Name of the Glory of Creation.
961. I saw how they were dragged away and how there is no staying for them, because of the punishment they have placed upon themselves and have not yet atoned for.
962. And also at another place, I saw the secrets of the lightning and the thunder, and also the secrets of the winds and rays and energies, how they are distributed to blow over the Earth and to rotate stars and to bring the changes of the seasons.
963. And I saw from where the waters emerge at their place, and how from there the dry dust of the Earth is saturated.
964. And there I also saw closed containers, from where the winds and all energies and rays emerge, and from which they are distributed.
965. And I saw the container of the hail and that of the snow, and I also saw the container of sunlight, the warmth, the cold and the dew and of the rain and of fog and of clouds.
966. And I saw all containers, which are for all things, and I also saw an invisible cloud which floateth over the Earth since prior to eternity, and which consisteth of the tiny forms of Spirits of Creation, and which by and by enliven the forms of all life.
967. I also saw the containers of the sun and the moon, from which they emerge and whereto they return and their magnificent return, and how one has superiority over the other, and their firmly determined course.
968. And I also saw how they never exceed their course, add nothing to their course and not eliminate anything thereof, and remain loyal among each other and stay within the oath, as it is given from the very beginning.
969. And first, the sun goeth forth and completeth its pathway according to the order of Creation, the Glory and Name of which is mighty from eternity to eternity.
970. And thereafter cometh the visible and the invisible pathway of the moon, as it traveleth the course of its pathway at that place by day and night.
971. And I also saw that the one star gazed at the other, so they stand opposite of each other on two sides of the Earth.
972. And the stars also praise and thank the Glory of Creation and they do not rest, for their thanking and praising is rest unto them.
973. But the radiating sun maketh many turns for blessings and for misery, and also the moon is light to the righteous ones and darkness to the unrighteous.
974. And thus, all this happeneth in the Name of Creation, which created a separation between light and darkness and between blessings and misery, depending on how man is divided within himself, whether he is an unrighteous or righteous one.

975. And no watcher can hinder a human being in his division of good or evil, and also no other power can hinder in this, for man himself is his own advocate in all things, but he is also his own judge and beadle, and also the executer of his own punishment.
976. Wisdom found no place where it should reside, wherefore was given to it a dwelling place in the heavens of the invisible around the worlds in space.
977. And so wisdom cometh from there, to reside among mankind, if man maketh it his own.
978. But wisdom was first on the Earth to reside among mankind, yet it found no dwelling place, therefore, wisdom returned to its place, which since then hath been given to it in the heavens of the invisible.
979. But unrighteousness came forth from its containers, which did not seek freedom by itself, but which was broken into its containers by mankind.
980. And unrighteousness found a dwelling place among mankind on Earth, therefore it lived among them and in them, like the rain in the desert and like dew on thirsty land.
981. Therefore, unrighteousness found a residence in man, who thirsteth for unrighteousness in wrong life conduct, because he shunneth the effort of righteousness and ogleth with laziness.
982. And again, I saw lightnings and the stars of the heavens, and I heard how Creation called all singly by name and that they heard Creation.
983. I also saw how they were weighed with a just scale according to their measures of light, according to the span of their space, and according to the time of their appearance and their course.
984. And I saw how one lightning created another.
985. And I saw the course of all things, and I also saw all watchers of the flaming fire and of the flaming rays, how they keep loyalty among each other, like all constellations.
986. And I asked the watcher, who went with me and showed me everything which was hidden: “What is all this?”
987. But he said unto me: “Well then, a picture of everything has been shown unto you by the power of Spirit, but what you have seen is the wisdom of all things.
988. Bring this wisdom to mankind and among all their names and among all righteous ones which live on Earth, and who know about the Name of the Glory of Creation unto all eternity.”
989. And I saw many other things, thus also lightnings, which originate from great power from stars and rush into space and disappear, so that nothing remaineth of them, also not the stars from which they emerge.
990. But I also saw the stars rush through space with long tails of dust and rocks, and which aglowed, when they came into proximity of other stars.
991. Therefore, this was the first picture speech which I, Henok, have received.
992. And this is now the second picture speech which was given to me and which depicteth about those, who deny the Name of the dwelling place of the flaming watchers and the highest wise ones and the Glory of Creation.
993. Verily, the unrighteous and deniers and slanderers of truth will not rise up into the heavens, and they will not be able to live in peace and love and wellbeing on Earth.

994. This is the lot of the unrighteous, who slander and deny the Name of the Glory of Creation, wherefore they keep themselves so that their days of existence are filled with evil suffering and with misery and distress.
995. But the day will come, when the unrighteous will stand before the throne of justice, where a sorting will be held among mankind, depending upon actions and places and numbers.
996. But this will be the time during which the Spirit of the righteous will be strong within them, when they experience true justice, all those who have kept the Name of the Glory of Creation in purity and reverence.
997. And in those days, through the counsel of all flaming watchers and according to the will of Creation, the chosen one of all the chosen, and the wisest one of all the wise will come among mankind and dwell among them.
998. Then, however, the heavens will be transformed, and everything will be made to eternal blessing and to light.
999. And the highest one of all the highest will change the Earth and will make it a blessing and also let all chosen ones live on it.
1000. But the unrighteous, who have committed crimes and have not changed, they will never again step on the Earth, for only those will live, who are saturated with peace and are just, while all unrighteous ones will be consumed from the surface of the Earth, like annoying noxious insects which annihilate themselves in reciprocity.
1001. But in my vision I saw one, who had a Head of Days, and his head was also as white as wool.
1002. But with him was another, whose countenance was like the appearance of a human being, yet his face radiated in grace like a holy watcher of the Petale.
1003. Therefore, I asked the watcher, who went with me and who showed me all hidden things.
1004. Who he is, and where from this son of man is, and why he walketh about with the Ancient of Days, I asked the watcher.
1005. But he answered and spoke to me: “Henok, why do you ask me, for you know quite well, who this questioned son of man is, yet who is not a son of man of Earth.
1006. You know that he walketh with the Ancient of Days, because he is the wisest of all wise ones and, therefore, older than the oldest ones.
1007. You know very well, this is the son of man, who is not a son of man of Earth, for he is son of man of another world and only inhabits a mortal body of this Earth world.
1008. You also know, this is the son of man, who liveth as a stranger among mankind and who hath righteousness.
1009. And you also know this is the son of man, in whom justice resideth and who revealeth all treasures of the hidden, because it is so determined by the counsel of the wise holy watchers.
1010. And you also know, because his lot hath exceeded everything in righteousness before the holy counsel of all wise watchers of the highest in eternity.
1011. And this son of man, who you have seen and whom you know very well in yourself, will stir up the kings and mighty and the tyrants from their couches and thrones, as also the sectarians and idolaters and god-servants and all unrighteous ones of other types.
1012. He will loose the bridles of the tyrants and will grind the teeth of the unrighteous.
1013. He will cast down the kings from their thrones and expel them from their illegal nations, because they live not according to the laws and recommendations of Creation and do not exalt and praise Creation, neither gratefully acknowledge, so that they cannot conduct their justly or unjustly imparted or stolen office.

1014. And the son of man with the Ancient of Days will equally expel the countenance of the tyrants and the unrighteous from his face, if they do not listen to his words of truth and the teaching of truth, and change to righteousness.
1015. And blushing shame will fill the tyrants, as also all the unrighteous among mankind of Earth, for his teaching of truth will be powerful, so that because of it they will be expelled.
1016. Darkness will become their dwelling place and worms their couches, and they will also have no hope any more to ever rise up from their couches, because they do not exalt and esteem the Name of Creation.
1017. But among them, among these unrighteous and losers will also be those losers who are scholars, who master the stars and yet raise their hands against Creation, and trample down the Earth on which they yet live.
1018. Verily, all their actions are unrighteousness and reveal unrighteousness.
1019. And their power resteth on their wealth, and their belief is belief and concerneth gods and idols which they worship in dishonesty, and which they have elected or made with their hands, while they deny the Name of Creation.
1020. But verily, they will be driven from their homes and from the places of righteousness of the knowledgeable ones of Creation-truth, who are weighed in the Name of Creation and its Glory.
1021. And in those days, the truthful prayer of the righteous and knowing will rise up to Creation and penetrateth It and will be heard, while the blabber-begging of the believers of all sects and religions and unrighteous fadeth away unheard in senseless efforts.
1022. In those days, the holy watchers of the invisible heavens will be united in one voice and pray and praise and honor and thank the Name of Creation, that the praying of the righteous shall not be in vain and that justice shall be bestowed upon them."
1023. And in those days, I saw that the son of man with the Ancient of Days sat down at the feet of Creation and watched how Creation spread its entire Glory.
1024. And I saw how the wise of all wise ones with the Ancient of Days had opened the book of life before him, and how an entire army of all wise ones and holy watchers read in the book of the living.
1025. And I saw, and the hearts of the wise ones filled with joy, when they saw that the number of righteous ones was of a great number.
1026. And in the vision, I saw at a place a fountain of justice which was inexhaustible.
1027. It was surrounded by many fountains of wisdom, and all thirsty ones drank from the fountain and became full of wisdom.
1028. And the thirsty ones had their dwelling places with the righteous and wise ones and with the holy and chosen ones.
1029. And at every hour, was mentioned that son of man with the Ancient of Days, that he had brought the teaching of truth and through it the Glories of Creation and that, therefore, Creation shall be praised all days unto eternity, and the son of man with the Ancient of Days shall be honored in respect and reverence.
1030. And before the sun of Earth and all signs of the planets of this sun were created and made, the name of the son of man with the Ancient of Days was named on the world of Lasan and among the radiant ones of Petale and the flaming watchers of the Arahat Athersata.

1031. But that son of man will be staff unto the righteous and wise and holy ones and the flaming watchers of the invisible heavens.
1032. And they all will lean upon it and not fall.
1033. And he will be the light of the nations and the hope of those, who are grieved in their thinking.
1034. And all righteous and wise and holy ones, who live on Earth and in the invisible heavens will esteem and honor and respect him, and they will also extol and praise the Name and the Glory of Creation in great measure.
1035. And the son of man with the Head of Days was selected as wise of all wise ones, but he was also hidden in an invisible heaven before the Earth was created.
1036. But into the invisible heaven he will return unto eternity, if he no longer walketh as son of man and is Spirit form again.
1037. And the wisdom of Creation has revealed him through the decree of the holy ones, so that he guards the lot of the righteous, because they disdain the world of injustice and all the evil ways and works.
1038. In the Name of Creation they will be saved, and the wise one, the son of man with the Head of Days, will be the avenger against injustice and wrong living.
1039. And in those days, the gazes of the kings of Earth are often cast down and also all the tyrants and all other unrighteous ones, who own the planet and wealth for the sake of their hands and power.
1040. But on the day of their anxiety and misery they will find no comfort and no deliverance.
1041. They will fall into the hands of their own anxiety and fear, and also will be handed over to their own helplessness and the impossibility of a way out.
1042. And therefore, they will burn like straw in the fire, and they will sink into the abyss of darkness like lead in dark water.
1043. And they will sink before the face of the righteous and before the face of the holy and wise ones, and no trace of them will be found.
1044. And after the day of their misery, peace and love and truth and wisdom will be on Earth.
1045. And the unrighteous will fall into the infinity of nothingness before the Glory of Creation, without return, therefore, they will not rise again and not be born again.
